This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

+ Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
+ Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
+ Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
+ Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at `http://books.google.com/`

Weekly Reporter,
Oct. 30, 1897.

THE

WEEKLY REPORTER,

1896-97

(FORTY-FIFTH YEAR),

CONTAINING

CASES DECIDED IN THE SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE

WITH

APPEALS TO THE HOUSE OF LORDS AND THE PRIVY COUNCIL,

FROM THE 24TH OF OCTOBER, 1896, TO THE 12TH OF AUGUST, 1897.

TOGETHER ALSO WITH SOME CASES DECIDED PREVIOUSLY TO THAT PERIOD.

TO WHICH ARE ADDED

A DIGESTED INDEX

AND

A TABLE OF THE NAMES OF ALL CASES

REPORTED DURING THAT PERIOD,

WITH

REFERENCES TO CONTEMPORANEOUS REPORTS AND PUBLICATIONS.

5316

VOL. XLV.

EDITED BY
MARTIN JOSEPH BLAKE,
OF LINCOLN'S INN, BARRISTER-AT-LAW.

LONDON: 27, CHANCERY LANE, W.C.

1897.

ALEXANDER & SHEPHEARD,
Printers,
JONSDALE BUILDINGS, CHANCERY LANE.

94307

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA LIBRARY

PREFACE.

In the forty-fifth volume of the WEEKLY REPORTER the characteristics of the publication will be found unaltered. Every endeavour has been made to render the reports succinct and accurate, and they have been published as soon as possible after the decisions have been pronounced. It is believed that the cases in this volume may be cited with the confidence which the Profession has always placed in the WEEKLY REPORTER.

The Annual Digest this year contains, in the same form as last year, a summary of all the cases published from the 24th of October, 1896, to the end of August, 1897, in the WEEKLY REPORTER, and in the Law Reports, the Law Journal Reports, and the Law Times Reports, besides some of those given in the Irish Law Reports. In the body of the Digest figures following the name of a case denote the page in the WEEKLY REPORTER at which it will be found. Where the name of a case has no figures attached, the case is not reported in this volume of the WEEKLY REPORTER; but the references to the case in other series of Reports will be found in the Tabular Index to the Names of Cases.

JUDGES AND LAW OFFICERS

FROM THE 24TH OF OCTOBER, 1896, TO THE 12TH OF AUGUST, 1897.

LORD HALSBURY, LORD CHANCELLOR.

LORD WATSON,
LORD MACNAGHTEN,
LORD MORRIS,
LORD DAVEY,
} LORDS OF APPEAL IN ORDINARY.

JUDICIAL COMMITTEE OF THE PRIVY COUNCIL.

THE LORD CHANCELLOR.
THE LORDS OF APPEAL IN ORDINARY.
LORD HERSCHELL,
LORD HOBHOUSE,
LORD SHAND,
SIR RICHARD COUCH,
} ADDITIONAL JUDGES ORDINARILY ATTENDING.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE—COURT OF APPEAL.

LORD ESHER, MASTER OF THE ROLLS,
SIR NATHANIEL LINDLEY,
LORD LUDLOW (SIR HENRY LOPES),
SIR EDWARD EBENEZER KAY,
SIR ARCHIBALD LEVIN SMITH,
SIR JOHN RIGBY,
SIR JOSEPH WILLIAM CHITTY,
} LORDS JUSTICES OF APPEAL.

HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE—CHANCERY DIVISION.

SIR JOSEPH WILLIAM CHITTY.
SIR FORD NORTH.
SIR JAMES STIRLING.
SIR ARTHUR KEKEWICH.
SIR ROBERT ROMER.
SIR EDMUND WIDDRINGTON BYRNE.
SIR ROLAND VAUGHAN WILLIAMS.

QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION.

LORD RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN, CHIEF JUSTICE.
SIR CHARLES EDWARD POLLOCK.
SIR HENRY HAWKINS.
SIR JAMES CHARLES MATHEW.
SIR LEWIS WILLIAM CAVE.
SIR JOHN CHARLES DAY.
SIR ALFRED WILLS.
SIR WILLIAM GRANTHAM.
SIR ARTHUR CHARLES.
SIR ROLAND VAUGHAN WILLIAMS.
SIR JOHN COMPTON LAWRANCE.
SIR ROBERT SAMUEL WRIGHT.
SIR RICHARD HENN COLLINS.
SIR GAINSFORD BRUCE.
SIR WILLIAM RANN KENNEDY.
SIR EDWARD RIDLEY.

PROBATE, DIVORCE, AND ADMIRALTY DIVISION.

SIR FRANCIS HENRY JEUNE, PRESIDENT.
SIR JOHN GORELL BARNES.

SIR RICHARD EVERARD WEBSTER, ATTORNEY-GENERAL.

SIR ROBERT BANNATYNE FINLAY, SOLICITOR-GENERAL.

EDITOR AND REPORTERS.

1896—97.

EDITOR.

MARTIN JOSEPH BLAKE,

BARRISTER-AT-LAW.

REPORTERS.

HOUSE OF LORDS	CHARLES HARDMAN GRAFTON, Barrister-at-Law.
PRIVY COUNCIL	CHARLES HARDMAN GRAFTON, Barrister-at-Law.
COURT OF APPEAL (No. I.)	WILLIAM FREDERICK BARRY, FREDERICK GEORGE RÜCKER, FRANCIS OCTAVIUS ROBINSON, and EDWARD G. STILLWELL, Barristers-at-Law.
COURT OF APPEAL (No. II.)	WILLIAM SHALLCROSS GODDARD, ROBERT CUNNINGHAM MACKENZIE, WILLIAM SCOTT THOMPSON, and JAMES IRVINE STIRLING, Barristers-at-Law.
CHANCERY DIVISION. Mr. Justice Chitty	JOHN FELIX WALEY and RALEGH B PHILLPOTTS, Barristers-at-Law.
Mr. Justice North	G. BALDWIN HAMILTON and RICHARD SILLEM, Barristers-at-Law.
Mr. Justice Stirling	WILLIAM SCOTT THOMPSON and JAMES IRVINE STIRLING, Barristers-at-Law.
Mr. Justice Kekewich	CHARLES CARRINGTON HENSLEY and ROBERT J. A. MORRISON, Barristers-at-Law.
Mr. Justice Romer	JOHN FELIX WALEY and RALEGH B. PHILLPOTTS, Barristers-at-Law.
Mr. Justice Byrne	J. ARTHUR PRICE and NEVILLE TEBBUTT, Barristers-at-Law.
Mr. Justice Vaughan Williams	CHARLES WALTER MEAD and ARCHIBALD READ, Barristers-at-Law.
QUEEN'S BENCH DIVISION	Sir SHERSTON BAKER, Bart., and THOMAS REGINALD COLQUHOUN DILL, Barristers-at-Law. WILLIAM ERSKINE REID and CECIL G. WILBRAHAM, Barristers-at-Law. FRANCIS OCTAVIUS ROBINSON and EDWARD G. STILLWELL, Barristers-at-Law.
" (CASES " IN " BANKRUPTCY)	PAUL M. FRANCKE, Barrister-at-Law.
PROB., DIV., and ADM. DIVISION	(Prob. & Div.)...JOHN GERARD LAING, Barrister-at-Law. (Adm.) .....CHARLES FUHR. JEMMETT, Barrister-at-Law.
CROWN CASES RESERVED	THOMAS REGINALD COLQUHOUN DILL, Barrister-at-Law

4.0

A TABLE

OF

THE NAMES OF CASES

REPORTED AND DIGESTED IN THIS VOLUME,

WITH REFERENCES TO THE CONTEMPORANEOUS REPORTS.

VOL. XLV.

NOTE.—In the following Table the cases are arranged in the Alphabetical order of the PLAINTIFFS' names; but for convenience of reference, with respect to cases having double titles—e.g., In re Smith, Brown v. Jones—this Table gives the names of such cases under both titles.

Name of Case.	Court.	Page in W. R. 1896-97.	Column in Digest.	References to Contemporaneous Reports.
A. and B., In re	C.A.	—	64	[1897] 1 Ch. 786
Airey, In re. Airey v Stapleton	CH.D. KEK.J.	283	45	[1897] 1 Ch. 164; 66 L. J. Ch. 152; 76 L. T. 151
Akers v Sears. In re Gray's Settlement	CH.D. NOR. J.	—	178	[1896] 2 Ch. 802; 65 L. J. Ch 858; 75 L. T. 407
Aktieselkab Helios v Ekman	C.A.	—	149	[1897] 2 Q. B. 83; 66 L. J. Q. B. 538; 76 L. T. 537
Alcock v Henley. In re Henley	CH.D. NOR. J	—	4	75 L. T. 307
Alcoy Railway Co. v Greenhill	CH.D. STI. J.	—	134	76 L. T. 542
Alkaline Reduction Syndicate, In re	CH.D. WIL J.	10	33
Allen v Sinclair. In re Sinclair	CH.D. KEK. J.	596	1	[1897] 1 Ch. 921; 66 L. J. Ch. 514; 76 L. T. 452
"Altair," The	P.D & A.D.	622	155	[1897] P. 105; 66 L. J. P. 42; 76 L. T. 263
Amos, Ex parte. In re Stock	Q.B.D. BKCY.	480	11	66 L. J. Q. B. 146; 75 L. T. 422
Andrews v Denton	Q.B.D.	500	85	[1897] 2 Q. B. 37; 66 L. J. Q. B. 520; 76 L. T. 423
Andrews v Gas Meter Co.	CH.D. KEK. J.	46
——	C.A.	321	28	[1897] 1 Ch. 361; 66 L. J. Ch. 246; 76 L. T. 132
Appleyard v Lambeth Vestry	Q.B.D.	173	101	66 L. J. Q. B. 27
——	C.A.	370	101	66 L. J. Q. B. 347; 76 L. T. 442
Arter v Hammersmith Vestry	Q.B.D.	398	101	[1897] 1 Q. B. 646; 66 L. J. Q. B. 460; 76 L. T. 390
Arthur v Walker	M.R. (I.)	—	144	[1897] 1 Ir. Rep. 68
Atkinson v Morris	C.A.	293	131	[1897] P. 40; 66 L. J. P. 17; 75 L. T. 440
Attorney-General, Ex parte. In re Chalfers	Q.B.D.	365	172	76 L. T. 351
—— v Albany Hotel Co.	C.A.	—	64	[1896] 2 Ch. 696; 65 L. J. Ch. 885; 75 L. T. 195
—— v Anderson. In re Wood	CH.D. ROM. J.	—	76	44 W. R. 685; [1896] 2 Ch. 596; 65 L. J. Ch. 814
—— v Brown	Q.B.D.	446	72
—— v Dodington	Q.B.D.	476	65	[1897] 1 Q. B. 722; 66 L. J. Q. B. 441; 76 L. T. 557
——	C.A.	657	65
—— v Fairley	Q.B.D.	589	66	[1897] 1 Q. B. 698; 66 L. J. Q. B. 454; 76 L. T. 526
—— v Newcastle-on-Tyne Corporation	C.A.	—	121	66 L. J. Q. B. 593
—— v New York Breweries Co.	Q.B.D.	606	68	[1897] 1 Q. B. 738; 66 L. J. Q. B. 447; 76 L. T. 721
—— v Tod-Heatley	C.A.	394	100	[1897] 1 Ch. 560; 66 L. J. Ch. 275; 76 L. T. 174
—— v Tynemouth (Mayor)	Q.B.D.	—	40	76 L. T. 566
—— v Wolverton (Baron)	C.A.	236	72	[1897] 1 Q. B. 231; 66 L. J. Q. B. 202; 75 L. T. 569
—— v Wood	Q.B.D.	663	65	[1897] 2 Q. B. 102; 66 L. J. Q. B. 522; 76 L. T. 654
Attorney-General of Canada v Attorney-General of Ontario	P.C.	—	20	[1897] A. C. 199; 66 L. J. P. C. 11; 75 L. T. 522

Name of Case.	Court.	Page in W. R. 1896-97.	Column in Digest.	References to Contemporaneous Reports.
Badische Anilin und Soda Fabrik v Johnson	C.A.	481	109	66 L. J. Ch. 497; 76 L. T. 434
Baker v Ambrose	Q.B.D.	—	18	[1896] 2 Q. B. 372; 65 L. J. Q. B. 589
Bald v Bald	CHD. BYRNE, J	499	36	66 L. J. Ch. 524; 76 L. T. 462
Ballantyne v Mackinnon	C.A.	70	75	[1896] 2 Q. B. 455; 65 L. J. Q. B. 616
Banks, In re. Daws v Banks	CH.D. ROM. J.	206	103	75 L. T. 387
"Barcore," The	P.D. & A.D.	—	150	[1896] P. 294; 65 L. J. P. D. & A. 97
Baring v Inland Revenue Commissioners	Q.B.D.	—	69	76 L. T. 563
Barker v Ivimey. In re Turner	CHD. BYRNE, J	495		[1897] 1 Ch. 536; 66 L. J. Ch. 282; 76 L. T. 116
Barnes v Ross	H.L. (SC.)	—	64	[1896] A. C. 625
Barraclough v Brown	H.L. (E.)	—	152	76 L. T. 797
Barry Railway Co.'s Contract, In re	CH.D. NOR. J.	—	145	76 L. T. 489
Barsham (Rector) v Parishioners of Barsham	P.D. & A.D.	—	50	[1896] P. 256
Bartlett and Berry's Contract, In re	CH.D. NOR. J	—	127	76 L. T. 751
Bashall v Bashall	P.D. & A.D.	—	49	76 L. T. 165
Bateman v Faber	CH.D. KEK. J	—	95	[1897] 2 Ch. 223
Battams & Hutchinson, In re	CH.D. KEK. J.	458	158	[1897] 1 Ch. 699; 66 L. J. Ch. 394; 76 L. T. 385
Batt's Settled Estates, In re	CH.D. KEK. J.	614	96	[1897] 2 Ch. 65; 66 L. J. Ch. 635
Beauchamp, In re. Ex parte Carr	Q.B.D. BRCY.	—	12	75 L. T. 315
Belfast Warehouse Co., In re. Ex parte Carmichael	C.A. (I.)	—	128	[1897] 1 Ir. Rep. 124
Belize Estate Co. v Quilter	P.C.	—	63	[1897] A. C. 367; 66 L. J. P. C. 53; 76 L. T. 361
Bell v Balls	CH.D. STI. J.	378	169	[1897] 1 Ch. 663; 66 L. J. Ch. 397; 76 L. T. 254
Beneficed Clerk v Lee	P.C.	—	52	[1897] A. C. 226; 66 L. J. P. C. 8; 75 L. T. 461
Bennetts v Macllwraith	C.A.	17	125	[1896] 2 Q. B. 464; 65 L. J. Q. B. 632
Bensaude v Thames and Mersey Marine Insurance Co.	C.A.	114	74	[1897] 1 Q. B. 29; 66 L. J. Q. B. 45; 75 L. T. 405
Bentinck v Bentinck	CH.D. STI. J.	397	3	[1897] 1 Ch. 673; 66 L. J. Ch. 359; 76 L. T. 284
Betts, In re. Ex parte Betts	C.A.	98	15	[1897] 1 Q. B. 50; 66 L. J. Q. B. 14; 75 L. T. 292
Beyer, Ex parte. In re Clark	C.A.	118	10	[1896] 2 Q. B. 476; 75 L. T. 304
Billing v Prebble	Q.B.D.	187	101	66 L. J. Q. B. 180
Binns, In re. Lee v Binns	CH.D. NOR. J.	—	56	[1896] 2 Ch. 584; 65 L. J. Ch. 830
Birmingham Vinegar Brewery Co. v Powell	H.L. (E.)	—	163	76 L. T. 792
Birrell v Greenhough. In re Crossley	CH.D. KEK. J.	615	105	[1897] 1 Ch. 928; 66 L. J. Ch. 558; 76 L. T. 419
Bishop v Bishop	C.A.	567	45	[1897] P. 138; 66 L. J. P. 69; 76 L. T. 409
Blair v Assets Co.	H.L. (SC.)	—	139	[1896] A. C. 409
Blaker v Seager	Q.B.D.	—	146	76 L. T. 392
Bloomenthal v Ford. (In re Monnier Veuve et ses Fils)	H.L. (E.)	449	35	[1897] A. C. 156; 66 L. J. Ch. 253; 76 L. T. 205
Blumberg v Life Interests Securities Corporation	CH.D. KEK. J.	246	105	[1897] 1 Ch. 171; 66 L. J. Ch. 127; 75 L. T. 627
Bonsor v Bonsor	P.D. & A.D.	304	46	[1897] P. 77; 66 L. J. P. 35; 76 L. T. 168
Bovril Trade-Mark, In re	C.A.	150	161	[1896] 2 Ch. 600; 65 L. J. Ch. 715
Bowen v Phillips	CH.D. KEK. J.	286	55	[1897] 1 Ch. 174; 66 L. J. Ch. 165; 75 L. T. 628
Bowler v Barberton Development Syndicate	C.A.	162	124	[1897] 1 Q. B. 164; 66 L. J. Q. B. 144; 75 L. T. 620
Boyd, In re. Kelly v Boyd	CH.D. ROM. J	648	115	[1897] 2 Ch. 232; 66 L. J. Ch. 614
Bradford v Dawson	Q.B.D.	347	60	[1897] 1 Q. B. 307; 66 L. J. Q. B. 191; 76 L. T. 54
Bradshaw v Bradshaw	P.D. & A.D.	142	78	[1897] P. 24; 66 L. J. P. 31; 75 L. T. 391
Bramble v Lowe	Q.B.D.	366	167	[1897] 1 Q. B. 283; 66 L. J. Q. B. 243
Branckelow Steamship Co. v Lamport	Q.B.D.	—	149	[1897] 1 Q. B. 570; 66 L. J. Q. B. 382
Bleay v Royal British Nurses' Association	C.A.	—	40	66 L. J. Ch. 587; 76 L. T. 735
Brett v Rogers	Q.B.D.	334	80	[1897] 1 Q. B. 525; 66 L. J. Q. B. 387; 76 L. T. 26
Brewer, In re. Morton v Blackmore	CH.D. CHI. J.	8	144	[1896] 2 Ch. 503; 65 L. J. Ch. 821
Brewers' Association of Ontario v Attorney-General of Ontario	P.C.	—	20	[1897] A. C. 231; 66 L. J. P. C. 34; 76 L. T. 61
Bridge v Howard	Q.B.D.	78	6	[1897] 1 Q. B. 80; 66 L. J. M. C. 229; 75 L. T. 300
Brinsmead (Thomas E.) & Sons, In re	C.A.	—	35	[1897] 1 Ch. 406; 66 L. J. Ch. 290; 76 L. T. 100
Bristol (Marquis), In re. Grey (Earl) v Grey	CH.D. ROM. J.	552	143	[1897] 1 Ch. 946; 66 L. J. Ch. 446; 76 L. T. 757
Broderip v Salomon. (Salomon v Salomon)	H.L. (E.)	193		[1897] A. C. 22; 66 L. J. Ch. 35; 75 L. T. 426
Brooke v Inland Revenue Commissioners	Q.B.D.	—	70	44 W. R. 670; [1896] 2 Q. B. 356
Brooks, In re. Coles v Davis	CH.D. STI. J.	—		76 L. T. 771
——— v Religious Tract Society	CH.D. ROM. J.	476	39
Broomfield v Williams	C.A.	469	167	[1897] 1 Ch. 602; 66 L. J. Ch. 305; 76 L. T. 243
Brower, In re. Ex parte Pruddah	Q.B.D. BRCY	576	42	76 L. T. 692
Brown, Ex parte. In re Stephenson	Q.B.D. BRCY.	416	17	[1897] 1 Q. B. 638; 66 L. J. Q. B. 423; 76 L. T. 328
——— v Maurice. In re Maurice	CH.D. NOR. J	—	2	75 L. T. 415
Browrigg v Mostyn	P.D. & A.D.	—	129	66 L. J. P. 37

Name of Case.	Court.	Page in W. R. 1896–97.	Column in Digest.	References to Contemporaneous Reports.
Bruning v Odhams	H.L. (E.)	—	126	75 L. T. 602
Bruty v Mackey. In re Buck	CH.D. KEK J.	106	23	[1896] 2 Ch. 727; 65 L. J. Ch. 881; 75 L. T. 312
Buck, In re. Bruty v Mackey	CH.D. KEK.J.	106	23	[1896] 2 Ch. 727; 65 L. J. Ch. 881; 75 L. T. 312
Bultfontein Sun Diamond Mine, In re	C.A.	—	30	75 L. T. 669
Burman, Ex parte. In re Jubb	Q.B.D. BKCY.	479	15	[1897] 1 Q. B. 641; 66 L. J. Q. B. 452; 76 L. T. 329
Cadogan v Fitzroy. In re Hamilton	C.A.	—	23	[1896] 2 Ch. 617; 65 L. J. Ch. 815
Cain v Moon	Q.B.D.	—	49	[1896] 2 Q. B. 283; 65 L. J. Q. B. 587; 74 L. T. 728
Cale v James	Q.B.D.	317	78	[1897] 1 Q. B. 418; 66 L. J. Q. B. 249; 76 L. T. 119
"Cambrian," The	P.D. & A.D.	—	155	76 L. T. 504.
Cannon Brewery Co. v Gilby	C.A.	—	117	55 L. T. 407
Carey v Harper	C.A. (I.)	—	13	[1890] 2 Ir. Rep. 93
Caribian, Ex parte. In re Raab	Q.B.D. BKCY.	480	13	76 L. T. 330
Carmichael's case. Hannan's Empress Gold Mining Co., In re	C.A.	—	29	[1896] 2 Ch. 643; 65 L. J. Ch. 902
Carmichael, Ex parte. In re Belfast Warehouse Co.	C.A. (I.)	—	128	[1897] 1 Ir. Rep. 124
Carney v Plimmer	C.A.	385	61	[1897] 1 Q. B. 634; 66 L. J. Q. B. 415; 76 L. T. 374
Carruthers v Carruthers	H.L. (SC.)	—	139	[1896] A. C. 659
Carter and Kenderdine's Contract, In re	C.A.	484	171	[1897] 1 Ch. 776; 66 L. J. Ch. 408; 76 L. T. 476
Caspari, In the Goods of	P.D. & A.D.	—	129	75 L. T. 663
Chaffers, In re. Ex parte Attorney-General	Q.B.D.	365	172	76 L. T. 351
Chambers v Gunstone	Q.B.D.	—	14	76 L. T. 780
Chandler v Bradley	CH.D. STI. J.	296	142	[1897] 1 Ch. 315; 66 L. J. Ch. 214; 75 L. T. 581
Chapman, In re. Cocks v Chapman	C.A.	67	166	[1896] 2 Ch. 763; 65 L. J. Ch. 892; 75 L. T. 196
Charity Commissioners v Green. In re Herbage Rents Charity	CH.D. STI. J.	74		[1896] 2 Ch. 811; 65 L. J. Ch. 871
Chicago Railway Elevator Co. v Inland Revenue Commissioners	Q.B.D.	138	71
——	C.A.	242	71	75 L. T. 572
Chilcott, In the Goods of	P.D. & A.D.	—	132	[1897] P. 223; 66 L. J. P. 108
Christmas v Jones. In re Jones	CH.D. KEK J.	598	3	[1897] 2 Ch. 190; 66 L. J. Ch. 439; 76 L. T. 454
Clark, In re. Ex parte Beyer	C.A.	118	10	[1896] 2 Q. B. 476; 75 L. T. 304
Clarke, In the Goods of	P.D. & A.D.	—	130	[1896] P. 287; 66 L. J. P. 9
—— v Dunraven. "The Satanita"	H.L. (E.)	—	151	[1897] A. C. 59; 66 L. J. P. 1; 75 L. T. 337
—— v London and County Bank	Q.B.D.	383	17	[1897] 1 Q. B. 552; 66 L. J. Q. B. 354; 76 L. T. 293
Clifford v Gurney. In re Gurney	CH.D. KEK.J.	92	123	[1896] 2 Ch. 863; 66 L. J. Ch. 32; 75 L. T. 332
—— v Inland Revenue Commissioners	Q.B.D.	14	69	[1896] 2 Q. B. 187; 65 L. J. Q. B. 582; 74 L. T. 699
Clotton v Attenborough	H.L. (E.)	276	17	[1897] A. C. 90; 66 L. J. Q. B. 221; 75 L. T. 557
Clydesdale Bank v Paton	H.L. (SC.)	—	62	[1896] A. C. 381; 65 L. J. P. C. 73; 74 L. T. 738
"Clymene," The	P.D. & A.D.	—	150	76 L. T. 811
Coats v Inland Revenue Commissioners	Q.B.D.	—	71	[1897] 1 Q. B. 778; 66 L. J. Q. B. 434; 76 L. T. 561
Coburn v Colledge	C.A.	488	156	[1897] 1 Q. B. 702; 66 L. J. Q. B. 462; 76 L. T. 608
Cocks v Chapman. In re Chapman	C.A.	67	166	[1896] 2 Ch. 763; 65 L. J. Ch. 892; 75 L. T. 196
Coke v French	P.D. & A.D.	—	129	76 L. T. 163
Colchester v Gloucestershire County Council	Q.B.D.	—	63	66 L. J. Q. B. 290
Coleman v Bucks and Oxon Bank	CHD. BYRNE, J	616	8	[1897] 2 Ch. 243; 66 L. J. Ch. 564; 76 L. T. 684
Coles v Davis. In re Brooks	CH.D. STI. J.	—		76 L. T. 771
Collman v Mills	Q.B.D.	—	98	[1897] 1 Q. B. 396; 66 L. J. Q. B. 170; 75 L. T. 590
Colmer, In re	CH.D. ROM.J.	343	24	[1897] 1 Ch. 524; 66 L. J. Ch. 326; 76 L. T. 323
Commissioners for Railways v O'Rourke	P.C.	—	113	[1896] A. C. 594
Concession Trust, In re. McKay's case	CH.D. WIL. J.	—	31	[1896] 2 Ch. 757; 75 L. T. 298
Conquest v Ebbetts	H.L. (E.)	50	83	[1896] A. C. 490; 65 L. J. Ch. 808
Conroy v Peacock	Q.B.D.	502	42	[1897] 2 Q. B. 6; 66 L. J. Q. B. 425; 76 L. T. 465
Consort Deep Level Gold Mines, In re. Ex parte Stark	CH.D. NOR.J.	227		66 L. J. Ch. 122
——	C.A.	420	28	[1897] 1 Ch. 575; 66 L. J. Ch. 297; 76 L. T. 300
Continental Oxygen Co., In re. Elias v Continental Oxygen Co.	CH.D. KEK.J.	313	25	[1897] 1 Ch. 511; 66 L. J. Ch. 273; 76 L. T. 229
Cook v Andrews	CH.D. NOR. J.	—	168	[1897] 1 Ch. 266; 66 L. J. Ch. 137; 76 L. T. 16
Cook v Culverhouse. In re Culverhouse	CH.D. KEK. J.	10	66	[1896] 2 Ch. 251; 65 L. J. Ch. 484; 74 L. T. 347
Cooke v Stevens. In re Stevens	CH.D. NOR. J.	284	54	[1897] 1 Ch. 422; 76 L. T. 18
Coolgardie Consolidated Gold Mines, In re	C.A.	—	32	76 L. T. 269
"Copernicus," The	C.A.	—	74	[1896] P. 237; 65 L. J. P. 108; 74 L. T. 757
Cordwell v Lever. In re Lever	CH.D. STI. J.	172	92	[1897] 1 Ch. 32; 66 L. J. Ch. 63

Name of Case.	Court.	Page in W. R. 1896-97.	Column in Digest.	References to Contemporaneous Reports.
Cordwell v Lever. In re Lever (No. 2)	C.A.	—	166	76 L. T. 71
Cornwall Minerals Railway Co., In re	CH.D. WIL. J.	—	26	[1897] 2 Ch. 74; 66 L. J. Ch. 561; 76 L. T. 832
Cosh's Contract, In re	C.A.	117	79	[1897] 1 Ch. 9; 66 L. J. Ch. 28; 75 L. T. 365
Cosier, In re. Humphreys v Gadsden	C.A.	376	176	[1897] 1 Ch. 325; 66 L. J. Ch. 236; 76 L. T. 31
Cotton v Vogan	H.L. (E.)	—	100	[1896] A. C. 457; 65 L. J. Q. B. 486; 74 L. T. 598
Cowen v Kingston-upon-Hull (Town Clerk)	Q.B.D.	413	53	[1897] 1 Q. B. 273; 66 L. J. Q. B. 185; 75 L. T. 593
Cowley (Earl) Settlement Estate Duty, In re	Q.B.D.	538	66	[1897] 2 Q. B. 47; 66 L. J. Q. B. 656; 76 L. T. 567
Craig v Craig	P.D. & A.D.	64	48	[1896] P. 171; 65 L. J. P. D. & A. 99; 75 L. T. 284
"Crathie," The	P.D. & A.D.	631	5	[1897] P. 178; 66 L. J. P. 93; 76 L. T. 534
Crocker v Sturge	Q.B.D.	271	75	[1897] 1 Q. B. 330; 66 L. J. Q. B. 142; 75 L. T. 549
Cronbach v Isaac. In re Isaac	C.A.	262	117	[1897] 1 Ch. 251; 66 L. J. Ch. 160; 75 L. T. 638
Croshaw v Lyndhurst Ship Co.	CH.D. STI. J.	570	34	[1897] 2 Ch. 154; 66 L. J. Ch. 576; 76 L. T. 553
Crossley, In re. Birrell v Greehough	CH.D. KEK.J.	615	105	[1897] 1 Ch. 928; 66 L. J. Ch. 558; 76 L. T. 419
Cudworth v Hayward	P.D. & A.D.	—	130	75 L. T. 456
Culverhouse, In re. Cook v Culverhouse	CH.D. KEK.J.	10	66	[1896] 2 Ch. 251; 65 L. J. Ch. 484; 74 L. T. 347
Cunnack v Edwards	C.A.	99	59	[1896] 2 Ch. 679; 65 L. J. Ch. 801; 75 L. T. 122
Curran v Corbett	M.R. (I.)	—	178	[1897] 1 L. R. Ir. 343
Currie v McKnight	H.L. (SC.)	—	153	[1897] A. C. 97; 66 L. J. P. C. 19; 75 L. T. 457
Dagnall, In re. Ex parte Soane	Q.B.D. BKCY.	79	94	[1896] 2 Q. B. 407
Dalton v Fitzgerald	C.A.	685	54	[1897] 2 Ch. 86; 66 L. J. Ch. 604; 76 L. T. 700
Darlow v Bland	C.A.	177	18	[1897] 1 Q. B. 125; 66 L. J. Q. B. 157; 75 L. T. 537
Davidson v Myrtle. In re Smith	CH.D. KEK.J.	29	165	[1896] 2 Ch. 590; 65 L. J. Ch. 761
Davies, Ex parte. In re Evans	Q.B.D. BKCY.	—	14	66 L. J. Q. B. 499; 76 L. T. 530
———, In re. Harrison v Davies	CH.D. KEK.J.	—	96	[1897] 2 Ch. 204; 66 L. J. Ch. 512
Davis v Ingram	CH.D. KEK. J.	459	106	[1897] 1 Ch. 477; 66 L. J. Ch. 386
Daws v Banks. In re Banks	CH.D. ROM. J.	206	103	75 L. T. 387
Deeley v Perkes	H.L. (E.)	—		[1896] A. C. 496; 75 L. T. 233
De Hayn v Garland. In re Spurrier's Settlement	CH.D. STI. J.	342	93	[1897] 1 Ch. 453; 66 L. J. Ch. 295; 76 L. T. 180
Dellwick's Patent, In re	CH.D. CHI. J.	—	108	[1896] 2 Ch 705
Delmar's Trusts, In re	CH.D. STI. J.	630	174	[1897] 2 Ch. 163; 66 L. J. Ch. 555; 76 L. T. 594
Dent v Bournemouth Corporation	Q.B.D.	—	90	66 L. J. Q. B. 395
Derbishire v Montagu. In re Montagu's Settlement	CH.D. KEK.J.	380	141	[1897] 1 Ch. 685; 66 L. J. Ch. 345; 76 L. T. 289
———	C.A.	594	141	[1897] 2 Ch. 8; 66 L. J. Ch. 541; 76 L. T. 485
Derbyshire v Houliston	Q.B.D.	527	6	[1897] 1 Q. B. 772; 66 L. J. Q. B. 569; 76 L. T. 624
Derbyshire County Council v Derby (Mayor)	C.A.	3	121	[1896] 2 Q. B. 297; 65 L. J. Q. B. 557
De Tabley, In re. Leighton v Leighton	CH.D. NOR. J.	—	140	75 L. T. 328
Devon's Settled Estates, In re. White v Devon (Earl)	CH.D. CHI. J.	25	87	[1896] 2 Ch. 562; 65 L. J. Ch. 810
Devonshire (Duke) v Stokes	Q.B.D.	—	102	76 L. T. 424
Dick v Fraser. In re Macdonald	CH.D. STI. J.	628	54	[1897] 2 Ch. 181; 66 L. J. Ch. 630; 76 L. T. 713
Dickins v Gill	Q.B.D.	—	115	44 W. R. 686; [1896] 2 Q. B. 310; 65 L. J. M. C. 187
Didcot, &c., Railway Co. v Great Western Railway Co.	C.A.	282	137	[1897] 1 Q. B. 33; 66 L. J. Q. B. 33; 75 L. T. 401
Dixon v Great Western Railway Co.	C.A.	226	135	[1897] 1 Q. B. 300; 66 L. J. Q. B. 132; 75 L. T. 539
Dodd v Churton	C.A.	490	37	[1897] 1 Q. B. 562; 66 L. J. Q. B. 477; 76 L. T. 438
Doetsch, In re. Matheson v Ludwig	CH.D. ROM. J.	57	106	[1896] 2 Ch. 836; 65 L. J. Ch. 855
Dombey & Son v Playfair	C.A.	—	123	[1897] 1 Q. B. 368; 66 L. J. Q. B. 328; 75 L. T. 676
Donaldson v Bamber. In re Stephenson	C.A.	164	178	[1897] 1 Ch. 75; 66 L. J. Ch. 93; 75 L. T. 495
Donisthorpe v Manchester, Sheffield, &c., Railway Co.	C.A.	386	133	[1897] 1 Q. B. 671; 66 L. J. Q. B. 399; 76 L. T. 371
Douglas v Pintsch's Patent Lighting Co.	CH.D. ROM. J.	108	110	[1897] 1 Ch. 176; 65 L. J. Ch. 919; 75 L. T. 332
Drury v Army and Navy Co-operative Society	Q.B.D.	—	97	44 W. R. 560; [1896] 2 Q. B. 271; 65 L. J. M. C. 169; 74 L. T. 621
Duff v Hawker. In re Hawker	CH.D. KEK.J.	440	140	66 L. J. Ch. 341; 76 L. T. 286
Duffy's Estate, In re	C.A. (I.)	—	133	[1897] 1 L. R. Ir. 315
Dumbleton v Williams	C.A.	—	126	76 L. T. 81
Dunbar v Ardee Guardians	Q.B.D. (I.)	—	112	[1897] 2 Ir. Rep. 76
"Dunbeth," The	P.D. & A.D.	—	148	[1897] P. 133; 66 L. J. P. 66; 76 L. T. 658
Duncan v Dowding	Q.B.D.	383	85	[1897] 1 Q. B. 575; 66 L. J. Q. B. 362, 76 L. T. 294
Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co. v New Seddon Pneumatic Tyre Co.	C.A.	—	109	76 L. T. 405
Dunlop-Truffault Cycle and Tube Co., In re. Shearman's Case	CH.D. KEK.J.	—	29	66 L. J. Ch. 25; 75 L. T. 385

Name of Case.	Court.	Page in W. R. 1896–97.	Column in Digest	References to Contemporaneous Reports.
Dunn v MacDonald	Q.B.D.			[1897] 1 Q. B. 401; 66 L. J. Q. B. 209
——.	C.A.	355	128	[1897] 1 Q. B. 555; 66 L. J. Q. B. 420; 76 L. T. 444
Durlacher, In the Goods of	P.D. & A.D.	—	131	75 L. T. 664
Durrant v Branksome District Council	C.A.	—	89	76 L. T. 739
Dyson and Fowke's Contract, In re	CH.D. KEK. J.	28	171	[1896] 2 Ch. 720; 65 L. J. Ch. 791; 74 L. T. 759
Early, In re	C.A. (I.)	—	158	[1897] 1 Ir. Rep. 6
Eastbourne (Mayor of) v Bradford	Q.B.D.	31	88	65 L. J. Q. B. 571
Eastman Photographic Materials Co.'s Trade-Mark, In re	C.A.	—	163	76 L. T. 730
Eaton, In re. Ex parte Viney	Q.B.D. BKCY.	—	11	[1897] 2 Q. B. 16; 66 L. J. Q. B. 491
Ebbetts v Conquest	H.L. (E.)	50	83	[1896] A. C. 490; 65 L. J. Ch. 808
Edison General Electric Co. v Westminster and Vancouver Tramway Co.	P.C.	—	19	[1897] A. C. 193; 66 L. J. P. C. 36; 75 L. T. 438
Edwards v Steel, Young, & Co.	Q.B.D.	553	153	[1897] 1 Q. B. 712; 66 L. J. Q. B. 437; 76 L. T. 689
——.	C.A.	689
Edwards' Settlement, In re	CH.D. STI. J.	—	142	76 L. T. 774
Ehrmann v Ehrmann	C.A.	149	122	[1896] 2 Ch. 611; 65 L. J. Ch. 745; 75 L. T. 37
—— (No. 2)	CH.D. STI. J.	—	121	[1896] 2 Ch. 826; 65 L. J. Ch. 889; 75 L. T. 243
Ehrmann's Trade-Marks, In re	CH.D. STI. J.	698	162
Eley v Read	C.A.	—	104	76 L. T. 39
Elgood v Harris	Q.B.D	158	16	[1896] 2 Q. B. 491; 66 L. J. Q. B. 53; 75 L. T. 419
Elias v Continental Oxygen Co. In re Continental Oxygen Co.	CH.D. KEK. J.	313	25	[1897] 1 Ch. 511; 76 L. T. 229
Ellis v Ellis	P.D. & A.D.	144	79	[1896] P. 251; 75 L. T. 390
—— v Wright	C.A.	—	18, 80	76 L. T. 522
Engelhart v Farrant	C.A.	179	97	[1897] 1 Q. B. 240; 66 L. J. Q. B. 122; 75 L. T. 617
Ernest v Loma Gold Mines	CH.D. CHI. J.	45		[1896] 2 Ch. 572; 65 L. J. Ch. 850; 75 L. T. 221
——.	C.A.	86	27	[1897] 1 Ch. 1; 66 L. J. Ch. 17; 75 L. T. 317
Errington v Errington	CH.D. KEK. J.	573	145	76 L. T. 616
Esquimalt Railway Co. v Bainbridge	P.C.	—	19	[1896] A. C. 561
Evans, In re. Ex parte Davies	Q.B.D. BKCY.	—	14	66 L. J. Q. B. 499; 76 L. T. 530
Exchange Telegraph Co. v Central News	CH.D. STI. J.	595	39	[1897] 2 Ch. 48; 76 L. T. 591
Fanshawe, Ex parte. In re Wood	Q.B.D.	—	155	[1897] 1 Q. B. 314; 66 L. J. Q. B. 69; 75 L. T. 387
Farrell v Farrell	P.D. & A.D.	—	47	76 L. T. 167
Favard v Favard	P.D. & A.D.	—	45	75 L. T. 664
Fearon, In re. Hotchkin v Mayor	CH.D. KEK. J.	232	96
Fenner and Lord's Arbitration, In re	C.A.	486	121	[1897] 1 Q. B. 667; 66 L. J. Q. B. 498; 76 L. T. 376
Fielding v Thomas	P.C.	—	20	[1896] A. C. 600; 75 L. T. 216
Filby v Hounsell	CH.D. ROM. J.	232	38	[1896] 2 Ch. 737; 65 L. J. Ch. 852; 75 L. T. 270
Finlay v Darling	CH.D. ROM. J.	445	143	[1897] 1 Ch. 719; 66 L. J. Ch. 348; 76 L. T. 461
—— v Mexican Investment Co.	Q.B.D.	—	76	[1897] 1 Q. B. 517; 66 L. J. Q. B. 151; 76 L. T. 257
Firth v Staines	Q.B.D.	575	102	[1897] 2 Q. B. 70; 66 L. J. Q. B. 510; 76 L. T. 496
Fitzgerald v Firbank	C.A.	—	57	[1897] 2 Ch 96; 66 L. J. Ch. 529; 76 L. T. 584
Fletcher v Nokes	CH.D. NOR. J.	471	79	[1897] 1 Ch. 271; 66 L. J. Ch. 177; 76 L. T. 107
Flowers & Co., In re. Ex parte Ware	C.A.	118	10	[1897] 1 Q. B. 14; 65 L. J. Q. B. 679; 75 L. T. 306
Floyd v Lyons & Co.	C.A.	435	81	[1897] 1 Ch. 633; 66 L. J. Ch. 350; 76 L. T. 251
Fluister v Fluister	C.A.	—	48	[1897] P. 22; 66 L. J. P. 33
Forrest v Todd	Q.B.D.	—	118	76 L. T. 500
Foster v Clowser	C.A.	—	123	76 L. T. 825
Fortescue v Mercantile Bank of London	C.A.	529	160	[1897] 2 Q. B. 236; 66 L. J. Q. B. 591; 76 L. T. 645
Foster, In re. Thomas v Foster	CH.D. KEK. J.	339	64	[1897] 1 Ch. 484; 66 L. J. Ch. 220; 76 L. T. 228
Fowle v Fowle	Q.B.D.	—		75 L. T. 514
Foxwell v Van Grutten	C.A.	—	127	[1897] 1 Ch. 64; 66 L. J. Ch. 53; 75 L. T. 368
Francis v Metcalfe	Q.B.D.	174	53	75 L. T. 380
Frankinstein v Gavin	C.A.	547	121	[1897] 2 Q. B. 62; 76 L. T. 747
Frewen v Law Life Insurance Co.	CH.D. NOR. J.	—	180	44 W. R. 652; [1896] 2 Ch. 511; 65 L. J. Ch. 787
Fricker v Van Grutten	C.A.	53	125, 157	[1897] 2 Ch. 649; 65 L. J. Ch. 823
Fulham Vestry v London County Council	Q.B.D.	620	100	[1897] 2 Q. B. 76; 66 L. J. Q. B. 515; 76 L. T. 691
Fuller and Leathley's Contract, In re	CH.D. NOR. J.	627	169	[1897] 2 Ch. 144; 66 L. J. Ch. 543; 76 L. T. 646
Gallard, In re. Ex parte Gallard	Q.B.D. BKCY.	556	15	[1897] 2 Q. B. 8; 66 L. J. Q. B. 484; 76 L. T. 327
Game, In re. Game v Young	CH.D. STI. J.	472	179	[1897] 1 Ch. 881; 66 L. J. Ch. 505; 76 L. T. 459

Name of Case.	Court.	Page in W. R. 1896-97.	Column in Digest.	References to Contemporaneous Reports.
Gardner v Brooke	C.A (I.)	—	86	[1897] 2 Ir. Rep. 6
Gas Float "Whitton," In re	H.L. (E.)	—	4	[1897] A. C. 337; 66 L. J. P. 99; 76 L. T. 663
Geiliger v Gibbs	CH.D. KEK. J.	315	156	[1897] 1 Ch. 479; 66 L. J. Ch. 230; 76 L. T. 111
Gerard (Lord) v Kent County Council	C.A.	531	63	[1897] 1 Q. B 351; 66 L. J. Q. B. 251; 76 L. T. 8
Ginger, In re. Ex parte London Universal Bank	Q.B.D. BKCY.	—	11	76 L. T. 808
Godfrey v Radford	Q.B.D.	—	173	75 L. T. 224
Gold Reefs of Western Australia v Dawson	CH.D. NOR. J.	285	119	[1897] 1 Ch. 115; 66 L. J. Ch. 147; 75 L. T. 575
Goldstein v Vaughan	Q.B.D. BKCY.	399	57	[1897] 1 Q. B. 549; 66 L. J. Q. B. 380; 76 L. T. 262
Gonty and Manchester, &c., Railway Co.'s Arbitration, In re	C.A.	83	83	[1896] 2 Q. B. 439; 65 L. J. Q. B. 625; 75 L. T. 239
Goodlock v Cousins	Q.B.D.	303	42	[1897] 1 Q. B. 348; 66 L. J. Q. B. 161; 76 L. T. 86
———	C.A.	369	42	[1897] 1 Q. B. 558; 66 L. J. Q. B. 360; 76 L. T. 313
Goodson v Sunbury Gas Co.	Q.B.D.	—	105	75 L. T. 251
Goodwin v Goodwin	P.D. & A.D.	656	47	[1897] P. 87; 66 L. J. P. 107
Goudie, In re. Ex parte Official Receiver	Q.B.D. BKCY.	80	13	[1896] 2 Q. B. 481; 75 L. T. 277
Gould v Stuart	P.C.	—	44	[1896] A. C. 575
Governments Stock, &c., Investment Co v Manila Railway Co.	H.L. (E.)	353	25	[1897] A. C. 81; 66 L. J. Ch. 102; 75 L. T. 553
Graham v Sutton & Co.	C.A.	—	121	[1897] 1 Ch. 761; 66 L. J. Ch. 320; 76 L. T. 369
Grand Junction Waterworks Co. v Davies	Q.B.D.	687	173	[1897] 2 Q. B. 209; 66 L. J. Q. B. 633; 76 L. T. 833
Gray's Settlement, In re. Akers v Sears	CH.D. NOR. J.	—	178	[1896] 2 Ch. 802; 65 L. J. Ch. 858; 75 L. T. 407
Great Bardfield (Vicar) v All having Interest	P.D. & A.D.	—	52	[1897] P. 185
Great Northern Railway Co. v Lurgan Town Commissioners	Q.B.D. (I.)	—	90	[1897] 2 L. R. Ir. 340
Greenwell v Low Beechburn Coal Co.	Q.B.D.	—	82	[1897] 2 Q. B. 165; 66 L. J. Q. B. 643; 76 L. T. 759
Grey (Earl) v Grey. In re Bristol (Marquis)	CH.D. ROM. J.	552	143	[1897] 1 Ch. 946; 66 L. J. Ch. 446; 76 L. T. 757
Grey v Manitoba, &c., Railway Co.	P.C.	—	19	[1897] A. C. 254; 66 L. J. P. C. 66
Griffiths v Tower Publishing Co.	CH.D. STI. J.	73	37	[1897] 1 Ch. 21; 66 L. J. Ch. 12; 75 L. T. 330
Grosvenor Railway Hotel Co., In re	C.A.	—	24	76 L. T. 337
Gurney, In re. Clifford v Gurney	CH.D. KEK. J.	92	123	[1896] 2 Ch. 863; 66 L. J. Ch. 32; 75 L T. 332
Haddesley v Hannam In re Hannam	CH.D. NOR. J.	613	174	[1897] 2 Ch. 39; 66 L. J. Ch. 471; 76 L. T. 681
Halford v Halford	P.D. & A.D.	—	132	[1897] P. 36; 66 L. J. P. 29; 75 L. T. 520
Hall v Trigg	CH.D. KEK. J.	703	118	[1897] 2 Ch. 219; 76 L. T. 807
Hamilton, In re. Cadogan v Fitzroy	C.A.	—	23	[1896] 2 Ch. 617; 65 L. J. Ch. 815
Hamini v Tillekeratne	P.C.	—	22	[1897] A. C. 277; 66 L. J. P. C. 55, 76 L. T. 210
Hammersmith Vestry v Lowenfeld	Q.B.D.	60	100	[1896] 2 Q. B. 278
Hampshire Land Co., In re	CH.D. WIL. J.	136	33	[1896] 2 Ch. 743; 55 L. J. Ch. 860
Hanbury, Whiting, & Nicholson, In re	CH.D. STI. J.	—	158	75 L. T. 449
Hannam, In re. Haddesley v Hannam	CH.D. NOR. J.	613	174	[1897] 2 Ch. 39; 66 L. J. Ch. 471; 76 L. T. 681
Hannan's Empress Gold Mining Co., In re. Carmichael's case	C.A.	—	29	[1896] 2 Ch. 643; 65 L. J. Ch. 902
Harris v Sleep	CH.D. KEK. J.	536	107	[1897] 2 Ch. 80; 66 L. J. Ch. 511; 76 L. T. 458
——— (No. 2)	C.A.	680	107	66 L. J. Ch. 596; 76 L. T. 670
Harrison v Davies. In re Davies	CH.D. KEK. J.	—	96	[1897] 2 Ch. 204; 66 L. J. Ch. 512
Hawke v Dunn	Q.B.D.	359	60	[1897] 1 Q. B. 579; 66 L. J. Q. B. 364; 76 L. T. 355
Hawker, In re. Duff v Hawker	CH.D. KEK. J.	440	140	66 L. J. Ch. 341; 76 L. T. 286
Hawley, In re. Ex parte Ridgway	Q.B.D. BKCY.	—	9	76 L. T. 501
Hayes Common Conservators v Bromley District Council	Q.B.D.	207	24	[1897] 1 Q. B. 321; 66 L. J. Q. B. 155; 76 L. T. 51
Hayward v Hayward	CH.D. KEK. J.	439	12	[1897] 1 Ch. 905; 66 L. J. Ch. 392; 76 L. T. 383
Heimbs v Newcastle Co-operative Society	CH.D. STI. J.	—	119	76 L. T. 109
Henley, In re. Alcock v Henley	CH.D. NOR. J.	—	4	75 L. T. 307
Henty v Regina	P.C.	—	172	[1896] A. C. 567
Herbage Rents Charity, In re. Charity Commissioners v Green	CH.D. STI. J.	74	137	[1896] 2 Ch. 811; 65 L. J. Ch. 871
Heston District Council v Grout	CH.D. NOR. J.	612	91	76 L. T. 613
———	C.A.	697	91
Heywood v Whitehead	Q.B.D.	—	6	76 L. T. 781
Higginshaw Mills Co., In re. Manchester County Bank v Higginshaw Mills Co.	C.A.	56	35	[1896] 2 Ch. 544; 65 L. J. Ch. 771
Hill (Viscount) v Bullock	CH.D. KEK. J.	587	58	[1897] 2 Ch. 55; 66 L. J. Ch. 454; 76 L. T. 417
——— v Hill	C.A.	371	167	[1897] 1 Q. B. 483; 66 L. J. Q. B. 329 76 L. T. 103
Hill's Settlement, In re	CH.D. STI. J.	—	143	75 L. T. 477

Name of Case.	Court.	Page in W. R. 1896-97.	Column in Digest.	References to Contemporaneous Reports.
Hindle v Birtwistle	Q.B.D.	207	57	[1897] 1 Q. B. 192; 66 L. J. Q. B 173; 76 L. T. 159
Hindson v Ashby	C.A.	252	137	[1896] 2 Ch. 1; 65 L. J. Ch. 515; 74 L. T. 327
Hobson v Gorringe	C.A.	356	58	[1897] 1 Ch. 182; 66 L. J. Ch. 114; 75 L. T. 610
Holland v Lazarus	Q.B.D.	—	99	66 L. J. Q. B. 285
Holloway v Coster	Q.B.D.	319	167	[1897] 1 Q. B. 346; 66 L. J. Q. B. 293; 76 L. T. 57
Holt v Holt	CHD.BYRNE J.	650	165	76 L. T. 776
Hood v Attorney-General. In re Hunter	CH.D. ROM.J.	344		[1897] 1 Ch. 518; 76 L. T. 386
——	C.A.	610	23	[1897] 2 Ch. 105; 66 L. J. Ch. 545; 76 L. T. 725
Hood Barrs, Ex parte. In re Lumley	C.A.	147	94	[1896] 2 Ch. 690; 65 L. J. Ch. 837; 75 L. T. 236
—— v Crossman	H.L. (E.)	465	156	[1897] A. C. 172; 66 L. J. Q B. 357; 76 L. T. 297
—— v Heriot (No. 1)	C.A.	1	123	[1896] 2 Q. B. 338; 65 L. J. Q. B. 622
—— (No. 2)	C.A.	17	119	[1896] 2 Q. B. 375; 65 L J. Q. B. 624
—— (No 3)	H.L. (E.)	507	94	[1897] A. C. 177; 66 L. J. Q. B. 356; 76 L. T. 299
Hopcraft v Hopcraft	CH.D. STI.J.	—	169	76 L. T. 341
Hope v Brash	C.A.	659	122	[1897] 2 Q. B. 188; 66 L. J. Q. B. 653; 76 L. T. 823
Hopkinson's Patent, In re	P.C.	—	108	[1897] A. C. 249; 66 L. J. P. C. 38; 75 L. T. 462
Hopper, In re	C.A.	—	92	66 L. J. Ch. 569
Horn and Francis, In re	CH.D. CHI. J.	72	159	[1896] 2 Ch. 797; 66 L. J. Ch. 15; 75 L. T. 370
Hornsey District Council v Smith	CH.D. KEK.J.	231	90	66 L. J. Ch. 167; 75 L. T. 684
——	C.A.	581	90	[1897] 1 Ch. 843; 66 L. J. Ch. 476; 76 L. T. 430
Horsewood v Pedler	Q.B.D.	—	55	66 L. J. Q. B. 18
Hotchkin v Mayor. In re Fearon	CH.D. KEK. J.	232	96
How v Winterton (Earl)	C.A.	103	164	[1896] 2 Ch. 626; 65 L. J. Ch. 832
Howell v Holroyd	P.D. & A.D.	—	50	[1897] P. 198
Huber, In the Goods of	P.D. & A.D.	—	128	[1896] P. 209; 65 L. J. P. 119; 75 L. T. 453
Huddersfield Corporation v Ravensthorpe District Council	CH.D.NOR.J.	436	173	[1897] 1 Ch. 652; 66 L. J. Ch. 286; 76 L. T. 377
——	C.A.	642		[1897] 2 Ch. 121; 66 L. J. Ch. 581; 76 L. T. 817
Hulbert v Cathcart	H.L. (E.)	—	119	[1896] A. C. 470; 65 L. J. Q. B. 644; 75 L. T. 302
Humphreys v Gadsden. In re Cosier	C.A.	376	176	[1897] 1 Ch. 325; 66 L. J. Ch. 236; 76 L. T. 31
Hunt, In the Goods of	P.D. & A.D.	236	129	[1896] P. 288; 66 L. J. P. 8
Hunt v Hunt	Q.B.D.	—	94	76 L. T. 779
Hunter, In re. Hood v Attorney-General	CH.D. ROM. J.	344		[1897] 1 Ch. 518; 76 L. T. 386
——	C.A.	610	23	[1897] 2 Ch. 105; 66 L. J. Ch. 545; 76 L. T. 725
Imray v Oakshette	C.A.	681	81	[1897] 2 Q. B. 218; 66 L. J. Q. B. 544; 76 L. T. 632
Incandescent Gas Light Co. v New Incandescent Gas Lighting Co.	CH.D. STI. J.	—	109	76 L. T. 47
International Commercial Co., In re	C.A.	—	34	75 L. T. 639
Isaac, In re. Cronbach v Isaac	C.A.	262	117	[1897] 1 Ch. 251; 66 L. J. Ch. 160; 75 L. T. 638
James v Evans	Q.B.D.	654	96	[1897] 2 Q. B. 180
"Janet Court," The	P.D. & A.D.	—	154	[1897] P. 59; 66 L. J. P. 34; 76 L. T. 172
Jeffery, Ex parte. In re Tetley	Q.B.D. BKCY.	—	12	66 L. J. Q. B. 111; 75 L. T. 166
Jenkins, In the Goods of	P.D. & A.D.	—	128	76 L. T. 164
Jenks v Clifden (Viscount)	CH.D. KEK.J.	424	86	[1897] 1 Ch. 694; 66 L. J. Ch. 338; 76 L. T. 382
—— v Ditton	CH.D. STI. J.	—	122	79 L. T. 591
"John O'Scott," The	C.A.	—	151	[1897] P. 64; 66 L. J. P. 47; 76 L. T. 222
Jones, Ex parte. In re Young	Q.B.D. BKCY.	96	14	[1896] 2 Q. B. 484; 75 L. T. 278
——, In re. Christmas v Jones	CH.D. KEK.J.	598	3	[1897] 2 Ch. 190; 66 L. J. Ch. 439; 76 L. T. 454
—— v German	Q.B.D.	112	78	[1896] 2 Q. B. 418; 65 L. J. M. C. 212
——	C.A.	278	78	[1897] 1 Q. B. 374; 66 L. J. Q. B. 281; 76 L. T. 136
Joseph v Joseph	P.D. & A.D.	—	48	76 L. T. 236
Jubb, In re. Ex parte Burman	Q.B.D. BKCY.	479	15	[1897] 1 Q. B. 641; 66 L. J. Q. B. 452; 76 L. T. 329
Judkins v Judkins	C.A.	567	45	[1897] P. 138; 66 L. J. P. 76; 76 L. T. 409
Kelly v Boyd. In re Boyd	CH.D. ROM. J.	648	115	[1897] 2 Ch. 232; 66 L. J. Ch. 614
Kennedy v De Trafford	H.L. (E.)	671	104	[1897] A. C. 180, 66 L. J. Ch. 413; 76 L. T. 427
Keown-Boyd v Gilmour	C.A.	—	95	75 L. T. 381
Kerfoot, Ex parte. Reg. v London Justices	Q.B.D.	58	77
Kevans v Joyce	C.A. (I.)	—	120	[1897] 1 Ir. Rep. 1
Killin v Swatton	Q.B.D.	235	86	76 L. T. 55
Kinchant, In re. Reg. v Lord Leigh	C.A.	—	110	[1897] 1 Q. B. 132; 66 L. J. Q. B. 56; 75 L. T. 339
Kingham v Kingham	V.C. (I.)	—	179, 180	[1897] 1 Ir. Rep. 170
Kippins, Ex parte	Q.B.D.	188	99	[1897] 1 Q. B. 1; 66 L. J. Q. B. 95; 75 L. T. 421

Name of Case.	Court.	Page in W. R. 1896-97.	Column in Digest.	References to Contemporaneous Reports.
Kirkham v Attenborough	C.A.	213	139	[1897] 1 Q. B. 201; 66 L. J. Q. B. 149; 75 L. T. 543
Knight v Roberts. In re Roberts	C.A.	—	55	76 L. T. 479
Konig & Ebhardt's Trade-Mark, In re	CH. D. STI. J.	230	163	[1896] 2 Ch. 236; 65 L. J. Ch. 404
Koosen v Rose	C.A.	337	119	76 L. T. 145
Lacave v Credit Lyonnais	Q.B.D.	—	8	[1897] 1 Q. B. 148; 66 L. J. Q. B. 226; 75 L. T. 514
Laffan and Downe's Contract, In re	M.R. (I.)	—	176	[1897] 1 L. R. Ir. 469
Lambert, In re. Middleton v Moore	CH. D. STI. J.	661	177	[1897] 2 Ch. 169; 66 L. J. Ch. 624; 76 L. T. 752
Lambeth (Churchwardens) v London County Council	H.L. (E.)	—	114	76 L. T. 795
Lamond v Richard	C.A.	289	73	[1897] 1 Q. B. 541; 66 L. J. Q. B. 315; 76 L. T. 141
Lancaster Banking Co., In re	CH. D. STI. J.	—	28	75 L. T. 647
Lancaster (Port Commissioners) v Barrow-in-Furness Overseers	Q.B.D.	—	113	[1897] 1 Q. B. 166; 66 L. J. Q. B. 90; 75 L. T. 358
Lane v Cox	C.A.	261	82	[1897] 1 Q. B. 415; 66 L. J. Q. B. 193; 76 L. T. 135
Larocque v Beauchemin	P.C.	639	30	[1897] A. C. 358; 66 L. J. P. C. 59; 76 L. T. 373
Lart, In re. Wilkinson v Blades	CH. D. CHI. J.	27	125	[1896] 2 Ch. 788; 65 L. J. Ch. 846
Lawrence, In re	P. D. & A. D.	—		[1896] P. 244
——— v Adams	CH. D. NOR. J.	—	10	75 L. T. 410
Lazarus v Artistic Photographic Co.	CH. D. KEK. J.	614	86	[1897] 2 Ch. 214; 66 L. J. Ch. 522; 76 L. T. 457
Le Brasseur and Oakley, In re	C.A.	87	157	[1896] 2 Ch. 487; 65 L. J. Ch. 763; 74 L. T. 717
Lee v Binns. In re Binns	CH. D. NOR. J	—	56	[1896] 2 Ch. 584; 65 L. J. Ch 830
——— v Roundwood Colliery Co. In re Roundwood Colliery Co.	CH. D. STI. J.	217	36	75 L. T. 508
———	C.A.	324		[1897] 1 Ch. 373; 66 L. J. Ch. 186; 75 L. T. 641
Lee's Settlement Trusts, In re	CH. D. CHI. J.	—	166	44 W. R. 680; [1896] 2 Ch. 508; 65 L. J. Ch. 770
Leeds Building Society v Mallandaine	Q.B.D	501	67	66 L. J. Q. B. 467; 76 L. T. 650
Leighton v Leighton. In re De Tabley	CH. D. NOR. J.	—	140	75 L. T. 328
Lever, In re. Cordwell v Lever	CH. D. STI. J	172	166	[1897] 1 Ch. 32; 66 L. J. Ch. 66
Lever, In re. Cordwell v Lever (No. 2)	C.A.	—	92	76 L. T. 71
Lewis v Powell	CH. D. STI. J.	438	122	[1897] 1 Ch. 678; 66 L. J. Ch. 463; 76 L. T. 282
Lilley, In the Goods of	P.D. & A.D.	—	129	76 L. T. 164
List v Tharp	CH. D. CHI. J.	243	98	[1897] 1 Ch. 260; 66 L. J Ch. 175; 76 L. T. 45
Liverpool Brokers' Association v Commercial Press Telegram Bureaux	Q.B.D.	—	39	[1897] 2 Q. B. 1; 66 L. J. Q. B. 405; 76 L. T. 292
Llewellyn v Vale of Glamorgan Railway Co.	Q.B.D.	—	135	[1897] 2 Q. B. 239; 76 L. T. 778
Lock v Queensland Investment Co.	H.L. (E.)	65	31	[1896] A. C. 461; 65 L. J. Ch. 798
London and County Banking Co. v Goddard	CH. D. NOR. J.	310	103	[1897] 1 Ch. 642; 66 L. J. Ch. 261; 76 L. T. 277
London County Council v Grove	C.A.	279	67
——— v Hobbis	Q.B.D.	270	99	75 L. T. 687
London and Eastern Counties Loan Co. v Creasey	Q.B.D.	—		[1897] 1 Q. B. 442; 66 L. J. Q. B. 306; 76 L. T. 87
———	C.A.	497	18	[1897] 1 Q. B. 768; 66 L. J. Q. B. 503; 76 L. T. 612
London Health Electrical Institute, In re	C.A.	566	35	76 L. T. 98
London Metallurgical Co., In re	CH. D. WIL. J.	601	34	[1897] 2 Ch. 262; 66 L. J. Ch. 635; 76 L. T. 829
London and North-Western Railway Co. v Fobbing Levels Commissioners	Q.B.D.	—	140	66 L. J. Q. B. 127; 75 L. T. 629
——— v Llandudno Improvement Commissioners	Q.B.D.	350	135	[1897] 1 Q. B. 287; 66 L. J. Q. B. 232; 75 L. T. 659
London Universal Bank, Ex parte. In re Ginger	Q.B.D. BKCY.	—	11	76 L. T. 808
Longton v Wilsby	CH. D. STI. J.	—	165	76 L. T. 770
Lord Advocate v Robertson	H.L. (SC.)	674	71	[1897] A. C. 145; 66 L. J. P. C. 41; 76 L. T. 125
Lumley, In re. Ex parte Hood Barrs	C.A.	147	94	[1896] 2 Ch. 690; 65 L. J. Ch. 837; 75 L. T. 236
Lyons v Wilkins	C.A.	19	164	[1896] 1 Ch. 811; 65 L. J. Ch. 601; 74 L. T. 358
M. v M.	P.D. & A.D.	—	47	76 L. T. 172
Macaulay v Polley	C.A.	681	156	[1897] 2 Q. B. 122; 76 L. T. 643
Macdonald, In re. Dick v Fraser	CH. D. STI. J.	628		[1897] 2 Ch. 181; 66 L. J. Ch. 630; 76 L. T. 713
Macduff v Macduff	C.A.	154	23	[1896] 2 Ch. 451; 65 L. J. Ch. 700; 74 L. T. 706
Machado v Fontes	C.A.	565	126	[1897] 2 Q. B. 231; 66 L. J. Q. B. 542; 76 L. T. 588
Mackenzie v Devonshire (Duke of)	H.L. (SC.)	—	139	[1896] A. C. 400
Macmillan v Australasian Territories	CH. D. STI. J.	—	120	76 L. T. 182
Madeley v Ross. In re Sleeman	CH. D. KEK. J.	—	26	[1897] 1 Ch. 505; 66 L J. Ch. 233; 76 L. T. 321
Magnolia Metal Co.'s Trade-Marks, In re	CH. D. KEK. J.	406	162	66 L. J. Ch. 312; 76 L. T. 190
———	C.A.	—		66 L. J. Ch. 598; 76 L. T. 672
Manchester County Bank v Higginshaw Mills Co.	C.A.	56	35	[1896] 2 Ch. 544; 65 L. J. Ch. 771
Manchester (Mayor) v McAdam	H.L. (E.)	—	68	[1896] A. C. 500; 65 L. J. Q. B. 672; 75 L. T. 229
Manchester and Milford Railway Co., In re	CH. D. STI. J.	331	135	[1897] 1 Ch. 276; 66 L. J. Ch. 139; 75 L. T. 416

Name of Case.	Court.	Page in W. R. 1896-97.	Column in Digest.	References to Contemporaneous Reports.
Manchester and Northern Counties Coal Federation v Lancashire and Yorkshire Railway Co.	Q.B.D.	—	136	76 L. T. 787
Manchester, &c., Railway Co. v Doncaster Guardians	C.A.	82	111	[1897] 1 Q. B. 117; 66 L. J. Q. B. 75; 75 L. T. 472
Manders v Manders	Q.B.D.	287	78	[1897] 1 Q. B. 474; 66 L. J. Q. B. 296
"Mannheim," The	P.D. & A.D.	—	146	[1897] P. 13; 66 L. J. P. 6; 75 L. T. 424
Mantle v Jordan	Q.B.D.	—	88	[1897] 1 Q. B. 248; 66 L. J. Q. B. 224; 75 L. T. 552
"Maréchal Suchet," The	P.D. & A.D.	141	5	[1896] P. 238; 65 L. J. P. 94; 74 L. T. 789
Margetson, In re	CH.D. KEK. J.	645	156	66 L. J. Ch. 619; 76 L. T. 805
"Maripose," The	P.D. & A.D.	191	155	[1896] P. 273; 65 L. J. P. 104; 75 L. T. 54
Marlborough (Duke) and Governors of Queen Anne's Bounty	CH.D. ROM. J.	426	142	[1897] 1 Ch. 712; 66 L. J. Ch. 323; 76 L. T. 388
Marriage, Neave, & Co., In re	C.A.	42	112	[1896] 2 Ch. 663; 65 L. J. Ch. 839
Marsh v Joseph	C.A.	209	160	[1897] 1 Ch. 213; 66 L. J. Ch. 128; 75 L. T. 558
Martin v Martin	C.A.	260	118	[1897] 1 Q. B. 429; 66 L. J. Q. B. 241; 76 L. T. 44
Mary Tug Co. v British India Steam Navigation Co. "The Meanatchy"	P.C.	—	150	[1897] A. C. 351
Matheson v Ludwig. In re Doetsch	CH.D. ROM. J.	57		[1896] 2 Ch. 836; 65 L. J. Ch. 855
Maurice, In re. Brown v Maurice	CH.D. NOR. J	—	2	75 L. T. 415
"Mayflower" (Log of The), In re	P.D. & A.D.	—	50	[1897] P. 208; 76 L. T. 295
Mayne v Mayne	M.R. (I.)	—	176	[1897] 1 L. R. Ir. 324
McCall v Houlder	Q.B.D.	—	146	66 L. J. Q. B. 408; 76 L. T. 469
McCarthy v McCarthy	C.A. (I.)	—	178	[1897] 1 Ir. Rep. 86
McFerran v McFerran	V.C. (I.)	—		[1897] 1 Ir. Rep. 66
McGarel, In re	LUN.	321	159	[1897] 1 Ch. 400; 66 L. J. Ch. 185; 76 L. T. 70
McInnesy v Hildreth	Q.B.D.	—	60	[1897] 1 Q. B. 600; 66 L. J. Q. B. 376; 76 L. T. 463
McKay's case. In re Concession Trust	CH.D. WILL. J.	—		[1896] 2 Ch. 757; 75 L. T. 298
McKeown v Boudard Peveril Gear Co.	C.A.	152	28	65 L. J. Ch. 735; 74 L. T. 712
McMurdo, In re. Penfield v McMurdo	CH.D. NOR. J	244	158	[1897] 1 Ch. 119; 66 L. J. Ch. 67; 75 L. T. 576
McNab v Robertson	H.L. (SC.)	—	172	[1897] A. C. 129; 66 L. J. P. C. 27; 75 L. T. 666
Meades' Settled Estates, In re	M.R. (I.)	—	141	[1897] 1 Ir. Rep. 121
"Meanatchy," The. Mary Tug Co. v British India Steam Navigation Co.	P.C.	—		[1897] A. C. 351
Mestes v Bishop. In re North	CH.D. STI. J.	—	177	76 L. T. 186
"Mecca," The	H.L. (E.)	667	7	[1897] A. C. 286; 66 L. J. P. 86; 76 L. T. 579
Medcalfe v Cox	H.L. (SC.)	—	139	[1896] A. C. 647
Mersey Docks Board v Inland Revenue Commissioners	Q.B.D.	448	69	[1897] 1 Q. B. 786; 66 L. J. Q. B. 480; 76 L. T. 596
Merborough (Earl) v Whitwood District Council	C.A.	564	121	[1897] 2 Q. B. 111; 66 L. J. Q. B. 637; 76 L. T. 765
Meyrick, In re. Meyrick v Hargreaves	CH.D. CHI. J	120	65	[1897] 1 Ch. 99; 66 L. J. Ch. 33; 75 L. T. 621
Middlesex County Council v St. George's Union Committee	C.A.	215	113	[1897] 1 Q. B. 64; 66 L. J. Q. B. 101; 75 L. T. 464
Middleton v Moore. In re Lambert	CH.D. STI. J.	661	177	[1897] 2 Ch. 169; 66 L. J. Ch. 624; 76 L. T 752
Miles v Great Western Railway Co.	C.A.	—	84	[1896] 2 Q. B. 432; 65 L. J. Q. B. 649; 75 L. T. 290
Minna Craig Steamship Co. v Chartered Mercantile Bank of India	C.A.	338	147	[1897] 1 Q. B. 460; 66 L. J. Q. B. 339; 76 L. T. 310
Mitchell v Torrington Union	Q.B.D.	—	111	76 L. T. 724
Montague, In re. Ex parte Ward	Q.B.D. BKCY.	384	10	76 L. T. 203
Montagu's Settlement, In re. Derbishire v Montagu	CH.D. KEK. J.	360	141	[1897] 1 Ch. 685; 66 L. J. Ch. 345; 76 L. T. 289
——.	C.A.	594	141	[1897] 2 Ch. 8; 66 L. J. Ch. 541; 76 L. T. 485
Morgan and London and North-Western Railway Co.'s Arbitration, In re	Q.B.D.	176	133	[1896] 2 Q. B. 469; 65 L. J. Q. B. 30; 75 L. T. 226
Morris v Beves	Q.B.D.	430	54	[1897] 1 Q. B. 449; 66 L. J. Q. B. 299; 76 L. T. 120
Morrison v Howden	Q.B.D.	221	153	[1897] 1 Q. B. 378; 66 L. J. Q. B. 264; 76 L. T. 156
Morter, In re. Ex parte Nicholls	C.A.	593	14
Morton v Blackmore. In re Brewer	CH.D. CHI. J.	8	144	[1896] 2 Ch. 503; 65 L. J. Ch. 821
Moss v Moss	P.D. & A.D.	635
Mountfield v Ward	Q.B.D.	288	86	[1897] 1 Q. B. 326; 76 L. T. 202
Murray v Epsom Local Board	CH.D. STI. J.	185	89	[1897] 1 Ch. 35; 66 L. J. Ch. 107; 75 L. T. 579
Mutual Reserve Fund Life Association v New York Life Assurance Co.	C.A.	—	37	75 L. T. 528
National Bank of Wales, In re. Taylor, Phillips, and Rickards' cases	C.A.	401	36	[1897] 1 Ch. 298; 66 L. J. Ch. 222; 76 L. T.
National Provincial Bank, Ex parte. In re Newton	Q.B.D. BKCY.	63	15	[1895] 2 Q. B. 403
Nelson v Anglo-American Land Co.	CH.D. STI. J.	171	28	[1897] 1 Ch. 130; 66 L. J. Ch. 112; 75 L. T. 482
Nevill (Lord William) v Fine Art Insurance Co.	H.L. (E.)	—	85	[1897] A. C. 68; 66 L. J. Q. B. 195; 75 L. T. 606
New Moss Colliery Co. v Manchester, Sheffield, &c., Railway Co.	CHD. BYRNE J.	493	21	[1897] 1 Ch. 725; 66 L. J. Ch. 381; 76 L. T. 281

Name of Case.	Court.	Page in W. R. 1896-97.	Column in Digest.	References to Contemporaneous Reports.
New Ormonde Cycle Co., Ex parte	CH. D. NOR. J.	—	162	[1896] 2 Ch. 520; 65 L. J. Ch. 785
New South Wales Bank v Piper	P.C.	—		[1897] A. C. 383; 66 L. J. P. C. 73; 76 L. T. 372
New's Trustee v Hunting	Q B.D. BKCY.			[1897] 1 Q. B. 607
———.	C.A.	577	16	[1897] 2 Q. B. 19; 66 L. J. Q. B. 554; 76 L. T. 742
Newton, In re. Ex parte National Provincial Bank	Q.B.D. BKCY.	63	15	[1896] 2 Q. B. 403
New Transvaal Co., In re	CH.D. WIL. J.	—	32	[1896] 2 Ch. 750; 75 L. T. 272
New Union Mills Co. v Great Western Railway Co.	Q.B.D.	—	136	[1896] 2 Q. B 290; 65 L. J. Q. B. 493; 74 L. T. 791
"Ngapoota," The	P.C.	—	150	[1897] A. C. 391
Nicholls, Ex parte. In re Morter	C.A.	593	14
Nicholson v Rhodesia Trading Co.	CH.D. NOR. J.	—	24	[1897 1 Ch. 434; 66 L. J. Ch. 251; 76 L. T. 147
Nixon's Navigation Co., In re	CH.D. STI. J.	—	24	[1897] 1 Ch. 872; 66 L. J. Ch. 406
Nobbs v Law Reversionary Society	CH. D. KEK. J.	—	124	[1896] 2 Ch. 830; 75 L. T. 309
Nobel's Explosives Co. v Jenkins	Q.B.D.	—	147	[1896] 2 Q. B. 326; 65 L. J. Q. B. 638
North, In re. Meates v Bishop	CH.D. STI. J	—		76 L. T. 186
Norton v Dashwood	CH.D. CHI. J	—	55	44 W. R. 680; [1896] 2 Ch. 497; 65 L. J. Ch. 737; 75 L. T. 205
O'Connor v Ireland	Q.B.D. (I.)	—	122	[1897] 2 Ir. Rep. 150
Official Receiver, Ex parte. In re Goudie	Q.B.D. BKCY.	80	13	[1896] 2 Q. B. 481; 75 L. T. 277
Ogston v Aberdeen District Tramways Co.	H.L. (SC.)	—	106	[1897] A. C. 111; 66 L. J. P. C. 1; 75 L. T. 633
Oldroyd v Oldroyd	P.D. & A.D.	—	47	75 L. T. 281
"Oporto," The	P.D. & A.D	—	151	66 L. J. P. 12; 75 L. T. 599
———.	C.A.	—		66 L. J. P. 49
Osborn v Wood	Q.B.D.	319	56	[1897] 1 Q. B. 197; 66 L. J. Q. B. 178; 76 L. T. 60
Page v Ratcliffe	C.A.	—	106	76 L. T. 63
Paige v Brooks	P.D. & A.D.	—	132	75 L. T. 455
Pain v Bowden	Q.B.D.	48	41	[1896] 2 Q. B. 301; 65 L. J. Q. B. 530
Paine, In re. Ex parte Reed	Q.B.D BKCY.	190	12	[1897] 1 Q. B. 122; 66 L. J. Q. B. 71; 75 L. T. 316
Palliser v Dale	C.A.	291	59	[1897] 1 Q. B. 257; 66 L. J. Q. B. 236; 76 L. T. 14
Palmer v Rich	CH.D. STI. J.	205	77	[1897] 1 Ch. 134; 66 L. J. Ch. 69; 75 L. T. 484
"Parkdale," The	P.D. & A.D.	368	155	[1897] P. 53; 66 L. J. P. 10; 75 L. T. 597
Parker, In re. Parker v Osborne	CH.D. KEK. J.	536	175	[1897] 2 Ch. 208; 66 L J. Ch. 509; 76 L. T. 421
Paterson v Gas Light and Coke Co.	C.A.	39	61	[1896] 2 Ch. 476; 65 L. J. Ch. 709; 74 L. T. 640
Pattle v Hornibrook	CH.D. STI. J	123	37	[1897] 1 Ch. 25; 66 L. J. Ch. 144; 75 L. T. 475
Pearce v Bunting. Reg. v Wedd	Q.B.D.	—	138	[1896] 2 Q. B. 360; 65 L. J. M. C. 131
——— v Gardner	C.A.	518	37	[1897] 1 Q. B. 688; 66 L. J. Q. B. 457; 76 L. T. 441
Pearson, In the Goods of	P.D. & A.D.	143	131	[1896] P. 289; 66 L. J. P. 8
Peebles v Oswaldtwistle Urban District Council	C.A.	454	91	[1897] 1 Q. B. 625; 66 L. J. Q. B. 392; 76 L. T. 315
Penfield v McMurdo. In re McMurdo	CH.D. NOR. J.	244		[1897] 1 Ch. 119; 66 L. J. Ch. 67; 75 L. T. 576
Petty v Taylor	CH.D. KEK. J.	299	39	[1897] 1 Ch. 465; 66 L. J. Ch. 209; 75 L. T. 545
Phillips, In re. Ex parte Thomas	Q.B.D. BKCY.	—	9	76 L. T. 531
———. Ex parte Trebeath Brick Co.	Q.B.D. BKCY.	—	11	[1896] 2 Q. B. 122; 65 L. J. Q. B. 648
Pitt Pitts v George	C.A.	164	40	[1896] 2 Ch. 866; 66 L. J. Ch. 1; 75 L. T. 320
Plant v Bourne	CHD. BYRNE J	498	170	66 L. J. Ch. 458; 76 L. T. 349
———	C.A.	—		76 L. T. 820
Plymouth Tramway Co. v General Tolls Co.	C.A.	—	161	75 L. T. 467
Pneumatic Tyre Co v East London Rubber Co.	CH D. ROM. J	—	108	75 L. T. 488
Pollard's Settlement, In re	C.A.	18	95	[1896] 2 Ch. 552; 65 L. J. Ch. 796
Pomeroy and Tanner, In re	CH. D. STI. J.	245	157	[1897] 1 Ch. 284; 66 L. J. Ch. 158; 75 L. T. 625
——— (No. 2)	CH.D. STI. J.	—	157	76 L. T. 149
Poole v Downes	CH.D. STI. J.	—	104	76 L. T. 110
Potter v Burrell	C. A.	145	148	[1897] 1 Q. B. 97; 66 L. J. Q. B. 63; 75 L. T. 491
Pottle v Sharp	C. A.	—	96	75 L. T. 265
Powell v Kempton Park Racecourse Co.	C.A.	—	60	66 L. J. Q. B. 601
Pratt v South-Eastern Railway Co.	Q.B.D.	503	133	[1897] 1 Q. B. 718; 66 L. J. Q. B. 418; 76 L. T. 465
Priestley v Ellis	CH.D. KEK. J.	442	145	[1897] 1 Ch. 489; 66 L. J. Ch. 240; 76 L. T. 187
"Princesse Clementine," The	P.D. & A.D.	—	127	[1897] P. 18; 66 L. J. P. 23; 75 L. T. 695
Pritchett v Poole	Q.B.D.	—	41	76 L. T. 472
Prout v Cock	CH.D. NOR. J.	157	104	[1896] 2 Ch. 808; 66 L. J. Ch. 24; 75 L. T. 409
Pruddah, Ex parte. In re Broster	Q.B.D. BKCY.	576	42	76 L. T. 692
Raatz, In re. Ex parte Carlhian.	Q.B.D. BKCY.	480	13	76 L. T. 330
———. Ex parte Raatz	Q.B.D. BKCY.	666	15	[1897] 2 Q. B. 80; 66 L. J. Q. B. 501; 76 L. T. 503
Rafiety v Schofield	CH.D. ROM. J.	460	80	[1897] 1 Ch. 937; 66 L. J. Ch. 448; 76 L. T. 648

Name of Case.	Court.	Page in W. R. 1896-97.	Column in Digest.	References to Contemporaneous Reports.
"Eatats," The	C.A.	—	118, 152	[1897] P. 118; 66 L. J. P. 39; 76 L. T. 224
Read, In re. Turner v Read	CH.D. STI. J.	—	55	75 L. T. 295
Reed, Ex parte. In re Paine	Q.B.D. BKCY.	190	12	[1897] 1 Q. B. 122; 66 L. J. Q. B. 71; 75 L. T. 316
Reg. v Bagshawe	Q.B.D.	—	77	75 L. T. 513
—— v Camberwell Vestry	Q B.D.	335	124	66 L. J. Q. B. 337
—— v Chambers	C.C.R.	—		65 L. J. M. C. 214
—— v Charity Commissioners	Q.B.D.	336	22	[1897] 1 Q. B. 407; 66 L. J. Q. B. 321; 76 L. T. 199
—— v Davies	C.C.R.	—	61	[1897] 2 Q. B. 199; 66 L. J. Q. B. 513; 76 L. T. 786
—— v Durham (Bishop)	Q.B.D.	—	50	66 L. J. Q. B. 576
—— v Erdheim	C.C.R.	—	43	44 W. R. 607; [1896] 2 Q. B. 260; 65 L. J. M. C. 176; 74 L. T. 734
—— v General Medical Council	Q.B.D.	526	45	[1897] 1 Q. B. 764
——	C.A.	—		[1897] 2 Q. B. 203; 66 L. J. Q. B. 588; 76 L. T. 706
—— v Hastings (Mayor)	Q.B.D.	109	90	[1897] 1 Q. B. 46; 66 L. J. Q. B. 80; 75 L. T. 377
—— v Jameson	Q.B.D.	—	43	[1896] 2 Q. B. 425
—— v Kent Justices	C.A.	4	78	[1896] 2 Q B. 306; 65 L. J. M. C. 171
—— v King	C.C.R.	—	43	[1897] 1 Q. B. 214; 66 L. J. Q. B. 87; 75 L. T. 392
—— v Leigh (Lord). Kinchant, In re	C.A.	—	110	[1897] 1 Q. B. 132; 66 L. J. Q. B. 56; 75 L. T. 339
—— v Lewisham Guardians	Q.B.D.	346	124	[1897] 1 Q. B. 498; 66 L. J. Q. B. 403; 76 L. T. 324
—— v London County Council. Ex parte Webster	Q.B.D.	605	97	66 L. J. Q. B. 516; 76 L. T. 472
—— v London Justices	Q.B.D.	247	115	[1897] 1 Q. B. 433; 65 L. J. Q. B. 262
—— v London Justices. Ex parte Kerfoot	Q.B D.	58	77
—— v Longe	Q.B.D.	—	79	66 L. J. Q. B. 278
—— v Lunacy Commissioners	Q.B.D.	505	93	[1897] 1 Q. B. 630; 66 L. J. Q. B. 387; 76 L. T. 353
—— v Oxford Circuit Assize Clerk	Q.B.D	543	40	[1897] 1 Q. B. 370; 66 L. J. Q. B. 271; 76 L. T. 260
—— v Pelly	Q.B.D.	504	85	[1897] 2 Q. B. 33; 66 L. J. Q. B. 519; 76 L. T. 467
—— v St. Matthew, Bethnal Green	C.A.	—	99	[1896] 2 Q. B. 319; 65 L. J. M. C. 215
—— v Smallman	C C R	249	43	[1897] 1 Q. B. 4; 66 L. J. Q. B. 82; 75 L. T. 394
—— v Soden	Q B.D.	234	53	[1897] 1 Q. B. 188; 66 L. J. Q. B. 183; 76 L. T. 161
—— v Turner	Q.B.D.	316	42	[1897] 1 Q. B. 445; 66 L. J. Q. B 417; 76 L. T. 556
—— v Tynemouth Rural District Council	C.A.	—	92	[1896] 2 Q. B. 451; 65 L. J. Q. B. 545
—— v Watermen's Company	Q.B.D.	—	22	[1897] 1 Q. B. 659; 66 L. J. Q. B. 308
—— v Wedd. Pearce v Bunting	Q.B.D.	—	138	[1896] 2 Q. B. 360; 65 L. J. M. C. 131
—— v Yorkshire West Riding County Council	Q.B.D.	—	160	44 W. R. 650; [1896] 2 Q. B. 386; 65 L. J. M. C 136; 75 L. T. 252
Remfry v Natal (Surveyor-General)	P.C.	—	105	[1896] A. C. 558. 65 L. J. P. C. 72
Remington v Scoles	C.A.	580		[1897] 2 Ch. 1; 66 L. J. Ch. 526; 76 L. T. 667
Renner, Ex parte	P.C.	—	159	[1897] A. C. 218; 66 L. J. P. C. 49
Renshaw v Queen Anne Residential Mansions Co.	C.A.	487	7	[1897] 1 Q. B. 662; 66 L. J. Q. B. 496; 76 L. T. 611
Rhondda Railway Co. v Talbot	C.A.	—		[1897] 2 Ch. 131; 66 L. J. Ch. 570; 76 L. T. 694
Ribble (River Joint-Committee) v Croston District Council	Q.B.D.	348	138	[1897] 1 Q. B. 251; 66 L. J. Q. B. 384
Richards v Reg.	Q.B D.	—	44	[1897] 1 Q. B. 574; 66 L. J. Q. B. 459
Richardson & Samuels Co., In re	Q.B.D.	—	149	66 L. J. Q. B. 579
Richmond Hill Steamship Co. v Trinity House Corporation	C.A.	6	152	[1896] 2 Q. B. 134; 65 L. J. Q. B. 561
Richmond (Vicar), In re	Q.B.D.	—	51	[1897] P. 70
Ridding, In re. Thompson v Ridding	CH. D. STI. J	457	180	[1897] 1 Ch. 876; 66 L. J. Ch. 460; 76 L. T. 339
Ridgway, Ex parte. In re Hawley	Q B.D. BKCY	—	9	76 L. T. 501
"Ripon City," The	P.D. & A.D.	—	153	[1897] P. 226; 66 L. J. P. 110
Roberts v Security Co.	C.A.	214	73	[1897] 1 Q. B. 111; 66 L. J. Q. B. 119; 75 L. T. 531
——, In re. Knight v Roberts	C.A.	—	55	76 L. T. 479
Robinson, In re. Wright v Tugwell	C.A.	181	53	[1897] 1 Ch. 85; 66 L. J. Ch. 97; 76 L. T. 95
—— v Montgomeryshire Brewery Co.	CH.D.WILL.J.	—	25	[1896] 2 Ch. 841
—— v Workington Corporation	C.A.	453	91	[1897] 1 Q. B. 619; 66 L. J. Q. B. 388; 75 L. T. 674
Rochefoucauld v Boustead	C.A.	272	58	[1897] 1 Ch. 196; 66 L. J. Ch. 74; 75 L. T. 502
Roundwood Colliery Co., In re. Lee v Roundwood Colliery Co.	CH.D. STI. J.	217	36	75 L. T. 508
——	C.A.	324	80	[1897] 1 Ch. 373; 66 L. J. Ch. 186; 75 L. T. 641

Name of Case.	Court.	Page in W. R. 1896-97.	Column in Digest.	References to Contemporaneous Reports.
Rowell v Inland Revenue Commissioners	Q.B.D.	—	71	[1897] 2 Q. B. 194; 66 L. J. Q. B. 528
Rowland v Mitchell. In re Rowland's Trade-Mark	C.A.	—	162	[1897] 1 Ch. 71; 66 L. J. Ch. 110; 75 L. T. 498
Royal Insurance Co. v Watson	H.L. (E.)	—	67	[1897] A. C. 1; 66 L. J. Q. B. 1; 75 L. T. 334
Rudd v James	C.A.	—	59	[1896] 2 Ch. 554; 65 L. J. Ch. 781; 74 L. T. 714
Rumney and Smith's Contract, In re	C.A.	678	168	76 L. T. 800
Russell v Lay	Q.B.D.	—	49	66 L. J. Q. B. 582
"Rutland," The	C.A.	38	154	[1896] P. 281; 65 L. J. P. D. & A. 91
———	H.L. (E.)	—	154	[1897] A. C. 333; 66 L. J. P. 105; 76 L. T. 662
Rutter v Chayford Overseers	Q.B.D.	542	113	[1897] 1 Q. B. 650; 66 L. J. Q. B. 506; 76 L. T. 392
Ruys v London Assurance Corporation	Q.B.D.	—	47	[1897] 2 Q. B. 135; 66 L. J. Q. B. 534
Rymer v McIlroy	CHD. BYRNEJ.	411	49	[1897] 1 Ch. 528; 66 L. J. Ch. 336; 76 L. T. 115
Sadler v Great Western Railway Co.	H.L. (E.)	51	125	[1896] A. C. 450; 65 L. J. Q. B. 462; 74 L. T. 561
St. Asaph (Dean and Chapter) v Llanrhaiadr-yn-Mochnant Overseers	C.A.	375	114	[1897] 1 Q. B. 511; 66 L. J. Q. B. 267; 76 L. T. 42
St. John, Hackney, Vestry v Hutton	Q.B.D.	92	77	[1897] 1 Q. B. 210; 66 L. J. Q. B. 74; 75 L. T. 686
St. Martin-in-the-Fields Vestry v Ward	C.A.	81	101	[1897] 1 Q. B. 40; 66 L. J. Q. B. 97; 75 L. T. 349
St. Mary, Battersea, Vestry v Palmer	Q.B.D.	110	101	[1897] 1 Q. B. 220; 66 L. J. Q. B. 77; 75 L. T. 362
St. Olave's Union v Canterbury Union	Q.B.D.	302	115	[1897] 1 Q. B. 438; 76 L. T. 88
———	C.A.	530		[1897] 1 Q. B. 682; 66 L. J. Q. B. 471; 76 L. T. 517
Salisbury Gold Mining Co. v Hathorn	P.C.	591	27	[1897] A. C. 268; 66 L. J. P. C. 62; 76 L. T. 212
Salomon v Salomon	H.L. (E.)	193	24	[1897] A. C. 22; 66 L. J. Ch. 35; 75 L. T. 426
Salter v Salter	C.A.	7	129	[1896] P. 291; 65 L. J. P. D. & A. 117
Sanders v Jenkins	Q.B.D.	—	149	[1897] 1 Q. B. 93; 66 L. J. Q. B. 40
"Satanita," The. Clarke v Dunraven	H.L. (E.)	—		[1897] A. C. 59; 66 L. J. P. 1; 75 L. T. 357
Saunders, In re. Saunders v Gore	CH. D. STI. J.	456	143	[1897] 1 Ch. 888; 66 L. J. Ch. 503; 76 L. T. 345
——— v Saunders	C.A.	583	46	[1897] P. 89; 66 L. J. P. 57; 76 L. T. 330
——— v Seyd Credit Index Co.	C.A.	—	84	75 L. T. 193
Savoy Overseers v Art Union of London	H.L. (E.)	34	113	[1896] A. C. 296; 65 L. J. M. C. 161; 74 L. T. 497
Saxlehner v Apollinaris Co.	CH.D. KEK.J.	—	164	[1897] 1 Ch. 893; 66 L. J. Ch. 533; 76 L. T. 617
Scholfield v Londesborough (Earl)	H.L. (E.)	124	17	[1896] A. C. 514; 65 L. J. Q. B. 593; 75 L. T. 254
Scowby v Scowby	C.A.	—	3	[1897] 1 Ch. 741; 66 L. J. Ch. 327; 76 L. T. 363
Seaman v Burley	C.A.	1	117	[1896] 2 Q. B. 344; 65 L. J. M. C. 208
Seaward v Paterson	C.A.	610	36	[1897] 1 Ch 545; 66 L. J. Ch. 267; 76 L. T. 215
Sheers v Thimbleby	C.A.	—	62	76 L. T. 709
Sheffield, Ex parte. In re Sims	Q.B.D. BRCY.	189	17
Sheppard, In re. Sheppard v Manning	CH.D. ROM.J.	475	175	[1897] 2 Ch. 67; 66 L. J. Ch. 445; 76 L. T. 756
Shields v Howard	Q.B.D.	138	101	[1897] 1 Q. B. 84; 66 L. J. Q. B. 105
Simmons v Blandy	CH.D. NOR.J.	296	104	[1897] 1 Ch. 19; 66 L. J. Ch. 83; 75 L. T. 646
——— v Malling District Council	Q.B.D.	603	88	66 L. J. Q. B. 585
——— v Underwood	Q.B.D.	—	82	76 L. T. 777
Simpson, In re. In re Whitchurch	C.A.	277	141	[1897] 1 Ch. 256; 66 L. J. Ch. 166; 76 L. T. 131
——— v Hughes	CH.D. ROM.J	221		66 L. J. Ch. 143; 75 L. T. 487
———	C.A.	—	38	66 L. J. Ch. 334; 76 L. T. 237
Sims, In re. Ex parte Sheffield	Q.B.D. BRCY	189	17
——— v Trollope	C.A.	97	18	[1897] 1 Q. B. 24; 66 L. J. Q. B. 11; 75 L. T. 351
Sinclair, In re. Allen v Sinclair	CH.D. KEK.J.	596	1	[1897] 1 Ch. 921; 66 L. J. Ch. 514; 76 L. T. 452
Slater v Slater	C.A.	—	9	76 L. T. 704
Slaytor v Slaytor	P.D. & A.D.	—	46	[1897] P. 85; 66 L. J. P. 97
Sleeman, In re. Madeley v Ross	CH.D. KEK.J.	—		[1897] 1 Ch. 505; 66 L. J. Ch. 233; 76 L. T. 321
Sloane v British Steamship Co.	C.A.	203	125	[1897] 1 Q. B. 185; 66 L. J. Q. B. 72; 75 L. T. 542
Small v United Kingdom Marine Association	Q.B.D.	—	74	[1897] 2 Q. B. 42; 66 L. J. Q. B. 412; 76 L. T. 326
———	C.A.	—		76 L. T. 828
Smelting Co. of Australia v Inland Revenue Commissioners	Q.B.D.	61	70	[1896] 2 Q. B. 179; 65 L. J. Q. B. 513; 74 L. T. 694
———	C.A.	203	70	[1897] 1 Q. B. 175; 66 L. J. Q. B. 137; 75 L. T. 534
Smith, In re. Davidson v Myrtle	CH.D. KEK.J	29	165	[1896] 2 Ch. 590; 65 L. J. Ch. 761
——— v Batsford	CH.D. NOR.J.	—	170	76 L. T. 179
——— v Brown	P.C.	132	30	[1896] A. C. 614; 75 L. T. 213
——— v Chorley District Council	C.A.	417	88	[1897] 1 Q. B. 678; 66 L. J. Q. B. 427; 76 L. T. 637
——— v Hawthorn	CH.D. STI. J.	—	38	76 L. T. 716
——— v Wilkinson. In re Victoria Steamboats Co.	CH.D. KEK.J.	135	26	[1897] 1 Ch. 158
Snowden, In the Goods of	P.D. & A.D.	—	130	75 L. T. 279

Name of Case.	Court.	Page in W. R. 1896–97	Column in Digest.	References to Contemporaneous Reports.
Soane, Ex parte. In re Dagnall	Q.B.D. BKCY.	79	94	[1896] 2 Q. B. 407
South African Territories (Limited) v Wallington	C.A.	467	26	[1897] 1 Q. B. 692; 66 L. J. Q. B. 551; 76 L. T. 520
Southcombe v Yeovil Guardians	Q.B.D.	318	167	[1897] 1 Q. B. 343; 66 L. J. Q. B. 294; 76 L. T. 58
Southport (Mayor) v Birkdale District Council	C.A.	—	117	76 L. T. 318
Southport Tramways Co. v Gandy	C.A.	684	127	[1897] 2 Q. B. 66; 66 L. J. Q. B. 532; 76 L. T. 815
Spiller v Turner	CH.D. KEK.J.	549	27	[1897] 1 Ch. 911; 66 L. J. Ch. 435; 76 L. T. 622
Spillers and Leetham's Arbitration, In re	C.A.	241	7	[1897] 1 Q. B. 312; 66 L. J. Q. B. 326; 76 L. T. 35
Spokes v Grosvenor Railway Terminus Hotel Co. (No. 1)	C.A.	545	120	[1897] 2 Q. B. 124; 66 L. J. Q. B. 572; 76 L. T. 677
—— (No. 2)	C.A.	546	120	[1897] 2 Q. B. 124; 66 L. J. Q. B. 598; 76 L. T. 679
Spratt, In the Goods of	P.D. & A.D.	159	130	[1897] P. 28; 66 L. J. P. 25; 75 L. T. 518
Sprigg v Sigeau	P.C.	—	21	[1897] A. C. 238; 66 L. J. P. C. 44; 76 L. T. 127
Sperrier's Settlement, In re. De Hayn v Garland	CH.D. STI. J.	342	93	[1897] 1 Ch. 453; 66 L. J. Ch. 295; 76 L. T. 180
Stannard's Estate, In re	CH.D. (I.)	—	158	[1897] 1 L. R. Ir. 415
Stark, Ex parte. In re Consort Deep Level Gold Mines	CH.D. NOR. J.	227		66 L. J. Ch. 122
——.	C.A.	420	28	[1897] 1 Ch. 575; 66 L. J. Ch. 297; 76 L. T. 300
Stephenson, In re. Ex parte Brown	Q.B.D. BKCY.	416	17	[1897] 1 Q. B. 638; 66 L. J. Q. B. 423; 76 L. T. 328
——. Donaldson v Bamber	C.A.	164	178	[1897] 1 Ch. 75; 66 L. J. Ch. 93; 75 L. T. 495
Stevens, In re. Cooke v Stephens	CH.D. NOR. J.	284	54	[1897] 1 Ch. 422; 76 L. T. 18
—— v Griffin	C.A.	658	120	76 L. T. 803
Stilemar-Gibbard v Wilkinson	Q.B.D.	—	52	[1897] 1 Q. B. 749; 66 L. J. Q. B. 215; 76 L. T. 90
Still v Webb. In re Webb	CH.D. STI. J.	170		[1897] 1 Ch. 144; 66 L. J. Ch. 163; 75 L. T. 478
Stock, In re. Ex parte Amos	Q.B.D. BKCY.	480	11	66 L. J. Q. B. 146; 75 L. T. 422
Stokell v Heywood	CH.D KEK.J	—	73	[1897] 1 Ch. 459; 65 L. J. Ch. 721; 74 L. T. 781
Stone v Press Association	C.A	641		[1897] 2 Q. B. 159; 66 L. J. Q. B. 662
Streatham and General Estates Co., In re	CH.D. CHI. J	105	25	[1897] 1 Ch. 15; 66 L. J. Ch. 57; 75 L. T. 574
Strohmenger v Finsbury Building Society	CH.D. STI. J	700	18
Suarez, In the Goods of	P.D. & A.D.	704	128	[1897] P. 82; 66 L. J. P. 93
Sudeley (Lord) v Attorney-General	H.L. (E.)	305	68	[1897] A. C. 11; 66 L. J. Q. B. 21; 75 L. T. 398
Suffolk Lunatic Asylum Committee v Stow Union	Q.B.D.	620	93	76 L. T. 494
Swabey v Swabey	Q.B.D BKCY.	—	11	76 L. T. 534
Symons v Symons	P.D. & A.D.	—	46	[1897] P. 167; 66 L. J. P. 81
Tadcaster Tower Brewery Co. v Wilson	CH.D. ROM. J.	428	170	[1897] 1 Ch. 705; 66 L. J. Ch. 402; 76 L. T. 459
Tate v Latham & Son	C.A.	400	96	[1897] 1 Q. B. 502; 66 L. J. Q. B. 349; 76 L. T. 336
Taylor, Phillips, and Rickards' cases. In re National Bank of Wales	C.A.	401	36	[1897] 1 Ch. 298; 66 L. J. Ch. 222; 76 L. T. 1
Tetley, In re. Ex parte Jeffery	Q.B.D. BKCY.	—	12	66 L. J. Q. B. 111; 75 L. T. 166
Thames (Conservators) v Smeed	C.A.	691	138
"Theodora," The	P.D. & A.D	—	5	66 L. J. P. 50; 76 L. T. 627
Thomas, Ex parte. In re Phillips	Q.B.D BKCY.	—	9	76 L. T. 531
—— v Foster. In re Foster	CH.D. KEK.J.	333	64	[1897] 1 Ch. 434; 66 L. J. Ch. 220; 76 L. T. 228
—— v Jennings	Q.B.D.	93	82	66 L. J. Q. B. 5; 75 L. T. 274
Thompson v Ridding. In re Ridding	CH.D. STI. J.	457	180	[1897] 1 Ch. 876; 66 L. J. Ch. 460; 76 L. T. 339
Thomson v Burns	Q.B.D.	—	57	66 L. J. Q. B. 176; 76 L. T. 58
—— v Thomson	C.A.	134	49	[1896] P. 263; 65 L. J. P. D. & A. 80
Thornton v France	C.A.	—	87	[1897] 2 Q. B. 143
Thorpe v Priestnall	Q.B.D.	223	160	[1897] 1 Q. B. 159; 66 L. J. Q. B. 248
Tibbitt's Settled Estates, In re	CH.D. NOR. J	—	141	[1897] 2 Ch. 149
Tighe v Sinnott	M.R. (I.)	—	57	[1897] 1 Ir. Rep. 140
Tolman, In re. Westwood v Booker	CH.D. NOR. J.	548	56	[1897] 1 Ch. 866; 66 L. J. Ch. 452; 76 L. T. 381
Toronto Railway Co. v Rex.	P.C.	—	21	[1896] A. C. 551; 75 L. T. 234
Tottenham District Council v Williamson	C.A.	—	89	44 W. R. 676; [1896] 2 Q. B. 353, 65 L. J. Q. B. 591; 75 L. T. 238
Travers v Mason	Q.B.D.	77	83
Treboeth Brick Co., Ex parte. In re Phillips	Q.B.D. BKCY.	—	11	[1896] 2 Q. B. 122; 65 L. J. Q. B. 648
Trevalion v Anderton	C.A.	—	7	76 L. T. 642
Trever v Hutchins	C.A.	—	166	76 L. T. 636
Trieste General Insurance Co. v Cory	Q.B.D.	—	75	[1897] 1 Q. B. 335; 66 L. J. Q. B. 313
Trinidad Asphalte Co. v Coryat	P.C.	225	170	[1896] A. C. 587; 65 L. J. P. C. 100
Tubbs v Wynne	Q.B.D.	—	168	[1897] 1 Q. B. 74; 66 L. J. Q. B. 116
Tucker v Wintle. In re Wintle	CH.D. NOR. J.	91	174	[1896] 2 Ch. 711; 65 L. J. Ch. 863; 75 L. T. 207

Name of Case.	Court.	Page in W. R. 1896–97.	Column in Digest.	References to Contemporaneous Reports.
Tucker's Petition, In re	P.D. & A.D.	656	48	[1897] P. 83; 66 L. J. P. 65
Tunbridge Wells (Mayor) v Baird	H.L. (E.)	—	92	[1896] A. C. 434; 65 L. J. Q. B. 451; 74 L. T. 385
Turner, In re. Barker v Ivimey	CHD. BYRNE, J	495	164	[1897] 1 Ch. 536; 66 L. J. Ch. 282; 76 L. T. 116
——— v Read. In re Read	CH.D. STI J.	—	55	75 L. T. 295
Turner Pneumatic Tyre Co. v Dunlop Pneumatic Tyre Co.	CH.D. STI. J.	—	122	75 L. T. 651
Tyne Pontoons Co. v Tynemouth Union	Q.B.D.	—	114	76 L. T. 782
Umfreville v London County Council	Q B.D.	—	90	66 L. J. Q. B. 177; 75 L. T. 550
Universo Insurance Co. of Milan v Merchants' Marine Insurance Co.	C.A.	625	75	[1897] 2 Q. B. 93; 66 L. J. Q. B. 564; 76 L. T. 748
Vallancey v Fletcher	Q.B.D.	367	49	[1897] 1 Q. B. 265; 66 L. J. Q. B. 297; 76 L. T. 201
Venner v McDonell	Q.B.D.	267	98	[1897] 1 Q. B. 421; 66 L. J. Q. B. 273; 76 L. T. 152
Viant v Cooper	CH.D. STI. J.	—	116	76 L. T. 768
Victoria (Master in Equity of Supreme Court) v Pearson	P.C.	—	172	[1897] A. C. 214; 66 L. J. P. C. 25; 75 L. T. 526
Victoria Steamboats Co., In re. Smith v Wilkinson	CH.D. KEK.J.	135	26	[1897] 1 Ch. 158; 66 L. J. Ch. 21; 75 L. T. 374
Vincent v Eyton	P.D. & A.D.	—	51	[1897] P. 1
Viney, Ex parte. In re Eaton	Q.B.D. BKCY.	—	11	[1897] 2 Q. B. 16; 66 L. J. Q. B. 491
Wainwright v Miller	CHD BYRNE, J	652	116	[1897] 2 Ch. 255; 66 L. J. Ch 616; 76 L. T. 718
Walker, In re. Walker v Lutyens	CH.D. ROM. J.	647	175	[1897] 2 Ch. 238; 66 L. J. Ch. 622
——— v Walker	P.D. & A.D.	—	48	76 L. T. 234
Walthamstow Urban District Council v Henwood	CH.D. KEK.J.	124	92	[1897] 1 Ch. 41; 66 L. J. Ch. 31; 75 L. T. 375
Ward, Ex parte. In re Montagu	Q.B.D. BKCY.	384	10	76 L. T. 203
———, In re. Ex parte Ward	C.A.	329	13	[1897] 1 Q. B. 266; 66 L. J. Q. B. 310; 76 L. T. 37
Ware, Ex parte. In re Flowers & Co.	C.A.	118	10	[1897] 1 Q. B. 14; 65 L. J. Q. B. 679; 75 L. T. 306
Wavertree Sailing Ship Co. v Love	P.C.	—	146	[1897] A. C. 373; 66 L. J. P. C. 77; 76 L. T. 576
Webb, In re. Still v Webb	CH.D. STI. J.	170		[1897] 1 Ch. 144; 66 L. J. Ch. 163; 75 L. T. 478
Webster, Ex parte. Reg. v London County Council	Q.B.D.	605		76 L. T. 472
Weekes' Settlement, In re	CH.D. ROM.J	265	179	[1897] 1 Ch. 289; 66 L. J. Ch. 179; 76 L. T. 112
Welton v Saffery	H.L. (E.)	508	31	[1897] A. C. 299; 66 L. J. Ch. 362; 76 L. T. 505
West Derby Union v Metropolitan Life Assurance Co.	CH.D. NOR.J.	90	112	75 L. T. 412
———	C.A.	388		[1897] 1 Ch 335; 66 L. J. Ch. 199; 76 L. T. 73
——— v Priestman	C.A.	388		[1897] 1 Ch. 335; 66 L. J. Ch. 199; 76 L. T. 73
West of England Fire Insurance Co v Isaacs	C.A.	—	74	[1897] 1 Q. B. 226; 66 L. J. Q. B. 36; 75 L. T. 564
Western v Bailey	C.A.	115	39	[1897] 1 Q. B. 86; 66 L. J. Q. B. 48; 75 L. T. 470
Western Counties Steam Bakeries and Milling Co., In re	CH.D. STI. J.	263		75 L. T. 624
———	C.A.	418	34	[1897] 1 Ch. 617; 66 L. J. Ch. 354; 76 L. T. 239
West Ham Union v Essex Justices	H.L. (E.)	—	113	[1896] A. C. 443
——— v St. Matthew, Bethnal Green	H.L. (E.)	—	111	[1896] A. C. 477; 65 L. J. M. C. 201; 75 L. T. 286
West Hartlepool (Mayor) v Robinson	CH.D. STI. J.	312	91	75 L. T. 677
Westwood v Booker. In re Toleman	CH.D. NOR.J.	548	56	[1897] 1 Ch. 866; 66 L. J. Ch. 452, 76 L. T. 381
Whitchurch, In re. In re Simpson	C.A.	277	141	[1897] 1 Ch. 256; 76 L. T. 131
White v Devon (Earl). In re Devon's Settled Estates	CH.D. CHI. J.	25	87	[1896] 2 Ch. 562; 65 L. J. Ch. 810
——— v Southend Hotel Co.	C.A.	434	81	[1897] 1 Ch. 767; 66 L. J. Ch. 387; 76 L. T. 273
Whitwham v Westminster Brymbo Coal Co.	C.A.	—	44	44 W. R. 698; [1896] 2 Ch. 538; 65 L. J. Ch. 741
Whyte v Nutting	Q.B.D. (I.)	—	159	[1897] 2 L. R. (Ir.) 241
Wiesener v Rackow	C.A.	—	118	76 L. T. 448
Wilcox v Janes	CH.D. ROM.J.	474	107	[1897] 2 Ch. 71; 66 L. J. Ch 525
Wild v Southwood	Q.B.D. BKCY.	224	9	[1897] 1 Q. B. 317; 66 L. J. Q. B. 166; 75 L. T. 388
Wilding v Sanderson	CHD BYRNE, J	462	122	66 L. J. Ch. 467; 76 L. T. 346
———	C.A.	675
Wilkinson v Blades. In re Lart	CH.D. CHI. J.	27	125	[1896] 2 Ch. 788; 65 L. J. Ch. 846
——— v Downton	Q.B.D.	525	161	[1897] 2 Q. B. 57; 66 L. J. Q. B. 493; 76 L. T. 493
Willesden Local Board v Wright	C.A.	—	87	44 W. R. 676; [1896] 2 Q. B. 412; 65 L. J. Q. B. 567
Williams, In re. Williams v Grant	CH.D. STI. J.	—	95	76 L. T. 150
——— v Goose	C.A.	308	126	[1897] 1 Q. B. 471; 66 L. J. Q. B. 345; 76 L. T. 143
——— v Manchester (Mayor)	Q.B.D.	412	41
Williams and Newcastle (Duchess) Contract, In re	CH.D. NOR. J	627		[1897] 2 Ch. 144; 66 L. J. Ch. 543; 76 L. T. 646

Name of Case.	Court.	Page in W. R. 1896–97.	Column in Digest.	References to Contemporaneous Reports.
Williams v Pinckney	CH.D. KEK. J.	—	144	66 L. J. Ch. 551
—— v Williams	C.A.	519	174	[1897] 2 Ch. 12; 66 L. J. Ch. 485; 76 L. T. 600
Wilmot v Alton	Q.B.D.	12		[1896] 2 Q. B. 254; 66 L. J. Q. B. 42; 75 L. T. 447
——	C.A.	113	9	[1897] 1 Q. B. 17
——, In re. Wilmot v Betterton	CH.D. STI. J.	492	174	76 L. T. 415
Winkle v Bailey	CH.D. NOR. J.	—	93	[1897] 1 Ch. 123; 66 L. J. Ch. 181; 75 L. T. 577
"Winstanley," The	C.A.	—	151	[1896] P. 297
Wintle, In re. Tucker v Wintle	CH.D. NOR. J.	91	174	[1896] 2 Ch. 711; 65 L. J. Ch. 863; 75 L. T. 207
Wood, In re. Attorney-General v Anderson	CH.D. ROM. J.	—	76	44 W. R. 685; [1896] 2 Ch. 596; 65 L. J. Ch. 814
——. Ex parte Fanshawe	Q.B.D.	—	155	[1897] 1 Q. B. 314; 66 L. J. Q. B. 69; 75 L. T. 387
Wood v Middleton	CH.D. STI. J.	184	42	[1897] 1 Ch. 151; 66 L. J. Ch. 149; 75 L. T. 480
Woodroff, In re. Ex parte Woodroff	Q.B.D. BKCY.	—	9	76 L. T. 502
Worcestershire County Council v Worcester Union Assessment Committee	C.A.	309	113	[1897] 1 Q. B. 480; 66 L. J. Q. B. 323; 76 L. T. 138
Wortham's Settled Estate, In re	CH.D. NOR. J.	—	142	75 L. T. 293
Worthington v Robinson	C.A.	—	44	75 L. T. 446
Wragg, In re	C.A.	557	33	[1897] 1 Ch. 796; 66 L. J. Ch. 419; 76 L. T. 397
Wright v Tugwell. In re Robinson	C.A.	181	53	[1897] 1 Ch. 85; 66 L. J. Ch. 97; 76 L. T. 95
Wyane v Tempest	CH.D. CHI. J.	183	125	[1897] 1 Ch. 110; 66 L. J. Ch. 81; 75 L. T. 624
Young, In re. Ex parte Jones	Q.B.D. BKCY.	96	14	[1896] 2 Q. B. 484; 75 L. T. 278

THE

WEEKLY REPORTER,

1896-97.

553

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div. (Lord Esher, M.R., and Kay and A. L. Smith, L.JJ.) — July 28.

SEAMAN v. BURLEY. (a.)

Practice—Appeal—Court of Appeal—Criminal cause or matter—Poor rate—Distress warrant—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 47.

Where justices ordered a distress warrant to be issued to enforce payment of a poor rate, under a local Act which gave them power to order imprisonment in default of distress, but stated a case for the opinion of the court, Held, that the judgment of the Queen's Bench Division on the case was in a criminal cause or matter, and that no appeal lay to the Court of Appeal.

Appeal from an order of a Divisional Court (Day and Lawrance, JJ.).

The appellant was summoned before the Justices of Paddington for neglecting to pay a poor rate on demand. The justices, acting under a local Act, ordered a distress warrant to be issued against the appellant. The local Act provided that the justices might enforce payment of poor rates by warrant of distress, and, in default of distress, by imprisonment. At the request of the appellant the justices stated a special case for the opinion of the Queen's Bench Division, and on the hearing of the special case the Divisional Court affirmed the order of the justices.

The appellant appealed to the Court of Appeal.

R. C. Glen (Jelf, Q.C., with him), for the respondent, took a preliminary objection.—This is a criminal cause or matter, and therefore, by section 47 of the Judicature Act, 1873, no appeal lies. The order of which the appellant complains was made in proceedings which might end in his imprisonment. Where proceedings may end in imprisonment they are proceedings in a criminal cause or matter within the meaning of this section: Payne v. Wright, 40 W. R. 191, on appeal, 66 L. T. N. S. 148; Mellor v. Denham, 5 Q. B. D. 467, 28 W. R. Dig. 163; Reg. v. Whitchurch, 29 W. R. 922, 7 Q. B. D. 534; Ex parte Schofield, 39 W. R. 580, [1891] 2 Q. B. 428; Reg. v. Tyler, [1891] 2 Q. B. 588, 40 W. R. Dig. 178; O'Shea v. O'Shea, 38 W. R. 374, 15 P. D. 59.

Channell, Q.C. (Naldrett with him), for the appellant.—This is not a criminal cause or matter: Sweetman v. Guest, 16 W. R. 426, L. R. 3 Q. B. 262; Reg. v. Price, 28 W. R. 615, 5 Q. B. D. 300. The obligation to pay a poor rate is a debt which used to be barred by bankruptcy: Reg. v. Master, 17 W. R. 442, L. R. 4 Q. B. 285; In re Wetherell, 19 L. J. M. C. 115. The issuing of a distress warrant is merely a means of enforcing payment of the debt; it is not a step in a criminal proceeding. The cases cited by the other side are all cases where something has been done in disobedience to a statute incurring a pecuniary penalty, which penalty is ultimately enforceable by imprisonment.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—That this is entirely a question of procedure may be seen from considering the case of an assault. An assault may be dealt with either by civil process or criminal process. If a civil action is brought, an appeal lies to this court; but if criminal proceedings are taken, then, although the circumstances are the same and the evidence is the same, there is no appeal. Therefore the question whether an appeal lies does not depend on the nature of the thing complained of. Even if the obligation to pay a poor rate is a debt—as to which I have great doubt—still, if the Legislature has enacted that that debt may be realized by criminal procedure, from a judgment given in such criminal procedure there is no appeal.

Now, is the procedure in the present case criminal or civil? This court has held that where a proceeding is taken before magistrates and is a proceeding which may end—not which must end, but which may end—in imprisonment, it is for this purpose to be considered as a criminal proceeding. Here the person against whom the warrant of distress has been issued is liable to imprisonment in default of distress. The objection to hearing the appeal is fatal, and the appeal must be dismissed.

KAY and A. L. SMITH, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Underwood, Son, & Piper.

Solicitor for the respondent, J. H. Hortin.

From Q. B. Div. (Chambers). (A. L. Smith and Rigby, L.JJ.) — July 17.

HOOD BARRS v. HERIOT. (a.)

Practice—Judgment debtor—Married woman—Inquiry as to separate estate—Examination of third person—Ord. 42, r. 32.

Judgment having been recovered against a married woman and not having been satisfied, the master ordered that an inquiry be held as to her separate estate and that the judgment debtor do attend to be examined.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(a.) Reported by F. O. ROBINSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Held, that the order was made under ord. 42, r. 32, and that therefore, following Irwell v. Eden, 35 W. R. 511, 18 Q. B. D. 588, there was no power to compel the attendance and examination of any person other than the judgment debtor.

Appeal of the plaintiff from an order of Pollock, B., at chambers.

In November, 1892, a Mrs. Loftus recovered judgment against the defendant Heriot, a married woman, for £39 9s. debt, and £4 12s. costs, for goods sold and delivered.

In April, 1895, that judgment being still unsatisfied, it was assigned by Mrs. Loftus to the present plaintiff, Hood Barrs, who paid Mrs. Loftus her debt and costs, and was substituted for her in all future proceedings.

On the 12th of May, 1896, Master Macdonell ordered that "an inquiry be held as to the separate property of the judgment debtor not subject to any restraint upon anticipation for the purpose of satisfying the judgment debt and costs of this action upon the judgment, and that the judgment debtor do attend and be orally examined before a master, and that the judgment debtor do produce any books or documents in her possession relating to the inquiry, and that the costs of the inquiry be paid by the judgment debtor to the judgment creditor."

The judgment debtor was examined under this order for two days before Master Lawford. In the course of the examination it was ascertained that a sum of £486, representing dividends on certain Turkish bonds, the property of the defendant, had been paid into court in an action pending in the Chancery Division between the defendant and the executors of her father's will. The defendant stated that she had assigned this sum to her nephew, Blythe, for cash. The plaintiff, Hood Barrs, was anxious to examine Blythe as to this assignment, and he applied ex parte to Master Kaye for, and obtained, leave to issue a writ of subpœna against Blythe. Subsequently Blythe applied to Master Kaye to rescind this leave, and Master Kaye did so. The plaintiff appealed to Pollock, B., who affirmed the decision of the master. From this decision of Pollock, B., the present appeal was brought.

Ord. 42, r. 32.—"When a judgment or order is for the recovery or payment of money, the party entitled to enforce it may apply to the court or a judge for an order that the debtor liable under such judgment or order, or in the case of a corporation that any officer thereof, be orally examined as to whether any and what debts are owing to the debtor and whether the debtor has any and what other property or means of satisfying the judgment or order before a judge or an officer of the court as the court or judge shall appoint, and the court or judge may make an order for the attendance and the examination of such debtor, or of any other person, and for the production of any books or documents."

Bartley Denniss, for the plaintiff.—I admit that under ord. 42, r. 32, no one but the judgment debtor can be examined, for it was held in Irwell v. Eden, 35 W. R. 511, 18 Q. B. D. 588, that the words "any other person" refer only to the officer of a corporation. In this case the inquiry is as to the separate estate of a married woman, and the order is not made under ord. 42, r. 32, and in order to find out what separate estate she has the court will compel the attendance of any necessary person for examination. That was formerly the practice in such cases in the old Court of Chancery. Bursill v. Tanner, 34 W. R. 35, 16 Q. B. D. 1, is an authority in favour of the plaintiff, for in that case a solicitor was compelled to state, in an inquiry such as the present, the names of the trustees of the married woman.

Montague Shearman, for Blythe.—The only order obtained by the plaintiff is the common form order for the examination of the judgment debtor under ord. 42, r. 32; that a married woman can be a judgment debtor is shown by Countess of Aylesford v. Great Western Railway Co., 41 W. R. 42, [1892] 2 Q. B. 626. The power of examination given by ord. 42, r. 32, is intended to be cross-examination of the severest kind, and in this case the plaintiff wants to cross-examine Blythe for the purpose of afterwards using his evidence against him in an action to set aside the assignment. That is a power which exists only in bankruptcy cases: Ex parte Willey, In re Wright, 31 W. R. 553, 23 Ch. D. 118. As regards the old Chancery practice the inquiry as to a married woman's separate estate was an affidavit. There was no power to subpœna or to cross-examine unwilling witnesses. Bursill v. Tanner is no authority in this case. The point was never taken there, and Bursill v. Tanner was decided two years before Irwell v. Eden, which is decisive of this case if, as I contend, the order was made under ord. 42, r. 32. But even if there is jurisdiction to compel the attendance and examination of Blythe, cause must be shown by the plaintiff. No such cause has been shown, and in the exercise of its discretion the court will not make the order asked for.

Bartley Denniss replied.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—In my opinion the order of the 12th of May was clearly made under ord. 42, r. 32. I have not the summons before me on which the order was made, but the order is in exactly the same form as if it was against a male judgment debtor, with this sole difference, that in this case the judgment can only be satisfied out of the married woman's separate estate. It is said that the order was not made under ord. 42, r. 32, but is a general order for inquiry. That is not so. The inquiry is one in aid of execution, the object being to find out by cross-examination of the married woman what separate estate she has. The married woman was cross-examined, and she said that a certain sum of £486 in court in some other action had been assigned by her to Blythe, her nephew. The plaintiff then gets from Master Kaye leave to subpœna Blythe. Master Kaye was obviously unaware of the facts of the case, and thought it was an ordinary case under ord. 37, r. 28. He granted the leave ex parte, but rescinded it as soon as all the circumstances were explained to him. Pollock, B., affirmed the master, and therefore we are now in the same position as if the master had made no order.

As regards the question of jurisdiction, I am clearly of opinion that the order of the 12th of May was de facto in aid of execution against a married woman under ord. 42, r. 32. It is not necessary for me to read that rule in order to discuss whether any person other than the judgment can be summoned, for it has been decided in Irwell v. Eden that the words in the rule "any other person" only refer to an officer of a corporation in cases where a corporation is the judgment debtor, and do not mean any third person. So far, then, it seems that the master and judge were right, and that there is no jurisdiction to order the attendance of the witness desired by the plaintiff. But it is said on behalf of the plaintiff that it was decided otherwise in Bursill v. Tanner, and that that case shows that it is the common practice in inquiries as to the separate estate of a married woman to compel the attendance of other persons as witnesses. I myself decided Bursill v. Tanner at chambers, and I well remember the circumstances of that case. A very well-known solicitor attended an inquiry at chambers, having with him a marriage settlement, but he refused to produce or to disclose the names of the trustees on the ground of his privilege as a solicitor; as, however, he admitted the jurisdiction of the court, I ordered him to make the disclosure. That is all that was decided in that case, and it is no authority in the present case, for the point which has been raised here was not taken there at all.

There is another point in this case which must not be lost sight of. By the order of the 12th of May the judgment debtor has to pay the costs of the inquiry. Now, just consider what has already been done. She has been cross-examined for two days, and it is now said that we are to order Blythe to come and been examined. That will cause more costs to be incurred, all of which the judgment debtor would have to pay. That was not the intention when the order was made. She was only intended to pay the cost of the inquiry as to her separate estate, information regarding which she was withholding.

There is a passage in the judgment of the late Master of the Rolls in Ex parte Willey, In re Wright, which is very pertinent to this case. He was there referring to the power of examination given by section 96 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, and he says (23 Ch. D., at p. 128): "Now, that is a very grave power to intrust to any court or any man—viz., power to summon any other man whom you suspect (for mere suspicion will do) to be capable of giving information, and to get any information from him, although that information may be extremely hostile to the interests of the man himself. It is a power which, so far as I know, is found nowhere except in bankruptcy and the winding up of companies (which is a kind of bankruptcy); it is a very extraordinary power indeed, and it ought to be very carefully exercised." Now, what the plaintiff wants to do here is to get evidence from Blythe in order that the title to the assignment to him may be impeached in a subsequent action. For the reasons which I have already given, I think there is no jurisdiction to compel the attendance of Blythe for examination, but even if there were, I think that the court in the exercise of its discretionary power ought to refuse to grant the application in the present case.

RIGBY, L.J.—I agree. I think that as regards that part of the order which directs the married woman to attend and be examined, the order is made under ord. 42, r. 32, and if that is so it is clear that no other person can be summoned to attend on subpœna. Then it is urged that inquiry is to be directed to the married woman's separate estate, and the conclusion which is sought to be drawn from that fact is that the attendance of any other persons as witnesses can be compelled as a matter of course. I do not understand that to be the old practice of the Court of Chancery, or the practice under the present rules. Under the old Chancery practice inquiries were taken on affidavit, and it was only under a special order that witnesses could be cross-examined. The modern practice under the Judicature Acts is that when an inquiry is ordered before a chief clerk he summons the witnesses, and their obedience to the summons can be enforced by the same penalties as in the case of a subpœna. But the chief clerk never summons witnesses for inquisitorial purposes, as is done in the case of a judgment debtor under ord. 42, r. 32, or in bankruptcy. Now, why are we to extend this power of inquisitorial examination, which under the rules exists only in the case of a judgment debtor. There is nothing special in the case of a married woman. There is no more difficulty in finding out the separate estate of a married woman than in discovering the entire property of an unmarried woman.

Whether the case is decided on the grounds of jurisdiction or of discretion, I do not think that the order asked for by the plaintiff ought to be made.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Hood Barrs.

Solicitors for Blythe, Rye & Eyre.

From Q. B. Div. (Lord Esher, M.R., and A. L. Smith, L.J.) — June 29, 1896.

DERBYSHIRE COUNTY COUNCIL v. MAYOR, &c., OF DERBY. (a.)

Practice — Discovery — Interrogatories — Criminal or penal proceedings—Right to discovery—Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 75), ss. 3, 10.

Section 3 of the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876, makes it an offence to cause or knowingly to permit any sewage matter to flow into any stream; and by section 10 the county court of the district has power, by summary order, to require any person to abstain from the commission of such offence, and any person making default in complying with any such requirement shall pay such sum, not exceeding £50 for every day during which he is in default, as the court may order, and such penalty shall be enforced in the same manner as any debt adjudged to be due by the court.

Held, that proceedings instituted in the county court for an order requiring a person to abstain from causing or permitting sewage to flow into a river were not proceedings of a criminal or penal nature, and that an order for discovery might be made against such person.

This was an appeal from the judgment of the Divisional Court (Grantham and Collins, JJ.); reported 44 W. R. 543, [1896] 2 Q. B. 53.

The plaintiffs, the Derbyshire County Council, took proceedings in the county court, under section 10 of the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876, requiring the defendants, the Corporation of Derby, to abstain from causing or knowingly permitting sewage matter to fall or flow from their sewers into the river Derwent. The plaintiffs obtained an order for discovery of documents and for leave to deliver interrogatories.

The defendants appealed, contending that the proceedings were of a criminal or penal nature, and that therefore the order for discovery was wrong.

The Divisional Court affirmed the order of the county court judge.

The defendants appealed.

Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., and W. Graham, for the Corporation.

Stanger, Q.C., and T. G. Carver, for the County Council.

The following authorities were cited in addition to those referred to in the court below: Harrison v. Southcote, 1 Atk. 528, at p. 539; United States of America v. McRae, 16 W. R. 377, L. R. 3 Ch. App. 79; Hobbs & Co. v. Hudson, 38 W. R. 682, 25 Q. B. D. 232; Kirkheaton Local Board v. Ainley, [1892] 2

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q. B. 274, 40 W. R. Dig. 219; and the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 31), s. 1.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—I have had considerable doubts during the argument; but in the result I do not see my way to differ from the decision of the Divisional Court. That this is not a criminal matter seems to me to be quite clear. But that a penalty may become payable is equally clear, though at present there is nothing to which it can attach. This is an application for a mandatory injunction to restrain the defendants from allowing the sewage to pass through their sewers into the river. That is the whole of the present application. It is in the discretion of the judge to grant or refuse that application. I cannot help thinking that the defendants are entitled to show that the injunction ought not to be granted on the ground that they could not with reasonable means obey it. It is said that these proceedings may lead to the defendants becoming liable to a penalty. But that need not be so. Some other proceeding must intervene. There must be a substantive proceeding taken to recover the penalty, and in that proceeding it must be shown that the defendants have made default in complying with the order. I think that the defendants can then show some reason why they were unable to obey the order. There seems to me to be nothing to prevent them from showing at any time that they had done all they reasonably could to obey the order, but that circumstances arose which made it reasonably impossible for them to obey it. They would not then be in default. If it could be shown that they were guilty of wilful default, then they would be liable to a penalty. Therefore until the first order has been disobeyed so as to amount to a default, the question of a penalty does not arise, and there is nothing to prevent the judge from ordering discovery of documents and interrogatories. The appeal must therefore be dismissed.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The question is whether this is a proceeding in which discovery of documents and interrogatories is permissible. It depends upon sections 3 and 10 of the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876. I may here point out that by section 14 of the Local Government Act, 1888, the County Council has jurisdiction to take proceedings under the Act of 1876. The County Council are here asking for an injunction to prevent the Corporation from sending their sewage into the river. The granting of that injunction is in the discretion of the county court judge. The application is for an injunction and nothing more. It is clear that it is not a criminal matter. It is said, however, that it is a penal proceeding, or rather one in which a penalty may ultimately be recoverable, and that therefore the case comes within the well-known rule that a person proceeding for a penalty will not be aided by the court allowing discovery. The question is whether this case comes within that rule. Undoubtedly Lord Hardwicke, in Harrison v. Southcote, did say that a man shall not be obliged to discover what may subject him to a penalty, not what must only. But that cannot apply to a case where the application is merely for an injunction, and where the evidence asked for is only wanted for the purposes of that application. The same remark applies to the case of United States of America v. McRae. This being an application for an injunction, the evidence sought for is only useful upon that application. The judge may make an order requiring the defendants to abstain from sending the sewage into the river, and may direct how that is to be done. The order may direct it to be done within a certain time. If that order were not obeyed, the evidence now sought for would not be used again before the judge, but the order would be brought before him, and proof given of the default. How can it be said that the present proceedings may result in a penalty? A new proceeding, caused by the defendants' default, is necessary before any question of a penalty can arise.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Wynne, Holme, & Wynne, for Hughes-Hallett, Derby.

Solicitors for the defendants, Satchell & Chapple, for H. Gadsby, Derby.

From Q. B. Div. (Lord Esher, M.R., and Kay and A. L. Smith, L.JJ.) — June 25, 1896.

REG. v. JUSTICES OF KENT AND OTHERS. (a.)

Licensing Acts—Licence—Refusal to renew—Appeal to quarter sessions — Costs—"Party"—Jurisdiction to order objector to pay costs—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879 (42 & 43 Vict. c. 49), s. 31, sub-section 5.

A person, who had duly served notice of his intention to object to the renewal of a licence at the general annual licensing meeting, appeared before the licensing justices and opposed the renewal, which was refused. The licence holder appealed to quarter sessions, having served notice of appeal on the objector, and the licence was renewed. The objector did not appear on the appeal.

Held, that the objector was a "party" within section 31, sub-section 5, of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, and the quarter sessions had jurisdiction to order him to pay the costs of the appeal.

Reg. v. Justices of Gloucestershire, 41 W. R. 379, approved.

Appeal from a decision of the Queen's Bench Division (Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J., and Wright, J.) discharging a rule nisi for a certiorari; reported 44 W. R. 603, [1896] 2 Q. B. 1.

One Boulter duly served upon the holder of a public-house licence written notice of his intention to oppose the renewal of the licence at the general annual licensing meeting. Boulter appeared at the general annual licensing meeting and opposed the renewal, which was refused. The licence holder served notice of appeal to quarter sessions upon Boulter, and upon the clerk to the licensing justices. Neither Boulter nor the licensing justices appeared upon the appeal, and the quarter sessions allowed the appeal and renewed the licence, and ordered Boulter to pay the costs of the appeal.

A rule nisi for a certiorari to bring up, for the purpose of being quashed, the order of quarter sessions as to costs was obtained, but the Divisional Court discharged it.

Boulter appealed.

G. Blaiklock (E. Owen Roberts with him), for the appellant.—9 Geo. 4, c. 61, s. 27, gives a right of appeal from the justices' refusal to renew a licence. There does not seem to be any right of appeal to the objector if the renewal is granted. Notice of appeal need only be served on the licensing justices, and section 29 deals with the costs, and refers only to the justices. Therefore the Licensing Acts do not make the objector a party. Reg. v. Justices of Glamorganshire, 40 W. R. 436, [1892] 1 Q. B. 621, shows that the effect of section 13, sub-section 11, of the Interpretation Act, 1889, is to apply the provisions of the Summary Jurisdiction Acts to these licensing proceedings. By section 31, sub-section 2, of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, notice of appeal must be served on the "other party" as well as on the clerk to the justices. An objector who is exercising the right of any citizen to object to the renewal of a licence under section 42 of the Licensing Act, 1872, and who does not appear at quarter sessions and actively oppose the appeal, is not a "party" within section 31, sub-section 5, of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, against whom the quarter sessions can give costs. In Reg. v. Justices of London, 43 W. R. 387, [1895] 1 Q. B. 616, it was held that the licensing justices who do not actively oppose the appeal are not made parties so as to be liable for the costs.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at Law.

He also referred to Price v. James, 41 W. R. 57, [1892] 2 Q. B. 428; and Sharpe v. Wakefield, 39 W. R. 561, [1891] A. C. 173.

J. Lawson Walton, Q.C. (A. H. Bodkin with him), for the respondent.—Reg. v. Justices of London only shows that licensing justices as such are not "parties" to an appeal against their decision unless they make themselves litigants by appearing on the appeal and opposing it. In that case Lindley, L.J., suggests that the objector is the real party. In Price v. James the superintendent of police, who appeared before the licensing justices to oppose the renewal, was held properly made respondent to a special case; and in Reg. v. Justices of Gloucestershire, 41 W. R. 379, it was held that the objector must be served with notice of appeal, otherwise the quarter sessions may refuse to hear the appeal. These cases show that an objector is a "party" upon whom notice of appeal must be served, and who may be ordered to pay the costs of the appeal.

Blaiklock replied.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—In my opinion this appeal must be dismissed. The question is whether an objector to the renewal of a licence, whose objection has been sustained at the general annual licensing meeting, is a "party" to the appeal brought by the licence holder against that decision. If he is not, who is the other party to the appeal? There would seem to be none. It seems to me that the combined effect of the cases of Reg v. Justices of Glamorganshire, and Reg v. Justices of London, decisions which are binding upon this court, and Reg v. Justices of Gloucestershire, a decision of the Divisional Court with which I agree, show that an objector, by making the objection at the general annual licensing meeting and obtaining a decision in his favour, is thereby made a party to the appeal to quarter sessions against that decision. Those cases decide that the licence holder cannot launch his appeal without giving notice to the objector. That can only be upon the ground that the objector is a party. Notice must be served upon the justices, but they are not thereby made parties to the appeal. Licensing justices are a court of summary jurisdiction, and proceedings on an appeal must be regulated as in the case of appeals from a court of summary jurisdiction. The objector therefore is a party. There is thus an appellant and a respondent. The respondent did not appear upon the hearing of the appeal, and the court heard the appeal and decided in favour of the appellant. The court had jurisdiction in their discretion to order the objector to pay the costs of the appeal.

KAY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The ground of the application for a certiorari is that the quarter sessions had no jurisdiction to order Boulter to pay the costs of the appeal. Boulter gave notice of objection to the renewal of the licence, and appeared at the licensing meeting in support of his objection, and the renewal was refused. The publican appealed to quarter sessions, and served notice of appeal on the clerk to the licensing justices and on Boulter. Boulter did not appear at the quarter sessions when the appeal came on for hearing. The quarter sessions reversed the decision of the licensing justices and renewed the licence, ordering Boulter to pay the costs of the appeal. The law has been authoritatively laid down by decisions binding upon us. First, justices sitting at the general annual licensing meeting are a court of summary jurisdiction, and therefore an appeal from them is regulated by section 31 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, and by sub-section 2 notice of appeal must be served on "the other party," and by sub-section 5 the quarter sessions may make such order as to costs to be paid by "either party" as they may think just. Therefore if Boulter was a "party," undoubtedly the quarter sessions had power to order Boulter to pay the costs of the appeal. Was Boulter a party? By section 31, sub-section 2, notice of appeal must be served on "the other party." It seems to me, apart from authority, that Boulter comes within those words. He initiated the whole litigation, and having obtained a decision in his favour he took no further notice, and said that he was not a party. It was held in Reg. v. Justices of London that mere service of the notice of appeal on the clerk of the justices does not make them parties. The object is to give them an opportunity of appearing. If they appear and actively support their decision they make themselves parties, but not otherwise. In that case Lindley, L.J., says that "if there is an objector, who is the real party, and the licensing justices, though served with notice of the appeal, either do not appear or, even if they do, yet take no part in the appeal beyond informing the Court of Appeal of the reasons for which they acted, then, in my opinion, the justices are not parties"; and A. L. Smith, L.J., seems to have agreed with that. The effect of Reg. v. Justices of Glamorganshire is that the objector must be served with notice of appeal, and in Reg. v. Justices of Gloucestershire the Divisional Court held that the omission to serve the objector is fatal. I agree with the last decision, as it seems to me to follow from the decisions of this court. The objector is therefore a "party" within section 31, sub-section 2, and he comes within sub-section 5, and the quarter sessions had jurisdiction to order him to pay the costs of the appeal.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The three cases which have been referred to cover the whole ground. In the first place, brewster sessions are courts of summary jurisdiction. There were doubts about it, and the Legislature by section 7 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1884, enacted that the expression court of summary jurisdiction should mean any justice or justices or magistrate, whether acting under the Summary Jurisdiction Acts or any of them, or under any other Act, or by virtue of his or their commission, or by the common law. That section was repealed by and re-enacted in section 13, sub-section 11, of the Interpretation Act, 1889. I mention this because it is said that it is judge-made law. It is nothing of the kind. It is statute law. It is obvious that the Legislature enacted that provision to clear up doubts, and it is plain that brewster sessions come within the very terms of the enactment. Then by section 31, sub-section 2, of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1879, notice of appeal must be served upon "the other party." Who is the other party? Clearly the objector. The publican cannot move a step without serving notice of appeal upon the objector. It was decided in Reg. v. Justices of Gloucestershire that the publican must serve the objector, and that the omission to do so is fatal. Therefore Boulter was a party to these proceedings, and he cannot get out of his liabilities as such by not appearing at quarter sessions. Section 31, sub-section 5, therefore applies, and the appeal must be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Hicks, Davis, and Hunt, for A. M. Bradley, Dover.

Solicitors for the respondent, Godden, Son & Holme, for Mowell & Mowell, Dover.

From Q. B. Div. (Lord Esher, M.R., and Kay and A. L. Smith, L.JJ.) — June 16, 1896.

RICHMOND HILL STEAMSHIP CO. v. CORPORATION OF TRINITY HOUSE. (a.)

Ship—Light dues—Measurement of tonnage—Deck cargo—"Goods"—Horses and cattle—Merchant Shipping Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 80), s. 23.

By section 23 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1876, if any ship carries as deck cargo timber, stores, or other goods, all dues payable on the ship's tonnage shall be payable as if there were added to the ship's registered tonnage the tonnage of the space occupied by such goods. The space so occupied shall be deemed to be the space limited by the area occupied by the goods, and by straight lines enclosing a rectangular space sufficient to include the goods.

Held, that live animals carried on deck were "goods" within the meaning of the section; and that the space to be measured was not the actual sheds occupied by them, but a rectangular space no larger than was reasonably necessary to enclose the animals, allowing reasonable facilities for their movements.

Appeal from the judgment of Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J., at the trial of the action without a jury; reported [1896] 1 Q. B. 493, 44 W. R. Dig. 150.

The plaintiffs were the owners of the steamship Richmond Hill, and the defendants were the collectors of light dues payable by vessels entering the port of London. The plaintiffs carried on the Richmond Hill 17 horses and 350 cattle in covered pens on deck, and on arrival in the port of London a surveyor of Customs boarded the steamship for the purpose of ascertaining under section 23 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1876, the tonnage of the ship upon which light dues were payable, and measured the deck cargo consisting of horses, cattle, and cattle pens. In accordance with instructions from the Board of Trade, the surveyor measured along the deck the greatest length and breadth of the pens, and also the greatest height reached by the pens, and he multiplied together the figures so obtained and divided by 100, which gave 328 as the tonnage of the space. The defendants demanded of the plaintiffs the sum of £3 16s. 6d. for light dues payable in respect of the said 328 tons, and the plaintiffs paid the amount under protest, and brought this action to recover it back. The agreed questions raised by this action were: (1) Whether the defendants were entitled to charge the plaintiffs with any light dues in respect of the said horses, cattle, or cattle pens? (2) if yes, whether the defendants had employed the right system of measurement in ascertaining the amount of such dues? Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J., held that live animals were "goods" within section 23 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1876,* and that the tonnage of the space occupied by them should be added to the ship's registered tonnage for the purpose of calculating the light dues; but that the space to be measured was not the covered pens, but the space occupied by the animals themselves, making reasonable allowance for their free bodily movements. He accordingly gave judgment for the plaintiffs for £1. The defendants appealed, and the plaintiffs gave cross-notice of appeal.

Bucknill, Q.C., and Butler Aspinall, for the defendants.

J. Lawson Walton, Q.C., and Holman, for the plaintiffs.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—I am of opinion that the judgment of the Lord Chief Justice is right upon both points. The first question is whether the space occupied by cattle carried as deck cargo is space occupied by "goods" within the meaning of section 23 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1876. It seems to me that where a shipowner is really using the deck, as if it were a part of the hold, for the carriage of cargo, taking into consideration what light dues are payable for—namely, for the safety of the ship and cargo, it would be strange to say that the shipowner was liable to pay light dues in respect of timber, stores, and goods of a similar nature—i.e., wooden goods carried on deck, while if he carried bales of cotton or live animals on deck he would not be liable. That is the argument for the plaintiffs. To my mind it is impossible to say that the shipowner would not have to pay light dues in respect of bales of cotton carried on deck. The word "goods," on the principle laid down in Anderson v. Anderson, 43 W. R. 322, [1895] 1 Q. B. 749, must have its ordinary and natural meaning, having regard to the subject-matter dealt with—namely, cargo. If bales of cotton carried in the hold as part of the cargo under a contract of carriage, are—as undoubtedly they are—goods, they are not the less goods because they are carried on deck. So, too, as regards live animals. They are carried as goods under a contract of carriage. They come, therefore, within the word "goods" as being part of the cargo. Upon this point I think the Lord Chief Justice was right. The next point relates to the mode of measurement. The tonnage of the space occupied by the deck cargo is to be added to the ship's registered tonnage for the purpose of calculating the light dues payable by the ship. We must construe the words of the statute according to their ordinary meaning. What is the meaning of the

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

* "If any ship, British or foreign, other than home trade ships as defined by the Merchant Shipping Act, 1854, carries as deck cargo, that is to say, in any uncovered space upon deck, or in any covered space not included in the cubical contents forming the ship's registered tonnage, timber, stores, or other goods, all dues payable on the ship's tonnage shall be payable as if there were added to the ship's registered tonnage the tonnage of the space occupied by such goods at the time at which such dues become payable. The space so occupied shall be deemed to be the space limited by the area occupied by the goods, and by straight lines inclosing a rectangular space sufficient to include the goods." This statute has been repealed by the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, but the provision has been re-enacted in section 85 of the latter Act.

"space occupied by such goods"? What is the space occupied by the horses and animals? The statute does not say the space allotted to or set aside for the carriage of the animals. The words must mean the space actually occupied by them. The subsequent words confirm this view: "The space so occupied shall be deemed to be the space limited by the area occupied by the goods, and by straight lines inclosing a rectangular space sufficient to include the goods." The space is not to be measured by the mere shape of the animal, but it is to be a rectangular space no larger than is reasonably necessary to inclose the animals. The surveyor has to measure a hypothetical shed no larger than is necessary for actual occupation by the animals, allowing reasonable facilities for their movements, and then to measure the inside of that shed. That I understand to be the principle laid down by the Lord Chief Justice. He came to the conclusion that the surveyor measured more than the inside of the hypothetical shed. The surveyor measured the actual shed. The principle laid down by the Lord Chief Justice is right, and we cannot say that he was wrong in coming to the conclusion that the measurement in this case was not in accordance with that principle. Both the appeal and the cross-appeal must be dismissed.

KAY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. Formerly it would appear that light dues were payable on the registered tonnage of the ship. The object of section 23 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1876, was to add the tonnage of the space occupied by goods carried as deck cargo to the registered tonnage of the ship for the purpose of calculating the amount payable for light dues. It is first said that live animals are not "goods" within section 23. It is urged that the words "other goods" following "timber stores," must be read, according to the misunderstood doctrine of noscitur a sociis, as goods made of wood. I differ from that contention. Why the word "stores" should be confined to things made of wood I cannot see. It is said that "stores" means ship's stores. I cannot see why. It cannot mean the stores of that particular ship, because in that case the stores would not be carried as cargo. In my opinion "stores" mean things other than timber which are stored for the purpose of carriage, and "goods" include all other kinds of goods. Horses and animals are goods in the ordinary sense of the word. It is said that at the time of the passing of the Act deck cargoes were chiefly timber. But even at that time timber was not the only article carried as deck cargo, and the Legislature must have known that many other articles would probably in future be carried on deck. In my opinion the section should be construed widely, because there is no reason why the shipowner should not pay light dues for all goods whether carried on deck or in the hold. The next point is as to the measurement of "the space occupied by such goods." The section does not leave the matter in doubt, because it goes on to state how the space so occupied is to be measured. It is to be a rectangular space sufficient to include the goods. What is the rectangular space sufficient to include horses or cattle? The surveyor must measure what space they require, allowing reasonable comfort for their carriage on deck. The section does not say that the shed is to be measured. The surveyor in the present case has measured a large shed divided into compartments called pens, and has measured the outside of that shed. It cannot be the right rule to measure the shed in every case. Supposing one sheep or one pig were put into each pen, would the pen be the space occupied by the sheep or the pig? That is not the meaning of the statute. The statute tells the surveyor to take an imaginary space bounded by rectangular lines sufficient for the animals during the voyage. Therefore upon this point I find it quite impossible to differ from the judgment of the Lord Chief Justice, and I do not think it can be better put than he puts it in his judgment, where he says: "He (the surveyor) is entitled, for the purposes of the computation of the horizontal area, to measure a rectangular space, the depth of which shall be something in excess of the longest animal contained in it, and he is entitled also to take a uniform height sufficient to allow fair headroom for the tallest of the animals." The surveyor is therefore not entitled to measure the outside of the shed. This case differs from the one suggested as analogous case—namely, goods packed in cases. There the cases would belong to the consignor, and would be treated as cargo, and the space occupied by the goods would be space occupied by the cargo. It is impossible to treat the space occupied by the sheds, in which the consignor has no interest, as being space occupied by the cargo.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. Upon the first point, in my opinion the words "other goods" mean other articles on deck carried as deck cargo, and therefore horses and cattle come within those words. The defendants, therefore, were entitled to measure in the space occupied by the horses and cattle. Then comes the question whether the defendants have measured correctly. They have measured round the outside of the sheds. Section 23, however, says that the space so occupied shall be deemed to be the space limited by the area occupied by the goods and by straight lines inclosing a rectangular space sufficient to include the goods. Here the measurement was made irrespective of the area occupied by the goods because the surveyor has measured in space not occupied by the goods. The shed or pen is not part of the cargo. It is part of the fittings of the ship. I agree with the rule laid down by the Lord Chief Justice as to how the measurement is to be carried out.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Downing, Holman, & Co.
Solicitors for the defendants, Sandilands & Co.

From Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. (Lindley, Lopes, and Rigby, L.JJ.) } July 3, 1896.

SALTER v. SALTER. (a)

Practice—Probate—Appointment of receiver pendente lite—Jurisdiction—Pending suit—Caveat—Warning—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 25, sub-section 8.

Notwithstanding sub-section 8 of section 25 of Judicature Act, 1873, the court has no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver unless the application is made in a pending proceeding already duly commenced by writ or otherwise.

In re Parker, Dearing v. Brooks, 54 L. J. Ch. 694, 35 W. R. Dig. 162, explained.

The entry of a caveat in the goods of a deceased person, together with a warning to the caveat and an appearance by the caveator to the warning, does not constitute a lis pendens or enable the court to appoint a receiver pendente lite.

Appeal from the President.

One Frederick Salter, died in May, 1896, having by his last will, dated the 9th of May, 1896, left all his property to his brother. The testator's widow, who claimed the whole of the estate under an earlier will, resisted probate of the will of May, 1896. She entered a caveat in the matter of the estate, and when the caveat was warned she entered an appearance to the warning. At this stage she applied for the appointment of a receiver pendente lite of the goods of the deceased, contending that there was a lis pendens by reason of the proceedings already taken, and that in any case section 25, sub-section 8, of the Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), gave the court jurisdiction to appoint a receiver. The President held that, a writ not having been issued, there was no lis pendens, and refused to appoint a receiver; but he granted an injunction to prevent the brother from parting with the property, which he had taken possession of. Against the refusal to appoint a receiver the widow appealed.

(a.) Reported by R. C. MACKENZIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

P. Rose-Innes, for the appellant.—A receiver may be appointed, even if there is no lis pendens: In re Parker, Dearing v. Brooks, 54 L. J. Ch. 694, 35 W. R. Dig. 162; Judicature Act, 1873, s. 25, sub-section 8. But here there is a lis pendens. [LINDLEY and LOPES, L.JJ., referred to Moran v. Place, 40 SOLICITORS' JOURNAL, 514; since reported, 44 W. R. 593.]

He also referred to 13 & 14 Vict. c. 35, s. 17: In the Goods of Moore, 36 W. R. 576, 13 P. D. 36; In re Mallaliew, Ratcliffe v. Mallaliew, 91 L. T. 398; and 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77.

Bargrave Deane, for the respondent, was not called upon.

LINDLEY, L.J.—It is impossible to accede to this application. I think the case of In re Parker, Dearing v. Brooks, has been misunderstood. In re Parker means this. It was a creditor's action in the Chancery Division—that is to say, there was a pending suit in the Chancery Division for the administration of the estate of a deceased person. There had been no probate of any will. The question arose whether a receiver could be appointed; and one question in the case was whether the application should not be made in the Probate Division rather than in the Chancery Division. Chitty, J., says the old rule was that there must be a lis pendens to justify the court in appointing a receiver, but that that was no longer necessary. But what does that mean? It means this. The old rule in Chancery used to be that there must be a lis pendens in the Probate Division before the Chancery Division could grant a receiver, and that rule has been altered. It is quite true that that is no longer necessary. For that purpose it is important and useful to invoke the Judicature Act. But that Act does not in any way support the idea that ever, in the Chancery Division or the Probate Division, or in any other court, you could apply for and obtain a receiver before there is any writ issued. I never heard, nor did anybody else in this court, that that could be done. The whole of this application seems to me to be based on a misconception of what Chitty, J., meant in that case. He simply meant that in a creditor's action in the Chancery Division you could now do what you could not do before, apply for the appointment of a receiver where there was no pending action in the Probate Division. I think the President was perfectly right.

LOPES, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. An application for a receiver cannot be made unless there is already a pending proceeding; and the same applies to an injunction, which cannot be obtained unles there is a lis pendens. It frequently happens that the application is made before the writ is served, but it has always been issued, and the application for the appointment of a receiver cannot be made unless there is a lis pendens. It is said that certain proceedings which have been taken amount to a lis pendens. I am clearly of opinion that they do not. When the nature of those proceedings is considered that is abundantly clear. A caveat is simply a notice to the registrar not to issue any grant of probate unless notice is first given to the solicitor of the property who has lodged the caveat. The caveat is issued, and it says, Let nothing be done in the matter. Then the caveat is warned, that is to say, notice is given to the caveator that he must appear within six days; and then an appearance is entered. What happens next? If any further proceedings are to be taken by the parties, the next step is the issue of a writ. When a writ is issued then a lis commences, and, in my opinion, not before then. Applying that to the present case, I think the learned judge was perfectly right, and had no jurisdiction to do what he was asked to do.

RIGBY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. It is important for the purposes of this case to consider what the meaning of a receiver pendente lite is. The old rule was that before the Court of Chancery could appoint a receiver pendente lite there must be a pending litigation, not in the Court of Chancery, but in another court, and mainly at any rate—I am not sure if not exclusively—in the Court of Probate. The order was made on the ground that there was no proper person to take the management of the property. Then the court would step in and appoint a receiver. That was the meaning of a receiver pendente lite. Here there is no question of lis pendens in that sense; it is a mere question of how you are to approach the court in order to ask for a receiver. I will assume that, as we are told, the President thought there is behind all this a proper case for appointing a receiver. About that I know nothing. But how are you to appoint a receiver? You cannot simply walk into court and ask for the intervention of the court in that way. I do not know of any authority for doing that. These proceedings, commencing by a caveat, followed by a warning, and terminated by appearance, are no assistance to the present applicant in approaching the court, and she has not shown any other ground for asking the court to intervene. She might have issued a writ, but if she did not choose to do that I do not see anything which entitles her to make this application.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, H. Rose-Innes; J. G. Kempster.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } July 9, 15, 1896.
Chitty, J. }

In re BREWER.
MORTON v. BLACKMORE. (a.)

Settlement—Determinable interest—"Become payable to or vested in other person"—Forfeiture.

B., by a marriage settlement, assigned property to trustees upon trust to pay the income to B. until he should die or . . . should assign, charge, or incumber the said income, or do or suffer anything whereby the same or some part thereof would, . . . if belonging absolutely to him, become payable to or vested in other persons. The surviving trustee in and subsequently to 1887 made advances out of the corpus to B., which were expended by B. for the maintenance of his family and other purposes.

(a.) Reported by J. F. WALEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Held, that the dissipation of the corpus by B. did not, on the construction of the above clause, work a forfeiture of B.'s life interest, for, so long as the money was in B.'s hands and capable of being followed, the right to the income did not pass from B.; and after B. had spent the money, the persons to whom he paid it being purchasers for value without notice, the money in their hands ceased to have any existence as a trust fund.

Semble, the result would have been different if the words "or cease to be payable to himself" had been in the settlement.

Summons.

R. H. Brewer, by a settlement made on his marriage in 1878, assigned certain reversionary property to trustees upon trust to pay the income thereof to himself, until he should die or become bankrupt, or should assign, charge, or incumber the said income, or do or suffer anything whereby the same or some part thereof would through his act or default, or by operation or process of law, or otherwise, if belonging absolutely to him, become payable to or vested in some other person or persons; and after the failure or determination of the said trust upon trust to pay the income to his wife during her lifetime with ultimate trusts in favour of the children of the marriage.

In 1891 Brewer became bankrupt.

In and subsequently to 1887 (the property having fallen into possession and being worth about £1,000), and prior to the bankruptcy, Blackmore, the sole trustee of the settlement, advanced to the settlor out of the capital of the trust funds sums amounting to £685.

The only security taken was a covenant by the settlor and his wife (since deceased) to repay the principal of loans and to indemnify the trustee.

The money lent was applied by the settlor for his own purposes and for the maintenance of his wife and children.

After the bankruptcy an action was instituted by the infant children beneficially entitled under the settlement against Blackmore to compel him to replace the part of the trust fund which had been lost; and pursuant to a judgment in the action he has made good the trust fund, and new trustees have been appointed in his place.

Blackmore, having purchased from Brewer's trustee in bankruptcy all the interest of Brewer in the trust fund, claimed to be entitled to the income of the fund during Brewer's life.

This summons was taken out by the trustees of the settlement for the determination of the questions whether the life interest of Brewer in the settled funds had determined before the date of his bankruptcy, and whether the income should be paid to Blackmore or applied for the benefit of the children of the aforesaid marriage.

Farwell, Q.C., and St. John Clerke, for the trustees of the settlement.

Levett, Q.C., and Ribton, for Blackmore.—There was no alienation of Brewer's income, and therefore no forfeiture prior to the bankruptcy. A breach of trust may render income liable to be impounded under the Trustee Act, 1893, s. 45, but neither that liability nor the borrowing and spending the money would cause a forfeiture of Brewer's interest under the settlement.

They cited In re Detmold, Detmold v. Detmold, 37 W. R. 442, 40 Ch. D. 585; and In re Sartoris, Sartoris v. Sartoris, 40 W. R. 82, [1892] 1 Ch. 11.

Byrne, Q.C., and St. John Clerke, for Brewer's children.—The income of the capital which was handed over to Brewer and dissipated by him, was alienated, and Brewer's interest was consequently forfeited before his bankruptcy.

Levett replied.

CHITTY, J.—The limitation until bankruptcy being void as against Brewer's creditors in bankruptcy, his life interest was not determined by his bankruptcy, but, subject to the question presently mentioned, passed to the trustee in bankruptcy and is now vested in the defendant Blackmore as purchaser from the trustee in bankruptcy. The other events specified in the limitation of the life interest were (so far as material) until he (the settlor) should "assign, charge, or incumber the said income, or do or suffer anything whereby the same or some part thereof would, through his act or default, or by operation or process of law or otherwise, if belonging absolutely to him, become payable to or vested in some other person or persons." These limitations are valid; consequently if any of these events happened before the bankruptcy the life interest was determined. The facts on which the question arises are as follows. [His Lordship having stated the facts continued:—]

The effect of these transactions has now to be considered. On behalf of the infants it was contended that the life interest had ceased, or, to use the more common phrase, had been forfeited, and reliance was placed on the words "the income or some part thereof" would "become payable to or vested in some other person or persons." But to or in what other person would it have become payable or vested had it belonged to the tenant for life absolutely? And when would it, on the same hypothesis, have so become payable or vested? Certainly not on the occasion of the money being lent. For the purpose of the present question it appears to me to be immaterial whether the loans were breaches of trust or not. Undoubtedly they were breaches of trust. The tenant for life was liable to replace the fund, but without interest; the income still belonged to himself and to no one else. So long as the money was in his hands and capable of being followed, the money itself might have been recovered from him, but the right to the income did not pass from him. After he had spent it in the manner described, it could no longer be followed; the tradesmen and others to whom he paid it were, undoubtedly, purchasers for value without notice; the money in their hands ceased to have any existence as a trust fund. I think that it would be an extravagant refinement to say that every sovereign as he paid it away still remained part of the trust fund and was producing an income, and that such income was payable to or vested in the persons who had received the sovereign or other the money thus paid away. In my opinion after the money had in the first instance been lent, and subsequently after it had been spent, the income of the trust fund did not become payable to or vested in any person or persons other than the tenant for life.

The case, no doubt, is peculiar; I am not aware that there is anything like it in the books. In construing clauses of cesser or forfeiture such as that before me, the court is not at liberty to depart from the language of the document. The words "or cease to be payable to himself" are not in the settlement; and I find myself unable to say that, by any just method of construction applicable to such clauses, I ought to supply those words. Had they been there the case would have stood differently. A point was raised at the bar as the right to an order for impounding the income, and reference was made to the 45th section of the Trustee Act, 1893. But no such order was in fact made; nor could it have been made effectually; any such order would have worked a cesser of the life interest.

The result is that I hold the life interest had not determined previously to the bankruptcy, and that the income of the trust fund is payable to the defendant Blackmore for the residue of the life of the settlor.

Solicitors, A. M. Bradley; Woodbridge & Sons.

Chan. Div. } March 20, 1896.
Kekewich, J. }

In re CULVERHOUSE.
COOK v. CULVERHOUSE. (a.)

Will—Leaseholds specifically bequeathed—Estate duty—Specific bequest—General personal estate—Vesting—Executor—Assent—Assignment—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), s. 9, sub-section 1.

Leaseholds specifically bequeathed pass to the executor as such, and consequently estate duty upon them is primarily payable out of the general personal estate of the testator, as they do not come within the exception in section 9 of the Finance Act, 1894.

Leaseholds specifically bequeathed vest, upon the assent of the executor, absolutely in the specific legatees, and no deed of assignment by the executors is necessary.

John Culverhouse, who died on December 18th, 1894, by his will appointed executors and (inter alia) specifically bequeathed leasehold houses to certain legatees, and gave his residuary real and personal estate to his executors upon trust for sale to hold the same after payment of debts, testamentary expenses, and legacies upon the trusts therein mentioned.

This action was brought in 1895 for the administration of the estate and various inquiries were ordered to be made. The executors having admitted assets sufficient to meet all the specific bequests, took out this summons to decide the question whether it was necessary that they should assign the leaseholds by deed to the specific legatees (the legatees contending that a written assent by the executors accompanied by the handing over of the title deeds was all that was requisite), and also to decide the question whether the estate duty under the Finance Act of 1894 on the leaseholds was payable out of the leaseholds or out of the residuary estate.

Rowden, for the plaintiffs.

Upjohn, for the specific legatees of the leaseholds.—The assent of the executors is sufficient to pass to us the legal estate. The duty must be borne by the general estate. Section 9 of the Finance Act, 1894, says: "A rateable part of the estate duty on an estate, in proportion of the value of any property which does not pass to the executor as such, shall be a first charge on the property in respect of which duty is leviable," but these leaseholds did pass directly to the executor as such, and therefore the payment of the duty is not thrown on them but on the general estate.

J. G. Wood, for pecuniary legatees.—A rateable part of the estate duty should be thrown on the specific legatees. The whole question is, do chattels real, specifically bequeathed, vest in the executor as such? I submit they do not, because, though if the estate is insolvent the executor could take them to satisfy debts, if the estate is not insolvent they pass direct to the legatees and the executor has nothing to do with them. They vest not from the time of assent by the executor to the bequest, but from the date of the testator's death. [KEKEWICH, J.—A term of years specifically devised vests in the first instance in the executor "by virtue of his office."—Williams on Executors, 9th ed. p. 600.] That means, if the executor has to resort to chattels for payment of debts he has first choice virtute officii. If the bequest vested first in the executor how is it divested? Not by the assent, which is merely an assent to the gift in the will taking effect as the will said it should do. In a gift of legal estate in remainder the particular estate vests by force of the will. The executor merely assents by saying: I don't wish to intercept that legacy.

Ribton, for infants in the same interest.

KEKEWICH, J.—I am quite sure that Mr. Woods' point must have something in it, but I am not prepared without some distinct authority to run away from elementary rules such as are laid down in Williams on Executors, where at p. 600 of the 9th edition leaseholds are said to vest in the executor by virtue of his office, and again at p. 802 where the learned author says with respect to bequests vesting upon the assent of the executor "the general rule certainly is that, at law, the title to any specific thing bequeathed, vests, upon the assent of the executor, absolutely in the legatee, so as to enable him to bring an action of ejectment for a chattel leasehold, or trover for the goods which are the subject of the legacy." It seems to me that Mr. Upjohn's position is the right one, and that these leaseholds vest, as he contends, in the "executor as such," and therefore do not come within section 9 of the Finance Act. Consequently the estate duty is payable out of the general personal estate and not by the specific legatees.

[The specific legatees consented to execute an indemnity to the executors against the rents and covenants in the leases, the costs of such indemnity being ordered to be paid out of the general personal estate.]

Solicitors, Lovell, Son, & Pitfield; Rooke & Sons; A. G. Maskell; Bartlett & Co.

Chan. Div. } May 14, 15, 22;
Vaughan Williams, J. } July 18, 1896.

In re ALKALINE REDUCTION SYNDICATE (LIMITED). (a.)

Company—Winding up—Contributory—Paid-up shares—Bonus shares—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 131), s. 25.

By a preliminary agreement made before the incorporation of a company, it was agreed that seventy-five shares fully paid up should be allotted to the vendors as the purchase price of the property to be sold to the company, leaving twenty-five shares in the company to be subscribed for in cash. This agreement was adopted by the company after incorporation, with the modifications that £5,000 in cash, omitted by mistake from the preliminary agreement, should be paid to the vendors in addition to the seventy-five shares, and that the vendors should distribute twenty-five out of the seventy-five shares rateably among the cash subscribers of the first-mentioned twenty-five cash shares. The company accordingly allotted twenty-five of the seventy-five vendors' shares to the cash subscribers, the certificates of title stating that the shares were fully paid up. There was no question of section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867, not being complied with.

(a.) Reported by C. C. HENSLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

(a) Reported by V. DE S. FOWKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

In the winding up of the company the liquidator applied to have the allottees of the twenty-five distributed shares placed on the list of contributories. There was no question of any fraud or impropriety having been committed.

Held, that the holders of the twenty-five distributed shares were liable to contribute the full nominal amount of such shares in cash.

This was a summons by the liquidator in the winding up of the above-named company, asking that certain persons (some of whom had been directors of the company at the time of the transactions hereafter mentioned) might be placed on the list of contributories in respect of twenty-five bonus shares allotted to them by the company, and be declared liable to contribute to the assets of the company the full nominal amount of those shares.

By an agreement duly filed with the registrar of joint-stock companies, made before the incorporation of the company, it was agreed that seventy-five out of the hundred shares of the company should be allotted as fully paid up to the vendors as the consideration of certain patents and property agreed to be sold to the company.

The company was incorporated in November, 1888. Some twenty-two or twenty-three friends of the vendors undertook to subscribe for the cash shares. Shortly before the first meeting of the board it was suggested that the price payable to the vendors was too large, and that the voting power of the vendors would give them undue influence in the company, and that they as providing the property, and the subscribers as providing the cash, ought to come into the company on an equality as regards shares. To carry this out the vendors agreed to give up twenty-five of the seventy-five shares, to be distributed pro rata among the cash subscribers, and resolutions to that effect were duly passed. The vendors also represented to the board that £5,000 in cash was intended to have formed part of the purchase consideration, in addition to the seventy-five shares, but by a slip was omitted from the preliminary contract.

An agreement was made on the 28th of December, 1888, between the company, the vendors, and the trustee under the preliminary agreement, by which, after reciting the preliminary agreement, and the slip as to the £5,000, and that it was "desirable to ratify such slip or mistake," the preliminary agreement (subject to the modifications in clause 2) was adopted by the company as if it had been in existence at the date of the preliminary contract, and had been a party thereto instead of the trustee. By clause 2 of the modified agreement the vendors were to have the £5,000 cash in addition to seventy-five fully-paid shares, and there was a clause to the following effect:—"Of the said seventy-five shares the vendors shall distribute twenty-five among the several persons who have taken up shares payable in cash—viz., those numbered fifty-one to seventy-five inclusive—in proportion to the number of such shares held by them respectively, but this shall not have effect unless and until such distribution has been approved by an extraordinary general meeting of the company." The extraordinary general meeting was held shortly afterwards, and a resolution passed sanctioning the agreement of the 28th of December, and approving "the distribution among members (including directors) of the twenty-five bonus shares in accordance with the modified agreement." The agreement was duly filed with the registrar of joint-stock companies, and the twenty-five bonus shares issued to the cash subscribers, including the respondents, in proportion to the shares for which they had subscribed in cash. The certificates of the bonus shares described them as fully paid.

A great deal of evidence was given, both vivâ voce and by affidavit, but the only question calling for a report was whether the twenty-five distributed or bonus shares were part of the original consideration paid to the vendors, or whether they were shares issued by the company without consideration.

Grosvenor Woods, Q.C., C. E. E. Jenkins, and Munns, for the liquidator, said they made no charge suggesting fraud or irregularity against any of the respondents, who had merely been unfortunate in their money transactions.

They cited Northumberland Avenue Hotel Co., 33 Ch. D. 16, 35 W. R. Dig. 38; Ooregum Gold Mining Co. of India v. Roper, 41 W. R. 90, [1892] App. Cas. 125; Blund's case, [1893] 2 Ch. 612; Eddystone Marine Insurance Co., 41 W. R. 642, [1893] 3 Ch. 9; Chapman's case, 43 W. R. 553, [1895] 1 Ch. 771.

Farwell, Q.C., Howard Wright, and R. J. Parker, for some of the respondents.—The vendors agreed to sell for seventy-five fully paid up shares, and those shares belong to them, and there is nothing to prevent them from dealing with those shares as they pleased. They are entitled to the seventy-five shares, and the liquidator has nothing to do with how they deal with their own property. The twenty-five shares formed part of the payment of the purchase price, and though they were allotted immediately to the respondents, yet the legal result is the same as if they had been allotted to the vendors in the first instance, and then transferred by them to the respondents: Carling's case, 24 W. R. 165, 1 Ch. D., at p. 124; Postage Stamp Automatic Delivery Co., 41 W. R. 29, [1892] 3 Ch. 566. The liquidator is estopped by the statement in the certificates from saying that the shares are not fully paid up.

Byrne, Q.C., and Methold Jelf, Q.C., and Hart Eve, Q.C., and Martelli, and Ingle Joyce, for other respondents.

Grosvenor Woods replied.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, J.—The question is whether the respondents are liable to have their names settled on the list of contributories in respect of certain shares allotted to them by the company as fully paid up, and alleged to have been part of the share price payable by the company to the vendors. The shares in question were allotted direct by the company to the respondents, but it is argued on the authority of Carling's case, and I think rightly, that if the vendors were entitled to these shares, and pursuant to an agreement between them and the respondents the company at the vendors' request allotted the shares to the respondents, their position would be precisely the same as if the form had been gone through of allotting the shares to the vendors and then transferring them to the respondents.

In the present case the agreement for the distribution of these bonus shares was an agreement between the company and the vendors, and not, as in Carling's case, between the vendors and outsiders. The agreement was duly registered, and it follows that no question arises under section 25 of the Companies Act, 1867. The real question is whether the shares were in substance and in fact a part of the consideration which the vendors were entitled to receive from the company, and whether there was really an assignment by the vendors to the respondents, or whether the gift of shares to the respondents was not a gift by the company. It is clear that from whomsoever the respondents received the shares, they gave no consideration for them—it is not pretended that they did. The consideration relied on is the consideration passing from the vendors to the company under the registered agreement. I find that the vendors never were entitled to receive these shares as part of the price of what they sold to the company. Even if they were entitled to receive them, they in substance and in fact gave nothing for them. It is true that under the so-called preliminary contract of the 29th of October, 1888, the price payable to the vendors was seventy-five shares out of a total capital of one hundred shares, leaving twenty-five shares for cash subscription; but it always seems to me that to call such a document an agreement is to use a misleading term. It is not really an agreement. The company, for the benefit of which it is supposed to be created, has at the time when the document is executed no existence at all, and the effect is that what is for convenience called an agreement is in truth only an offer. As no invitation to subscribe for shares was given to the public generally, this was in one sense a private company, but not entirely, because it was always contemplated that in some shape or other the public should be appealed to later on. Some twenty-two or twenty-three friends of the vendors undertook to subscribe for the cash shares. Shortly before the first meeting of the board it was suggested that the price payable to the vendors was too large.

It was also suggested that the voting power of the vendors would give them undue influence in the company, and that they as providing the patents, and the subscribers as providing the cash, ought to come into the company on an equality qua shares. To carry out this the vendors expressed their willingness to give up twenty-five out of the seventy-five shares. The effect of the resolutions was that the vendors gave up twenty-five shares, and that the twenty-five shares were to be distributed pro rata among the cash subscribers. Subject to these variations it was resolved that the preliminary contract should be adopted. [After referring to some other facts, his lordship continued:—] In my judgment the true share of consideration payable to the vendors was fifty, and not seventy-five, shares. Clause 4 of the agreement of the 28th of December makes it clear that the vendors had no right to call for the twenty-five shares except for distribution among the cash subscribers, and that the distribution was something insisted upon by the company. Even if I am bound to hold, as I am inclined to think, that as a mere matter of verbal construction the vendors on the wording of this contract would be entitled to the twenty-five bonus shares in case the cash subscribers refused to accept them, I still think that the cash subscribers have received shares which have not been paid for by any consideration being given. It is quite true that a contract has been registered under which, apparently, the vendors gave a real consideration for these shares—that is, the property which they transferred to the company; but it is impossible to arrive at the conclusion that the vendors were willing to part with their property for fifty shares, and that in respect of the twenty-five shares no consideration was given by the vendors beyond the property which they were content to sell—at all events, if the cash subscribers should accept the twenty-five shares for fifty shares. The moment you arrive at the conclusion that the vendors were willing to take the fifty shares it follows that for the other twenty-five shares there was no consideration, and there is nothing in section 25 of the Act of 1867 which is intended to legalize the issue of gratis shares by a company. The bonus shares were distributed among the shareholders, who one and all knew that the certificates they received in respect of such shares were certificates of bonus shares, for which they had paid nothing, and each of these shareholders seems to have given voting proxies in respect of these shares. The bonus shares were really a gift by the company to the cash subscribers. It is said that the company and its liquidator are estopped from saying that these shares are not paid up, but I do not think the respondents can rely on this estoppel. No doubt the company did by the certificates which they issued describe these shares as fully paid, and no doubt the shares were described as being distributed by the vendors; but I think the circumstances were such as to put the recipients of each one of these bonus shares upon inquiry, and I think, moreover, that the gift of these shares by the company, which is what I hold this transaction to have been in fact, was ultra vires, and that the company cannot be estopped by putting forward an untrue description of the transaction, and at all events cannot be estopped with regard to shares given to persons who were members of the company at the time when the distribution of bonus shares was approved of. I make an order as asked by the summons.

Solicitors, Munns & Longden; F. C. Mathews, Browne, & Co.; Freshfields & Williams; Lindo & Co.; Budd, Johnson, & Jecks; Ingle, Cooper, & Holmes; G. E. Philbrick for Battishill & Houlditch, Exeter.

Q. B. Div.
(Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J.) June 20.

WILMOT v. ALTON AND ANOTHER. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Assignment of future payments—Bankruptcy of assignor—Title of trustee in bankruptcy to payments accruing after bankruptcy — Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 43, 44.

An assignment for value by a trader of future weekly payments accruing to the trader under a contract for the hiring of property belonging to the trader is, as regards those payments accruing due after the bankruptcy of the trader, inoperative as against the trustee in the bankruptcy, and such assignment does not pass to the assignee the right to future payments accruing after the date of the bankruptcy.

Such future weekly payments accruing under such a contract are not "debts."

Further consideration in an action tried by Lord Russell, C.J., without a jury.

His lordship took time to consider his judgment, and the facts as stated in the judgment were shortly these.

The question arose under an interpleader issue to determine who was entitled to a sum of £318 18s. brought into court by the Blackpool Winter Gardens and Pavilion Co., Limited.

The claimant (Wilmot) claimed under a charge, dated the 4th of July, 1895, given to him by one Mrs. Ruthven (trading as a costumier under the name of May) and the defendants, who were denying the claimant's right, were the trustees in the bankruptcy of Mrs. May.

On the 10th of June, 1895, the bankrupt (Mrs. May), entered into a contract with the Blackpool Winter Gardens and Pavilion Co., Limited, the terms of which appear in a letter of the 10th of June, 1895, addressed by the manager of the Blackpool Co. to

(a.) Reported by Sir SHERSTON BAKER, Bart., Barrister-at-Law.

Mrs. May or Ruthven: "I beg to acknowledge receipt of your contract to supply designs for the forthcoming ballet—namely, 'Eldorado,' 'The Land of Gold,' and 'Sons of the Sea,' according to sketch. The terms to be £40 per week for twelve weeks commencing the 8th of July, 1895, and wigs as may be required for the sum of £3 per week for the same period, you (that is Mrs. May) to find all materials and to keep in repair during the run."

Mrs. May having entered into this contract, gave a charge upon it to one Umpleby for the sum of £150, which charge is not now material; and being indebted to the present claimant in the sum of £330, she gave as collateral security to him a charge dated the 4th of July, 1895, in relation to which the question in this case arises.

That charge is under seal, and it purports to be made between the bankrupt of the one part and the claimant (Wilmot) of the other part. It recites the agreement with the Blackpool Co. of the 10th of June, 1895, and properly describes it as a contract by her to supply the company with certain theatrical dresses, and it recites the charge to Umpleby and the indebtedness by the bankrupt to the claimant, and then it provides: "And it is witnessed that the mortgagor" (who is the bankrupt) "for the consideration aforesaid, doth hereby charge to and in favour of the mortgagee all that her beneficial right, title, and interest in the said recited agreement dated the 10th of June, 1895, for securing to the mortgagee the said sum of £330 and interest at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum from the date hereof when and as the said acceptances" (bills given by Mrs. May) "fall due, and in default of the mortgagor meeting the same at maturity, subject nevertheless to the said recited charge of £150; and the mortgagor doth hereby constitute, nominate, and appoint the mortgagee as her lawful attorney, and for her and in her name to use and take such legal or other steps as may be necessary to enforce the rights of her, the mortgagor, under the said recited agreement as if she personally were doing the same, she hereby covenanting and agreeing to ratify and confirm such act or acts and to do such other deed, act, matter, or thing as may be necessary to more fully carry this charge into effect."

This charge having been given to the claimant on the 4th of July, 1895, Mrs. May, the mortgagor, on the 13th of July, 1895, presented a petition; and upon her own petition a receiving order was made, and on the 26th of July she was adjudicated bankrupt.

Subsequent to the 13th of July, when the act of bankruptcy was committed, there became due from the Blackpool Co. in respect of the supply of dresses under the contract of the 10th the sum of £318 18s.

On the 6th of August, 1895, notice was for the first time given by the claimant of the fact that the deed of charge of the 4th of July, 1895, had been executed in his favour. Later (in October, 1895)—the dresses having been before the date of the charge supplied to the Blackpool Co. in pursuance of the contract, and having been used by the Blackpool Co. under the contract—moneys admittedly became due by that company in respect of the contract of bailment for hire. The facts under which the payments were made by the company were not mentioned, nor are they material.

The Blackpool Co. admitted that they owed somebody (either the trustees in the bankruptcy, as representing the estate of the bankrupt, or the person who has this charge) the sum of £318 18s. in respect of the hire payable under the contract subsequent to the date to which the title of the trustees in the bankruptcy related—namely, subsequent to the 13th of July, 1895.

This sum was paid into court, and the question now was which of the two parties, the trustees in the bankruptcy or the claimant under the charge, was entitled to such sum.

Cooper Willis, Q.C., and Hawtin, for the plaintiff.

Bigham, Q.C., H. Reed, Q.C., and Scarlett, for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 20.—Lord RUSSELL, C.J. (after stating the above facts, his lordship proceeded:—) We have to consider what is the proper description to be given to the weekly payments under the contract of the 10th of June, and whether in respect of such payments, although payable at a future time, they can be said to be debts or to assume the form of debts, or whether they are weekly payments to be made from time to time, if the contract week by week is carried out. The charge now in question does not purport to assign the subject matter of the contract of bailment to the Blackpool Co., nor does it purport to assign the contract itself. It is merely a charge of the bankrupt's rights under that contract. Under these circumstances the question that now arises is which of these two claims is to prevail. It is clear that when this charge was made on the 4th of July the bankrupt, being then sui juris, could have parted with the whole of the property in the things bailed; this she has not done. She could have assigned the contract probably, but that she has not done. What she has done is to give a charge on the property to receive such sums as she herself would be entitled to receive under the hiring contract. Again, if the moneys to be paid to her under the hiring agreement were debts, it is clear that she had the property in such debts, and could assign them; but that is not the case made for the claimant, and rightly so, as I think it would be impossible to say that these are debts "due or growing due" within the meaning of the Act. The governing word in that section seems to me to be "debt"—not a claim which may become a debt, but one which is in fact a debitum in presenti, although it may be solvendum in futuro.

It is clear that the plaintiff could not recover the £40 a week unless Mrs. May performed her contract, and if she had failed to perform the contract in any particular (as in not keeping the dresses in repair) she would not have been entitled to the £40 a week as a fixed sum, but her claim in such a case would have been for damages for breach of contract, which might or might not have been represented by £40 per week. I therefore come to the conclusion that these are not "debts," and I come to that conclusion upon principle, and upon the authorities, which I think are clear on the subject—namely, Jones v. Thompson, 6 W. R. 443, E. B. & E. 63; Ex parte Kemp, 22 W. R. 462, L. R. 9 Ch. App. 383; Hall v. Pritchett, 26 W. R. 95, 3 Q. B. D. 215; Webb v. Stenton, 11 Q. B. D. 518, 31 W. R. Dig. 8. The claimant did not base his claim on that ground, because if these were debts he ought to have given notice of the charge, which he did not do until the 6th of August. It was said for the claimant that the 44th section of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, particularly sub-head 3 of sub-section 2, helps the claimant; but I think that that does not in any way help the claimant. Can the claimant's title be supported on any other ground? After considerable hesitation I have come to the conclusion that the claimant does not make out a title, for this reason—that the bankrupt could have disposed of the property in this contract, or possibly have assigned the contract itself. She has not done either. What she has done is to give the claimant the right to use her name to enforce payments which she would be entitled to receive under the contract; but her right to receive these sums only continued so long as she was sui juris, because the moment she became bankrupt the title of the trustee intervened, and it is a contract which is no longer hers, the property comprised in it is no longer hers, and she can have no authority to charge it in favour of anyone as against the trustees, or to charge to anybody else moneys which are not payable to her, and to which in the event which has happened she has no right whatever. The moneys in question represent the earnings arising from the hire of property which by relation back became the property of the trustees from the 13th of July, and those moneys are for the hire of the dresses at a period subsequent to the accrual of the title of the trustees.

She therefore had only authority to charge such payments as she has in fact the right to receive, a charge which would have been effective if she had continued sui juris; but the moment the bankruptcy occurred her right to interfere with the disposition or control of moneys payable under the contract altogether ceased, and at the time she effected this charge she had no property in these payments at all. All that she had was the expectation of receiving these sums for hiring the dresses, provided the contract were carried out on both sides; but the moment the bankruptcy intervened, at and from that moment, as her title to the subject matter of the contract ended, so the title to the moneys which arose from that property ceased to be hers, or under her control, or affected by any such charge as was here given. I have had some hesitation about this matter from the fact that, to my surprise, there is very scant authority on the question; but I feel no difficulty in the matter as a question of principle, as in principle I think it is governed by Ex parte Nichols, In re Jones, 31 W. R. 661, 22 Ch. D. 782. I do not lose sight of the differences between the circumstances of that case and of this; but I think the principle of that case governs the principle of this case. Here it is true that when the bankruptcy occurred—there being then a valid contract for payment between the bankrupt and the Blackpool Co.—there was no right in the trustees in bankruptcy to intervene and put an end to the contract; but assuming the contract had been one which, in order to ensure payment under it for the benefit of the estate, required some amount of work to be done or money expended, the trustees would have had the right the moment their title accrued to interfere and say that for the benefit of the estate they would take upon themselves the burden of carrying out the onerous part of this contract. Here there does not appear to be any onerous obligation of any moment to be discharged, and there is nothing in the case which (if, as I have pointed out, the trustees have in fact the right to the benefit of this contract) has disentitled them to come forward and assert that right.

It is therefore not a case, in my view, in which the trustees have done anything to prevent them from asserting that right. The circumstances of this case are somewhat different from those in Ex parte Nicholls, but in principle I think there is no substantial difference, and in fact no difference. I think the reason in Ex parte Nichols applies to this case, and I must give judgment for the defendant on the short ground that the bankrupt by the deed of charge charges future payments to arise under the contract in favour of the claimant, but that her right so to charge future payments ceases the moment the title of the trustees to the thing, the subject matter of the contract, arises. From that moment the property vests in the trustees, and equally there vests in the trustees the right to receive the money which from time to time accrues in respect of the property which has so passed and which forms a part of the estate. As I have said, I have hesitated in the conclusion I have come to, and I should be glad if there should be an appeal in this case.

Judgment for defendant.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, Henry Reid.

Solicitors for the defendants, John C. Button & Co.

Q. B. Div. (Pollock, B., and Bruce, J.) — May 14, 22, 1896.

CLIFFORD AND ANOTHER v. COMMISSIONERS OF INLAND REVENUE. (a.)

Revenue—Stamp duty—Agreement—Weekly payments—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), Schedule.

An agreement entered into by the owner and manager of an hotel provided that the manager should have the entire control of the business of the hotel, and should make certain weekly payments to the owner. The agreement was not for a specified time, but contained provisions for its determination by either party. It was stipulated that the agreement should not operate as a demise of the hotel to the manager, and should not constitute a partnership between the parties.

Held, that the agreement was security for an indefinite period for a sum of money payable at stated periods—viz., weekly—within the schedule to the Stamp Act, 1891, and that the sum chargeable with duty was the amount of the weekly payment, and not the total sum received yearly under the agreement.

Special case stated by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue pursuant to 54 & 55 Vict. c. 39, s. 13.

The instrument presented for the opinion of the commissioners was dated the 29th of April, 1895, and was an agreement under seal relating to an hotel in London. The parties to the agreement were Louisa Clifford, one of the appellants, therein called the owner, of the first part, Frank Hawkins, the other appellant, therein called the manager, of the second part, and two sureties for Hawkins of the third part. The material provisions of the agreement were as follows:—

Clauses 1 and 2 provided that the manager should, with the permission of the owner, carry on the business of an hotel proprietor at the hotel from the 29th of April, 1895, until the agreement should be determined under a provision thereinafter contained, and should have the use of certain furniture and effects therein, and provide certain other goods and furniture at his own expense.

Clause 4 provided that, subject to a power of inspection and a provision for the use of two rooms by the owner contained in clause 5, the manager should have the entire management, conduct, and control of the hotel and business without any interference by the owner, and should have the sole power of engaging and discharging all servants and other persons employed in the business.

Clause 5 provided that the owner and her nominee should have the exclusive use free of charge of a bedroom and sitting-room, and that when the owner should not require the rooms the manager should pay her £5 a week in addition to the weekly payment provided by the next clause.

(a.) Reported by F. O. ROBINSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

By clause 6 the manager was to be entitled to receive the whole of the receipts and profits of the business, and was to pay all necessary outgoings; he was to pay the owner £108 18s. per week and also, in the name of the owner, to pay the ground-rent and rent, insurance premiums, excise and other licenses, and all rates and taxes.

Under clause 25 the owner had power to re-enter on non-payment of any weekly payment within seven days, or on breach of covenants by the manager.

Clause 29 contained power for the owner if she should desire to sell the hotel to determine the agreement upon giving the manager one calendar month's notice.

Clause 30 contained power for the owner at any time, and for the manager after the expiration of three years to determine the agreement by three calendar months' written notice.

Clause 33 provided that the agreement should determine on the death of the manager.

Clause 35 provided that the agreement should not operate as a demise of the hotel and premises to the manager.

Clause 37 provided that nothing in the agreement contained should constitute a partnership between the owner and manager.

By clause 42 the sureties covenanted with the owner that the manager would perform the covenants in this agreement, and that they would indemnify the owner to the extent of £500.

The commissioners, having regard to clauses 35 and 37, considered that they were precluded from regarding the instrument as chargeable with the stamp duty, either as a lease or as a deed of partnership; they were of opinion that it was the only or principal or primary security for the sums of £5,662 16s. and £260 payable annually respectively for an indefinite period, by weekly payments of £108 18s. and £5 respectively; that such sums were neither interest for any principal sums secured by a duly stamped instrument nor rent reserved by a lease or tack; and that the instrument was chargeable with stamp duty under the heading, "Bond, covenant, or instrument of any kind whatsoever" in the first schedule to the Stamp Act, 1891, with the duties of £141 12s. 6d. and £6 10s. respectively, being the ad valorem duty of 2s. 6d. for every £5 and and fractional part of £5 of the respective annual sums of £5,662 16s. and £260, the sums periodically payable by the manager to the owner; and also under the head, "Deed of any kind whatsoever not described in the schedule" in the said first schedule with the duty of 10s.

The questions for the opinion of the court were whether the instrument was chargeable with the duties of £141 12s. 6d., £6 10s., and 10s., in accordance with the assessment of the commissioners, and if not, with what duty the instrument was chargeable.

By the schedule to the Stamp Act, 1891, a bond, covenant, or instrument of any kind whatsoever, being the principal security for any annuity or for any sum or sums of money at stated periods, not being interest for any principal sum secured by a duly stamped instrument nor rent reserved by a lease or tack, is chargeable, if for a definite and certain period, so that the total amount to be ultimately payable can be ascertained, with the same ad valorem duty as a bond or covenant for such total amount; if for the term of life or any other indefinite period, with a duty of 2s. 6d. for every £5, and also for any fractional part of £5 of the annuity or sum periodically payable.

A. T. Lawrence, for the appellants.—The stamp duty should be assessed upon the sum payable weekly; that is the "periodical payment" in this case. The agreement is not for the payment of an annuity, and there is no reason why the commissioners, in order to to ascertain the sum chargeable should have taken the weekly payment and multiplied it by fifty-two rather than by any other figure.

Sir R. B. Finlay, S.G. (with him Danckwerts), for the Commissioners.—The cases of Jones v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue and Sweetmeat Automatic Delivery Co. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue 43 W. R. 318, [1895] 1 Q. B. 484, show that the decision of the commissioners is right. The appellant's contention involves the possibility of parties depriving the revenue of duty by fixing periodical payments at the shortest possible intervals.

Lawrence replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

POLLOCK, B.—This case comes before us upon a case stated upon appeal from a decision of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue. They held that the appellant was liable to pay stamp duty upon an instrument which comes within the words "bond, covenant, or instrument of any kind whatsoever" in Schedule 1 of the Stamp Act, 1891. Under the first sub-section of that title a duty is imposed upon instruments which are the only or principal or primary security for an annuity, or for any sum or sums at stated periods, not being interest or rent; the sub-section goes on to deal with two classes of cases—the first where the amount is payable for a definite and certain period, so that the total amount to be paid can be ascertained, in which case the duty payable is the same ad valorem duty as would be payable on a bond or covenant for the total amount; the second, where the payments are for the term of life or any other indefinite period, in which case the duty is 2s. 6d. for every £5, and for any fractional part of £5 of the annuity or sum periodically payable.

The instrument in the present case is an instrument of the 29th of April, 1895, being an agreement under seal making provision for the carrying on of an hotel, and it is made between Louisa Clifford, who is one of the appellants, of the first part, and Frank John Hawkins, who is another of the appellants, of the second part. The gist of the thing in this, that at the premises in question the manager, Hawkins, is, with the permission of the owner, to carry on the business of hotel proprietor. Then, subject to a power of inspection and a provision for the use of two rooms which are reserved for the owner, the manager is to have the sole control and management of the hotel, and then there is a provision with regard to the division of profits and so forth. Then there are two clauses, expressly providing that the agreement shall not operate as a demise to the manager of the hotel, and that nothing therein contained shall be considered or taken to constitute a partnership between the owner and the manager; therefore the commissioners were unable, and so state, to assess this as an agreement for either a demise or as a partnership, and having so stated, the commissioners state that they were of opinion that the instrument was the only or principal or primary security for the sum of £5,662 16s. and £260 payable annually respectively for an indefinite period by weekly payments of £108 18s. and £5 respectively, and that those sums were chargeable, or that the deed, rather, was chargeable, under the head, "bond, covenant, or instrument of any kind whatsoever," in the first schedule to the Stamp Act, 1891, with the duties of £141 12s. 6d. and £6 10s. respectively, being the ad valorem duty of 2s. 6d. for every £5 and fractional part of £5 of the respective annual sums of £5,662 16s. and £260, the sums periodically payable by the manager to the owner, and also under the head "deed of any kind whatsoever not described in the schedule," with the duty of 10s. They assessed the duty thereon accordingly, and the instrument has been stamped in conformity with the assessment. The appellants, being dissatisfied, appealed. The ground of the decision of the commissioners is that this is an instrument which creates payment for an indefinite period. That is true, because although there are provisions in the deed with regard to the death of either of the parties, and with regard to a notice being given after a certain time for its determination, until that is done the manager, by clause 6, is to pay to the owner the sum of £108 18s. per week, such weekly payments to be made on the Monday in every week.

Now the mode in which the commissioners have dealt with this payment is as follows: They say the deed is one contemplating payment for an indefinite period, and that therefore they are entitled to treat it as if it were a yearly annuity or a yearly payment to be made by a bond or deed for an indefinite period, the actual payments being merely weekly. One of the reasons why they adopt that view is this, they say it is quite clear that this 2s. 6d. is based upon the supposition that it is a yearly payment, and if you read that in with the charging words you see that the object of the statute is to give a certain fixed ad valorem duty, which was fixed upon the supposition that it is an agreement for a yearly period. But that to my mind is rather a curious mode of dealing with an Act of Parliament of this nature. Referring to Maxwell on Statutes, it is stated on p. 259 of the first edition: "Statutes which impose pecuniary burdens are subject to the rule of strict construction. It is a well settled rule of law that all charges upon the subject must be imposed by clear and unambiguous language, because in some degree they operate as penalties. The subject is not to be taxed unless the language by which the tax is imposed is perfectly clear and free from doubt." The author cites several decisions or dicta of different learned judges, and there is no doubt as to the correctness of the law so stated. Of course the author does not mean to say that where the plain language of the statute confers a tax any court is to construe it according to any other principle than they would construe another statute. Again, the statute must be so construed as to carry out the plain object of the Act. But if the statute is so indefinite and so uncertain that it can be treated in two ways, and that the true construction of it is open to two views, one more favourable to the Crown, and the other more favourable to the subject, then the latter construction should be adopted.

Now, I must say it does seem to me that a very far-fetched view has been taken by the commissioners in the construction of this statute in applying it to this particular deed. There is not a single word in the deed itself which contemplates any annual payments. The sum to be paid is that which is first named in clause 6, and that is this sum of £108 18s. weekly, and there is no provision that points to any other than a weekly payment. If you look at this schedule you find it is dealing in the first instance with an annuity, which means by the very word an annual payment, and then it deals also with any other instrument which is a security of the same kind which requires an annual payment. Then, secondly, it deals with an instrument which provides for a payment for a definite and certain period generally; and then, thirdly, "the term of life or any other indefinite period," still clearly meaning that an annual payment is involved by the instrument; and that I think is quite clear when you find these words: "For every £5 and also for any fractional part of £5 of the annuity or sum periodically payable." When is this periodically payable? Clearly by the week and not by the year. Therefore, apart from authority, it seems to me clear that this is not an instrument within this section which can be treated as an annual instrument to which this 2s. 6d. on the £5 can be applicable except upon one single payment, and then it is applicable as coming within the words "for every £5 and also for any fractional part of £5 of the annuity or sum periodically payable."

Some authorities were cited to the contrary, but the only ones I think that have any real bearing upon the case are two cases which were argued and reported together, one is Jones v. The Commissioners of the Inland Revenue, and the other is the Sweatmeat Automatic Co. v. The Commissioners of the Inland Revenue. The agreement in the first of these cases was an agreement between a theatrical ticket agent and a telephone company to supply telephonic communication between the agent's head office and other places, and the company undertook to erect and maintain in working order the telephonic lines and all other necessary apparatus, and the ticket agent covenanted to pay by quarterly instalments in advance to the company an annual sum per line. That clearly indicated that the sum payable was an annual sum although it was provided that it should be paid by quarterly instalments. In the other case the agreement was between a railway company and the Automatic Co., whereby the railway company agreed to permit the Automatic Co. to place on their platforms their machines, and the Auto-Machine Co. agreed to pay to the railway company a yearly rent by equal quarterly payments on the usual quarter days. In both those cases it was held that the agreement was a security for a sum of money for an indefinite period, and that the stated periods were annual periods. In both those cases it seems to me that the decisions were perfectly right, because the words are used in the first case that "an annual sum is to be paid," and in the second the words "yearly rent" occur.

In the present case, however, we find nothing in contemplation but a weekly payment, and it is always to be observed that by this Act and by the words "for every £5 and also for any fractional part of £5 of the annuity or sum periodically payable" the commissioners get a benefit which they otherwise might not get, that is to say there are a great many agreements of this kind which are for a shorter period than a year, which would not come within the the old provision for annuity deeds on which the commissioners now get the 2s. 6d. upon every £5 for whatever the sum may be, and the tax is paid where otherwise it would not be. It seems to me, therefore, that the amount which is payable every week is the sum that is properly chargeable and no other sum. Therefore the present assessment cannot stand, but it must be an assessment upon that weekly payment.

BRUCE, J.—I agree. The instrument in question in this case is a security for sums of money at stated periods, not being interest or rent. The sums of money payable under clause 6 of the instrument are not payable for a definite and certain period. There is no term fixed for the duration of the agreement and there are many contingencies on the happening of any one of which the agreement may be put an end to. The agreement is for an indefinite period, and in that case the duty is made payable upon the sums periodically payable. The sum periodically payable is £108 18s. and it is upon that sum that the duty should be charged. I see no reasonable ground for the contention that the aggregate of the periodical payments for a whole year is to be taken as the amount upon which the duty is to be assessed. There is nothing in the words of the instrument to indicate a yearly payment. The provision of the schedule to the Act seems to me to be framed specially with the view to include cases where the periods of payment are less than a year. It was intended that where the sum is secured as payable for any indefinite period though for less than a year, the duty should still be payable in respect of the sum periodically payable. "The sum periodically payable" must mean the sum payable at the periods stated in the instruments, and in the present case the periods are weekly periods, and the duty must be assessed upon the amount of the weekly payment.

Solicitors for the appellants, Burton, Yeates, & Hart.

Solicitor for the respondents, Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div. (Lord Esher, M.R., and A. L. Smith and Rigby, L.JJ.) — Aug. 5, 1896.

HOOD BARRS v. HERIOT. (a)

Practice—Security for costs of appeal—Appeal against order for attachment—Ord. 58, r. 15.

Where an appeal is brought against an order for a writ of attachment, the court will not, in its discretion, as a general rule, order security for the costs of the appeal to be given.

Application by the plaintiff that the defendant should be ordered to give security for the costs of an appeal.

A judge at chambers having made an order directing a writ of attachment to issue against the defendant, the defendant appealed. The plaintiff, thereupon applied, as above, on the ground that the defendant was a married woman who had no separate property except property which she was restrained from anticipating.

Oswald, Q.C. (Bartley Denniss with him), for the plaintiff.—Whittaker v. Kershaw, 38 W. R. 497, 44 Ch. D. 296, shows that security for costs will be ordered where the appeal is by a married woman who has no separate property except such as she is restrained from anticipating. The fact that the liberty of the subject is involved does not make any difference. He also referred to In re Strong, 34 W. R. 420; 31 Ch. D. 273.

Montague Shearman, for the defendant, was not called upon.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—By ord. 58, r. 15, the Court of Appeal can under special circumstances order security for the costs of an appeal. If there are no special circumstances the court cannot make any order. It has been held that poverty or inability to pay costs is a special circumstance; but even if special circumstances exist, the court must consider whether it will, in its discretion, exercise the power given to it. For instance, the court has said that if the application is made too late it will not make the order, though a case of poverty is made out. We have here an order to attach the defendant, from which order the defendant is now appealing. The order affects her liberty. Assuming that special circumstances are made out, no authority has been cited to the effect that the court is obliged to order security to be given. Where the liberty of the appellant is in question, or where the order under appeal will subject the appellant to highly penal consequences, the court will not as a general rule order security for the costs of an appeal to be given. The case of In re Strong is a high authority for that proposition. Lindley, L.J., there said that "such an order" (an order to strike a solicitor off the rolls) "is of a highly penal character, and it may well be that the court will allow him to appeal from it without giving security," and Fry, L.J., asked: "Has it not been said by the Court of Appeal that it will be slow to order security for costs where a solicitor appeals from an order striking him off the rolls?" The present case is an appeal from an order to attach the defendant, and we say that, in exercising our discretion, as the liberty of the subject is in question we shall not make an order for security to be given.

A. L. SMITH and RIGBY, L.JJ., concurred.

Application refused.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Hood Barrs & Co.

Solicitors for the defendant, Rye & Eyre.

(a) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

From Q. B. Div. (A. L. Smith and Rigby, L.JJ.) — Aug. 3, 1896.

BENNETTS & CO. v. MACILWRAITH & CO. (a.)

Practice — Parties — Adding defendants — Alternative relief—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 16, rr. 7, 11.

The plaintiffs, who were shipowners, instructed the defendants, who were shipbrokers, to procure a charter. The defendants effected a charter in the name of B., P., & Co., as charterers. Default was made in loading the chartered cargo. B., P., & Co. having asserted that the defendants had acted without their authority, the plaintiffs commenced an action against the defendants for breach of warranty of authority. It subsequently appeared that the defendants probably had authority to make the charter on behalf of B., P., & Co.

Held, that the plaintiffs were entitled to an order adding B., P., & Co. as defendants to the action.

Appeal from an order of Collins, J., adding certain persons as defendants to the action.

The facts of the case and the argument sufficiently appear from the judgment of A. L. Smith, L.J.

Bigham, Q.C., and Leck, for the defendants.

Joseph Walton, Q.C., and H. F. Boyd, for the plaintiffs.

Cur. adv. vult.

August 3.—A. L. SMITH, L.J., read the following judgment.—This is an appeal against an order of my brother Collins, adding Burns, Philp, & Co., as defendants in the action. The facts are, shortly, these. The plaintiffs are shipowners, and they obtained, as they allege, a charter for their ship for a homeward voyage from Sydney to London. They say that their ship, pursuant to such charter, proceeded to Sydney to load the chartered cargo, which was not supplied, whereby they suffered damage, for which they bring this action. Now, the plaintiffs were in doubt from whom they were entitled to obtain redress for the non-loading of this cargo, whether from Burns, Philp, & Co., the ostensible charterers, or from MacIlwraith & Co., the brokers who effected the charter, inasmuch as Burns, Philp, & Co., asserted that MacIlwraith & Co. had no authority from them to fix them with the charter. In these circumstances the plaintiffs issued a writ against MacIlwraith & Co. for representing that they had authority to enter into the charter for Burns, Philp, & Co., whereas they had not. The plaintiffs in their statement of claim set out two other alternative causes of action against MacIlwraith & Co., but upon the affidavits it is clear that the above is the only cause of action upon which they in reality rely against MacIlwraith & Co. It turns out upon discovery of documents that it is probable that Burns, Philp, & Co., did give authority to MacIlwraith & Co. to bind them with the charter, and in these circumstances the plaintiffs seek to add Burns, Philp, & Co., as defendants, and Collins, J., made the order under Ord. 16, r. 11. That rule I need not read; it deals among other things with joining and adding of parties. But I will read rule 7 of order 16, which is as follows: "Where the plaintiff is in doubt as to the person from whom he is entitled to redress, he may in such manner as hereinafter mentioned, or as may be prescribed by any special order, join two or more defendants, to the intent that the question as to which, if any, of the defendants is liable, and to what extent, may be determined as between all parties."

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

It is said that the learned judge had no jurisdiction to make the order. If he had jurisdiction I cannot doubt that he has rightly exercised his discretion in making the order. The redress, it will be seen, is sought against two persons, but the right to it arises out of one common transaction. Now this very point was expressly decided in the year 1877 in this court by Cockburn, C.J., and Mellish, Baggallay, and Bramwell, L.JJ., in the case of Honduras Railway Co. v. Tucker, 25 W. R. 310, 2 Ex. D. 301, under ord. 16, r. 6, which was the equivalent of the present ord. 16, r. 7. There can be no doubt as to this. Again in the year 1888, in Massey v. Heynes, 36 W. R. 834, 21 Q. B. D. 330, this court held that, where, as in the present case, an action was brought against agents in this country for breach of warranty of authority, the foreign principals were proper parties to be joined as co-defendants. It is clear that these two cases are conclusive authorities, if they have not been overruled, to show that my brother Collins in the circumstances of this case had jurisdiction to make the order he did; but it is said that these cases are no longer law, and that the House of Lords in the case of Smurthwaite v. Hannay, 43 W. R. 113, [1894] A. C. 494, has overruled them. It is said, and with truth, that the House of Lords decided in Smurthwaite v. Hannay that ord. 16, rr. 1 and 4, do not apply to joinder of separate causes of action, but only to joinder of parties, and if the question in the above-mentioned cases had arisen under rule 1 or rule 4 of order 16, or if this case had arisen under those rules, I must and should have held that the two cases had been overruled, and that this order could not have been made. But it will be seen that the House of Lords never dealt with nor even alluded to rule 7 of order 16, which is a very different rule from rules 1 and 4 of that order, nor was a case similar to the present then before it, and the House consequently never referred to rule 7, nor to the two cases above mentioned. In these circumstances I have come to the conclusion that the two above-mentioned cases have not been overruled and that rule 7 of order 16 stands unimpeached. These cases still stand. I am bound by them, and I think them rightly decided. I think this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

RIGBY, L.J., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, W. A. Crump & Son.

Solicitors for the defendants, Lowless & Co.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, Lopes, and Rigby, L.JJ.) July 23, 1896.

In re POLLARD'S SETTLEMENT. (a.)

Married woman—Restraint on anticipation—Power of court to remove restraint, when exercised—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 39.

Though the words "where it appears to the court to be for her [the married woman's] benefit," in section 39 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881 (which enables the court to bind the interest of a married woman in any property, notwithstanding that she is restrained from anticipation), are not to be construed as applying only to pecuniary benefit, yet the court will not exercise its power under that section unless, when all the circumstances of the case are considered, a good case is made out for so doing.

Decision of Chitty, J., 44 W. R. 474, affirmed.

Appeal from a decision of Chitty, J., (reported 44 W. R. 474, where the facts will be found stated). After the date of that decision the prosecution against the married woman was withdrawn, and Chitty, J., thereupon refused to make any order to enable her to provide for the costs of the prosecution.

Farwell, Q.C., and Johnston Edwards, for the appellant, referred to Lowther v. Bentinck, 23 W. R. 156, L. R. 19 Eq. 166; In re Kershaw's Trusts, 16 W. R. 963, L. R. 6 Eq. 322; and section 39 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881. [LOPES, L.J., referred to Hodges v. Hodges, 30 W. R. 483, 20 Ch. D. 749.]

Bartley Dennis, for the trustees of the settlement.

LINDLEY, L.J.—I do not think we ought to accede to the application in this case. I do not think the learned judge below ever said that the words "for her benefit" in section 39 of the Conveyancing Act must in all cases be confined to pecuniary benefit; nor do we say that. I do not see why we should tie ourselves. But I cannot help feeling that what Chitty, J., has held is quite right, and that we cannot add anything to the force of what he said. His remarks are as follows: "Recently attempts are being made by married women who have got into debt through extravagance to endeavour to obtain in chambers orders for the removal of the restraint. If judges in chambers yield to applications like the present, the result can easily be forecasted by solicitors. The married woman has only to involve herself in difficulties and make piteous affidavits. Directly such a system as that got into vogue the married woman would be able to force the hands of the court, and in effect destroy the restraint on anticipation."

I think if we were to accede to this application it would be a very bad precedent, and I am quite against doing such a thing.

LOPES, L.J.—I am entirely of the same opinion. I do not say that "benefit" means only pecuniary benefit, but I am perfectly clear that if we were to accede to this application, we should be doing very serious mischief, and that it would lead to those consequences which are anticipated by Chitty, J., I entirely agree with every word said by the learned judge.

(a.) Reported by R. C. MACKENZIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

RIGBY, L.J.—The legislature has said that such an order as is here asked for may be made where it appears to be for the "benefit" of married woman. We have certainly no power to alter the Act so as instead of "benefit" to read "pecuniary benefit"; but in this particular case I think that on the facts here stated it would be entirely wrong to grant such an application.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Hood Barrs & Co.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, Kay, & A. L. Smith, L.JJ.) March 18, 19, 1896.

LYONS & SONS v. WILKINS. (a.)

Trade union—Strike—Picketing—Conspiring to induce persons not to enter into contracts—"Watching or besetting"—Interlocutory injunction—Trade Union Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 31), s. 2—Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 86), ss. 3, 7.

Watching or besetting the works or place of business of an employer for the purpose of persuading or otherwise preventing persons from working for him, or for any purpose except merely to obtain or communicate information, is illegal within the meaning of section 7 of the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875, and will be restrained by interlocutory injunction.

The plaintiffs were a firm of leather bag and portmanteau manufacturers. The defendants were the secretary and one of the committee of a trade union called the Amalgamated Trade Society of Fancy Leather Workers.

Communications passed between the plaintiffs and the defendants with reference to the terms of the plaintiffs' employment of their workpeople; subsequently, a strike was ordered by the trade union, partly to obtain an increase of the workmen's wages and partly with the object of putting an end to the system of paying some persons according to piece-work and some according to time.

The trade union had picketed the plaintiffs' works in the usual way. They had also called out on strike the workmen of one Shoenthal, another manufacturer, with whom they had no quarrel, solely because he did work for the plaintiffs; they had also picketed his shop, and had threatened to pursue the same course against another manufacturer if he did work for the plaintiffs. One of the pickets had told Shoenthal that they were determined to ruin the plaintiffs if they did not give in.

The pickets were provided by the defendants with a card, and they were instructed to accost the workpeople, and to show them and give them copies of the card. It was as follows:

"Dear Sir,—You are hereby requested to abstain from taking work from Messrs. Lyons & Sons, . . . pending a dispute. Members are also requested to use their influence to keep non-society men, stitchers, machinists, &c., from applying for work until the dispute is settled."

The plaintiffs applied by motion for an interlocutory injunction to restrain the defendants from unlawfully and maliciously procuring any persons who had entered into contracts with the plaintiffs to break their contracts, and from unlawfully and maliciously inducing or conspiring to induce persons not to enter into contracts with the plaintiffs; and also to restrain libel, and for damages.

On the hearing of the motion, North, J., made an order restraining the defendants from maliciously inducing or conspiring to induce, persons not to enter into contracts with the plaintiffs.

His lordship was of opinion that as only one case of breach of contract had been put in evidence, no case for an interlocutory injunction had been made out under that head, nor had any libel been proved such as would justify the granting of an injunction.

The defendants appealed.

C. E. E. Jenkins, for the appellants.—I am entitled to persuade a person not to enter into a contract with a third person, as the law now stands, and if I do not act maliciously I am entitled to conspire and combine to do that. I rely upon Mogul Steamship Co. v. McGregor, Gow, & Co., 40 W. R. 337, [1892] A. C. 25, where it was held that the acts of the defendants were not unlawful, and that an action for conspiracy would not lie. The decision in that case shews that, though the net result of the acts complained of may be damage to the plaintiffs, the court will not interfere provided that there has been no malicious intention to injure the plaintiffs. To go out on strike is perfectly legal; it is the only way that workmen have of protecting themselves. And picketing per se, without intimidation, is also legal. In Trollope v. London Building Trades Federation, 72 L. T. N. S. 342, 43 W. R. Dig. 95, the ground for restraining the publication of the black list was because of the intimidation. [A. L. Smith, L.J.—Why, are you not within section 7, sub-section 4, of the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875, which makes "watching or besetting" the residence or place of business of another person an illegal act?] There is a saving clause to that section, and, moreover, that raises a question of criminal law. These pickets may have rendered themselves amenable to the criminal law by committing a misdemeanour; but that is not the point at issue here. The Act of 1875 has nothing to do with the case. If the plaintiffs have a remedy under the statute, then they should have proceeded thereunder. I rely on the observations of the Court as to intimidation in Connor v. Kent, [1891] 2 Q. B. 545, 40 W. R. Dig. 146. The defendants can justify what they have done, both under the Act and independently of it. Their object is to protect themselves. A combination in restraint of trade is not unlawful at common law if it is for the benefit of the traders, Jenkinson v. Nield, 8 T. L. R. 540. That case was decided on the authority of the Mogul case. As regards Shoenthal, it is true that the defendants are putting pressure on him. They are inducing him. But it is not forcibly in any legal sense, and he is not complaining. This sort of case ought not to be decided on a mere interlocutory application. North, J., based his judgment on Flood v. Jackson, 43 W. R. 453, [1895] 2 Q. B. 21. But if malice is relied on, it is a question of fact for the determination by a jury, as was said by Lord Esher in that case—see also on this point Bonnard v. Perryman, 39 W. R. 435, [1891] 2 Ch. 269. It is not right that this sort of dispute should be decided on affidavit evidence. This is not the tribunal that should be invoked. This court ought not to be made the tribunal to decide trade disputes when the legislature has pointed out the tribunal to which resort should be had. Picketing is legal, and by implication is legalised by statute, except so far as it is rendered illegal by section 7 of the Act of 1875. If the court is prepared to hold that all picketing is illegal, then my case is gone; if it holds that only picketing under section 7 is illegal, it is not its function on an interlocutory motion to say that this picketing comes within section 7.

(a.) Reported by W. SHALLCROSS GODDARD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Section 3 of the Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875, enacts: "An agreement or combination by two or more persons to do, or procure to be done, any act in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute between employers and workmen shall not be indictable as a conspiracy if such act committed by one person would not be punishable as a crime. . . ." By section 7: "Every person who, with a view to compel any other person to abstain from doing or to do any act which such other person has a legal right to do or abstain from doing, wrongfully and without legal authority—1. Uses violence to or intimidates such other person, or his wife or children, or injures his property; or 2. Persistently follows such other person about from place to place; or 3. Hides any tools, clothes, or other property owned or used by such other person, or deprives him of or hinders him in the use thereof; or 4. Watches or besets the house or other place where such other person resides, or works, or carries on business, or happens to be, or the approach to such house or place; or 5. Follows such other person with two or more other persons in a disorderly manner in or through any street or road, shall, on conviction thereof by a court of summary jurisdiction, or on indictment as hereinafter mentioned, be liable either to pay a penalty not exceeding twenty pounds, or to be imprisoned for a term not exceeding three months, with or without hard labour. Attending at or near the house or place where a person resides, or works, or carries on business, or happens to be, or the approach to such house or place, in order merely to obtain or communicate information, shall not be deemed a watching or besetting within the meaning of this section."

Levett, Q.C., and Ward Coldridge, for the respondents, were not called upon.

LINDLEY, L.J.—The question in this case is undoubtedly an extremely important one. One cannot help seeing what the real fight is, and I think that we have got the facts in such a shape that they are not really in controversy. What appears to me to be doing is this. The plaintiffs, Messrs. Lyons, make leather goods and employ workmen to make them up for them at certain wages. They also have a person of the name of Shoenthal making things up at home and employing other people to do that, and then bringing them to the plaintiffs' place. Shoenthal is what they call an "outworker." He is not an ordinary workman in the employ of the plaintiffs, except in that sense. Now, disputes have arisen between Messrs. Lyons and their workmen, and the work-people have gone to their trade union, and the trade union have taken up the cause of the work-people, and up to a certain point it appears to me that they have done nothing which is wrong. But ultimately they have done some things which appear to me to be wrong. They have in the first place withdrawn the work-people of Shoenthal in order to prevent him from working for Messrs. Lyons, or, in other words, they have been trying to hit Messrs. Lyons through Shoenthal in that way, and they have picketed Messrs. Lyons' place of business by besetting and watching that place of business for a purpose and with an object which is not admissible under the Act of Parliament to which I will refer presently. That is the short outline, and I think that the undisputed facts prove it.

I do not think that it is necessary to go at length into the affidavits or to refer to Messrs. Kenway, Dawson, & Scott's evidence, but I take the report of the trade union themselves, and what I have alluded to is really not in dispute at all. The report which they have issued contains this: "Previous to the receipt of a certain reply Mr. Lyons thought fit to summarily discharge Mr. Thompson" (that is one of his complaining workmen). "By the previous instructions of the committee the shop was struck, the piece-workers finishing up, and the time-workers giving notice, altogether seventeen leaving the firm. The shop has been picketed" (that is Lyons' shop), "and members are requested to do all in their power to bring the matter to a successful conclusion. It has also been found necessary to withdraw the members from Shoenthals', Finsbury-market, as this man is an outworker of Lyons & Sons, three hands leaving him." Then they say, "Of the twenty hands thus drawn out twelve have obtained work elsewhere," and so on. With regard to the picketing, what they have been doing is not in dispute. What they have been doing is that they have been placing a few men about the plaintiffs' works and telling them to show this card and accost work-people. It is headed: "Amalgamated Trade Society of Fancy Leather Workers, Affiliated to London Trades Council, 'White Swan,' Temple-street, E.C. Dear Sir,—You are hereby requested to abstain from taking work from Messrs. J. Lyons & Sons, Redcross-street, E.C., pending a dispute. Members are also requested to use their influence to keep non-society men, stitchers and machinists, &c., from applying for work until the dispute is settled." The consequence of these proceedings is that the trade union are, in effect, preventing Messrs. Lyons from carrying on their business upon such terms as they and their work-people may mutually agree upon. Of course one sees the difficulty in which all these trade unions are. Trade unions, which were considered illegal, have now been legalized, at all events so far as the doctrines as to restraint of trade are concerned, and a strike can be conducted up to a certain point with perfect legality. That is to say, persons can not only decline individually to work for a master except upon terms which the workmen desire to obtain, but they can combine to do that. They can combine to leave him; they can strike unless he will raise the wages up to what they desire; and trade unions which assist them in withdrawing their own labour, and declining to work, and which assist them in supporting themselves during the strike, can legally do so. Then comes this difficulty, and this is a difficulty which is as well known to those who conduct trade unions as it is to the masters and to all persons who have experience in these disputes: "If that is all that we can do we may be defeated by the masters making arrangements with other people who may be willing to work for them, either by taking the work away or working for less wages than we think is right, and unless we can stop that our strike may be ineffective." There comes the struggle. Now Parliament has not yet conferred upon trade unions the power to coerce people, and to prevent people from working for whomsoever they like, upon any terms that they like; and yet in the absence of such a power it is obvious that a strike may not be effective, and may not answer its purpose. Of course it depends on circumstances. Some strikes are perfectly effective by virtue of the mere strike, and other strikes are not effective unless the next step can be taken, and unless other people can be prevented from taking the place of the strikers. That is the pinch of the case in trade disputes, and until Parliament confers on trade unions the power of saying to other people, "You shall not work upon terms which you shall agree with those who are desirous of employing you," trade unions are exceeding their power when they take steps and endeavour to compel people not to work on such terms as they choose to make. I need hardly say that up to the present moment any such power as that does not exist. By the law of this country as it has been established immemorially, no one has that power; no set of people have that power. If Parliament chooses to confer it on trade unions it will do so as and when it thinks proper, and subject to such limitations as it thinks proper; but it is idle to pretend not to see that there is this struggle. Trade unions up to a certain point have now been recognized as organs for good. They are the only means by which workmen can protect themselves from the tyranny of those who employ them, but the moment that trade unions become tyrants in their turn they are engines for evil, and they have no right to prevent people from working on any terms that they choose.

The Act of Parliament which is important in this case is "The Conspiracy and Protection of Property Act, 1875." Section 3 is very important. In the first place it repeals previous Acts relating to the same subject, and has become a code on this subject. There are other Acts of Parliament relating to trade unions the provisions of which may possibly have to be consulted. But for the present purpose the Act of 1875 is all that we want. The 1st clause of section 3 is an enabling clause: "An agreement or combination by two or more persons to do or procure to be done any act in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute between employers and workmen shall not be indictable as a conspiracy if such act committed by one person would not be punishable as a crime." Then come sections 4 and 5 containing certain provisoes to that enabling clause which are provisoes relating to gas and water and breaches of contract involving injury to property. Then section 7 is extremely important. I will read the whole of it: "Every person who with a view to compel any other person to abstain from doing or to do any act which such other person has a legal right to do or abstain from doing, wrongfully and without legal authority"—does certain things which are enumerated in five sub-sections, the first of which is this: "Uses violence to or intimidates such other person or his wife or children or injures his property." Now, that sub-section has been made the subject of judicial decision in the case to which Mr. Jenkins referred—namely, Gibson, v. Lawson, 9 W. R. 271, [1891] 2 Q. B. 545, 40 W. R. Dig. 146, and for reasons which are there given the court held that intimidation was a threat of violence for which a person could be bound over to keep the peace. Whether that was rather a narrow view to take of the word, or not, I do not pause to inquire, but that is the construction that has been put upon it. [His lordship then read the other sub-sections of section 7, and proceeded:—] Then comes this clause which is a proviso: "Attending at or near the house or place where a person resides, or works, or carries on business, or happens to be, or the approach to such house or place, in order merely to obtain or communicate information shall not be deemed a watching or besetting within the meaning of this section." It is obvious, I think, to anybody who reads this with a view simply of understanding it, and without any prepossession one way or the other, that the legislature, in adding those words did not intend to unsay what it had said above. The obvious intention is to prevent the general words which are found in clause 4 from being stretched to apply to that which might possibly fall within a narrow construction, and yet not be within the mischief of it. It is a proviso on watching or besetting, and I understand it to read thus: "That every person who, with a view to compel any other person to abstain from doing or to do any act which such other person has a legal right to do, or abstain from doing, wrongfully and without legal authority watches or besets the house or other place where such other person" and so on "shall on conviction be liable to a penalty"; but in construing that and giving effect to it, we are not to treat as "watching or besetting" within the meaning of that prohibition any "attending at or near the house in order merely to obtain or communicate information." That is to be allowed, and picketing (if you call it so) for that limited purpose and conducted in that way for that simple object is not made a criminal offence, and therefore must be taken to be a lawful act; therefore one cannot say as an abstract proposition that all picketing is unlawful, because if all that is done is attending at or near a house in order merely to obtain or communicate information, that is lawful. But it is easy to see how, under cover of that, a great deal may be done which is absolutely illegal. It would be wrong to place people about a place of business or a house under pretence of merely obtaining or communicating information, if the object and effect were to compel the person so picketed to do that which he has a perfect right to do, and it is because there is practical danger of using this proviso for an illegal purpose that such disputes as these very often arise.

In this particular case we have heard plainly what has been done. This is not a case in which there have been a large number of persons picketed about Messrs. Lyons' house. As I understand it, there have been few. The affidavits do not say so, but Mr. Jenkins told us, no doubt perfectly accurately, that there are four, two at a time, relays of two each. Now, they are not there merely to obtain or communicate information; that is not their function. They are there to put pressure upon Messrs. Lyons by persuading people not to enter into their employment, and that is watching or besetting within clause 4, and is not attending in order merely to obtain or communicate information. Under these circumstances I think that they have gone too far, and have gone beyond what the Act of Parliament authorizes, and I do not hesitate to say that it is a case in which, from the necessity of the thing, a quick remedy is actually and absolutely required.

That leads me to the second point, which was that we ought to leave these people to the summary jurisdiction of a magistrate. I do not think so. This is obviously a case in which a man's property, his trade, his livelihood, and the goodwill of his business will be absolutely ruined if what is complained of is not peremptorily stopped, and it appears to me that, according to the well-known principles upon which the Court of Chancery has been guided, it is a case in which a person's property and trade are so interfered with that he may come to the court for the protection which an injunction affords him. I think that North, J., was quite right. But the actual terms of the injunction are open to the objection that they are not sufficiently definite, and that when motions to commit are made upon the footing of that injunction there will not be a sufficiently definite enunciation of what can be lawfully done, or what can not be lawfully done. I do not understand the evidence to prove that the defendants are doing anything wrong, except that which one might put one's finger upon and stop by an injunction. The words of the injunction should be varied. I do not think that in varying them we are disagreeing with North, J., at all; on the contrary, we are carrying out his idea, but putting it into a better shape. One word more. Shoenthal's case is a case in which it appears to me that the defendants have clearly gone too far, and it is idle to say that their object in doing what they did to Shoenthal was not to compel Messrs. Lyons to do that which the trade union wanted. Shoenthal was the outworker. I do not say that they continue to do it now, but what they did was they told people not to work for Shoenthal in order to prevent his working for Messrs. Lyons, and in order to hit Messrs. Lyons through him. That appears to me to be an obvious stretching of the Act which the defendants cannot possibly justify. I think therefore that the appeal must be dismissed, but the terms of the injunction will be altered, and considering that the terms are altered, possibly in Mr. Jenkins' favour, I think that the costs should be costs in the action. Personally I feel under great obligations to Mr. Jenkins for the very able manner in which he has conducted this case. Although I think that the construction which he asks us to put on the Act of Parliament is the wrong one, that does not detract from the ability which he has displayed.

KAY, L.J.—I entirely echo the last words of Lindley, L.J. I also feel very much indebted indeed to Mr. Jenkins for the manner in which he has conducted his case. It is a case which involves a question of the highest possible importance, because the long struggle which has been going on between trade unions and employers and workmen is brought exactly to a point by this case. I will begin by saying that since the Judicature Act, at any rate, there can be no doubt whatever of the jurisdiction of the court to grant an interlocutory injunction like this which has been granted by North, J. It seems to me quite plain (indeed, in the case of Bonnard v. Perryman, 39 W. R. 435, [1891] 2 Ch. 269, it was admitted) that there is jurisdiction to grant an injunction in cases even of libel. Of course, in a case like the present it is not a question of libel. This is an appeal from an interlocutory injunction, and in all these cases of interlocutory injunctions, where a man's trade is affected, one sees the enormous importance that there may be in interfering at once before the action can be brought on for trial, because during the interval, which may be long or short according to the state of business in the courts, a man's trade might be absolutely destroyed or ruined by a course of proceeding which, when the action comes to be tried, may be determined to be utterly illegal; and yet nothing can compensate the man for the utter loss of his business by what has been done in that interval. Such a case as that may happen, and I am not at all sure that this is not a case of that very kind. I can well understand that immense damage may be done, and damage which really would be almost irreparable to Messrs. Lyons by what may take place, if what is now being done is allowed to continue without interruption or interference until the action comes on to be tried. The case is one of very great importance indeed. If the parties are doing more than they have a right to do in their interference with Messrs. Lyons' business I have no doubt that it is a proper case for the court to stay that kind of proceeding until, at any rate, the trial of the action, the injunction being granted on the usual terms, that the plaintiff gives an undertaking as to damages if the defendants suffer any damage. Now, the defendants in this case are the officers of a trade union, and it seems to me to be very unlikely indeed that any possible damage can result to them from this injunction being granted; whereas on the other hand if it is not granted I think that very grave damage indeed may result to Messrs. Lyons. Therefore I feel that upon the balance of convenience and inconvenience there is a primâ facie case of illegality made out, and that it is clearly a case in which an interim injunction ought to be granted. To come to the point I quite agree that it is a case in which possibly at the hearing the evidence may show a different state of things, but that seems to me to be in the last degree unlikely, because the facts on which I am going to base my decision are facts which are practically not contradicted at all. What has been done is this: Messrs. Lyons were giving wages which the trade union thought were in some instances too small. Thereupon the Leather Trade Union (the union of this particular trade) give Messrs. Lyons notice that they object to the wages and that they shall call out the workmen and induce a strike if those wages are not altered. Messrs. Lyons, abiding by their particular course of business, refuse to raise the wages, and a strike is resolved upon, and this trade union does all in its power to encourage and carry out and make effective the struggle. Before the Act of 1875 the strike itself would have been illegal. The combination of a number of persons to induce and encourage and bring about a strike would also have been an illegal act. But section 3 of the Act, which Lindley, L.J., has read, rendered legal an agreement or combination by two or more persons to do or procure to be done any act in contemplation or furtherance of a trade dispute between employers and workmen, and provided that it should not be indictable as a conspiracy if such act committed by one person would not be punishable as a crime. There you get the fact that strikes are legalized by Act of Parliament, and that one person would not be indictable for a crime by endeavouring to encourage or bring about that which in itself is not illegal—namely, a strike. Therefore a combination of two or more persons to do this would come exactly within the words of the 3rd section of the Act, and would not since this Act of Parliament be an offence against the law. But then it does not go further than that. At present the legislature has simply legalized strikes, and a strike is an agreement between persons who are working for a particular employer not to continue working for him. That is legalized. Also I take it that under the terms of the section which I have read it is not illegal for a trade union to promote that strike. But further than that the law has not gone.

Now what have these people been doing in this particular case? In the first place they have been planting two or three persons at the approaches to the works of Messrs. Lyons with direct instructions to persuade the workmen coming from or going to those works not to work for Messrs. Lyons. That that is so is put beyond question by the card in the form of a letter which has been read by Lindley, L.J., which was put into the hands of these pickets for the purpose of showing to the workmen who were coming from or going to the works of Messrs. Lyons. On the face of it the card contains a direct request to such persons not to work for Messrs. Lyons. We have to see whether that is an illegal act, because that is one of the things complained of. The other thing complained of is this. Shoenthal was a person who carried on work at his own place of business, and he did a certain amount of work for the plaintiffs. He employed workmen under him separately; and this trade union intimated to him that if he went on working for the plaintiffs they would call out his workmen, that being with the express and direct object of preventing—not because there was any quarrel between him and his workmen, not because his workmen objected to the wages that he was giving them, not to make a strike of the workmen for the sake of those workmen as between them and their own employer, but for the very purpose of preventing Shoenthal from working for Messrs. Lyons, and for the purpose of putting additional pressure upon Messrs. Lyons by preventing Shoenthal from working for them, so as to induce them to come to the terms which they wished to establish between Messrs. Lyons and their workmen. Now, are those acts legal? It seems to me that one has only to look at the Act of Parliament to see that it is quite impossible to maintain the legality of either of those acts. I hold distinctly that it is illegal to picket the works or place of business of a man, by persons who are distributed and placed there for the purpose of trying by persuasion to induce the workmen of that man not to work for him any longer, or to induce people who want to work for him to abstain from entering into an agreement with him to do so. That seems to me to be illegal; and still more clearly is it illegal to induce a man, or to prevent a man in the position of Shoenthal from working for the plaintiff by calling out the workmen of that man and inducing them not to work for him, that being done for the purpose of putting pressure both upon Shoenthal and upon Messrs. Lyons, by preventing Shoenthal from working for Messrs. Lyons. I cannot read section 7 without seeing that those things are distinctly things which are not permissible by this Act of Parliament, and no Act of Parliament can be referred to which makes them lawful. Section 7 says: [His lordship read the section and the first four sub-sections, and continued:—] Now, Mr. Jenkins argued very ingeniously that that means, "compel only the workmen." I entirely disagree with him. I think that it means to compel either the employer or the workmen. To compel the employer by inducing the men not to work for him seems to me to be precisely within the language of this section. It is watching or besetting a house for the purpose of compelling an employer not to do an act which he has a lawful right to do—namely, to make such terms with his workmen as he and they may mutually agree upon. If that is done through the medium of the persuasion of the workmen, no compulsion being put on the workmen themselves, but compulsion being put by that means on the employer, that seems to me to be distinctly within this section of the Act of Parliament, and I think that that is shown the more clearly by the proviso which is put at the end of this section.

The thing which is made illegal is watching or besetting the house or the approach to the house with a view to compel any person to abstain from doing or to do any act which such person otherwise might lawfully do. Therefore watching or besetting Messrs. Lyons' place of business with a view to compel Messrs. Lyons to do or abstain from doing an act which they might legally do is an offence against this particular clause of the Act of Parliament, and the proviso at the end shows exactly how far the parties may go in watching or besetting the house. It says, "Attending at or near the house or place where a person resides or works or carries on business, or happens to be, or the approach to such house or place, in order merely to obtain or communicate information, shall not be deemed a watching or besetting within the meaning of this section." Sub-section 4 is as wide as can be. It does not speak of the purpose in that sub-section at all. It is "watching or besetting the house or place of business." The only words controlling the generality of sub-section 4 are to be found in the beginning of the section, "with a view to compel any other person to abstain from doing or to do any act which such other person has a legal right to do or abstain from doing." That is the only thing. Therefore I repeat that watching the works of Messrs. Lyons for the purpose of persuading persons who were working or intending to work there not to do so with a view to compel Messrs. Lyons to come to the terms which the trade union wish to impose upon them, is a direct violation of that which this section prohibits. I think that here the trade union has gone widely beyond that which this Act authorizes them to do, and that they are distinctly committing an illegal act which may have the effect of ruining Messrs. Lyons' business if it is not interfered with by an interim injunction. I repeat again that I think that this fact cannot be altered. It is a fact which the trade union in this case admits. They admit that they did put this card into the hands of their pickets for the purpose of its being shown to the people who were either working or intending to work for Messrs. Lyons, and that they placed those pickets at the entrance to Messrs. Lyons' works for the very purpose of persuading the workmen not to work for Messrs. Lyons in order to compel Messrs. Lyons to come to their terms. As to this, I think that it is impossible to suppose that any evidence given at the trial of the action can alter it at all. The facts that I am dealing with are admitted facts.

Now let me take Shoenthal's case. In Shoenthal's case they are not merely persuading Shoenthal not to work, but they are trying to prevent his working. They have no right to prevent anybody working, they have no right to prevent one of his workmen working for him. If they use means to prevent his working, that is not encouraging a strike but it is doing something far more. If by any means they prevent Shoenthal working for Messrs. Lyons, that is an illegal act. They have conspired together, and combined to take means to prevent somebody from working for Shoenthal who otherwise would do so. No Act of Parliament justifies that. It would have been illegal before this Act. There is nothing in this Act which justifies it, and it is illegal still. Therefore I think that the trade union have gone beyond any right which as yet Parliament gives them—any right which is to be considered as existing either directly by the legalization of strikes or as incidental to strikes being made legal; and to that extent, both of these things being calculated and intended to injure the plaintiff in his business, it is a case in which an interim injunction should be granted.

The form of the injunction granted by the learned judge in the court below may possibly give rise to question. Therefore we have considered whether it would not be better to make it more specific. I think that we all agree that the injunction should be: "An injunction to restrain the defendants, their servants and agents"—in the usual way—"from watching or besetting the plaintiffs' works for the purpose of persuading or otherwise preventing persons from working for them or for any purpose except merely to obtain or communicate information"—that is following the very words of the Act—"and also from preventing Shoenthal or other persons from working for the plaintiffs by withdrawing his or their workmen from their employment respectively." With that alteration the appeal substantially fails; but still, as it is necessary to make some alteration, perhaps the best course of dealing with the costs will be to say that the costs of this appeal shall abide the result of the action.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—I also wish to thank Mr. Jenkins for the extremely able way in which he argued this case. His argument has been of great assistance to me. Now, this is a case in which an injunction has been obtained by Messrs. Lyons against the secretary of the Amalgamated Society of Leather Workers, a trade union, to restrain the trade union from doing certain acts which they have been doing heretofore. I really should not have said much in this case excepting for its great importance. I wish simply to state shortly how the case strikes me. In the year 1871 it could not have been said in a court of law that a strike was legal, or that any class of picketing was legal, because there is ample authority to the contrary. If authorities were wanted I would refer to the cases of Hilton v. Eckersley, 6 E. & B. 47, 3 W. R. Dig. 176, and Walsby v. Anley, 9 W. R. 271, 30 L. J. M. C. 121, which are found referred to by Lord Coleridge in Gibson v. Lawson. I say that prior to that date I do not think there can be a doubt that it was a common idea (and indeed the authorities have so shown) that a strike or picket would have been illegal. How does this case come before this court? The complaint was made by Messrs. Lyons that what the defendants were doing was illegal at common law. To that the defendants set up this: "That is all very fine—you are saying that it is illegal at common law, and you would have been right before the year 1871, but in the years 1871 and 1875, we, the trade union, had two Acts of Parliament passed which legalize what we are doing upon this occasion." Those two Acts are really the charters and foundation of the legality of trade unions. There is no doubt that a trade union now, as long as it carries on its affairs up to a certain point, is as legal as any other community in the kingdom. Of that there cannot be a doubt; but Mr. Levett answers, "Yes, you may have those charters—namely, the Act of 1871 and the Act of 1875, yet what you are doing is outside what has been granted to you by the legislature"; and the real question is whether or not it has been shown that what the defendants have been doing is outside of the power granted to them by Act of Parliament. Now, the defendants induced Messrs. Lyons' men to strike—that was perfectly lawful; and they induced Messrs. Lyons' men to strike for the purpose of their getting better wages—which also is perfectly lawful. There cannot be a doubt about that; and it seems to me that, as regards what they did in inducing Messrs. Lyons' men to go out on strike, the Acts of Parliament which have been passed in favour of trade unions undoubtedly allow them to do that. And if that was all that they had done, there would be no groundwork for an application for an injunction in this case. But they have done more. I think myself that the procedure which they have adopted as regards Mr. Shoenthal is not authorized by the statute. The particular portion of the statute which authorizes these strikes being promoted or encouraged by trade unions is the 3rd section of the Act of 1875. [His lordship read the section, and continued:—] Now, was there any trade dispute between Mr. Shoenthal's workmen and himself? None at all. If there had been a trade dispute between Mr. Shoenthal's workmen and Mr. Shoenthal I apprehend that the trade union might have done as regards Mr. Shoenthal exactly that which they did as regards Messrs. Lyons, and they might have called his men out on strike; but that is not the state of things. There was no dispute between Mr. Shoenthal and his men. What they did was to call out Mr. Shoenthal's men so as to prevent Mr. Shoenthal from working for Messrs. Lyons. That was to compel Mr. Shoenthal who was willing to work for Messrs. Lyons not to work for them—not to have the men wherewith to work for Messrs. Lyons, and therefore to injure Messrs. Lyons in their trade. In my judgment that is inadmissible under the Acts of Parliament which I have mentioned. I think that inasmuch as it was clearly intended to hurt and injure Messrs. Lyons in their trade, it is an act which this court has jurisdiction to stop when it finds that it has been perpetrated and may continue to be perpetrated. That act of the trade union against Shoenthal was, as I have pointed out, a way of compelling Shoenthal not to work for Messrs. Lyons.

Is there anything else? I think that this picketing is not admissible. As I have said already, before 1871 and before the Acts were passed it was illegal, but a certain amount of picketing (if that is the proper word) was rendered lawful by the proviso to section 7. The section is strong against what one ordinarily understands by the word "picketing," which really means placing men outside a man's shop where a strike has taken place and where the men have been called out to compel men not to go into that shop to work for that man as long as the strike lasts. That is the meaning of picketing pure and simple. What does the statute say about it? I want just to read the first few lines and to put my construction upon it: "Every person who, with a view to compel any other person to abstain from doing, or to do any act which such other person has a legal right to do or abstain from doing, wrongfully and without legal authority" does any of the five acts mentioned shall be liable to punishment. What is the meaning of the words "every person who, with a view to compel any other person"? I think that section can only be read in this way—that every person who, with a view to compel any other person (that is, whether a master or man—that is the only way in which this section can be properly read in my judgment)—"Every person who, with a view to compel any other person, whether master or man, to abstain" and so on, "does any one of these acts without lawful excuse acts unlawfully." What is one of the things which he is not to do? It says "every person" (that in this case is the defendant, the secretary of the trade union) "who watches or besets the house or other place where such other person resides or works or carries on business." Now, what is the evidence about watching or besetting? Why, there is ample evidence that they have watched and beset the house of Messrs. Lyons, and you have only to refer to their own circular which points out exactly what they have been doing. They have been picketing Messrs. Lyons' house, and that is clearly within sub-section 4 of section 7. How can Mr. Jenkins say that what his clients have been doing is lawful, because what they did was in order merely to obtain or communicate information which in such a case would not be deemed watching or besetting? But the evidence does not prove that; because they have done a great deal more. Therefore it appears to me that on this ground also an illegal act has been done by the trade union. For these reasons I think that this interlocutory injunction should go, and that it should be moulded in the form which has been read by Kay, L.J., because I can see that in the general form in which it has been brought into this court everlasting difficulties would arise as to the carrying of it out; and what is more, it seems to me that it might be said that it would restrain this trade union from doing that which the law allows it to do. By the form in which the injunction goes now it only restrains them from doing what the law does not allow them to do. I also think that as we have somewhat altered the injunction the costs of the appeal should be costs in the cause, so that the party who is in the right when the action is tried will get the costs of this appeal.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Shaen, Roscoe, Massey, & Co.; Warburton & De Paula.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div.
Chitty, J. } July 15, 23, 1896.

In re EARL OF DEVON'S SETTLED ESTATES.
WHITE v. EARL OF DEVON.
In re STEER.
STEER v. DOBELL. (a.)

Limitations, Statutes of—Settlement—Power of appointment—Real Property Limitation Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 27), ss. 1-3, 20—"Person through whom another person is said to claim"—"Appointee"—"Other estate, interest, right, or possibility"—Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57), ss. 1, 2, 9.

A tenant from year to year, under a verbal agreement, of settled land remained in possession for more than twelve years from 1876 without paying rent or giving any acknowledgment. Under the settlement the land was limited to A. for life, remainder to B. for life, remainder to such uses as A. should by deed or will appoint. This power of appointment was exercised by A.'s will. A. was barred shortly before his death. B., who succeeded A., died without having recovered the land in 1891. On an application to determine whether the estate of A.'s appointees, which thereupon came into possession, was barred,

Held, that the limitation to the appointees must be read into the settlement which created the power; and, applying the principle laid down by Tindal, C.J., in James v. Salter, 3 Bing. N. C. 544 (p. 553), that the case fell within the latter part of section 2 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874, and that B. being the person last entitled to a particular estate, and not being in possession or receipt of the profits of the land when his interest determined by his death in 1891, the appointees had a further period of six years from that time to bring their action; and therefore that their estate was not barred.

The words "other estate, interest, right, or possibility" in section 20 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1833, and the word "appointee" in section 1 of the same Act, discussed and considered.

Special case.

John Wotton Steer was until Lady-day, 1876, tenant under a verbal agreement of a plot of land forming part of the Devon Settled Estates on a yearly tenancy at a small annual rent. This land remained in his possession until his death in July, 1889, and thenceforth in the possession of the trustees of his will; but after Lady-day, 1876, no rent was ever claimed by the owners of the Devon Estates, and none was ever paid nor any acknowledgment given in respect thereof.

Steer v. Dobell was an action for the administration of the estate of John Wotton Steer, and an order for administration had been made therein.

White v. Earl of Devon was a mortgagee's action, and had reference to the Devon Estates, the title to which, so far as is material, was as follows:—

By a settlement dated the 22nd of July, 1857, and made between Lord Courtenay (afterwards 11th Earl of Devon) and Edwin Baldwin Courtenay of the one part and trustees of the other part, and a deed poll dated the 10th of June, 1862, under the hands and seals of the 11th Earl of Devon and Edwin Baldwin Courtenay, then Lord Courtenay, the Devon Settled Estates were limited to the use of the 11th Earl of Devon for life, with remainder to the use of Lord Courtenay for life, with remainder to uses which failed, with remainder to such uses upon such trusts, intents, and purposes, and with, under, and subject to such powers, provisos, agreements, and declarations as the 11th Earl should at any time by deed or will direct, limit, or appoint with divers remainders over in default of appointment.

By his will dated the 17th of September, 1885, the 11th Earl devised, bequeathed, and appointed all his estate, including any over which he had or might acquire any power of appointment, to Lord Halifax and others therein named trustees, and died the 18th of November, 1888; and upon his death Lord Courtenay became 12th Earl of Devon. He died the 15th of January, 1891.

By an indenture dated the 1st of May, 1891, the Devon Settled Estates were conveyed by the trustees of the will of the 11th Earl to the 13th Earl, subject to the incumbrances affecting the same and otherwise, and shortly after the same estates were settled by him to uses in strict settlement.

The question whether the persons interested in the Devon Settled Estates could recover possession of, and whether the persons entitled to the estate of John Wotton Steer had any, and if any what title to or interest in the land was by consent submitted in the form of a special case to Chitty, J., as the judge in whose division the above actions were pending.

Byrne, Q.C., and Beaumont for the persons interested in the Devon Estates.—The appointees are in the same position as if they were named in the instrument conferring the power of appointment, they come therefore within section 2 of the Act of 1874, and the statute only began to run against them on the death of the 12th Earl in 1891. Until then they had only a future interest, and he was the person last entitled to the particular estate on which their estate was expectant. On his death their estate became vested in possession, and they had the further period of six years from his death within which they could bring their action. Section 20 of the Act, 1833, does not apply to a case like this. It applies where a man has one interest, and after an intervening estate, then another interest in himself, so that having been once barred in respect of one, he is deprived of any right or action in respect of the other. They also referred to sections 1, 2, and 3, of the Act of 1833, to sections 1 and 9 of the Act of 1874, and to Farwell on Powers, 2nd ed., p. 288, section 3, Fearne's Contingent Remainders, vol. 1, p. 73, and Sugden on Powers, 8th ed., p. 470, et seq.

G. Cave, for the persons entitled to the real estate of J. W. Steer.—The claimants are barred by section 1 of the Act of 1874. By section 1 of the Act of 1833, which under section 9 of the Act of 1874 is to be read into the latter Act, persons claiming as appointees under another person are to be considered as "claiming through" him. The present claimants therefore claim through the 11th Earl, whose right of action was barred at the end of twelve years from Lady-day, 1876, and are accordingly barred under section 1 of the Act of 1874. Section 3 of the Act of 1833, and section 2 of the Act of 1874, cannot be used to cut down section 1 of the latter Act, James v. Salter, 3 Bing. N. C. 544, 553; Magdalen Hospital v. Knotts, 26 W. R. 640, 8 Ch. D. 709, 727. The argument founded on these sections is inapplicable unless the words "in respect of the estate or interest claimed" are inserted in section 1 after the word "accrued." A general power of appointment is equivalent to absolute ownership, Farwell on Powers, 2nd, 286; Rous v. Jackson, 33 W. R. 773, 29 Ch. D. 521, 526. The power was also barred before the death of the 11th Earl, as being "another estate, interest, right, or possibility" within the meaning of section 20 of the

(a.) Reported by J. F. WALEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Act of 1833, or was extinguished as a "right or title" under section 34 of the same Act. Doe v. Mouledale, 16 M. & W. 689.

Byrne, Q.C., replied.

CHITTY, J.—Regard being had to the 8th section of the Statute of Limitations of 1833 and to the Statute of 1874, and to the non-payment of rent by the yearly tenant, it is admitted that the right of the 11th Earl to recover the land was barred a few months before his death, which occurred in November, 1888. [His lordship, after stating the facts, continued:] The question is, whether the remainder appointed to Lord Halifax and others is barred by the Statute of Limitations. That estate was a future estate when the Statute had run against the life estate of the 11th Earl.

The case of future estates appears now to depend upon the 2nd section of the Act of 1874, construed with the fourth branch of the 3rd section of the Act of 1833 and on the 20th section of the same Act. The statement to this effect in Shelford's Real Property Statutes (9th ed., by Carson, p. 195) appears to me to be correct.

A point of general law was raised in reference to the execution of the power by the 11th Earl. According to the established doctrine the limitation to Lord Halifax and others must be read into the settlement which created the power, the estate limited taking effect from the time when the power was executed—in this case from the death of the 11th Earl (see Sugden on Powers, 8th ed., p. 470 et seq). The doctrine that the appointee takes under the original deed is followed in all its consequences except that where the power is a general power the rule against perpetuities is applied only from the time of executing the power (see Rous v. Jackson). That exception has no bearing on the present case. The doctrine of equity that the estate created under a general power is assets for payment of the appointor's debts is not a true exception to the general doctrine. The appointee of real estate is treated as a trustee for the creditor of the appointor (see Fleming v. Buchanan, 3 De G. M. & G. 976).

For Steer's representatives it was argued that the case fell within the 20th section of the Act of 1833. The general effect of that section is that when the right to an estate in possession is barred, the right of the same person to future estates is also barred. The argument for Steer's representatives was that inasmuch as the estate of the 11th Earl as tenant for life was barred, the estate limited by him in virtue of his power to Lord Halifax and others was also barred.

It was said that a general power of appointment fell within the words "other estate, interest, right, or possibility," and particularly that such a power was included within the word "right." This argument is unsound. The Act deals with our highly technical system of real property law, and the language employed is necessarily technical. It has to be borne in mind that real actions were in existence when the Act was passed, and were abolished by the Act itself (see section 36). No real property lawyer in 1833 would have spoken of a power of appointing uses as an "estate, interest, right, or possibility." The terms "right" and "possibility" are used in their technical sense. "Right," for instance, applies to the case of an estate turned to a right which could be enforced only in a real action. I hold that a power is not within the section.

For Steer's representatives it was also argued that the case falls within the 1st section of the Act of 1874, read in connection with the 1st or interpreting section of the Act of 1833. On the other hand it was contended for the Devon Estates that the case was governed by the 2nd section of the Act of 1874. The relation of these two sections is explained by the decision of the Court of Common Pleas on the relation of the analagous sections, the 2nd and 3rd, of the Act of 1833 in James v. Salter, approved in the Irish Land Commission v. Grant, 33 W. R. 357, 10 App. Cas. 14, 27. Tindal, C.J., in giving judgment, said "that the case must have been governed by the 2nd section, if that section had stood alone, cannot be doubted; and upon a more close examination of the 3rd section, the object and intent of it seems to us to be no more than this: to explain and give a construction to the enactment contained in the 2nd clause, as to 'time at which the right to make a distress for any rent shall be deemed to have first accrued,' in those cases only in which doubt or difficulty might occur; leaving every case which plainly falls within the general words of the 2nd section, but is not included among the instances given by the third, to be governed by the operation of the second." In Magdalen Hospital v. Knotts, the Court of Appeal, citing James v. Salter, used somewhat different language, but did not intend in any way to modify the clear expressions found in the judgment of Tindal, C.J.

I proceed to consider the 1st and 2nd sections of the Act of 1874; in stating the relevant portions of the sections I shall, for the sake of clearness, omit words not bearing on the present question. The 1st section enacts that no person shall bring an action to recover land but within twelve years next after the time at which the right to bring such action shall have first accrued to some person through whom he claims; or if such right shall not have accrued to some person through whom he claims, then within twelve years next after the time at which the right to bring such action shall have first accrued to the person bringing the same. For Steer's representatives it was argued that the right to bring an action first accrued to the 11th Earl, and that Lord Halifax and others as appointees claim through him, and are therefore barred by the section. Reference was made to the 1st section of the Act of 1833, which interprets the meaning of the expression "claiming through another person." The enactment is that the words and expressions thereinafter mentioned, which in their ordinary signification have a more confined or different meaning, shall in the Act, except where the nature of the provision or the context of the Act shall exclude such construction, be interpreted as follows: "The person through whom another person is said to claim shall mean any person by, through, or under, or by the act of whom the person so claiming became entitled to the estate or interest claimed as heir, issue in tail, tenant by courtesy of England, tenant in dower, successor, special or general occupant, executor, administrator, legatee, husband, assignee, appointee, devisee, or otherwise." The term "appointee" was fastened upon, and it was urged that Lord Halifax and others, being appointees of the 11th Earl, claimed through him within the interpretation clause, which by virtue of the 9th section of the Act of 1874 is read with the Act of 1874. No doubt there is a difficulty in ascertaining the meaning of the term "appointee." Limitations to dower uses were in vogue when the Act of 1833 was passed, and it seems to me that, regard being had to the context in the interpretation clause itself, an appointee under the general power of appointment contained in such limitations would be within the meaning. But I think that appointees under a special power would not. Suppose, for instance, under a settlement lands were limited to the use of one for life with remainder to such uses in favour of one or more of his children as he should appoint, and in default to the use of his children in fee; it would, I think, be absurd to say that the right of the children to recover depended on the exercise or non-exercise of the power; that, if the power were exercised, they were barred if the estate of the appointor were barred, but they were not barred if the power were not exercised. In fact the children would not claim by, through, or under, or by the act of the appointor. They would claim under the settlor and by the combined operation of the act of the settlor and the appointor. Obviously some restriction as to the meaning of the term "appointee" is imposed by the interpretation clause itself. But for the reasons presently stated it is not necessary for me to decide whether the term "appointee" includes the case where the power of appointment is not in substance created by the appointor himself—a question which I leave open.

In my opinion, consistently with the judgment in James v. Salter, the case falls within the 2nd section of the Act of 1874. That section deals specially with cases in which a doubt or difficulty might occur as to the time when the right to bring an action accrues. The section enacts that a right to bring an action to recover land "shall be deemed" to have first accrued in respect of an estate in remainder or other future estate at the time at which the same shall have become an estate in possession by the determination of any estate or estates in respect of which such land shall have been held, or the profits thereof shall have been received, notwithstanding the person claiming such land, or some person through whom he claims, shall at any time previously to the creation of the estate or estates which have determined, have been in possession or receipt of the profits of such land; but if the person last entitled to any particular estate on which any future estate was expectant shall not have been in the possession or receipt of the profits of such land at the time when his interest was determined, no such action shall be brought by any person becoming entitled in possession to a future estate but within twelve years next after the time when the right to bring such action shall have first accrued to the person whose interest shall have so determined, or within six years next after the time when the estate of the person becoming entitled in possession shall have vested in possession, whichever of these periods shall be the longer. The case falls within that part of the section which begins with the word "but." The person last entitled to a particular estate was the 12th Earl; he was not in possession or receipt of the profits when his interest determined, and Lord Halifax and others have the further period of six years* (which has not yet elapsed) after his death to bring their action; and therefore I hold that their estate was not barred.

Solicitors, Lake & Lake; Ford, Lloyd, Bartlett, & Michelmore, for Hacker & Michelmore, Newton Abbot.

* N.B.—It would appear that the appointees really had the longer period of twelve years from the succession of the 12th Earl in 1888, but under the circumstances the difference in length between the two periods becomes immaterial.

Chan. Div.
Chitty, J. } April 16; July 8, 1896.

In re LART.

WILKINSON v. BLADES. (a.)

Practice—Representation order under Ord. 16, r. 32—Will—Construction—Res judicata—Acquiescence.

An order appointing a person to represent a class for the purpose of obtaining the judgment of the court does not affect a member of the class who has a distinct and independent right in the subject-matter of the litigation, and does not make the judgment binding on him.

Where the court has construed a will for the purpose of determining the title to a fund passing under the will, and the same question of construction is raised afterwards in regard to another fund passing under the same will, the court is bound by the precedent created by its former decision.

Summons.

The above-named testator, who died in 1853, by his will, dated in 1852, bequeathed to his daughters the respective annual sums therein mentioned, and in case of the marriage of any of his daughters directed the investment of a sufficient sum to answer the same by the interest thereof. And in case any of them died leaving children, the principal was to be divided between those children in equal shares. And the will proceeded as follows: "If my daughters die not having been married, then in every case the principal shall be divided equally among my surviving children," not providing expressly for the case of a married daughter dying without leaving children.

On the death of a married daughter without ever having had issue, the construction of the will came before the court in 1883, and Chitty, J., held that it was a necessary implication from other parts of the will that the above clause covered the case, and that her share was divisible equally among the children of the testator who survived the daughter, and such division was accordingly made. A representation order was made in the action appointing a representative of the next of kin of the testator for the purpose of obtaining the judgment of the court.

This was an application by J. Wilkinson, as legal personal representative of his deceased wife, E. Wilkinson, who was another daughter of the testator and who also died without issue, raising the same question of construction as was decided in 1883, but in reference to E. Wilkinson's share. Neither the applicant nor E. Wilkinson were parties on the former occasion, but they were both aware of the action and its nature and also of the order when it was made, and took the benefit of the order.

Ingle Joyce, for the applicant.

Munns, for the trustees.

Byrne, Q.C., and W. A. Peck, for other defendants.

The cases cited were Duchess of Kingston's case, 2 Sm. L. C., 10th ed., 713; May v. Newton, 35 W. R. 363, 34 Ch. D. 347; Young v. Holloway, 43 W. R. 429; 1895, P. 87; Wytcherley v. Andrews, 19 W. R. 1015, L. R. 2 P. & D. 327, p. 329; Jacques v. Harrison, 32 W. R. 470, 12 Q. B. D. 165; Watson v. Cave, 29 W. R. 433, 17 Ch. D. 19; and Commissioners of Sewers v. Gellatly, 24 W. R. 1059, 3 Ch. D. 610.

CHITTY, J.—On this summons the applicant did not offer even to restore what he received under the former decision. I say what he received. It was paid on the joint receipt of husband and wife; but, there being no separate use, that was a reduction into possession by the husband. At the bar, however, his counsel has offered to refund, but so far as I am concerned that offer becomes immaterial, because it is admitted that I should have to follow, according to the usual practice of the court, my former decision.

(a.) Reported by J. F. WALEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Now, the applicant and his wife, not having been parties to that action, were not bound as a person who is a party is bound, by the result of the action. It was suggested, both before and on the present occasion, that the wife was one of the next of kin, and bound through the representation order as to the next of kin; but in my opinion an order appointing a person to represent a class such as the next of kin does not affect one of the next of kin who has a distinct and independent right as the wife had as survivor.

What, then, could the applicant and his wife have done in the circumstances? They could have declined to take the money under the order. They could, if dissatisfied with the judgment, have brought their own action the next day after, and asked the court to put a different construction on the will; and if that decision had been followed as a precedent, have brought what would practically be an appeal against the first decision. That is one course the applicant could have adopted. Another would have been to apply to this court pending the proceedings, under ord. 16, r. 11, which was then in force, to be added as defendant, and had he done so he would have been made a defendant. So that there were two courses which he could have adopted for the purpose of bringing the case before the Court of Appeal within a reasonable time after my decision. In the Probate Division a party, when a will is in question, has a right to intervene, and if he does not intervene he is primâ facie bound by the result of the litigation, Young v. Holloway, and the reasoning upon which that practice has been established appears from the judgment of Lord Penzance in Wytcherley v. Andrews. At common law, parties to a judgment are bound, of course, but persons claiming under them are also bound on the principle qui sentit commodum sentire debet et onus. These analogies afford some ground for saying that the applicant in the circumstances is bound. But I have not said he was bound by the judgment. I think he was not. But by his conduct, and by taking the money, he has acquiesced, if ever a man could acquiesce.

It was said that even supposing the applicant had been a party he would not have been bound, because the decision was not on the same fund as that now in question. But this court is bound by the precedent. If it were shown that there was some palpable blunder in the former decision there might have been a ground for reconsidering it. I may mention that Sir G. Jessel, M.R., when orders had been made in chambers involving in his opinion a certain construction of a will, would not when the case came on hear argument in court on the question of construction, considering himself bound by what had been done in chambers.

Although not technically bound, I think it is contrary to good faith and equity that the applicant should raise this question now. I therefore dismiss his application, not merely on the ground of the former decision, but on the ground that he is a person not entitled to come forward to maintain it.

Summons dismissed.

Solicitors, G. F. Hudson Matthews & Co.; Dawes & Sons, for Young, Son, & Coles, Hastings; Munns & Longden.

Chan. Div.
Kekewich, J. } June 26, 1896.

In re DYSON & FOWKE'S CONTRACT. (a.)

Vendor and purchaser—Will—Trustees—Power of sale—Charge of legacies on residue—Insufficiency of personal estate to pay debts and specific legacies—Legal estate—Title—Concurrence of beneficiaries.

A testator, after directing payment of his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and certain specific legacies, gave his residuary real and personal estate to trustees upon trust as to part thereof as therein mentioned, and he then gave the rest and residue of his real and personal estate to certain persons absolutely in equal shares.

Subsequently, by a codicil he revoked the gift to those persons and substituted other persons in their stead, and in all other respects confirmed his will. The testator's personal estate was insufficient to pay his debts, &c., and the specific legacies; and, in consequence of this, the trustees put up for auction residuary real estate of the testator. A purchaser of a portion of such estate objected that the trustees had no power to make a valid assurance, and required the concurrence of the residuary devisees.

Held, that the vendors, the trustees, had made a good title.

Motion.

T. B. Dyson, who died on the 16th of December, 1895, by his will, dated the 13th of October 1892, after providing for payment of his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and making various specific and pecuniary bequests, devised and bequeathed all the rest and residue of his real and personal estate to the plaintiffs (the trustees of his will), as to certain parts thereof upon trusts as therein mentioned, and then devised and bequeathed absolutely all the rest and residue of his real and personal estate and effects to the two children of his late son Edwin Dyson and to all the children of his (the testator's) son Cornelius Dyson equally, share and share alike; and the testator declared that the trustees or trustee of his will should have power "to sell the whole or any part of my real estate," and should "hold the proceeds upon the trusts of the will."

By a codicil, dated the 13th of December, 1892, the testator revoked the gift of residue in favour of the children of Edwin and Cornelius Dyson, and devised and bequeathed all the rest and residue of his real and personal estate and effects to his wife Mary Dyson, his two sons Cornelius and John Dyson, and his daughter Isabella Phillips equally, share and share alike, and in all other respects confirmed his will.

The testator's personal estate was not sufficient to pay his debts, funeral and testamentary expenses, and the specific legacies, and the trustees, in consequence of this, put up for sale by auction, in lots, residuary real estate of the testator.

E. C. Fowke, a purchaser of one of these lots, took the objection that the trustees had no power to sell, and required the concurrence of the residuary devisees.

An order was obtained in chambers to the effect that the trustees had no power to sell and make a valid assurance of the property without the concurrence of the beneficiaries. This order the trustees now moved to discharge.

E. P. Hewitt, for the trustees.—The question is, Can trustees with power of sale sell without the concurrence of the beneficiaries? The trustees require this power to sell in order to pay the debts and funeral and testamentary expenses and legacies, and at any rate it is applicable to the gift of residue. The trustees may therefore use it without the consent of the beneficiaries: Peters v. Lewes and East Grinstead Railway Co., 29 W. R. 874, 18 Ch. D. 429, at p. 434; In re Cotton's Trustees and School Board for London, 30 W. R. 610, 19 Ch. D. 624; In re Lord Sudeley and Baines & Co., 42 W. R. 231, [1894] 1 Ch. 334.

(a.) Reported by C. C. HENSLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

L. Morton Brown, for the purchaser.—The power of sale is cut down by the subsequent devise, and consequently we are entitled to require the concurrence of the beneficiaries. He referred to In re Lord Sudeley and Baines & Co., [1894] 1 Ch., at p. 339. The devisees here take absolutely, and therefore the legal estate does not vest in the trustees: Davis to Jones and Evans, 32 W. R. 460, 24 Ch. D. 190.

KEKEWICH, J.—Having had the advantage of a fuller consideration of this case than any which is possible on a summons in chambers, I have come to the conclusion that the order which was made in chambers must be discharged, and that the vendors' title must be upheld.

The question here is whether the trustees can make a title under the power of sale contained in the will—a power expressed in the widest terms both as regards time and otherwise. The power runs as follows [His lordship then read the power of sale and continued:—] Mr. Hewitt has convinced me that the power is at any rate applicable to this particular gift of residue, whether or not it may have been intended to be applicable to more than that. The residue is given in the simplest possible manner by the will to the two children of the testator's late son Edwin Dyson and to all the children of his son Cornelius Dyson equally. The beneficiaries are altered by the codicil, but the mode of gift is not altered. Nothing is given by way of settlement, there is no life estate and no restriction; it is simply a gift in fee. Is such a power of sale as this a good power in respect of real estate which is given in that way? I think there is no doubt that it is good so long as there is some purpose for which the power can be exercised.

Chitty, J., in In re Lord Sudeley and Baines & Co., at p. 339 of [1894] 1 Ch., with respect to that, says: "These unlimited powers can be exercised only while the purposes of the settlement remain unexhausted," and he proceeds to expound that farther on in a passage which I do not pause to consider. This is in agreement with Lord St. Leonards' opinion in his book upon Powers which is cited by Fry, L.J., in In re Cotton's Trustees and the School Board for London, at p. 627 of 19 Ch. D.: "Perhaps the better opinion is that the powers cannot be exercised after the union of the estates, on the ground, not that the powers are merged, but that, according to the true construction of the settlement, they were not to be exercised after the determination of the limitations which they were intended to overreach."

The question for me is whether there were any trusts of the will existing at the date of the testator's death, or within a reasonable time thereafter, which would require to be enforced by means of the exercise of this power of sale. The testator has limited the exercise of the power in that way, for he says that the proceeds of sale are to be held upon the trusts of the will. Mr. Hewitt argued that I ought to infer that the power of sale was intended by the testator to be used for the purpose of division, and he says that if I do I can uphold the power on that ground, if it is required, in order to divide the property among the beneficiaries, and he cites the case of Peters v. Lewes and East Grinstead Railway Co., where the power was expressly given for the purpose of division, and also the cases of In re Lord Sudeley and Baines & Co. and In re Cotton's Trustees and the School Board for London, in which it was pointed out that the will contained provisions from which it might be inferred that a division was intended. But in those cases there were a number of legatees and there was property of a peculiar character, which instances I do not find in this case, and that argument is, I think, narrowed, because in order to infer the existence of the power I must first find that there is such a purpose of division. In this case there is only a direct gift to a small number of persons, and that not by way of division. The legal estate is in the trustees and the equitable fee in the beneficiaries, and there is no reason why, if no obstacle intervenes, the beneficiaries should not call for the legal estate from the trustees. If that were all I should decide against the vendor's title; but that is not all. My attention has been called to other points. The testator has not only ordered his debts and funeral and testamentary expenses to be paid, but has also given many legacies amounting to a considerable sum, and he has charged them upon his real estate by the operation of a rule of law which is now well settled, and is laid down in the case of Greville v. Browne, 7 W. R. 673, 7 H. L. Cas. 689, and which is that where a man gives legacies and then the residue, that residue is chargeable with the legacies. Now, the payment of the legacies is distinctly one of the trusts of the will, and it seems to me, apart from anything else, that the trustees have a duty to perform in the discharge of these legacies, and that if this duty is to be performed it is for them to say whether they require to sell the residuary real estate for such purpose. I am only considering the question as between the vendors and the purchaser, who is not bound to inquire, and if he did would probably not be told, why the property is put up for sale. It is sufficient for him that the vendors have a power of sale which is exercisable for the purposes of the will. If the beneficiaries were here suing the trustees and attempting to prevent the sale, then, of course, the trustees would be obliged to say that they retained the property for the specific purposes of the will. But the question here is simply one between the vendors and the purchaser, and assuming the vendors to be acting honestly, they have a power of sale which they may exercise.

I therefore discharge the order made in chambers and overrule the purchaser's objections. I declare that the vendors have made a good title. The purchaser must pay the costs both here and in chambers.

Solicitors, Preston, Stow, & Preston, for Rowlands & Son, Birmingham; Emmet & Co., for J. C. Fowke & Son, Birmingham.

Chan. Div. Kekewich, J. } June 24, 25, 1896.

In re SMITH.

DAVIDSON v. MYRTLE. (a.)

Trustee—Investment—Company incorporated by Act of Parliament.

Where a testator had empowered the trustees of his will to invest "in or upon the bonds, debentures, or debenture stock of any company incorporated by Act of Parliament,"

Held, that the trustees were not empowered to invest on the bonds or debenture securities of a company incorporated by registration under the Companies Act of 1862.

(a.) Reported by C. C. HENSLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Summons.

John Smith, by his will made in April, 1895, after appointing the plaintiffs, Robert Davidson and Arthur Humbert executors and trustees of his will, and making various dispositions of his property as therein mentioned, declared that they should stand possessed of his residuary estate upon trust to invest the same "in or upon any of the public stock funds or securities of the United Kingdom, or any real or leasehold securities, or in or upon the bonds, debentures, or debenture stock of any company incorporated by Act of Parliament and paying a dividend upon its ordinary stock or shares," with a discretionary power to vary and transpose the investments for others of a similar nature.

The testator died on the 5th of December, 1895, and his will was proved on 31st of December, 1895, by the plaintiffs. This was an originating summons taken out by the trustees to determine (inter alia) the question whether the investment clause in the will authorized them to invest in or upon the bonds, debentures, or debenture-stock of any company incorporated by registration under the Companies Act of 1862. The defendants were nieces and nephews, the residuary legatees of the testator.

Renshaw, Q.C., and Jason Smith, for the trustees.—A company registered under the Companies Act, 1862, is a company incorporated by Act of Parliament: Edwards v. Edmunds, 34 L. T. N. S. 522, 24 W. R. Dig. 300; Elve v. Boyton, [1891] 1 Ch. 501, 39 W. R. Dig. 244; Trustee Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 53), ss. 1 & 3.

Warmington, Q.C., Warrington, Q.C., and P. B. Lambert, for Mrs. Myrtle, a residuary legatee.—"Companies incorporated by Act of Parliament" is not equivalent to "Companies registered under the Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89)." (They referred to parts 7 and 8 of the Act of 1862.) The expression "company" in the Forged Transfers Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 43), is by section 2 defined as meaning "any company incorporated by or in pursuance of any Act of Parliament or by Royal Charter."

Haldane, Q.C., and Methold, for Mrs. Humbert and Mrs. Smith.

Bramwell Davis, Q.C., and Owen Thompson, for three nephews.

A. à B. Terrell, for the remaining nephew, all in the same interest.

KEKEWICH, J.—The real question as it presents itself to my mind is whether I am free to express an opinion at all. If the point has been decided by Hall, V.C., or still more if it has been decided by the Court of Appeal, I have nothing to do but to perform the agreeable duty of obedience, and follow those who have decided the point. I cannot say that the point was decided by Hall, V.C., in Edwards v. Edmunds. No doubt he did not decide against the view that a company registered is not a company incorporated by Act of Parliament; but that was not the real question which was present to his mind. There was in that case a power to retain the shares, and therefore he found that the trustees had done their duty and had not committed any breach of trust in not selling, not because they were empowered to invest in that way, but because they had a power to retain. As regards the new shares he certainly held that Edmunds was not wrong in accepting them. He said, "I do not say that Edmunds was wrong in accepting the shares, though he would have been perfectly justified in refusing to take them"—that is to say, he appears to think he had a discretion. That does, no doubt, imply that he was at liberty to accept them, yet it is not a neat decision on the point.

Then came the case of Elve v. Boyton, and that is a decision very much nearer the point. There the company was not incorporated by Act of Parliament devoted to the incorporation of the company, but was incorporated by Royal Charter made in pursuance of the Act of Parliament—that is to say, there was the authority or (as lawyers in some connections call it) the "power" given to the Crown to incorporate it. Lindley, L.J., uses the very words at p. 507 of (1891) 1 Ch.: "It empowers the Crown to grant charters of incorporation to persons who shall be liable to calls, amongst other things which the Crown could not do." Then there are certain precautions. Then he says at p. 508: "The real truth is, that, if you look at it very closely, the corporation owed its birth and creation to the joint effect of the Charter and of the Act of Parliament, and you can no more neglect the Act of Parliament than you can neglect the Charter." It is in strict analogy to my mind to a power in a deed exercised, say, by a will, in which the ultimate donee takes both under a deed creating the power, and the will exercising the power. Lindley, L.J., says, at p. 508: "It appears to us that, upon any reasonable construction of this clause, this first corporation was a corporation incorporated by Act of Parliament within the true meaning of that clause." That seems to be a question differing rather from that which I have to decide. The power given in that case was a power given to the Crown—given as it might very well be—in pursuance of the existing practice of the Legislature to empower some of the departments of the executive to create corporations; the practice is to do this by means of provisional orders, which are afterwards confirmed by an Act of Parliament which groups several together, and gives them legislative force. That does not seem to be precisely the same case as this. I have no desire to cut down the reasoning of the Lords Justices in Elve v. Boyton. If I were at liberty to do so I would much rather boldly follow them, but I do not think I have got sufficient guide, and I am bound to act on my own opinion. It seems to me there is all the distinction in the world between a corporation created by the Crown or by any body of persons in pursuance of powers delegated by the Legislature, and the creation of an incorporated company by seven persons complying with certain rules (or not complying with them sometimes) and thereby creating a corporation which, after all, may be very little more than a sham. I believe that the general acceptation of the expression "incorporated by Act of Parliament" among conveyancers has been for many years "incorporated by an Act of Parliament devoted to that particular end." No doubt you have the words "by special Act of Parliament" inserted in many of the conveyancing forms, but I do not think it is always so; and as to the expression "and by Royal Charter" my own recollection is that it is by no means always put in as an alternative to the old form; and I think if you asked a good conveyancer what "incorporated by Act of Parliament" meant, he would say "A corporation which owes its origin—its corporate existence—to a clause in a particular Act of Parliament," and that anything less than that, is not incorporation by Act of Parliament.

Mr. Warmington alluded generally to the Companies Act of 1862. This very Act of 1862 in clause 199, which comes under part 8, makes use of the expression "incorporated by Act of Parliament"; it says: "Subject as hereinafter mentioned any partnership, association, or company except railway companies incorporated by Act of Parliament." That is only an illustration of the reasoning why I think the phrase "incorporated by Act of Parliament" has been generally used, or, if not generally used, generally understood by experts in the sense in which I have used it; and as I am not bound by authority I must follow the bent of my own inclination, and hold that "incorporated by Act of Parliament" is not equivalent to "incorporated by registration under the Companies Act, 1862."

Solicitors, R. S. Taylor, Son, & Humbert; William Stubbs, for Hirst & Capes, Harrogate; Theodore Allingham.

Q. B. Div.
(Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J., and Wills, J.)

May 15; June 18, 1896.

MAYOR, &c., OF EASTBOURNE v. BRADFORD. (a)

Local government—Drainage—Single drain connecting different houses with public sewer—Liability to repair—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 4, 13, 41—Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 59), s. 19.

In an urban district in which Part III. of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890, had been adopted several houses belonging to different owners were connected with the public sewer by a single drain, constructed previously to the adoption of that Act.

Held, that the drain was a "single private drain" within the meaning of section 19 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890, and that the local sanitary authority were entitled to recover from the owner of one of the houses his proportion of the cost incurred by them in re-laying the drain.

Self v. The Hove Commissioners, 43 W. R. 300, [1895] 1 Q. B. 685, followed.

Hill v. Hair, 43 W. R. 651, [1895] 1 Q. B. 906, disapproved.

Appeal by the defendant from the decision of the judge of the Eastbourne County Court.

The facts and the arguments sufficiently appear from the judgments.

May 15.—Macmorran, Q.C., for the defendant.

Bozall, for the plaintiffs.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 18.—The following judgments were read:—

Lord RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN, C.J.—This is an appeal from the decision of the county court judge of Eastbourne in an action brought by the Corporation of Eastbourne against one Bradford to recover the sum of £2 7s. 2d., which is a proportion of certain expenses incurred in relaying a drain connecting a house belonging to the defendant and other houses belonging to different owners with a public sewer. The drain in question drains houses Nos. 13, 11, 9, and 7 in the Pevensey-road, and Nos. 13 and 14 in Little North-street, and, passing through private property, it joins the main public sewer in Susan's-road. The facts were agreed upon by the parties, and the only question for the decision of the county court judge was whether the conduit in question is a public sewer within the meaning of the Public Health Acts, 1875 and 1890, or a single private drain within the meaning of section 19 of the Act of 1890.

The learned county court judge considered himself bound by the decision of the Divisional Court in the case of Self v. The Hove Commissioners, and held that the conduit was a single private drain, and judgment was given for the plaintiff corporation with leave to appeal. On the argument before us the cases of Travis v. Uttley, 42 W. R. 461, [1894] 1 Q. B. 233; Self v. The Hove Commissioners, 43 W. R. 300, [1895] 1 Q. B. 685; and Hill v. Hair, 43 W. R. 651, [1895] 1 Q. B. 906, were cited.

In Travis v. Uttley the drain passed through private grounds, and received the drainage of three houses before it joined the main sewer; but the three houses so drained belonged to one person, consequently section 19 of the Act of 1890 did not apply. It was there held that the conduit was, so far as it was in question in that case, a sewer repairable by the public authority. I think the judgments in that case were right. I say nothing about some expressions appearing in those judgments which were incidental and were not necessary for the purpose of the decision arrived at.

In the case of Self v. The Hove Commissioners two houses belonging to different owners were connected with a public sewer by a single private drain. This was therefore held to be a drain within the meaning of section 19 of the Public Health Act, 1890, and as the local authority had adopted Part III. of the Act of 1890, section 19 applied.

In the case of Hill v. Hair the drain was similar to that in Self v. The Hove Commissioners, a drain carrying the drainage of the respondent's house, and of other houses belonging to different owners, into a public sewer. Here, also, the local authority had adopted the Act of 1890, but the court held that section 19 of that Act did not apply.

In these two cases different and conflicting decisions were therefore given.

There is no substantial difference between the drain in the case before us and that in Self v. The Hove Commissioners and that in Hill v. Hair. In the present case it drains houses belonging to different owners and enters the public sewer, and the local authority has adopted the Act of 1890.

In consequence of the impossibility of reconciling the decisions in Self v. The Hove Commissioners and Hill v. Hair, I have reconsidered the whole question independently of these cases. The real question is—What is the proper application of section 19 of the Public Health Amendment Act, 1890? The section says that, where two or more houses belonging to different owners are connected with the public sewer by a single private drain, the local authority may deal with that drain in the same way, both as to the execution of works and recovery of expenses, as it may deal with drains, ashpits, and cesspools, under section 41 of the Public Health Act, 1875. The first point of difficulty is, What is a single private drain? Sub-section 3 says that a drain includes a drain used for the drainage of more than one building. This very much widens the definition of drain given in section 4 of the principal Act of 1875. In that section a drain means any drain of and used for the drainage of one building only or of premises within the same curtilage. What, then, is the meaning, in section 19, of the words, "single private drain"? What is a private drain and can there be a private drain connecting two or more houses (belonging to different owners) with a public sewer? Prior to the passing of the Act of 1890, by the operation of the Act of 1875 (and, indeed, by the operation of the prior Act of 1848) there could not be a private drain which connected two or more houses (belonging to different owners) with a public sewer, because any such drain was a sewer, and was a sewer vested in the local authority. Therefore it might be said that the drain in this case is not a private drain because it was vested in the local authority. Therefore it might be said that the drain in this case is not a private drain because it was vested in the local authority, if the word "private is to be taken as used in the sense of belonging to an individual; and it was not a drain at all, because it came under the definition of "sewer" in section 4 of the Act of 1848. But the Act of 1890, for the purposes of section 19, and for those purposes only, widens the definition of "drain" contained in section 4 of the Act of 1875, and therefore there seems to be no difficulty in interpreting section 19 with regard to the word "drain." In the case before us it seems to me to be clear that the drain was a drain within the meaning of the definition given in sub-section 3 of section 19.

(a) Reported by T. R. COLQUHOUN DILL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The next question is—What is the meaning of the word "private" in "single private drain," and what meaning can be given to it which shall harmonize with the application of section 13 of the Public Health Act, 1875? It has been suggested that the expression "private drain" might be said to apply only to drains of the character set out in section 19 of the Act of 1890, which were constructed after the passing of the Act of 1890—in other words, that the Act has no retrospective force. That would be a very simple way of getting out of the difficulties of the section. But the words of the section are not "shall be," but "are," and therefore, when it says that where two or more houses belonging to different owners are connected with the public sewer, it points, I think, to a state of things in existence at the time of the passing of the Act which is to be altered. If then the provision is retrospective, what effect is to be given to section 13 of the Act of 1875 in this connection? Now that section (13) says that all existing and future sewers shall vest in and be under the control of the local authority. The word "sewer" here will no longer include the drain in question in this case, which is a drain under and for the purposes only of section 19 of the Act of 1890. But inasmuch as prior to the passing of the Act of 1890 that drain was a sewer vesting in the local authority, does the vesting control the natural application of the new definition? If, indeed, the absolute property in the sewer were given by section 13 of the Act of 1875 to the local authority, one might feel some difficulty in making this section applicable to drains constructed prior to 1890, notwithstanding the use of the word "are." But what is the meaning of the word "vest" in section 13 of the Act of 1875? It has been clearly held that the vesting is not a giving of the property in the sewer and in the soil surrounding it to the local authority, but gives such ownership and such rights only as are necessary for the purpose of carrying out the duties of a local authority with regard to the subject-matter—Hinde v. Chorlton, 15 W. R. 226, L. R. 2. C. P. at p. 116; Coverdale v. Charlton, 26 W. R. 687, 4 Q. B. D. 104; Rolls v. The Vestry of St. George the Martyr, Southwark, 28 W. R. 867, 14 Ch. D. 785; Attorney-General v. Guardians of Dorking, 30 W. R. 579, 20 Ch. D. 595; The Mayor, &c., of Birkenhead v. London and North-Western Railway Co., 15 Q. B. D. 572, 34 W. R. Dig. 100. But if the duty is partly or entirely shifted from the local authority to individuals, that right which the word "vest" gives to the local authority disappears to the same extent. Therefore it does not appear that there is any difficulty arising from the word "vest" in section 13 of the Act of 1875. The vesting was only for the purpose of performing a duty, and the duty having ex hypothesi been shifted on to the owner, there is no difficulty in arriving at the proper interpretation of section 19 of the Act of 1890 by reason of the use of the word "vest" in section 13 of the Act of 1875.

I am unable to see any special use in the word "private" in this section, but it is intelligible, and, I think, means a drain originally constructed for the drainage of one or more houses as distinguished from a drain or sewer which any member of the public may have a right to use by connecting to it the drain from his own house. We must put some reasonable interpretation on the section, and on this construction of it there is no difficulty in applying it to the present case. If it does not govern the class of drain in this case, which is for all purposes identical with that in Self v. The Hove Commissioners and in Hill v. Hair, what application can the section have? A drain now, by the combined operation of section 4 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and section 19 of the Act of 1890, for the purposes of this latter section and for those purposes only, includes (1) a drain used for the drainage of one building only; (2) a drain used for the drainage of premises within the same curtilage; and (3) a drain used for the drainage of more than one building.

The section therefore applies to two or more houses belonging to different owners connected with a public sewer by a single private drain, whether within the same curtilage or not. If it was only intended to apply to drains which did not vest in the local authority prior to 1890, it is difficult to understand the object of making a new definition of the word drain for the purposes of applying section 41 of the Act of 1875. The local authorities could already deal with drains draining one building and drains draining premises within the same curtilage: see section 4 of the Act of 1875 and section 41 of the same Act. Moreover, the object of section 19 of the Act of 1890 is to give increased power to the local authorities enumerated in the Act, and therefore the second exception under the definition of sewer in section 4 of the Act of 1875 does not help us, especially as the class of drains there mentioned are not sewers. Further, since it is intended to throw upon owners of houses certain expenses, it is difficult to suppose that the section can have been intended to operate on the first exception to section 13 of the Act of 1875—viz., sewers made for profit.

It is difficult to suppose that the legislature intended that the owners of houses are to be called upon to pay the cost of repairing a sewage system such as that in Minehead Local Board v. Luttrell, 42 W. R. 667, [1894] 2 Ch. 178. The second exception of section 13 of the Act of 1875 affords no assistance, as it deals with land drainage; neither does the third exception, because the local authority can have no power over these sewers, except as provided by section 327 (1). Nor does the proviso of section 13 help us, as it points to public sewers constructed by a public body for public use. It appears to me to follow that the section could practically have no operation at all if it were not intended to apply to such cases as that before us.

I am therefore of opinion that in this case the drain was a single private drain connecting two or more houses belonging to different owners with the public sewer, and that therefore under section 19 of the Act of 1890 the local authority was entitled to proceed under section 41 of the Act of 1875. I agree in the decision of Self v. The Hove Commissioners, and I think the county court judge was right in following it. It follows that I do not agree with the judgment in Hill v. Hair.

I may add that I think it is to be regretted that the legislature did not pass some such provision as clause 134 of the Carlisle Corporation Act, cited in Hill v. Hair, instead of a section limited as section 19 of the Act of 1890 is. Had they done so, drains like that in Travis v. Uttley would have stood on the same footing as the drain in this case. I cannot avoid pointing out the highly unsatisfactory state of the existing legislation relating to questions of public health and to cognate questions of local authority under the Acts dealing with that subject. It is entirely unsystematic and most confused, and in the public interest steps ought to be speedily taken to reduce the existing chaos into system and order.

WILLS, J.—The plaintiffs in this case are the local sanitary authority of the borough of Eastbourne, and they have, under the provisions of section 3 of 53 & 54 Vict. c. 49 (Public Health Act, 1890), adopted, amongst other provisions of that Act, section 19, which is therefore in force in that borough.

The defendant is the owner of a house which is connected with the public sewer by a pipe or conduit, which passing through private property receives the drainage both of the defendant's house and of several other houses belonging to different owners. This pipe had become a nuisance and injurious to health, and the plaintiffs took the necessary steps, and all things happened to entitle them to execute the works necessary to abate the nuisance. The proportion of the total cost to be charged to the plaintiffs has been ascertained as provided by section 19 of the Act of 1890, and this action is brought in the county court by virtue of section 261 of the Act of 1875.

If the Act of 1875 alone were applicable, the pipe in question, from the point at all events where it receives the drainage of the second house, would be a "sewer" within the interpretation clause (section 4).

Section 19, however, of the Act of 1890 is the enactment applicable to this case. By that section it is provided that "where two or more houses belonging to different owners are connected with a public sewer by a single private drain, an application may be made under section 41 of the Public Health Act, 1875 (relating to complaints as to nuisances from drains), and the local authority may recover any expenses incurred by them in executing any works under the powers conferred upon them by that section from the owners of the houses," in shares or proportions to be assigned, as therein provided, to each owner respectively.

As in the Public Health Act, 1890, "drain" and "sewer" are, where the context does not require otherwise, to have the same meaning as in the Act of 1875, this enactment, read with the interpretation clause of the Act of 1875, would involve a contradiction in terms, for the single private conduit carrying the drainage of two houses would be excluded from the definition of drain and fall within that of a sewer. It is therefore a case where the context does require that the word "drain" in section 19 should not receive the statutory definition. But the Legislature has not left this matter to inference, and has provided by sub-section 3 of the same section that "for the purposes of this section the expression "drain" includes a drain "used for the drainage of more than one building."

The section, therefore, seems to me to say in terms that the definition of "drain" in the Public Health Act of 1875 is not to prevent the words of the section from receiving their natural interpretation, and that for the purposes of that section, and of that section only, the definition of "drain" in the Act of 1875 shall be qualified in the manner and to the extent pointed out in sub-section 3.

I do not apprehend, therefore, that the use of the expression "private" drain connecting two or more houses with the public sewer effects any change in the ownership of the conduit which serves two houses or prevents it from being for any other purposes than those covered by section 19 a sewer and not a drain. But for the purposes of this section I cannot see why there is any difficulty in giving to the language used its natural meaning, and saying that in such a case as the present the section is directly applicable, and does so far as proceedings under section 41 of the Act of 1875 are concerned, and to that extent and in that case only, alter the incidence of the cost of executing the necessary works contemplated by that section and throw them upon the owner.

In the remarks of the Lord Chief Justice as to the meaning and application of the expression "vest" I entirely agree.

It may be asked what is the meaning of a "private drain" serving two houses, when the moment it serves two houses it becomes, so far as ownership is concerned, public property? It seems to me that the section itself shows clearly enough what is meant. The "private drain" is contrasted with the "public sewer." The public sewer is obviously meant here to indicate a sewer which serves the public generally, and has or may have an indefinite number of houses connected with it, either directly or because branch sewers came into it; whereas the "private drain," serving two or more houses, is that of which the natural use is confined to those houses, and with which other houses belonging to other owners could not be connected without the consent of the persons through whose land it runs. The provision so understood does not seem unreasonable. A drain of this character is, generally, an economical substitute for separate drains from each of the houses served by it to the public sewer. As a general rule no public use can be made of such a drain, and there does not seem any reason in the nature of things why the owners of houses so drained should, by reason of the mere fact that two or more of them use the same "private drain," escape the burden which would fall upon them if each house ran its drain direct into the public sewer.

I do not mean to say that the scheme is complete or logical. If two or more houses situated as those in the present case belonged to one owner, this section would not apply, and yet there is no reason of justice or policy which can be urged in support of such distinctive treatment. The truth is that the whole of our sanitary legislature is in a state which I hardly like to characterize in the language which naturally suggests itself, and the attempt to extract from the various details of the legislation a set of harmonious principles always underlying the specific provisions is, I am afraid, futile.

It has been suggested that section 19 might have been intended to apply to buildings and drains not existing at the time the Act was passed; but I do not think there is anything in the language to point to such an interpretation. The words are, "where two or more houses belonging to different owners are"—not "shall be"—"connected with a single private drain," and I think it was intended to the limited extent to which section 19 is confined to alter the law which existed at the date of the passing of the Act of 1890 with respect to houses and drains then existing as well as with respect to such as should thereafter be constructed.

The present case is entirely within the decision in Self v. The Commissioners of Hove. Under ordinary circumstances no more need have been said in this court. That case is an authority which we ought to follow unless and until overruled by the Court of Appeal. But I have discussed the question de novo out of respect to the judgment of my brothers Cave and Lawrance, JJ., in Hill v. Hair. The facts of the case make it substantially undistinguishable from the present case. It is true that it is not stated that the proceedings were those authorized by section 19 of the Act of 1890, and the notice mentioned in the report as having been given by the local authority looks rather more like one under section 91 than one under section 41 of the Public Health Act of 1875, but no such distinction was made in the argument or the judgment, and my brother Cave expressed in very unmistakable language his opinion that the decision in Self v. The Commissioners of Hove, and especially my judgment, were wrong, not to say very wrong indeed. This expression of his opinion has led me to review the whole question with the result I have already stated.

My brother Cave thinks that it was not intended to alter the law with respect to drains, which by virtue of the general provisions of the Public Health Act, 1875, were sewers, and that not only did they remain vested in and under the control of the local authority, and generally repairable at their expense, but that the removal of nuisances arising in them could not be dealt with under section 19 of the Act of 1890, and that as a consequence the cost of such works as the present case deals with cannot be thrown upon the owner. He recognizes that section 19 of the Act of 1890 requires some subject-matter to operate upon, but thinks that such subject-matter is confined to sewers made for private profit (which under section 13 of the Act of 1875 do not vest in the local authority), and to drains or sewers used for draining premises within the same curtilage—which under section 4 fall within the description of drains. But as section 19 is confined to the case of a private drain serving two or more houses belonging to different owners—a part of the phraseology of section 19 which appears to have escaped the notice of my brother Cave—it can hardly be applicable to a drain serving premises within the same curtilage, and the class of sewers made by any person for his own profit, seems, according to the authorities, to be of a kind totally different from any that are the least likely to come within the operation of section 19 of the Act of 1890. See Ferrand v. Hallas Land and Building Co., 41 W. R. 580, [1893] 2 Q. B. 135; Minehead Local Board v. Luttrell; Acton Local Board v. Batten, 28 Ch. D. 283, 33 W. R. Dig. 128; Pinnock v. Waterworth, 51 J. P. 248. If it be possible to conceive a case in which a sewer constructed by anyone for his own profit could fall within the scope of section 19, the operation of the section would be reduced to limits of the very narrowest possible kind, and I find it difficult to concur with my brother Cave in thinking that the possible existence of such a case can be an adequate reason for the legislation effected by section 19. It is to be observed that sub-section 3 of section 19, if one may judge from the reports of Hill v. Hair as given in the Law Reports and in the Law Journal, does not seem to have been successfully pressed upon my learned brother's attention.

A good deal has been said in the course of the argument about Travis v. Uttley. But it appears to me to be a case having no bearing upon the present question. I have referred to the special case filed in the court, and I find that the facts of that case were that three houses numbered respectively 109, 107, and 105 were served by one common pipe or conduit which received the drainage first of No. 109, then of No. 107, and then of No. 105. This common conduit ran into the public sewer. It was defective below 109, so that the sewage leaked into the cellars of Nos. 107 and 105. Proceedings were taken by the inspector of nuisances against the respondent, who was the owner of all the three houses under sections 91-94 of the Act of 1875, on the ground that upon his premises was this "drain"—as it was alleged to be—which was in such a state to be injurious to health. The magistrates dismissed the information on the ground that the nuisance arose not from a defective drain but from a defective sewer, and that the respondent therefore was not liable. The Divisional Court, consisting of my brother Wright and myself, upheld their decision and dismissed the appeal.

The judgment was clearly right. The place where the nuisance existed was below the junction of the drain from the second house. The plans which formed part of the case seem to me to make this perfectly clear. There is an expression in my judgment which my brother Cave and myself have very recently decided to be erroneous. I have said that "it is impossible to say that the part which is used for the drainage of one building is a drain and the rest a sewer. The drain is a sewer from end to end." In Kershaw v. Taylor, 44 W. R. 28, [1895] 2 Q. B. 471, however, the Court of Appeal decided that under such circumstances the same conduit was a drain so long as it received the drainage of one house only, but a sewer from the point where the drainage of the second house came into the conduit. The passage therefore which I have cited from my judgment in Travis v. Uttley must be considered as erroneous. It was not necessary for the judgment, and the correction does not affect the decision. The error, however, in the obiter dictum and the decision itself are alike foreign to the present inquiry; Travis v. Uttley had nothing to do with section 19 of the Act of 1890, and it has no bearing at all upon the present case.

Self v. The Commissioners of Hove, unless it is to be discarded, is a decision precisely in point with respect to the present case. For the reasons I have given I think that it was rightly decided, and as the learned Lord Chief Justice has come to the same conclusion, there is no reason for departing from the usual course of treating it as an authority to be followed.

This appeal must therefore be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for appellant, F. D. W. Hutton, for F. Lawson Lewis, Eastbourne.

Solicitors for respondents, Sharpe, Parker, Pritchards, & Barham, for H. W. Fovargue, Town Clerk, Eastbourne.

House of Lords.

From C. A. (England). — May 5, 1896.

SAVOY OVERSEERS v. ART UNION OF LONDON. (a.)

Poor law—Rating—Exemption—Society instituted for the purposes of science, literature, or the fine arts—Supported by voluntary contributions—Art Union—6 & 7 Vict. c. 36, s. 1.

The Art Union of London is a society instituted for the purposes of the fine arts exclusively, but it is not a society supported by voluntary contributions within section 1 of the 6 & 7 Vict. c. 36, as the subscribers get an equivalent for their subscriptions, and consequently the society is not exempt from liability to be rated to the poor and other local rates in respect of the premises occupied by it.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (42 W. R. 690, [1894] 2 Q. B. 609) reversed.

This was an appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal (Lord Esher, M.R., and Kay, L.J.; A. L. Smith, L.J., dissenting), reported 42 W. R. 690, [1894]

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

2 Q. B. 609, reversing the judgment of the Divisional Court (Wright and Collins, JJ.) on a special case stated under 12 & 13 Vict. c. 45.

The facts are given in the report in the court below, and sufficiently appear in Lord Herschell's judgment.

Sir E. Clarke, Q.C., and Haldenstein, for the appellants.

Sir R. Reid, Q.C., and Bristowe, for the respondents.

Lord HALSBURY, L.C.—The appellants in this case are the overseers of the poor and chapelwarden of the Royal Precinct of the Savoy, within which precinct the Art Union of London have premises which are rateable, unless they are exempted from such rating by virtue of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 36, s. 1, which is as follows:—"That from and after the 1st day of October, 1843, no person or persons shall be assessed or rated, or liable to be assessed or rated, or liable to pay, to any county borough, parochial, or other local rates or cesses in respect of any land, houses, or buildings, or parts of houses or buildings, belonging to any society instituted for purposes of science, literature, or the fine arts exclusively, either as tenant or as owner, and occupied by it for the transaction of its business, and for carrying into effect its purposes, provided that such society shall be supported wholly or in part by annual voluntary contributions, and shall not, and by its laws may not, make any dividend, gift, division, or bonus in money unto or between any of its members, and provided also that such society shall obtain the certificate of the barrister-at-law or Lord Advocate, as hereinafter mentioned."

The question in this case depends upon a very simple alternative exposition of the sense in which the Legislature used the word "voluntary." The society is partly supported by annual contributions and the word "voluntary" must be construed in order to decide whether it is partly supported by voluntary contributions. Two conditions have been insisted on for the exemption claimed by the Art Union. One is—the exclusive devotion of its property to the purposes of art, upon which, as it appears to me, no question arises. But the other condition is that it must be wholly or in part supported by voluntary contributions.

There is no doubt that the word "voluntary" is constantly used in two different senses. It is constantly used as the antithesis of something done under compulsion; but it is also used commonly among lawyers, and not uncommonly among other people, as denoting the obtaining or giving of something without anything being obtained in return. A lawyer speaks of a voluntary conveyance as opposed to one which involves valuable consideration. It is common to hear of some institution supported by voluntary contributions. There is no doubt of the frequent use of the word "voluntary" in both these senses, and the problem to be solved is in what sense, or in which of these two senses, the Legislature has used the word in the section under consideration. It is manifest that if used in the former sense every purchase is voluntary since no one can be compelled to buy; but if in the latter sense, there are a great many institutions which the Legislature may well have intended to encourage, because, if people gave their money without receiving anything in return, towards the encouragement of objects which the Legislature approved, there would be a reason why the Legislature should exempt such institutions from rating, since they would pro tanto relieve the national funds from burdens which, but for such voluntary contributions, the Legislature itself might be called upon to bear, if such institutions were to exist at all. This consideration would seem to show that it is in the latter sense that the word is used, and, if so, it is fatal to the claim of the Art Union to be relieved from the burden in question. It hardly admits of debate that the Art Union gives to every subscriber full value for his money; the document published by the Art Union itself appears to establish very clearly that the subscriber obtains as an equivalent for his contribution money's worth at least equal to, if not beyond, the amount he has subscribed. I cannot, therefore, regard this as a voluntary contribution; it is a prudent and well-rewarded investment. The result is that the exemption cannot be insisted on, and I move your Lordships that the judgment of the Court of Appeal be reversed and the appeal allowed with costs.

Lord HERSCHELL.—The question raised by this appeal is, whether the respondents are exempt from liability to be rated in respect of a building occupied by them, on the ground that it belongs to a society instituted for purposes of the Fine Arts exclusively, and is occupied by it for carrying into effect its purposes, and that the society is supported wholly or in part by annual voluntary contributions.

The Divisional Court of the Queen's Bench held that the respondents were not so exempt, but this judgment was reversed by the Court of Appeal, A. L. Smith, L.J., dissenting.

It is stated by the charter that the respondent society was formed "for the general advancement of the fine arts, and for promoting and facilitating a greater knowledge and love of the arts of design on the part of the public generally." Whatever view may be taken of the means employed to accomplish this end, I see no reason to doubt that the society was instituted for the purposes of the fine arts exclusively within the meaning of the statute, and that these purposes have not been departed from. Upon this point the Court of Appeal was unanimous. The question which gave rise to a difference of opinion is one of greater difficulty. Is the society supported wholly or in part "by annual voluntary contributions"? These words have been the subject of much discussion, and there are many judicial dicta bearing upon their meaning. I proceed at once to an examination of the authorities, for if these had been uniform and consistent your lordships would have been unwilling, though not bound by them, to disturb a long settled construction of the statute. But it will be seen that this is very far from being the case.

The earliest of the authorities is the Churchwardens of Birmingham v. Shaw, 10 Q. B. 868. Lord Denman, C.J., in delivering the judgment of the court, said: "It is perhaps not easy to determine what the Legislature intended by the word 'voluntary' in this combination. . . . Upon consideration we think that annual contributions will satisfy the condition required if they commence of the party's own choice, are so continued, and may be withdrawn at pleasure. . . . If the contributor was free to commence his contribution and incurs no legal obligation to continue it when he has once commenced, and upon ceasing to contribute will lose no more than the privileges of membership in respect of which he became a contributor, it seems to us that he must be considered a voluntary contributor, unless we add something to the idea of voluntariness, which in ordinary language it does not import. And that is what, in fact, is done by those who contend that it must also be gratuitous and bring no return of any kind to the contributor." This judgment appears to me to lose sight of the fact that what has to be construed is the combination "voluntary contributions," and not merely the word "voluntary" alone, or in some other combination. It may be that this word is ordinarily used as the antithesis to "compulsory," though in legal parlance it is quite commonly employed to describe that which is gratuitous and without consideration. But putting aside this legal acceptation of the words, I cannot think that "voluntary contributions" in the statute means the same thing as "voluntary payments," or that an institution can properly be said to be supported by voluntary contributions where these are the price paid for a purchase, whether of goods or advantages, merely because the person making the payment was under no obligation to do so.

The Birmingham case was followed in R. v. Overseers of Manchester, 16 Q. B. 449, the Royal Manchester Institution being held exempt from rating. In R. v. Brandt, 16 Q. B. 462, however, where it was sought to extend the exemption to a concert hall, to the concerts in which subscribers and their friends alone were admitted, Lord Campbell, C.J., said: "We look upon this institution as totally different from the Birmingham Library or the Manchester Institution, where the members, not with a view to their own gratification but to the good of others, by cultivating in them a taste for literature, science, and the fine arts, subscribe money and continue their personal trouble, and may therefore be fairly supposed to be the objects of the special favour of the Legislature at the cost of their fellow parishioners." Again, in the case of R. v. Gaskell, 16 Q. B. 472, a house belonging to the "Portico Society," containing a library and reading-room, the use of which was confined to members of the society, was on the same grounds held not exempt.

The question next arose in the case of the Russell Institution: Russell Institution v. Vestry of St. Giles, 2 W. R. 169, 3 E. & B. 416. It was held not to be a society instituted for purposes of literature exclusively, but Lord Campbell made some observations on the part of the enactment now under consideration. "It is unnecessary," he said, "to decide whether this be a society supported in part by annual voluntary contributions within the meaning of the Act. There may be ground for contending that 'contribution' here does not mean a voluntary annual subscription or payment of money for value received, or expected to be received, by the party paying, but means a gift from disinterested motives for the benefit of others." In St. Anne's v. The Linnæan Society, 2 W. R. 516, 3 E. & B. 793, a building belonging to that society was held to be within the exemption. Lord Campbell said: "The case in no way resembles the Russell Institution, where newspapers were supplied and accommodations given to the subscribers, preventing the payments from being mere voluntary contributions for the promotion of literature." It is to be noted, too, that the mere fact that the payments of the Fellows were voluntary in the sense that they might be discontinued at any time was apparently treated as unimportant, for the Chief Justice, after pointing out that though the Fellows were under an obligation to pay while they continued Fellows, the payment was still voluntary, seeing that the obligation was incurred by a voluntary engagement from which the Fellows were at liberty to withdraw, added, "though I do not say that, even if they had no longer the power to withdraw, the payment would be the less voluntary."

Whilst the building belonging to the Linnæan Society accordingly obtained the benefit of the exemption, it was held inapplicable to the buildings of the Zoological Society: Marylebone Vestry v. Zoological Society, 2 W. R. 491, 3 E. & B. 807. The decision turned mainly upon the earlier provisions of the enactment, but Lord Campbell, C.J., observed that if it had been necessary to decide the point, he should have said that the contributions were not voluntary contributions within the meaning of the Act, inasmuch as subscribers looked to the amusement which they and their families and friends would derive from their access to the gardens. And on the same point Erle, J., said: "As to the question whether the contributions are voluntary, we have expressed an opinion that contributions are not so where the intention is to purchase a private convenience, as is the case, I believe, with many institutions which also embrace scientific objects."

In the case of the Bradford Library (1 E. & E. 96), which was open only to members, the Queen's Bench followed the Birmingham case. Erle, J., said: "Although personal benefit is derived by each subscriber, that is not a personal benefit or convenience such as has been mentioned in some of the cases, which means something in the nature of that derived from an investment of money, though not absolutely a return of so much per cent.; if you, by investment, get something for which you would otherwise have to pay, for instance, the advantage of non-payment on admission to public gardens, then "the subscription is not voluntary." This does not seem to me quite consistent with the dictum of the same learned judge, which I have just quoted. Each member of the library did purchase a private convenience. He obtained the opportunity of reading books which he must otherwise have purchased or hired. This seems to me to be a return for the investment he made in contributing to the funds of the library. I confess I am unable to appreciate the distinction which the learned judge suggests.

Somewhat similar words came before the courts for construction in the case of the Customs and Inland Revenue Act, 1885, which exempted from the taxation thereby imposed "property acquired by or with funds voluntarily contributed." The view taken of the meaning of the words "voluntarily contributed" in the case of In re New University Club, 35 W. R. 774, 18 Q. B. D. 720, and by my noble friends Lords Watson and Macnaghten, in the case of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue v. Forrest, 39 W. R. 33, 15 App. Cas. 334, was in complete accordance with that more than once expressed by Lord Campbell in discussing the meaning of the expression "voluntary contributions."

The matter now comes for the first time before your lordships' house for decision. I do not think it was intended to exempt from rating, buildings belonging to a society merely because the payments by which it was wholly or in part supported were made voluntarily and not compulsorily, when they were not made gratuitously, but were the price of advantages obtained in return for them. The expression "supported by voluntary contributions" has long been well known in connection with hospitals and other institutions; I think the essential idea conveyed by them is that the payments are a gratuitous offering for the benefit of others, and not the price of an advantage purchased by the contributor. It was pointed out by Kay, L.J., that in the case of some hospitals the contributors receive a certain number of letters of admission measured by the amount of their subscriptions. But though this may give them a voice as to the persons who are to be the objects of the charity, I think it would be unreasonable to regard the contribution as being on that account not a gratuitous charitable gift, but the purchase of a personal advantage. If, indeed, a hospital were established on co-operative principles, each contributor being entitled to claim medical treatment there, and the inmates being confined to contributors, I should say that it was not supported by "voluntary contributions," even though there was nothing to compel any person to become a contributor, and he might cease to be so at any time he pleased.

Applying the construction I have put upon the statute to the facts of the present case, I have come to the conclusion that the payments made by the members of the Art Union are not "voluntary contributions." Every member receives each year, in return for his subscription of a guinea, a copy of an engraving, and in addition, one chance in the annual distribution of prizes. He may purchase extra chances at half-a-guinea each. The council also present a consolation prize to members who have paid ten consecutive subscriptions without gaining any prize. This arrangement, they say, "has given great satisfaction and has avoided any disappointment on account of want of success in the annual distribution." And they point out that the engraving given to everyone is a work of the market value at least of his subscription, and that looking to the probable extinction of line engraving, members have the opportunity of acquiring invaluable artists' proofs, the value of which in a few years must rise to many times their present cost. In addition to this, attention is called by the council to the fact that the highest prize of one year, £300, with £200 added by the prizeholder, was expended on the purchase of a picture which had since been sold for upwards of £,1000.

When statements such as these are put forward by the council as an inducement to persons to join the society, I cannot but hold that the contributions of members are not "voluntary contributions" within the meaning of the Act.

I think, therefore, that the judgment appealed from should be reversed.

Lord MACNAGHTEN.—It cannot, I think, be denied that the Art Union of London is a society instituted for the purposes of the fine arts exclusively. That seems to me to be clear on consideration of its charter and byelaws and the provisions of the Art Unions Act, 1846. But it seems to me to be equally clear that the Art Union of London cannot properly be described as a society "supported wholly or in part by annual voluntary contributions." This description, which is an essential condition of immunity under the Act, has given rise to a good deal of controversy and some difference of opinion. Apart from authority, the meaning of the provision would seem to be tolerably obvious. The first observation that must, I think, occur to anyone who may be called upon to construe it is that the phrase which the Legislature has adopted is an old and familiar acquaintance. In the public streets it meets the eye not unfrequently on the walls of hospitals; it is to be found in the forefront of many charitable appeals. So used, it carries with it a meaning which nobody can mistake. It means that the institution on whose behalf the statement is put forward depends for its support on freewill offerings—on the generosity of persons acting from disinterested motives and not looking for any return in the shape of direct personal advantage. Except in the Act of 1843 the expression is not, I think, found in any other connection. Nor is it, so far as I am aware, ever used in any other sense outside the Act. It is only natural to suppose that the enactment points to contributions partaking of a similar character and made in a similar spirit. It appears to me to be almost absurd to say that a society is supported by voluntary contributions when it prides itself, as the Art Union of London openly does, on returning to every contributor the equivalent of his contributions in market value and money's worth.

Very little assistance is, I think, to be derived from the reported cases on the subject. The authorities are, I think, neither clear nor uniform. The error, if I may call it so, began with the case of Churchwardens of Birmingham v. Shaw, 10 Q. B. 868, in 1849. There Denman, C.J., who delivered the opinion of the Court of Queen's Bench, observes that "it is not, perhaps, easy to determine what the Legislature intended by the word 'voluntary' in this combination." Then his lordship proceeds to take the word out of its setting, and to deal with it as if it stood alone. On this the difficulty vanishes, and the conclusion is that if the contributor was free to commence his contribution and incurs no legal obligation to continue it he must be considered a voluntary contributor "unless," as his lordship says, "we add something to the idea of voluntariness, which in ordinary language it does not import." Lord Denman's view was carried still further in a later case, Bradford Library Society v. Churchwardens of Bradford, 1 E. & E. 96, where it was laid down that "a contribution paid under an obligation voluntarily incurred is a voluntary contribution." So that it seems it would not be inappropriate to describe a co-operative store, where membership is constituted by the purchase of an annual ticket, or even the ground landlord of a fashionable quarter in London, as supported in part by annual voluntary contributions. On the other hand, in order to escape from the consequence of this view, which would render the condition under consideration almost, if not altogether, unmeaning, it has been held in several cases that where a contributor derives personal advantage from being a member of a society, the society, though formed for one of the purposes favoured by the Act, cannot be considered as formed for that purpose "exclusively." This mode of construction may be admissible when the society is not incorporated, and its purpose, consequently, is not defined by charter or statute. When, however, that is the case, it seems to confuse the purpose of the society with the object of individual members in joining it. In some cases it has been said that contributions which go to purchase some private benefit in the shape of amusement, or convenience, are not to be deemed voluntary according to the true intention of the Act. I think that is so; but then I think that this intention is only to be discovered by taking the words as they occur—in the combination in which they are placed—not by breaking up a compound expression and weighing the words separately.

I agree with the view that A. L. Smith, L.J., has expressed, and I think that the appeal must be allowed.

Lord SHAND.—In the decision of this case I think a distinction must be clearly drawn between the purpose for which the society was instituted, and the objects of those who join it and who annually subscribe to its funds. The society was, I think, instituted for the promotion of the fine arts exclusively. The question whether it has been supported wholly or in part by voluntary contributions invokes a consideration of the object and purpose which the persons who give the annual contributions have in view in becoming contributors.

Now, it seems to be quite clear that the inducement held out to contributors to join the society, and which therefore may be taken to show the objects for which the contributors become members, is that they will receive a return not in money, but in money's worth, which appears to me to be the same thing, for every contribution made. The members become, in truth, purchasers of personal property in the form of engravings, with the addition of the chance of prizes in the shape of paintings—advantages which form an adequate return for the money subscribed. I agree with your lordships in thinking that money subscribed in this way cannot properly be regarded as "voluntary contributions." That term seems to me to imply not merely that the subscriber chooses of his own free will to make his contribution, but that he does so for the benefit of others—as in the support of a hospital or other charitable institution, or in the promotion of science, literature, or the fine arts. It is not, I think, properly applicable to what is in substance a business transaction or investment, in which the stipulation or at least the agreement is that a personal advantage, substantially of the value of the sum subscribed, is to be received in return by the contributor. I therefore concur in thinking that the judgment of the Court of Appeal should be reversed.

Order appealed from reversed, with costs here and below.

Solicitors for the appellants, B. H. & E. Van Tromp.

Solicitors for the respondents, Hopgood & Dawson.

Court of Appeal.

From Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. (Lord Esher, M.R., and Lopes and A. L. Smith, L.JJ.) — July 16, 1896.

"THE RUTLAND." (a.)

Ship—Pilot—Compulsory pilotage—Exemption—Ship trading from port in Great Britain to port in Europe north and east of Brest—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), s. 625 (3).

A ship engaged on a voyage from the River Plate to Rotterdam with a general cargo had liberty to carry some cattle to London. Having landed the cattle in London, she was proceeding on her way to Rotterdam in charge of a pilot, when she came into collision with another ship within the London district. In proceedings against her for damage, the plea of compulsory pilotage was set up.

Held, that the ship was, at the time of the collision, a ship trading from a port in Great Britain within the London district to a port in Europe north and east of Brest within the meaning of section 625 (3) of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, and that she was therefore exempt from compulsory pilotage.

Courtney v. Cole, 36 W. R. 8, 19 Q. B. D. 447, followed.

Appeal from a judgment of Sir Francis Jeune.

The action was brought by the owners of the steamship Edenbridge against the owners of the steamship Rutland for damage by collision. The plaintiffs alleged that at the time of the collision The Edenbridge was, whilst on a voyage from Rosario and La Plata to Rotterdam viâ London laden with a general cargo, proceeding from the Thames through the East Swin Channel in charge of a duly licensed Trinity House pilot, and that the collision was caused solely by the negligent navigation of The Rutland by the defendants or their servants, and they claimed damages against the defendants.

The defendants denied that the collision was caused or contributed to by the negligent navigation of The Rutland, and alleged that it was caused solely by the negligent navigation of The Edenbridge, and further, by way of counter-claim, they alleged that they had suffered damage by the collision, and they claimed damages against the plaintiffs.

The plaintiffs in their reply said that, if the collision was caused or contributed to by the negligence of any person on board The Edenbridge (which was denied), The Edenbridge at the time in question was in a district where pilotage was compulsory, and was in charge of a duly licensed pilot by compulsion of law, and the negligence, if any, was that of the said pilot, and not of the plaintiffs or their servants.

The question was whether The Edenbridge at the time of the collision was subject to compulsory pilotage, or whether she was exempt by virtue of section 625 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894. By that section: "The following ships, when not carrying passengers, shall . . . be exempted from compulsory pilotage in the London district, and in the Trinity House outport districts; (that is to say) . . . (3) Ships trading from any port in Great Britain within the London district or any of the Trinity House outport districts to the port of Brest in France, or any port in Europe north and east of Brest, or to the Channel Islands or Isle of Man."

It appeared that The Edenbridge had loaded a cargo of coals at Cardiff and proceeded therewith to the River Plate, and having discharged the coals had taken on board a general cargo at Rosario for Rotterdam, with leave to carry some cattle and sheep to London. She put into the Thames for the sole purpose of landing the cattle and sheep, and having done so she proceeded on her way to Rotterdam with the same crew which she had brought from Rosario. She did not discharge any of her general cargo in London, neither did she take in anything except some bunker coals. She did not carry any passengers. The collision occurred while she was on her way out in the East Swin Channel.

Sir Francis Jeune held, on the authority of Courtney v. Cole, 36 W. R. 8, 19 Q. B. D. 447, that The Edenbridge was exempted from compulsory pilotage, and he found that both vessels were to blame.

The plaintiffs appealed.

Sir Walter Phillimore and F. Laing, for the plaintiffs.—This case is not within the exemption contained in sub-section 3 of section 625 of the Merchant Shipping Act. The Edenbridge was not trading from any port in Great Britain, she was trading from the River Plate. In construing this section, which speaks of ships trading between certain ports, it is necessary not only to have regard to the particular ship which is being dealt with, but also to consider whether there is a trade being carried on between the ports in question. The River Plate trade is a well-defined trade, with which business men in the City of London are quite familiar. It was on this trade that The Edenbridge was engaged. She was, therefore, subject to compulsory pilotage under section 622, and the defence to the counter-claim is established. The case of Courtney v. Cole is not binding on this court, and further, admitting that that case was rightly decided, the words of the Merchant Shipping Act of 1894 are different from those of the Act of 1854.

They cited The Sutherland, 36 W. R. 13, 12 P. D. 154; and The Winestead, [1895] P. 170, 43 W. R. Dig. 172.

Pyke, Q.C. (H. S. Q. Henriques with him), for the defendants.—This case is covered by Courtney v. Cole, which shows that The Edenbridge was within the exemption. According to the true construction of sub-section 3 of section 625, a ship trading from one port to another means a ship going in the course of trade from the one port to the other. It is immaterial where the cargo was taken on board.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—We cannot go into the reasons which prompted this legislation, for we do not know what those reasons were. We must construe the Act as it stands. It exempts from compulsory pilotage "ships trading from any port in Great Britain within the London district or any of the Trinity House outport districts to the port of Brest in France or any port in Europe north and east of Brest." What does the word "trading" mean in this enactment? It is an epithet applied to a ship. Now, what is the trade of a ship? The trade of a ship is the carrying of goods for freight. Therefore a ship carrying goods for freight from any port in Great Britain within the London district to a port in the north of Europe is exempt from compulsory pilotage. The Edenbridge during this voyage was carrying on her trade—viz., the carriage of goods for freight, and it was part of her trading adventure to come into the port of London and to sail from it. I am therefore of opinion that she is within the words of the exemption, and that this appeal must be dismissed.

LOPES, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The word "trading" in sub-section 3 of section 625 is descriptive of the ships which are being dealt with. I think that a trading ship is a ship carrying cargo as distinguished from a yacht, or a man-of-war, or any other ship not carrying cargo. It cannot be said that The Edenbridge was not a trading ship between London and Rotterdam. In Courtney v. Cole it was held that a ship "trading to a place north of Boulogne" meant a ship when so trading, and that it was not necessary that it should be constantly so trading. It seems to me that that case is not distinguishable from the present. Therefore, both on authority and also on my own view of the proper construction of the section, I think that the learned President was right.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I think that the word "ships" in sub-sections 1 and 2 of section 625 means "all ships sailing," and that the words "ships trading" in sub-sections 3 and 4 mean "trading ships sailing."

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Botterell & Roche.

Solicitors for the defendants, Lowless & Co.

From Chan. Div.
Lindley, Lopes, and Rigby, L.JJ. — June 3, 9, 1896.

PATERSON v. GAS LIGHT AND COKE CO. (a.)

Gas company—Receivers and managers—Arrears during company's occupation—"Occupier"—Incoming tenant—Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847 (10 & 11 Vict. c. 15), s. 16—Gasworks Clauses Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 41), ss. 11, 39—Gas Light and Coke Co.'s Act, 1872 (35 Vict. c. cxxiii.), s. 18.

By section 16 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847, a gas company is empowered to stop the supply of gas to a consumer who shall neglect to pay the rent due for the same.

A mill company who had been supplied with gas by a gas company owed money for gas supplied. P. and S., having been appointed by the court receivers and managers of the mill company on behalf of the debenture-holders, applied to the gas company for a supply of gas as renters of the gas company, and undertook to pay for all gas consumed by them since the date of their appointment, but asked that the arrears might stand over to be dealt with by the liquidator of the company.

By virtue of section 18 of the gas company's private Act of 1872, in case a consumer should leave the premises where gas had been supplied without payment of the sum due from him, the company should not require from the next tenant payment of the arrears, unless the incoming tenant had agreed with the defaulting consumer to pay the arrears, or unless the incoming tenant should continue the trade or business of the outgoing tenant, and should have paid a consideration for so doing.

Held (reversing Kekewich, J.), that the rights of P. and S. as receivers and managers were merely those of custodians of the mill company's property; they were caretakers for the mill company, the owners, and stood in the same position to the gas company as the mill company; and therefore the gas company were within their rights in refusing a supply of gas until the arrears had been paid.

In re Smith, Ex parte Mason, 41 W. R. 159, [1893] 1 Q. B. 323, applied.

Appeal by the defendant company from Kekewich, J.

The plaintiffs Paterson and Stephens were joint receivers and managers on behalf of mortgage debenture-holders of Marriage, Neave, & Co. (Limited), who carried on business as corn millers and flour dealers at the Albert Bridge Mills, Battersea. The first-named plaintiff was appointed by the trustees for the second debenture-holders under the powers contained in their trust deed, and entered into possession of the company's premises on the 7th of February, 1896, and carried on the business until the 17th of February, on which date he and the second-named plaintiff were, by an order of the court in an action by the first debenture-holders, appointed joint receivers and managers of the property and business of the company. Since the latter date they had been in possession, and carried on the business.

The Gas Light and Coke Co. supplied gas to the mills, and threatened to cut off the supply under the following circumstances. Marriage, Neave, & Co. were indebted to the gas company to the amount of £90 14s. 5d. for gas supplied for the quarter ending December, 1895. This amount was not paid, and on the 25th of February a final notice was left at the company's office at Battersea requiring payment, and stating that if default were made the supply would be cut off. By an oversight the receivers and managers had omitted to give notice as incoming tenants to the gas company that they required a supply of gas. But on the 26th of February the plaintiff Paterson wrote to the gas company, on behalf of himself and his co-receiver, stating that he had been in possession, on behalf of the second debenture-holders, since the 7th of February, and, as co-receiver with Stephens, the co-plaintiff, under an order of the court, since the 17th of February on behalf of the first debenture-holders, on whose behalf he and Stephens were now carrying on the business; that they desired to be supplied with gas, and to become renters of the gas company from the 7th of February, and offered to pay for all gas consumed after that date, but regretted that it was not in their power to pay the debt due from Marriage, Neave, & Co. (Limited), and asked for the matter to stand over to be dealt with by the liquidator.

On the 27th of February the defendant company wrote to the plaintiff Paterson that the supply of gas would be discontinued unless they received payment of the £90 14s. 5d., or a guarantee for the payment of the account and for all gas from December, 1895. By arrangement the defendants, on payment by the plaintiffs, agreed not to cut off the gas, and to abide by any order the court might make with regard thereto.

(a.) Reported by W. SHALLCROSS GODDARD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The plaintiffs on the 5th of March issued a writ, and gave notice of motion for an injunction to restrain the gas company from cutting off the supply of gas, and on the motion being heard it was agreed that the motion should be treated as the trial of the action.

By section 16 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847, "If any person supplied with gas by virtue of this or the special Act neglect to pay the rent due for the same to the undertakers, the undertakers may stop the gas from entering the premises of such person by cutting off the service pipe, or by such means as the undertakers shall think fit."

Section 11 of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1871, provides that "the undertakers shall, upon being required so to do by the owner or occupier of any premises, . . . give, and continue to give, a supply of gas to such premises, . . . subject to the conditions following. . . . Every owner or occupier of premises requiring a supply of gas shall—serve a notice upon the undertakers at their office, specifying the premises in respect of which such supply is required, and the day (not being an earlier day than a reasonable time after the date of the service of such notice) upon which such supply is required to commence; enter into a written contract with the undertakers (if required by them so to do) to continue to receive and pay for a supply of gas for a period of at least two years, &c. . . . Provided always that the undertakers may, after they have given a supply of gas for any premises, by notice in writing, require the owner or occupier of such premises, within seven days after the date of the service of such notice, to give to them security for the payment of all moneys which may from time to time become due to them in respect of such supply, . . . and if any such owner or occupier fails to comply with the terms of such notice, the undertakers may, if they please, discontinue to supply such gas for such premises so long as such failure continues."

Section 18 of the Gas Light and Coke Co.'s Act, 1872, is as follows: "In case any consumer leave the premises where gas was supplied to him without paying to the company the rate or meter rent due from him, the company shall not require from the next tenant of the premises payment of the arrears so left unpaid, unless the incoming tenant agreed with the defaulting consumer to pay the arrears, or unless the incoming tenant shall continue the trade or business of the outgoing tenant, and shall have paid to the owner, lessee, or mortgagee in possession, or to the outgoing tenant of such premises, a consideration for so doing; but the company shall, notwithstanding any such arrears, in the absence of collusion between the outgoing and incoming tenant, supply gas to the incoming tenant as required by this Act, on being required by him so to do."

Kekewich, J., held that the receivers and managers were new occupiers, and as such entitled to a supply of gas. Further, they were not liable, under the exception in section 18 of the company's private Act of 1872, as incoming tenants continuing the business of the outgoing tenants, and as having paid consideration to them for so doing.

The gas company appealed.

Warrington, Q.C., and Danckwerts, for the appellants.—The occupation of the company continued, notwithstanding the appointment of a receiver. An action of trespass must be brought in the name of the company, and not in the name of the receiver. Nothing has happened in this case to prevent our resorting to the express provisions of the Gasworks Clauses Act, 1847, and stopping the supply. Receivers are in no sense incoming tenants; consequently there is no new occupation: In re Smith, Ex parte Mason, 41 W. R. 159, [1893] 1 Q. B. 323. Their position is analogous to that of the official receiver in bankruptcy; he is simply an officer appointed by the court to receive the debtor's assets. The appointment of a receiver does not divest the property though it may change the possession: see Rhodes v. Dawson, 34 W. R. 240, 16 Q. B. D. 548; Corporation of Bacup v. Smith, 38 W. R. 697, 44 Ch. D. 395; Gaskell v. Gosling, [1896] 1 Q. B. 669, 44 W. R. Dig. 132.

Renshaw, Q.C., and Kirby, for the respondents.—A receiver appointed by the court may be an agent or a trustee, but he is not an incoming tenant; he is either an owner or an occupier: Owen v. Cronk, 43 W. R. Dig. 147, [1895] 1 Q. B. 265; Burt v. Bull, 43 W. R. 180, [1895] 1 Q. B. 276. In Corporation of Bacup v. Smith Chitty, J., considered whether a receiver was an "owner" within the meaning of the Public Health Act, 1875.

Warrington, Q.C., in reply, referred to Chinnery v. Evans, 11 H. L. Cas. 115.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 9.—LINDLEY, L.J., after stating the facts, said:—It is important to observe that the £90 14s. 5d. became due from the mill company whilst the debenture-holders' security was a floating security. It is also important to bear in mind that the gas never was in fact cut off. No new or fresh supply was wanted, no pipes had to be laid down, no meter had to be provided. What the plaintiffs wanted was simply that the defendants should allow gas to come as usual, and not prevent it from so doing. The defendants were quite willing to do this if the plaintiffs would pay or undertake to pay the £90 14s. 5d. The plaintiffs would not do this. But there was no other dispute between the parties.

The question between them turns on the true construction of a number of sections contained in three public and three private Acts of Parliament. It is quite sufficient to say they begin in 1847 and end in 1872, and they were discussed with great care in court during the argument. The examination of these by counsel in court and a perusal of them since shows that there are two series of sections which require attention. The first series is that which entitles owners or occupiers generally to require a supply of gas. This series, however, although it has to be considered, is not that which really governs the decision in this case. This series consists of sections 14 and 15 of the public Act of 1860, sections 12 to 14 of the private Act of 1870, and section 11 of the public Act of 1871. The other series is that which entitles the gas company to refuse to continue to supply gas to places to which gas has been supplied but not paid for. This series begins with section 16 of the public Act of 1847, and ends with section 18 of the company's private Act of 1872. The intermediate sections are section 15 of the company's private Act of 1870 and section 39 of the public Act of 1871; but these may be disregarded, for they are repeated with some additions in section 18 of the company's private Act of 1872, and they add nothing to what is thereby enacted.

The only sections which really govern the question which has to be decided are section 16 of the public Act of 1847 and section 18 of the company's private Act of 1872. It is plain from the language of these two sections (1) that the gas company is entitled to refuse to supply gas to the mill company unless and until the £90 14s. 5d. due from it is paid; (2) that until that sum is paid the gas company is entitled to refuse to supply gas to the mill at the request of any one unless he is in some better position than the mill company—in other words, unless he is entitled under section 18 of the special Act, to have gas supplied to the mill without complying with the condition which the gas company is entitled to impose on the mill company.

Are, then, the receivers appointed by the court at the instance of the debenture-holders in a better position in this respect than the mill company? I am of opinion that they are not. The right of the gas company to refuse to supply gas to the mill company unless they paid the £90 14s. 5d. had accrued before any receiver was appointed, although the notice that such right would be enforced was not given until afterwards. The receiver appointed by the trustees on the 6th of February was clearly in no better position in this respect than the mill company. The receivers appointed by the court on the 17th of February are not technically appointed under the terms of the debenture trust deed, and are not in all respects in the same position as receivers appointed by the trustees themselves. At the same time the receivers appointed by the court are appointed for the benefit of the debenture-holders, and, having regard to the nature of their security and to the obligation imposed by statute on the gas company to continue to supply gas to the mill, it would, in my opinion, be very unjust if the debenture-holders could enforce this obligation against the gas company without complying with the condition of paying for the gas supplied to the mill company whilst the debenture-holders permitted the mill company to carry on its business. The plaintiffs, being receivers and managers appointed by the court, were lawfully in possession of the mill and were entitled (with the leave of the court) to use the name of the mill company for any purpose which might be necessary to enable them to discharge their duties. The plaintiffs clearly could, by using the name of the mill company, require gas to be supplied to the mill after their appointment, upon payment of the sum due to the gas company for gas supplied to the mill previously to their appointment.

It was strenuously contended that the plaintiffs could simply as occupiers of the mill have required gas to be supplied to it without requiring such supply in the name of the mill company, and this view was adopted by Kekewich, J. But the term "occupier" is ambiguous. In one sense a caretaker is an occupier, but in another sense his occupation is that of some other person. But further, the sections relied upon as entitling the plaintiffs to require a supply simply as occupiers, contain nothing which negatives the right of the gas company to withhold such supply until payment of the sum due for gas previously supplied to the mill company. The two sets of sections must be read together. The general right of an owner or occupier to require a supply is limited by the right of the gas company to refuse a supply in certain specified cases.

We are thus brought back to section 18 of the private Act of 1872. This section, although badly worded, has, in my opinion, no application to such a case as that before us. It does not apply to persons simply put in possession of the premises of a defaulting consumer to manage his business for the benefit of his creditors and of himself. The statute contemplates and provides for a change of possession of a very different nature; and its language is quite inappropriate to cover such a case as this. The plaintiffs' rights as receivers and managers were merely those of custodians of the mill company's property. The relation of the mill company to the plaintiffs was not the relation of outgoing and incoming tenant, nor of vendor and purchaser, but that of owner and caretaker; and the relation of the plaintiffs to the gas company was the same. The position of the plaintiffs towards the gas company is precisely similar to that of the official receiver in In re Smith, Ex parte Mason. It is true that Smith's case turned on the public gas Acts only, but section 18 of the private Act, 1872, is not more favourable to the plaintiffs than section 39 of the public Act of 1871, which was the governing enactment in Smith's case. There the official receiver took possession of the debtor's business premises, but the learned judge held that he was not entitled to a future supply without paying the amount due from the debtor for gas supplied before the receiver was appointed. This decision appears to me to have been correct, for the official receiver was only an "occupier" in the sense of a caretaker. This view of the case renders it unnecessary to consider some subordinate points which would only arise if the plaintiffs were right in their main contention. The appeal must be allowed, and judgment must be entered for the defendants, with costs here and below.

LOPES, L.J.—The decision of this question appears to me to depend upon section 16 of the public Act of 1847 and section 18 of the company's private Act of 1872. There can be no doubt that the defendant company are entitled to refuse to supply gas to any consumer until any arrears are paid. Under section 16 of the Act of 1847 the defendant company therefore were justified in refusing to supply gas to the mill company after Christmas, 1895, until the arrears up to Christmas were paid, unless the plaintiffs can bring their case within the provisions of section 18 of the private Act.

It is said that the plaintiffs were new occupiers, and bring themselves within section 18 of the private Act. I think not. In my judgment there has been no change of possession. The plaintiffs are mere custodians placed on the premises by the order of the court. They are mere caretakers of the property of the company. Smith's case is in point, and in principle is undistinguishable from this case. I am of opinion, therefore, that the appeal should be allowed.

RIGBY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. In my judgment the whole question has to be determined upon two sections that have been referred to—section 16 of the public Act of 1847, and section 18 of the company's private Act of 1872; and that being the case I do not feel myself bound to express any opinion as to what would be the position of a receiver appointed by the court if he were not within these two sections—or rather, I ought to say, within section 16, and not in any way saved from the operation of section 16 by section 18 of the Act of 1872. I should have considerable difficulty in holding that a receiver appointed by the court had not, independently of those sections, a right as occupier to demand a supply of gas; and, so far as my opinion goes, if the case should ever arise independently of these sections, I wish it to be understood that I express no opinion whatever.

Now, coming to those sections one thing is plain—namely, that there has been no change of ownership in this case as distinguished from a change of possession or occupation. Therefore I come to the conclusion that the case is within the letter and within the meaning of section 16 of the public Act, which is incorporated with the company's private Acts. Marriage, Neave, & Co. were supplied with gas. They neglected to pay the rent due, and section 16 of the Act of 1847 provides that under such circumstances the undertakers may stop the gas from entering the premises of such person, and there is no provision that that person shall remain in possession. These are the premises of a limited company, and so in terms the Act applies. Looking at section 18 of the Act of 1872 I think there may be derived that which will aid us in coming to the conclusion at which we arrive. It is a very curious section. On the face of it it is difficult to treat it as altogether exhaustive of the subject, and I understand it was not intended to exhaust the subject in cases where the consumer leaves the premises where the gas was supplied to him, without paying to the company the rate or meter rent due from him. I will assume now that the mill company had within the meaning of that section left the premises, which is not absolutely clear. I will assume that, for the purposes of this particular case, "the company shall not require from the next tenant of the premises payment of the arrears so left unpaid." That is the main provision, with certain exceptions. I gather from that, that they are to have a right to require payment from the incoming tenant in the cases that are provided for by the words of that section; and as correlative to that right they are to have the duty of supplying the incoming tenant as required by this Act on being requested by him to do so. That is not the position of things here, because it would appear that they do not fall within the excepted cases. What are the excepted cases? The first is, "Unless the incoming tenant shall have agreed with the defaulting consumer to pay the arrears." An agreement of that sort would be one that would not give independently of statute a right to the gas company to require from the incoming tenant the payment, although he had agreed with the outgoing tenant to make it. But I read the section as giving them that right. If there has been an agreement with the incoming tenant to pay the outgoing tenant's arrears, the statute (as I read it) gives the gas company a right directly against the incoming tenant without having recourse to the outgoing tenant at all. The next exception in point, is a new one, which, so far as I know, has never been dealt with in any way before by the court. It is "or unless the incoming tenant shall continue the trade or business of the outgoing tenant." Now, if it had stopped there it is plain that the receivers appointed by the court are continuing the business of the outgoing tenant; and I think I see plainly that the intention of the Legislature, so far as it provided for the case at all, was this, that the supply of gas for the trade or business was to be treated, under the circumstances provided for, as being a something done, not for the personal benefit only of the outgoing tenant, but for the purposes of the business which was taken up and carried on by the incoming tenant. But there are cases in which it will be altogether unjust to charge an incoming tenant for taking up the trade or business. He may have no legal position at all in doing so, and therefore there is added the additional requirement that that incoming tenant shall have paid for it—not necessarily to the outgoing tenant, but either to the outgoing tenant or the owner, lessee, or mortgagee in possession; that, in fact, he shall have acquired the benefit of the trade or business for valuable consideration, and in that case I conceive that section 18 makes him on very reasonable grounds liable to the company to pay for the arrears of gas supplied to the business as well as for the continuing supply, at the same time entitling him under ordinary terms to such a continuing supply. It is clear that these receivers and managers, whether they are occupiers or not, are not persons who have paid anybody for continuing to carry on that trade or business, and yet they are carrying on the trade or business, and the Legislature does recognize, for the purposes of the 18th section, that such a carrying on in the cases provided for is equitably followed by a liability on the part of the incoming tenant carrying on the trade or business to pay for it as though it were a liability of that business which he has in that way purchased, entitling him also to get a continuation of the supply. Now, the case being in that position, how are we to deal with it? We cannot say that it is by implication included under the principle of the 18th section, because that clause is too carefully guarded to allow of such an implication. My conclusion is that it was not intended to interfere; and that there was an intermediate state of things in which they were left to the remedy given by section 16 of the Act of 1847. The remedy was to stop the supply without acquiring a right to sue the incoming tenant; but treating these sections, as I think it is right to treat them, as an independent bundle of sections reduced now to two, practically, for the protection of the gas company, I do not see that their remedy under section 16 of the Act of 1847 is taken away. I conclude, therefore, that they had an intermediate right to stop the supply, and that no right which the receiver appointed by the court might have (as to which I propose to say nothing at all) under clause 11 of the Act of 1871, or any other clause that exists as to "occupier," is intended to interfere with that. I think, therefore, the gas company were right in their contention, limited as it is to saying, "We will cut off the supply, and you have no right to interfere with what the Legislature has given us as a remedy so far as it goes; we are not bound to supply you as long as the difficulty exists, you may get rid of it if you please by paying the amount, and of course, then we shall be in the same position with regard to you as we are now with regard to all other consumers." They have never refused to continue the supply on the terms that would be open to any occupier. They have not challenged, in fact, the position of the receivers appointed by the court as occupiers or consumers, or whatever you call them. They only say "You have not got out of the provisions of the general Act which have not been varied except as we find them here, but you have gone on and acted under the provisions in favour of other consumers and occupiers, and therefore you are bound by that."

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Bedford, Monier-Williams, & Robinson; Grundy, Kershaw, Saxon, Samson, & Co.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, Lopes, and Rigby, L.JJ.) — July 28, 30, 1896.

In re MARRIAGE, NEAVE, & CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Poor law—Rating—Arrears—Right of distress—Change of occupation—Receivers and managers appointed by the court—No order for delivery of possession of premises—Poor Law Act (43 Eliz. c. 2), s. 2—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), s. 161—Poor Rate Assessment and Collection Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 41), s. 16.

The appointment of receivers and managers of the business of a company by an order which does not direct the company to deliver up to them the possession of its premises does not produce a change of occupation within the meaning of section 16 of the Poor Rate Assessment and Collection Act, 1869; nor does the existence of an equitable charge protect the goods subject thereto from a distress for rates. Leave will, therefore, in such a case, be given to the overseers to distrain for rates in arrear upon goods on the premises.

(a.) Reported by W. SHALLCROSS GODDARD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Richards v. Overseers of Kidderminster, 44 W. R. 505, [1896] 2 Ch. 212, discussed.

Appeal by the overseers of the parish of St. Mary, Battersea, from the decision of Kekewich, J.

The above-named company carried on business at certain mills in the appellants' parish. The company had issued debentures secured, under a deed of trust, by way of a floating charge on all property of the company other than the company's interest in the said mills. On the 17th of February, 1896, an order was made by the court, in an action brought by the debenture-holders, appointing receivers and managers of the business of the company, but the order did not direct the company to give up possession of the mills to the receivers and managers, who, however, entered on the premises for the purpose of managing and carrying on the business. On the 21st of February, 1896, the company were served by the overseers with a justices' summons for the payment of rates made in advance for the half-year ending the 25th of March, 1896, in respect of the said mills, and on the hearing of the summons the usual distress warrant was issued. On the 10th of March, 1896, the overseers applied by way of summons for liberty to distrain upon the goods of the company notwithstanding the appointment of the receivers and managers.

Kekewich, J., held that the order of the 17th of February had caused a change in the occupation of the mills from the company to the receivers and managers, and that the goods upon the premises were not liable to be distrained upon for the full amount of the half-year's rates.

The overseers appealed.

Warrington, Q.C., and Lyttelton Chubb, for the appellants, referred to Paterson v. Gas Light and Coke Co., ante, p. 39; 43 Eliz. c. 2, s. 2 (section 3 in Chitty's Statutes); the Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), s. 161; the Poor Rate Assessment and Collection Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 41), ss. 16, 20; In re Smith, Ex parte Mason, 41 W. R. 159, [1893] 1 Q. B. 323; and the Bills of Sale Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43), s. 14. [LOPES, L.J., referred to Richards v. Overseers of Kidderminster, 44 W. R. 505, [1896] 2 Ch. 212.]

Levitt, Q.C., and A. R. Kirby, for the respondents, the debenture-holders, relied upon Richards v. Overseers of Kidderminster, and In re Opera (Limited), 39 W. R. 795, [1891] 3 Ch. 260; Standard Manufacturing Co., 39 W. R. 369, [1891] 1 Ch. 627; and Stevens v. Evans and Others, 1 Wm. Blackstone 284.

Warrington, Q.C., in reply.—The decision in Stevens v. Evans did not depend merely on an equitable change, for there was a change in the legal ownership. He also referred to the form of a writ of fi. fa. in Annual Practice, 1896, vol. ii., p. 88.

July 30.—LINDLEY, L.J.—Now that the case has been argued out, I do not think there is really any difficulty in it. The first part of the case turns upon the question, whether there has been such a change of occupation in these premises as to bring into operation section 16 of the Poor Rate Assessment and Collection Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 41). I address myself first to that question. The facts are these: On the 17th of February, 1896, Messrs. Paterson & Stephens were appointed by the court receivers and managers in an action instituted by debenture-holders against Marriage, Neave, & Co. (Limited). When you look at the order appointing them receivers you do not find—and that admission is very important—any direction for delivery up of possession to them. There is nothing in the order about that. When you come to look at the facts you do not find that they have taken possession of the land in any sense at all. They have gone on the property for the purpose of receiving and managing the income and business of the company, not doing anything to change the ostensible possession of the land; and the possession—the occupation—has not been changed at all. Mr. Levett argued that, inasmuch as corporations could only keep possession by their servants, the appointment of receivers in this way was quite enough to put them out of possession. But corporations can possess in the same way as individuals; and the mere fact that receivers have been appointed by an order like this, which does not order the delivery up of possession, does not dispossess the company. I do not think, therefore, that such a change of possession is made out as is requisite to bring into operation section 16 of the Poor Rate Assessment and Collection Act, 1869. [The Lord Justice read the section and continued:—] The old "occupier" certainly was Marriage, Neave, & Co., who were also "assessed in the rate." The overseers have not "entered in the rate book the name of" any person as "succeeding or coming into the occupation," nor in my judgment is it necessary for them to do it. The real truth is that the company were and are still in occupation. They cannot interfere with the receiver, of course, and he is there as a manager of their business; but though he has a limited right to discharge the servants of the company, he has no right that I know of to do so contrary to a contract made by the company. It is a mistake to suppose that because the receivers can dismiss servants therefore they oust the company from possession. They are simply receivers and managers instead of the company. If you look to the legal possession, that remains just where it was.

That difficulty having been got over, we must look a little further. It is said that under the provisions of the Acts, this rate can be distrained for only upon the person assessed—that is, the offender. I agree that the offender here was the company, and that the only goods which can be taken are the goods of the company. Therefore what we have to ascertain is, Are there any goods of the company on these premises which are liable to distress? It is said there are not; first of all because the goods on the premises belong to the trustees for the debenture-holders. That turns on the true construction of the trust deed, and when you look at the trust deed you find that the goods of the company are expressly excepted, not by way of precaution only and by reference to the Bills of Sale Act, but in language which is perfectly unmistakable. These goods were therefore never the goods of the trustees for the debenture-holders, but, so far as that argument goes, remain the goods of the company. The next point is that the debentures appear to be expressed in language so large as to include the goods of the company. But when you look at the debentures it is plain that their only effect is to give an equitable charge on those goods, and no right even to take possession of them or to appoint a receiver, but only the right to institute an action to get a receiver appointed by the court. The goods, therefore, are not the property of the debenture-holders in any sense whatever. They are the goods of the company, subject only to an equitable charge.

Let us now go back and see what the rights of the overseers are. The rights of the overseers, under the statute of Elizabeth, and under the warrant which they have obtained, are to distrain for these rates upon the goods of the offender, which goods, we find, are subject to an equitable charge. Mr. Levett started the point, which was new to all of us, that if there was an equitable charge you could not distrain upon the goods at all. I agree that the power of distraining under the statute of Elizabeth is not like a landlord's power of distress. We all know the difference. A landlord can take any goods, no matter whose, which are brought on the premises, while the overseers' power of distraining is much more restricted. But it is a strong thing to say that the existence of an equitable charge prevented the overseers from recovering the rates. Their duty, as was pointed out by Mr. Warrington, is to seize the goods of the company—that, therefore, they can plainly do—and to sell the goods of the company—that they can plainly do—therefore you get rid of all equitable charges up to that point. About the money due to the equitable mortgagee, the statute and the distress warrant show that the bailiff has nothing to do with that. It is in accordance with what everybody understood, that rates should have priority over equitable mortgages and everything else. I do not see anything in the Acts about Queen's taxes. But, as Mr. Warrington pointed out, it is the duty of the bailiff to pay the rate out of the offender's goods, and to hand the balance to the owner; and that does give priority over all other charges. There is no action for these rates; and there is sense in that being the legislation on that subject, for when you come to giving rights of action questions of priority at once arise. I think the appeal must be allowed, and the overseers must be at liberty to distrain on the goods of the company.

LOPES, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The first point arises out of section 16 of the Act of 1869. It is said that in this case, a receiver having been appointed, there was a change in the occupation. Directly the order is looked at it is plain that view cannot be maintained. When that order is looked at we find nothing in it that directs the possession of the premises to be given up to the receiver. What the receiver is to do is simply to go there and manage the company's business. The possession remains in the company precisely in the same way as it did before. The company continues to keep possession of the premises; and when that is so there is no change of occupation as contemplated by section 16. Something was said about a corporation keeping possession. It was said they keep it by their servants, and that this occupation was at an end because the receiver had powers of discharging the servants of the company, and various other powers. In my opinion the receiver has no power at all to discharge any servant employed under contract—I mean any contract by which the company has agreed to be bound for any definite period. The company, and the company only, can discharge the servants who are doing service under such a contract.

Then the question arises with regard to what goods can be seized. From the Act of Elizabeth it appears that the only goods which can be seized are the goods of "the offender"—in this case the company. Then it is said that the goods in question are not the goods of the company, because they passed under a certain trust deed to the trustees for the debenture-holders. But when that trust deed is looked at we see that these goods are expressly excepted, and do not pass by it at all. They cannot, therefore, be said to belong to the debenture-holders. But it is said that, the goods being undoubtedly subject to an equitable charge created by the debentures, no distress for rates could be issued against them. That argument took me a good deal by surprise. I have had a good deal of experience in regard to enforcing payment of rates, and I never heard of that point being raised before. The law on the subject, I think, really comes to this. There is a preferential charge in favour of rates. The rates are to be paid in preference to anything like an equitable charge. That is why there is a power to distrain for rates, while no action can be brought to recover them.

I think all the points made on behalf of the respondents fail, and the appeal must be allowed.

RIGBY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The affairs of this company, Marriage, Neave, & Co. (Limited), have given rise to two questions somewhat of the same sort of nature, one of which was decided in Paterson v. Gas Light and Coke Co. That decision, however, had nothing at all to do with the present case. It was a decision on particular sections of the Gas Companies Acts. We arrived at the conclusion that that case was within the general words of the section enabling the gas company to cut off the supply of gas, and not within a clause introducing the exceptions to the general power. In that case identically the same persons were receivers under the same circumstances; but I do not think we decided anything there which covers the present case, because here we have other Acts of Parliament to construe. It is only where there is a change of occupation that section 16 has any operation. I do not think I have anything to add to show that there has been no change of occupation under that section. To say that because a receiver and manager has been appointed the company has primâ facie ceased to have possession is, I think, to say that which is not even plausible. Those receivers, for anything I can see, might have done all their duties without ever seeing this property at all. They were to carry on the business; but they might have done that by directing the manager under them to come and take instructions from them. That it is said that the servants of the company became their servants. The servants became liable to obey their orders, because a competent power has appointed them managers of the business, and it may be that the servants, if they do not choose to obey the receivers' orders, will have to go. So the receivers may re-engage the servants; but to say that the servants become the receivers' servants, or that the receivers become liable to pay the salaries or to fulfil any other contract of the company, is a doctrine that cannot be established, at any rate in the way it has been advanced before us. They are receivers and managers, that is all. It may very well happen that as such managers, and for the purposes of such management, the court may direct that they should be put into possession of the premises; and if so it may be that they become the occupiers within section 16. But in this case no such order has been made, no such idea has occurred to anyone. The occupation of the company has not been interfered with, and therefore section 16 does not apply. If that is so, we must go back to the Act of Elizabeth to know what can be done. Clearly the distress there authorized is distress of the goods of the offenders. Marriage, Neave, & Co. (Limited) were the persons assessed to the payment of this particular half-year's rate, and they are the offenders because they did not pay it. Therefore, a question arises as to certain goods, which admittedly are on the premises. It is said that those goods are not the goods of Marriage, Neave, & Co. I have nothing more to say about the construction of that trust deed, which to my mind did not carry the goods and chattels. But a charge on the goods is given by the debentures themselves: does that prevent the goods being the goods of Marriage, Neave, & Co.? Let us, in considering the question, put aside the Bills of Sale Acts, and carry our minds back to a time before 1854, when there was no Bills of Sale Act. Can it be said that because a man wrote on a piece of paper the words, "I charge my household furniture with the payment of £5," or even "with the payment of 5s.," he thereby practically secured himself from the payment of rates? That would be an easy way of getting quit of the liability, if it could be done; and the argument requires us to go as far as that. The authorities are quite the other way. The bailiff must deal with the goods of the offender as and when he finds them, and must distrain and sell them. If and when he has paid the rates the balance may have to be handed over to the equitable mortgagee, or it may not; but the bailiff's first duty, in relation to the balance, is to pay it to the owner.

A case of Richards v. Overseers of Kidderminster was cited to us, and it was said that North, J., there held that there had been a change of occupation. But that case is absolutely different from this. The terms of the deed in that case may be somewhat similar. But the deed in this case has nothing to do with the point. North, J., decided that case upon the terms of the deed before him, and upon the particular circumstances of that case. I see no reason why what had happened there should not be a change of occupation. No doubt, in the judgment in that case there are some words which imply that the case of a distress under these statutes falls within the same principle as the case of execution. I do not know whether that question was argued before North, J. So far as appears from the report, it was not necessary for the purposes of that case to decide that question. If North, J.'s, judgment is to be treated as a considered judgment with reference to the possession of the overseers and their right to distrain under these Acts, I must say I think that conclusion cannot be supported.

The result is that the appeal must be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, W. W. Young & Son; Grundy, Kershaw, Saxon, Samson, & Co.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. }
Chitty, J. } July 17, 24, 1896.

ERNEST v. THE LOMA GOLD MINES (LIMITED). (a.)

Company—Meeting of shareholders—Special resolution—Proxies—Mode of taking votes—Voluntary winding up.

At a meeting of the shareholders of a company, the articles of which provided that every motion submitted to a general meeting should be decided, in the first instance, by a majority to be ascertained by a show of hands; that every member should have one vote for every share he should hold in the company; and that votes might be given either personally or by proxy—the chairman of the meeting refused to count proxies on taking votes by show of hands.

Held, that the chairman was right in so refusing.

In re Bidwell Brothers, 41 W. R. 363, [1893] 1 Ch. 603, disapproved.

Under certain circumstances proxy forms, the dates of which were filled in after signature, might be valid within section 80 of the Stamp Act, 1891.

(a.) Reported by RALEGH B. PHILLPOTTS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Motion.

This was a motion by the plaintiff, a shareholder of the defendant company, for an interim injunction to restrain the company from carrying out a special resolution, passed by an extraordinary general meeting of the company on the 3rd of June, 1896, and confirmed by another meeting on the 1st of July, 1896, for the voluntary liquidation and reconstruction of the company.

By article 60 of the defendant company's articles it was inter alia provided that "at any general meeting every motion made and submitted shall be decided in the first instance by a majority in number of the members to be ascertained by a show of hands"; by article 62, that "Every member shall have one vote for every share which he shall hold in the company"; and by article 66, that "Votes may be given either personally or by proxy."

The plaintiff attended the meeting of the 3rd of June, and held 431 proxies representing 102,000 shares, which were duly lodged with the defendant company.

Upon the chairman's putting the resolution to the meeting, on a show of hands twelve shareholders voted for it and the plaintiff and one other shareholder against it. The plaintiff stated that he had claimed at the meeting to vote on behalf of himself and the proxies which he held, but the chairman ruled against his claim and declared the resolution carried. The plaintiff then demanded a poll. The chairman refused the demand on the ground that it was not supported by the requisite number of shareholders present at the meeting either according to the articles of the company in that behalf or according to section 51 of the Companies Act, 1862. The plaintiff contended in support of his motion that the chairman, on the show of hands, ought to have taken notice of proxies and that every member present by proxy was entitled to one vote upon a show of hands, and relied on the decision to that effect of Vaughan Williams, J., in In re Bidwell Brothers, 41 W. R. 363, [1893] 1 Ch. 603. It further appeared that upon the resolution being carried at the meeting of the 1st of July a poll was demanded and the plaintiff was appointed a scrutineer. The plaintiff took the objection that a number of proxy forms as received by the secretary of the company on behalf of the resolution had the date of the meeting left in blank and that such date had been filled in by a person other than the person giving such proxy after the proxy had been lodged. The plaintiff contended that such omission of date avoided the proxy paper within section 80 of the Stamp Act, 1891. It appeared that the secretary of the company had sent to the members of the company notice of the intention to hold the confirmatory meeting and specifying the date of the meeting and setting forth the special resolution. Accompanying the notice there was also a circular, signed by the secretary and emanating from the chairman and other directors, with a form of proxy to be returned, and giving reasons why the proxies should be sent as requested by the directors. The form enclosed was regular with the exception that it omitted to state the day and hour of the meeting. The secretary having discovered this omission, sent out a postcard to each member mentioning the omission requesting them to fill up the blank and stating that, unless they dissented, he would fill in the date. The chairman, however, for the purposes of the poll, admitted the proxies completed by the secretary, and had declared the confirmatory resolution carried.

Ashton Cross, for the plaintiff.—The votes of the proxies ought to have been taken by the chairman on a show of hands. In re Bidwell Brothers is a clear authority for the plaintiff. Unless the votes of proxies can be thus taken, it might in some cases be impossible to get the view of the real majority of the members to pass a special resolution in accordance with section 51 of the Companies Act, 1862, as there might not be enough members of one mind present to demand a poll. As to the second point, section 80 of the Stamp Act requires the proxy to be complete at the time of signature. If this section be not complied with the proxy is void.

E. W. Stock, for the defendant company, relied on the decision of Kay, J., in In re Caloric Engine & Siren Fog Signals Co. (Limited), 52 L. T. N. S. 846, and of Jessel, M.R., in In re Horbury Bridge Co., 27 W. R. 433, 11 Ch. D. 109, and referred to Palmer's Company Precedents, 6th ed., i., pp. 338 and 525.

CHITTY, J.—The chairman on the show of hands did not in fact count the proxies. The articles provide, by article 60, that "at any general meeting every motion made and submitted shall be decided in the first instance by a majority in number of the members, to be ascertained by a show of hands, . . . unless a poll is demanded by at least three members holding at least one-tenth of the shares of the company. . . ." If a poll is demanded, then by article 61 "it shall be taken in such manner and form as the chairman shall direct." By article 66 "votes may be given either personally or by proxy." That article does not say that votes may be taken by proxy on a show of hands. I have never seen such an article. There are two well-known modes of voting in this country—by show of hands and a poll. The essence of voting by show of hands is that hands on each side are held up, and one is counted against the other; it is the eye that is called upon to decide. If the proxies are to be counted on a show of hands, what is the chairman to do? If he is told that there are proxies, he must call for another show of hands for the proxies, he may have to call for more, one man may hold one proxy, another ten, and so on, and the chairman will have to call for shows of hands until he has exhausted all. He must do more, he must call for the proxies, he must identify the members who hold the proxies, and must examine the proxies. I am told that unless this method of counting proxies be allowed, the wishes of members voting by proxy will have no effect given to them. But a poll could be demanded as here, by three members, if holding one-tenth of the shares of the company. The proxies come in when the poll is demanded. I think it is a fallacy to say that the person who had given the proxy would be disabled from voting, unless his proxy were counted on a show of hands. These reasons lead me to think that the chairman was right. I think he adopted the course which the reasoning of Sir George Jessel in In re Horbury Bridge Co. would lead him to take. I also think that course is supported by the decision of Kay, J., in In re Caloric, &c., Co. I have been furnished with a copy of the articles of the company in the latter case, and they contain a provision that votes may be given personally or by proxy. Kay, J.'s, decision seems clear; against that decision is that of Vaughan Williams, J., in In re Bidwell Brothers. It is unnecessary for me to state that I treat any decision of Vaughan Williams, J., with the greatest respect, but I am bound in this conflict of authorities to state my opinion on this subject, and I reluctantly hold that the decision in In re Bidwell Brothers is inconsistent with the former decisions, and cannot be supported. Vaughan Williams, J., might have decided otherwise had he had an opportunity of seeing the articles in the Caloric Co. case.

A point was made for the plaintiff that by section 51 of the Companies Act, 1862, a chairman is compelled to count proxies in taking votes by show of hands. [His lordship read the section.] But the provisions of this section have nothing to do with the particular mode of voting, that is left to the general law. I think it would be not only inconvenient but almost impracticable to count proxies on taking votes by show of hands. This is the view expressed by the learned author in Palmer's Company Precedents, 6th ed., i., p. 338.

I decline to grant this injunction, and as the point may well be worthy of consideration elsewhere, the motion is dismissed with costs, to be paid by the plaintiff.

With regard to the objection taken on behalf of the plaintiff that the date of the meeting had been filled in on the proxy forms after signature, it must be remembered that the notices sent out by the direction of the board mentioned the date of the meeting for which the proxies were intended. The intimation conveyed by the postcards could confer no authority on the secretary, who sent them out, to fill in the dates, but inasmuch as the date was mentioned in the circular, and the circular also contained a statement that the secretary had been directed to request the members to sign and return the proxies to him at once, the enclosed form of proxy being endorsed with an address to the secretary, it is clear that the proxy was intended to be used at the meeting, the date of which had been mentioned, and at no other meeting, and that members signing the proxy intended it to be so used. In these circumstances, in my opinion, the secretary was authorized to fill in the date of that meeting, although not of any other. It was contended that section 80 of the Stamp Act avoided the proxy unless completed at the time of signature. That section, however, does not say that the date of the meeting must be filled in by the person giving the proxy, but only that the proxy is to "specify the day upon which the meeting at which it is intended to be used is to be held." The proxy as used did specify the day, and was duly stamped. On this point also the motion fails.

Solicitors, W. F. Hart; Powell & Burt.

Chan. Div. } July 30, 1896.
Kekewich, J. }

ANDREWS v. GAS METER CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

*Company—Memorandum of association—Alteration of articles—Issue of preference shares—Ultrà vires—Restitution.*

A limited company altered their articles and purported to issue preference shares by way of increased capital. Neither the memorandum of association nor the original articles provided for the preference of any shares.

Held, that the company had no power to issue preference shares; that the holders of such shares were not members of the company, and were only entitled to restitution.

Hutton v. Scarborough Cliff Hotel Co., 13 W. R. 574, 631, 1059, 2 Dr. & Sm. 521, 4 De G. J. & Sm. 672, followed.

Clause 5 of the memorandum of association of the Gas Meter Co. (Limited), which was incorporated in 1862, provided as follows:—"The nominal capital of the company is £60,000, divided into 600 shares of £100 each, every share being sub-divisible into fifths, with power to increase the capital as provided by the articles of association." The original articles empowered the company to increase its capital, but did not provide for the preference or priority of any of the shares.

(a.) Reported by C. C. HENSLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

In 1865 the company, being desirous of purchasing a business of manufacturing meters from the administrator of one John West, made certain additions to the original articles of the company to the effect that the directors might issue by way of increase of capital 100 shares of £100 each fully paid up bearing a non-cumulative preference dividend of 5 per cent. to the said administrator in part payment of the consideration for the purchase of his business, but the holder of the preference shares was not to be entitled to vote in the company or to participate in certain bonuses to which the ordinary shareholders were entitled or to any dividend beyond 5 per cent.

The 100 shares were accordingly allotted to the administrator of John West upon the above terms.

The dividends paid on the ordinary shares since 1862 ranged from 6 to 17½ per cent., and a sum of £35,000, profits of the company, had now become available for distribution amongst the shareholders. A question having arisen as to whether the preference shareholders were entitled to any share in the £35,000, it being doubted whether their shares had been properly issued, this action was brought by the ordinary shareholders against the company and the preference shareholders, asking (1) a declaration that all the profits of the company ought to be divided amongst the ordinary shareholders; or (2) how and in what proportion the profits (after providing for the dividend of 5 per cent. on the preference shares) ought to be divided between the preference and ordinary shareholders.

Lawrence, Q.C., and Eustace Smith, for the plaintiffs.—The issue of the preference shares was valid. This case is distinguishable from that of Hutton v. Scarborough Cliff Hotel Co., 13 W. R. 574, 831, 1059, 2 Dr. & Sm. 521, 4 De G. J. & Sm. 672. Doubt has been cast upon that case by Lord Macnaghten in British and American Trustee and Finance Corporation v. Couper, 42 W. R. 652, [1894] A. C. 399, and by Stirling, J., in McIlquham v. Taylor, 43 W. R. 297, [1895] 1 Ch. 53.

They also referred to Harrison v. The Mexican Railway Co., 23 W. R. 403, L. R. 19 Eq. 358; and In re South Durham Brewery Co., 34 W. R. 126, 31 Ch. D. 261. If the power to issue shares with a preference dividend was invalid, then the preferential part only ought to be dropped, the restrictions on the shares being retained: In re Guardian Permanent Benefit Building Society, 23 Ch. D. 440, 31 W. R. Dig. 28; In re Bridgwater Navigation Co., 36 W. R. 769, 39 Ch. D. 1; In re London and New York Investment Corporation 44 W. R. 137, [1895] 2 Ch. 860.

A. R. Kirby (Warrington, Q.C., with him) for the defendants.—This case is covered by Hutton v. Scarborough Cliff Hotel Co. The issue of shares with a preferential dividend was invalid and we should be considered as being in the position of ordinary shareholders.

KEKEWICH, J.—In this case there is not a suggestion that there is anything in the original articles of association in the slighest degree to modify the meaning of the memorandum. I cannot therefore, subject to one question of construction to which I will presently refer, go beyond the memorandum itself in order to interpret it so that the case of Harrison v. The Mexican Railway Co. and other cases of that class, have no bearing on the subject here at all. I come back, therefore, to the simplest possible question, Whether a memorandum framed on the old lines—that is, on the lines universally adopted before the decision in Hutton v. Scarborough Cliff Hotel Co., authorizes the issue of capital with a preferential dividend? It was decided in that case that, as regards the old capital that that could not be done, that it was outside the powers of the company in general meeting to interfere with the equality of the shareholders, and whether that equality is based on the Act of Parliament or whether it is based on the partnership character of a joint-stock company it cannot be interfered with. This is the decision in Hutton v. Scarborough Cliff Hotel Co., and I am asked to say it no longer expresses the law on the subject. Sir George Jessel in the case of Harrison v. The Mexican Railway Co. used language from which it may be inferred, if you please so to construe his words, that he did not like Hutton v. Scarborough Cliff Hotel Co. If that is the proper meaning of his language its strengthens the binding character of the decison in Hutton v. Scarborough Cliff Hotel Co., for he followed it and said he was bound by it. Lord Macnaghten in the case of British and American Trustee and Finance Corporation v. Couper no doubt said he did not approve that decision, but that is only his opinion, it is not a decision of the House of Lords. On the other hand, Stirling, J., has said, though with a "perhaps," that as regards courts of first instance Hutton v. Scarborough Cliff Hotel Co. is still binding, and Lindley, L.J., in the last edition (1889) of the Law of Companies, though he frequently refers to Hutton v. Scarborough Cliff Hotel Co., does not suggest that it is a case which ought not to be followed.

It seems to me therefore that I am bound by that case. Now is there anything to distinguish this case. I have already said that the original articles contain nothing which can in the slightest degree control the memorandum. It is not suggested that they do, but it is argued that the articles referred to in the memorandum do not mean the contemporaneous articles, but those which may from time to time be the articles of the company. I do not think that is sound. The articles registered with the memorandum must, I think, be, in the first place, those referred to in the memorandum, and although, of course, all shareholders take their shares subject to revision by the company from time to time of the articles according to the statutory powers of the company, yet it is a strong thing to say that in a matter which affects the substance of their contract—the equality of the shareholders—it could be intended by such a reference to the articles to mean the special resolutions which may from time to time be passed by the company. It is within my knowledge that the passing of this particular clause in a memorandum exercised the minds of many experienced equity lawyers with reference to Hutton v. Scarborough Cliff Hotel Co. and other cases, and it was the universal opinion that if you wished to provide by the memorandum or by the contemporaneous document the original articles, that the power to issue preference shares was reserved, it must be done in the clearest possible terms, nothing being left to inference. Therefore I must hold that the law is that with a memorandum of this kind, unaffected by the contemporaneous articles, there is no power to issue preference shares.

Then I come to a question of very great difficulty. The gentlemen represented by Mr. Kirby take their shares through the administrator of John West, and as regards their contract with the company and their equities against it, must be in precisely the same position as the administrator of John West would have been. It seems to me that they must rely on their title; if the preference shares were not issued properly at first, I do not think they can say "we insist on our rights because those through whom we claim have held them some time, or because there have been successive devolutions and transfers on the faith of the contract." It seems to me I am in precisely the same position, notwithstanding the lapse of time, as if I were now dealing with the administrator of John West, and on the day after the allotment of shares to him. What did the administrator take by his contract with the company? He took what for the moment I will call preference shares with some special limitations. Mr. Lawrence's argument is ingenious and sound, but my difficulty is in applying it to the case before me. He says there is nothing in any of the principles on which Hutton v. Scarborough Cliff Hotel Co. depends to prevent a company issuing shares which limit any particular amount of dividend. There is no reason why he should not contract to take shares on the footing that he shall only have 5 per cent., that he shall not vote, that he shall not be entitled to a bonus. I think that is so. You do not injure the shareholders or put them otherwise than on an equality by giving under a contract with a particular shareholder less to him than that equality would give him. But I cannot see that that is what has been done here. It is true that the administrator of John West limits himself to 5 per cent. It is true that he binds himself not to vote and not to claim any bonus. But, after all, he insists on having a dividend of 5 per cent. whether the ordinary shareholders have 5 per cent. or not. It is in that sense a preference dividend and you cannot give that less importance because as a matter of fact the dividends which he would receive as an ordinary shareholder would be in excess of 5 per cent. The bargain is that he is to have that as a minimum dividend—not cumulative, but still a minimum dividend annually, if the profits are sufficient to pay it, to the exclusion of the ordinary shareholder, who takes nothing till that dividend has been paid, and once you arrive at that, those other conditions and limitations do not seem to me to alter the contract, and I think it is a false view to say that what he really bargains for is a dividend and not a preference dividend.

Having got as far as that I think the administrator of John West has not got such shares as his contract gives him. He could not; it was ultrà vires, and the company are now entitled to say: "We cannot recognise you as a preference shareholder." Then it is said "that being so we are entitled to be treated as ordinary shareholders; we contracted to be members of the company subject to certain limitations, if we cannot have the shares with those limitations we are still entitled to shares." The answer to my mind is complete: "That is not the contract; the contract, no doubt, was to give you a preferential dividend, but it was to give you a preferential dividend accompanied by certain limitations and restrictions, and if you cannot have the preferential dividend neither can you have the shares with the restrictions. If one part of the contract fails so does the other. You are only a member on certain terms. If you do not take those terms you are not a member at all." That, it seems to me, is the right view. Although views have been expressed in two or three cases on this point, there has been, it is admitted, no decision upon it at all. What, then, are the rights of these so-called preference shareholders? It seems to me they are in precisely the same position as any other men who have contributed their capital to a concern upon terms which are incapable of fulfilment. They are entitled to restitution and to nothing more. There is no question of election at all. The company cannot recognize them as being preference shareholders, the company cannot recognize them even as being shareholders. Then they are entitled to have their money paid back to them. (There is no question of interest because that has been paid up to the present time.)

His lordship then made a declaration that the so-called preference shareholders were not ordinary shareholders, and that all the profits of the company belonged to and ought to be equally divided between the ordinary shareholders.

Solicitors for all parties, Blyth, Dutton, Hartley, & Blyth.

Q. B. Div.
(Cave and Wills, JJ.) June 3, 8, 1896.

PAIN AND ANOTHER v. BOWDEN. (a.)

Practice—Costs—County court—Administration suit—Insolvent estate—Taxation—Discretion of registrar—County Court Rules, 1889, ord. 50a, r. 20.

In an administration suit in the county court the costs of the administrator are within the discretion of the registrar as discretionary "fees or allowances" under ord. 50a, r. 20, of the County Court Rules, 1889, and in disallowing certain costs, the registrar may take into consideration the fact that the estate is insolvent, in which case only such costs as are strictly necessary for the protection of the estate should be allowed.

Appeal from his Honour Judge Williams, the county court judge for Glamorgan.

In this case the plaintiffs were the creditors of an estate which was sought to be administered. The action was brought in the High Court, but was transferred to the county court.

The defendant was the administratrix of the testator, her husband. The estate was wholly insolvent. The question raised was whether certain charges for letters by her solicitor to creditors and interviews with them were within the discretion of the registrar upon the taxation of the bill of costs in the administration suit.

Ord. 50a, r. 20, of the County Court Rules, 1889, provides as follows: "All fees or allowances which are discretionary shall, unless otherwise provided, be allowed at the discretion of the registrar on taxation, who, in the exercise of such discretion, shall take into consideration the other fees and allowances to the solicitor and counsel, if any, in respect of the work to which any such allowance applies, the nature and importance of the action or matter, the amount involved, the interest of the parties, the fund or persons to bear the costs, the general conduct and costs of the proceedings, and all other circumstances."

In taxing the plaintiff's costs the registrar acted upon the principle that where a solicitor is advising the administrator of an estate known to be insolvent, he should only charge for services strictly necessary for the protection of the estate. He should not charge for letters and attendances answering the inquiries of creditors, especially after the case is in the hands of the court, or for any work which the administrator might very well do himself. On the other hand, where a good deal of work not strictly chargeable under the above rule has been done by the solicitor for the assistance of the administrator, the registrar was of opinion that the taxing officer has a discretion (which he exercised in the present case) to allow a moderate addition under the head of letters at the end of the bill.

The costs were taxed as between solicitor and client, and the sum of £27 was disallowed out of £74 relating to charges for letters to or interviews with creditors by the solicitor to the administratrix for the purpose of coming to an arrangement with them after the winding up of the estate had come into the hands of the court.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

On an application to the judge for an order to review the taxation he held that the registrar had no such discretion, and referred the matter back to him for taxation.

In making the above order the learned county court judge expressed himself as follows: "Here the estate administered by the administratrix is insolvent, and that fact was taken into consideration by the registrar in exercising his discretion, and he for that reason disallowed certain charges made by the solicitor acting for the administratrix, charges which would, if the estate had been solvent, have been allowed. The question I have to decide is whether these charges are in the discretion of the taxing-master, and I am referred to the case of Re Chennell, Jones v. Chennell, 26 W. R. 595, 8 Ch. D. 492, where it was decided by Jessel, M.R., and Cotton and Thesiger, L.JJ., that the charges and expenses of a trustee are not in the discretion of the court. If, therefore, the same ruling is applicable to the administrator of an estate who is not, strictly speaking, a trustee (although as administrator he is in fact a trustee for the benefit of the creditors), these charges are not in the discretion of the court, and if not in that of the court then clearly not in that of the taxing-master. I fail to find that any distinction is drawn by the courts between the charges of a trustee in the administration of a solvent and of an insolvent estate. I therefore come to the conclusion that the learned registrar was wrong in exercising his discretion in this matter, and in disallowing the charges in question, and the bill of costs must be sent back to him for further consideration."

From this decision one of the creditors appealed.

H. C. Gollan, for the appellant.—The charges in question are fees or allowances which are discretionary within the meaning of ord. 50*a*, r. 20. The case of Re Chennell does not apply now, as it was a case decided under the rules of 1875. The costs of administration suits are now discretionary under ord. 65, r. 1. In Plumb v. Craker, 16 Q. B. D. 40, 34 W. R. Dig. 44, it was held that the judge has absolute discretion in respect of the costs of such an action. In distinguishing between a solvent and an insolvent estate the registrar acted rightly, and in disallowing the charges in question he acted within the principle laid down in the case of Harbin v. Darby, 8 W. R. 512, 28 Beav. 325.

Ashton Cross, for the respondent, the administratrix.—The administratrix here ought not to be put in a worse position because the estate was insolvent. In the case of insolvent estates the costs of the executors, it is stated in Seton on Decrees (vol. 2, p. 1233), as between solicitor and client are to be provided for first. In the Chancery Division it is the practice that no distinction between a solvent and an insolvent estate is made when taxing the costs of an administrator. A trustee in an administration suit is allowed costs as between solicitor and client, see Re Love, Hill v. Spurgeon, 33 W. R. 449, 29 Ch. D. 348.

Cur. adv. vult.

CAVE, J.—I am of opinion that the decision of the registrar was right, and that this appeal must therefore be allowed. When we look at the judgment of the learned county court judge it is evident that he was of opinion that the registrar could not exercise any discretion, but was bound to allow such costs as had been actually incurred. There I think he was wrong. He said that he failed to find that the courts had drawn any distinction between the charges of a trustee in the administration of a solvent estate and an insolvent estate. It seems evident to me from this that he was labouring under a mistake as to the meaning of the decision in Re Chennell. That case only decided that the costs of a trustee in an administration suit were not, like costs of the plaintiff or defendant in an ordinary action, within the discretion of the court. That has nothing to do with the discretion of the registrar in this case. Re Chennell does not decide that because certain costs were not in the discretion of the judge therefore they should not be taxed at all.

There is, however, another point which we are asked to deal with—namely, that in taxing the costs the registrar had acted wrongly in making any distinction between the costs that should be allowed in the administration of solvent estates and those that should be allowed in the administration of insolvent estates, and it was suggested to us that it is the practice in the Chancery Division to make no such distinction, but no authority was cited in support of that. My brother Wills has consulted Stirling, J., who tells us that he knows of no such practice, that no such distinction is made in cases where the estate is solvent or insolvent. Therefore we must look to what the taxation has been in the case before us and what has been its result. On our asking counsel what items he alleged were wrongly disallowed, and on what grounds his objection is made, we were only told that no distinction should be made between solvent and insolvent estates, and that therefore the case ought to go back to the registrar. But we find that there is no such rule, and therefore to send the bill back to the registrar on that ground would be no guidance to him at all. I thing the registrar acted quite rightly in disallowing the items relating to letters and interviews, and in allowing only a lump sum in respect of them, and therefore the order of the county court judge was wrong and must be set aside and the appeal allowed.

WILLS, J.—I am of the same opinion. Subsequent to the argument in this case I consulted Stirling, J., who pointed out to me that there certainly was a distinction in taxation between the cases of solvent and insolvent estates, and he cited as an instance that in the case of solvent estates the court would always allow the administrator the costs of an inquiry as to next of kin, whereas in the case of an insolvent estate no such costs would be allowed as no benefit could result to the next of kin by such inquiry. In the case before us we have to deal with a specific rule, and not with the practice of the Chancery Division. This specific rule mentions various matters which the registrar on taxation is to take into consideration, and it then adds at the end the words "and all other circumstances." Therefore I think that under the circumstances in this case it is proper and reasonable that the registrar should take into consideration the fact that the estate was not large enough to pay all the creditors, and that the administratrix should only be allowed such costs as were strictly necessary for the protection of the estate.

I am therefore of opinion that the registrar here acted perfectly rightly and within his competence, and taxed the costs in a reasonable manner. The order of the county court judge must therefore be set aside and the appeal allowed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Easton & Cargill.

Solicitors for the respondent, Riddell, Vaizey, & Co., for Viner, Leader, & Co., Swansea.

House of Lords.

From C. A. (England). July 30, 1896.

CONQUEST AND ANOTHER v. EBBETTS AND ANOTHER. (a.)

Landlord and tenant—Underlease—Covenants to repair—Measure of damages.

Where an underlessee is liable to his immediate lessor for breach of his covenant to keep the demised premises in repair, all the circumstances must be considered and the damages assessed at such a sum as reasonably represents the damage which the covenantee has sustained. Should the underlessee have notice that the underlessor is liable over to his superior landlord, that is one of the circumstances to be considered.

The official referee, in such a case, estimated the amount at the cost of doing the repairs, less an abatement for the term of years still to run in the underlease. The immediate reversion, on the expiration of the underlease, consisted only of a few days.

Held, that he had properly assessed the damages, and the fact that the original lessee might not have to repair as required in the head lease was not a matter which could be gone into.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (44 W. R. 56, [1895] 2 Ch. 377, affirmed.

This was an appeal by the defendants in the action from an order of the Court of Appeal (Lindley, Lopes, and Rigby, L.JJ.), dated the 10th of July, 1895, affirming a report of the official referee, whereby the respondents were awarded £1,305 by way of damages.

The case is reported in 44 W. R. 56, [1895] 2 Ch. 377. The question to be determined was the proper measure of damages to be awarded in respect of breaches of covenant in an underlease to keep the demised premises in repair.

The premises in question were known as the Grecian Theatre, and were occupied by "General" Booth for the purposes of the Salvation Army. The original lease was granted by the trustees of St. Botolph's, Bishopsgate, in 1840, to Thomas Rouse for sixty-one years from Michaelmas, 1837, at a rent of £350 a year. Rouse in 1851 granted an underlease of a part, for his whole term less the last ten days thereof to Benj. Oliver at the same rent, being in effect an improved rent of about £100 a year. The covenants as to keeping in repair and delivering up in good repair were substantially the same in the lease and underlease.

The plaintiffs in the action—the present respondents—now represented Rouse. The appellant Conquest, one of the defendants in the action, represented Oliver. "General" Booth was assignee of the underlease and co-defendant in the action. The underlease contained a covenant to "keep" the premises in repair, and showed on the face of it that it was an underlease. At the time the action was brought there were still some years of the underlease to run. The respondents sued Conquest and "General" Booth for damages for alleged breach of the covenant. Romer, J., held that there had been a breach, and referred it to the official referee to assess the amount of damages, which he assessed as above stated.

The defendant Booth appealed, and the decision of the official referee was affirmed. The defendants Conquest and Booth then brought the present appeal.

Haldane, Q.C., Sargant, and Courthope-Munroe, for the appellants.—The damages should be based on the real loss—i.e., the diminution in value to the respondents' reversion, which if the repairs were done would be of little value: Penley v. Watts, 7 M. & W. 601, and Parke's, B., judgment therein; Logan v. Hall, 4 C. B. 598. The covenant the appellant would have had in view would have been his obligation to his immediate landlord. They also cited or referred to: Joyner v. Weeks, 39 W. R. 583, [1891] 2 Q. B. 31; Henderson v. Thorn, 41 W. R. 509; Vivian v. Champion, 2 Ld. Raym. 1125; Doe d. Trustees of Worcester School v. Rowlands, 9 C. & P. 734; Wigsell v. School for Indigent Blind, 30 W. R. 474, 8 Q. B. D. 357; Turner v. Lamb, 14 M. & W. 412; Smith v. Peat, 9 Ex. 161, 2 W. R. C. L. Dig. 154; Mills v. East London Union, 21 W. R. 142, L. R. 8 C. P. 79.

Jelf, Q.C., and R. F. Norton, for the respondents.—[In the course of their argument their lordships intimated that they did not wish to hear them on Joyner v. Weeks.] The premises should be in proper repair, and the amount fixed by the referee is correct—i.e., the sum which it would cost to put them in such a state, with an allowance for the unexpired term of the underlease: Davies v. Underwood, 6 W. R. 105, 2 H. & N. 570, Bramwell, B.; Coward v. Gregory, 15 W. R. 170, L. R. 2 C. P. 153.

Haldane, Q.C., replied.

The House took time for consideration.

Lord HERSCHELL.—The appellants in the present case contend that the damages for the admitted breach of a contract to keep certain demised premises in repair have been assessed on a wrong principle. The facts may be very shortly stated. In May, 1840, the then Bishop of London demised certain premises to Thomas Rouse for a term of sixty-one years from Michaelmas, 1837, at the rent of £350 a year. In March, 1851, a portion of these premises was demised to Benjamin Oliver, by way of underlease, for the original term less ten days at the same rent, being in effect an improved rent of about £100 a year. The covenants to keep the demised premises in repair and to deliver them up in good repair were in substantially the same terms in the lease and underlease. The respondents are the present trustees under the will of Thomas Rouse, the original lessee. The one appellant is the personal representative of Oliver, the sub-lessee, and the other is an assignee of the sub-lease. The premises comprised in the sub-lease not having been kept in repair pursuant to the covenant contained in it, the action in which this appeal arises was brought. The assessment of damages was referred to Mr. Ridley, one of the official referees, who fixed them at the sum of £1,305. At the time when the case was heard there were about three and a half years of the term unexpired. He arrived at the sum named by ascertaining how much it would require to put the premises in the state of repair in which they would have been if the covenant had been observed, and then allowing a rebate from that sum in consideration of the fact that the lease had still some years to run. The Court of Appeal considered that, there having been notice to the sub-lessee of the original lease and of the covenants contained in it, it was right to take into account in assessing the damages the liability of the respondents on those covenants, and that the damages had been properly assessed on the basis of awarding to the respondents a sum which represented the diminution in the value of their reversion due to the breach of covenant by the appellants. Where an action for non-repair had been brought during the currency of a lease, it was said by Holt, L.C.J., in Vivian v. Champion, in answer to the objection that it was a hard action, for maybe the lessee might leave the premises in repair at the end of the term, and that therefore it was usual to give but small damages: "We always inquire in these cases what it will cost to put the premises in repair, and give so much damages, and the plaintiff ought in justice to apply the damages to the repair of the premises." In the case of Doe d. Trustees of Worcester School v. Rowlands Coleridge, J., said: "In estimating the damage in cases where the lease has a long time to run, it is not fair to take the amount that would be necessary to put the premises into repair as the measure of damages. . . . The true question, therefore, is, to what extent is the reversion injured by the non-repair of the premises? If the lease had ninety-nine years to run it could not make much difference in the value of the reversion whether the premises were now in repair or not. This lease, however, will expire in about six years." I may observe that what the learned judge said with regard to a lease having ninety-nine years to run would not be applicable in all cases. There are circumstances in which it might be of the utmost importance to the reversioners that the buildings should be in a proper state of repair. Holt, L.C.J.'s statement of the law has been subjected to criticism in other cases, notably by Parke and Alderson, BB., in Turner v. Lamb. I do not think that any hard and fast rule can be laid down as to the damages which may be recovered by the covenantee during the currency of a lease in respect of the breach of a covenant to keep the demised premises in repair. All the circumstances of the case must be taken into consideration, and the damages must be assessed at such a sum as reasonably represents the damage which the covenantee has sustained by the breach of covenant. I quite agree with the criticism to which Lord Holt's view has been subjected if that learned judge intended to lay down that, whatever the circumstances and however long the term had to run, the damages must necessarily be what it would cost to put the premises into repair. On the other hand, I think it would be equally wrong to hold that this could never be the measure of damages whatever the circumstances and however nearly the term had expired. But in the present case, if the test be applied of inquiring how much the value of the respondents' reversion has been diminished by the breach of covenant—a test for which I understand the appellants to contend—I cannot see that there has been any error in the assessment of damages. If the premises were now in good repair the reversion of the respondents would secure them the improved rent of £100 a year to the end of the term, without any liability on their part, unless it were to the extent to which repairs subsequently became necessary. As matters stand they can only receive this rent subject to the liability of restoring the premises to good repair, so that they may in that condition redeliver them to their lessor. The difference between these two positions represents the diminution in the value of their reversion owing to the breach of covenant, and on this basis the damages seem to me to have been properly assessed.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

It was contended for the appellants that the respondents would not be bound in any case to spend upon the premises the sum necessary to put them in repair, or at the expiration of the term to pay that sum to their lessor. It was said that, owing to the nature of the premises and the changed circumstances of the neighbourhood, the freeholder would make an entirely different use of the site when the term he had created came to an end; that he would not desire to have the buildings then upon his land put in good repair, and that he would arrive at some arrangement with his lessee by which he would accept from him a sum less than the cost of effecting these repairs. I do not think that the court would do right, in assessing the damages in the present case, to involve itself, at the instance of the appellants, in considerations of that character. The duty of the appellants as between themselves and the respondents was to fulfil the obligation of the covenant into which they entered and to keep the premises in repair. If they had done so the present question would not have arisen. They have broken their covenant, and when sued for the breach they have, in my opinion, no right to demand that a speculative inquiry shall be entered upon as to what may possibly happen and what arrangements may possibly be come to, under the special circumstances of the case, when the superior lease expires by effluxion of time.

I think that the appeal should be dismissed with costs.

Lords MACNAGHTEN and MORRIS concurred.

Judgment appealed from affirmed and appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors for the appellants, Ranger, Burton, and Frost.

Solicitors for the respondents, Clarke and Calkin.

From C. A. (England). May 8, 11, 1896.

SADLER v. GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY CO. (a.)

Practice—Parties—Joinder of defendants—Nuisance—Injunction—Ord. 16, r. 4.

A plaintiff cannot join independent tortfeasors as co-defendants in an action for damages.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (44 W. R. 50) affirmed.

This was an appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal (A. L. Smith, L.J., Rigby, L.J., dissenting), 44 W. R. 50, [1895] 2 Q. B. 688, affirming a decision of Day, J., at chambers.

The facts are set out in the court below, and are shortly as follows:—The plaintiff, the present appellant, brought this action against the Great Western Railway Co. and the Midland Railway Co. for a nuisance in obstructing his business by their vans, &c., and he also claimed an injunction. The railway companies acted quite independently and were under different management and not responsible for the acts of each other.

The Great Western Railway Co. took out a summons to stay proceedings in the action unless the Midland Railway Co. were struck out as defendants.

Day, J., granted the application, which was affirmed by the Court of Appeal.

The plaintiff appealed.

Warmington, Q.C., and Russell Roberts (Chester Jones with them), for the appellant.

Asquith, Q.C., and Hon. A. Lyttelton, for the respondents.

Thorpe v. Brumfitt, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 650; Lambton v. Mellish, 43 W. R. 5, [1894] 3 Ch. 163; Smurthwaite v. Hannay, 43 W. R. 113, [1894] A. C. 494; Peninsular and Oriental Steamship Co. v. Tsuné Kejima, [1895] A. C. 661, 44 W. R. Dig. 128, were cited or referred to.

Lord HALSBURY, C.—I really think that this case is too plain for argument, notwithstanding the period that it has lasted. If this were a matter for discretion the whole thing has been disposed of, first by the Master, and then by the learned judge, and then by the Court of Appeal; and it appears to me hopeless to contend against that due exercise of the discretion. The real truth is that there was no difference upon the law between the two learned Lords Justices in the court below, because Rigby, L.J., who differed from A. L. Smith, L.J., said in terms: "I do not look upon this case as one where the liability of the defendants is severable. No doubt in the action they allege it; but in paragraph 5 the plaintiff alleges what may be a much more formidable case—that the concurrent action of the two creates a nuisance. I think, therefore, that if my judgment had to decide this matter I should differ from the learned judge." If I agreed with the learned Lord Justice in the proposition which he states I am not certain that I should disagree with him in the conclusion; but I think the whole fallacy is involved in his proposition. The pleader here has thought proper in some parts of the statement of claim to allege several and separate causes of action. He has set out in terms that the plaintiff has a separate cause of action against each of the two defendants. I believe the true construction of the whole statement of claim is that, and that the words which are to be found in the 5th paragraph do no more than expand, with a view to damages, what is referred to in the other paragraphs of the statement of claim. But if it were true that the 5th paragraph sets out a joint cause of action (which I do not think it does), that would not make the case any better for the plaintiff, because upon that hypothesis he would have joined several causes of action in one count with a joint cause of action in another count, which would be equally objectionable; and therefore the consequences of such a procedure would not be evaded.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

It seems to me that after the decision in your lordships' house placing the construction upon the order before us, which alone could have given colour to such a contention, it is no longer possible to entertain any such contention: Smurthwaite v. Hannay. The order does no more than deal with the joinder of the parties; it has no reference to the joinder of the causes of action.

With regard to the learned Lord Justice's observation about "not knowing what a common law action means at the present day," in one sense I can understand what his lordship means. There are two branches of our judicial system; the court in each branch has now full jurisdiction over every cause; it used to be under separate jurisdictions: but I am not aware that the Judicature Act, or any principle that has ever been acted upon or affirmed in any court, has said that you may confuse several separate and distinct causes of action. What we used to know as a common law cause of action, and what is a common law cause of action, must still remain so, and as such is open to the incidents of a cause of action so as to prevent that which is a separate cause of action being made a joint cause of action. The whole point here is this: the pleader having set out the separate causes of action, which he has carefully and accurately described as separate causes of action, how can he combine these separate causes of action so as to bring one action against two defendants in respect of their several liability on separate causes of action. It seems to me that it is impossible to maintain such a proposition.

I therefore move your lordships that the appeal be dismissed, with costs.

Lord WATSON.—I take the same view. It is perfectly obvious that the statement of claim for the appellant sets forth two separate and distinct causes of action against two separate respondents. I do not think, upon any fair construction of that pleading, there is set forth any joint claim against the two respondents. I do not mean to say, even if there had been another claim of that kind, it would have made any difference to the parties in the present state of the record. In these circumstances it has been painfully apparent from first to last of the learned argument we have heard that the contention of the appellant was not only unsupported by authority, but was in the teeth of authority.

Lord HERSCHELL.—I am of the same opinion. It is practically admitted, for it cannot be disputed, that there are in the statement of claim two separate causes of action charged against these two defendants, that either of them might be sued alone, and that the plaintiff here might recover against either of them alone. It is an action in which there is a claim for damages, first, against both of them jointly, and then against each of them, as well as a claim for an injunction.

It is quite unnecessary to express any opinion as to what might have been the case if the claim had been limited to a claim for a declaration of right or a claim to an injunction. I must not be taken to be expressing any opinion that in that case the action in its present form could have proceeded, but I do not express any opinion upon it at all. In the present case there is not only a claim for an injunction, but a claim for damages against each of two separate defendants. An action of this description could only have been maintained in the common law courts before the Judicature Act; and when it is said that there is no authority, it must be observed that nobody would ever have dreamt of joining in the same action two defendants against whom he made separate claims for damages. In my judgment there is no pretence for joining them now merely because you also claim an injunction, even in a case where, if your claim had been only for an injunction, a joinder might have been allowed.

For these reasons I think the appeal should be dismissed.

Lord SHAND.—As something has been said in this case about the rules of practice that are observed in Scotland, I should like to say that I think that there is very little substantial difference, and that in some respects, as it appears to me, is a favourable difference in the law of that country with regard to proceedings of this kind. I give no opinion as to whether this would or would not have been a competent proceeding in Scotland further than to say that certainly, if it were a case of an interdict only, I should have thought that the parties could, under the dictum in The Duke of Buccleuch's case, have had the whole case tried as one. Whether or not it would have been different upon a claim for damages, having regard to what fell from Earl Cairns, L.C., is another question. For my own part, I think even in a case of damages where there are only two people concerned, and not so many as there were in The Esk River case (Cowan v. Duke of Buccleuch, 2 App. Cas. 344), where there were six or seven of them, it might be convenient to have the cases of damages tried together.

But the rules and practice of England seem to be entirely different, and I think there has been no precedent cited for what is here proposed. I agree in thinking that these grounds of action are not only separable, but separate, and that each of the defendants is called upon to answer for his own acts only. I think, looking to what has been decided in the previous cases, and what appears to be the practice in England, the majority of the learned judges in this case have come to the right result according to the law of England.

Lord DAVEY.—I quite agree, and I have very little to add to the reasons which have been given by your lordships. I only desire to say, as we are differing from the view taken by Rigby, L.J., that I think we differ from that learned judge, not so much in the view of the law as in the view we take of the effect of the allegations in the statement of claim. What the learned judge says is this: "It appears to me if it is made out to be a nuisance" (that is to say, if what is stated in the 5th paragraph is made out to be a nuisance), "not two nuisances, but one." And he repeats that line of reasoning when commenting upon the case of Smurthwaite v. Hannay. He says that, as he understands it, the effect of that decision, stated shortly, is "that you cannot bring plaintiffs, and, by parity of reasoning, you cannot bring defendants, before the court where the causes of action vested in the different plaintiffs or the causes of action which exist between the different defendants are separate. I do not look upon this case as one where the liability of the defendants is severable."

Now, I believe there is not a scintilla of allegation, nor was it intended, as the appellant's counsel fairly said, to state in the statement of claim that there was anything else than a separable cause of action—that there was anything like a joint cause of action, or a joint action of any kind, on the part of the defendants. My present impression is that even if the plaintiff had confined his case to an injunction he could not have maintained his action; but I do not desire to express a decided opinion upon that point, and it is not necessary to do so, because this action is avowedly maintained as a common law action—as I venture to call it notwithstanding Rigby, L.J.'s criticism—a common law action for damages. The plaintiff, though invited to do so, declines, as I understand it, to limit it to an injunction.

I agree in thinking that the appeal should be dismissed.

Order appealed from affirmed, and appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors for the appellant, Kennedy, Hughes, & Kennedy.

Solicitor for the respondents, R. R. Nelson.

Court of Appeal.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, Lopes, and Rigby, L.JJ.) — July 29, 1896.

FRICKER v. VAN GRUTTEN. (a.)

Practice — Parties — Joinder of plaintiff — Consent of person to be joined—"His own consent in writing"—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 16, r. 11—Common Law Procedure Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76), s. 34—Striking out name after order for payment of costs by plaintiffs—Costs, by whom payable.

The provision of ord. 16, r. 11, that "no person shall be added as a plaintiff . . . without his own consent in writing thereto," makes it necessary that the consent should be actually written and signed by the person to be joined; and a consent written and signed by his solicitor in his presence and with his approval is not sufficient.

The old rule that, when a solicitor has commenced proceedings on behalf of a person from whom he has not received a proper authority, the person so made a party remains liable for the costs of the proceedings, and has no remedy except against the solicitor, has now been altered; and an order will be made staying all proceedings by or against the person improperly joined (including all proceedings under any order already made against him), and directing the solicitor to pay any costs which such person may have been ordered to pay, and to pay such person's costs as between solicitor and client.

Appeal by Mr. Weller from Kekewich, J.

The material facts are stated in the judgment of Lindley, L.J.

Montague Shearman, for the appellant, referred to ord. 16, r. 11, and to Tryon v. National Provident Institution, 34 W. R. 398, 16 Q. B. D. 678.

T. E. Crispe, for the respondent Toppin, referred to section 34 of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852 (15 & 16 Vict. c. 76), and section 2 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41).

J. A. Foote, for certain of the defendants in the action, contended that Weller, who had been made a party with his own consent, was estopped from relying upon the absence of a written consent.

Shearman, in reply, referred to the Annual Practice, 1876, vol. 2, p. 328. [LINDLEY, L.J., referred to Nurse v. Durnford, 28 W. R. 145, 13 Ch. D. 764; Newbiggin-by-the-Sea Gas Co. v. Armstrong, 28 W. R. 217, 13 Ch. D. 310; and Reynolds v. Howell, 22 W. R. 18, L. R. 8 Q. B. 398.]

J. A. Foote referred to the Annual Practice, 1895, p. 206, and to In re Scholes, 34 W. R. 515, 32 Ch. D. 245.

LINDLEY, L.J. — This case is an important one, not only to the parties, but also as a question of practice. It is an application by Mr. Weller—who is the trustee in bankruptcy of a person named Harris James and whose name has been added as a co-plaintiff in the action—to have his (Weller's) name struck out from the writ and subsequent proceedings and from an order of this court to pay certain costs.

It appears that the writ in this action was issued on the 24th of December, 1895, by the three first-named plaintiffs, Weller not being a party. Some motions or applications were made in that action, and it was considered by the plaintiff's then solicitor, Mr. Toppin, that Mr. Weller ought to be joined. Now, there was an interview upon that subject, and there is some little controversy as to what took place. Mr. Weller says that Mr. Toppin told him it was a mere matter of form, and that he would be indemnified from all liability, or that there would be no costs to pay at all, or something of that kind. I do not think Toppin quite agrees in that. What was done was this. There being an application by summons that Weller's name should be added, Comins and Drewry, who were Weller's solicitors, in Weller's presence wrote on the summons these words: "We consent on behalf of Mr. Weller, the trustee." That summons with that consent upon it was taken to the chief clerk of Kekewich, J., and thereupon he made what is called a fiat for the addition of Weller's name as a plaintiff, and Weller's name has been added as a plaintiff, and has been there ever since, and is there still.

Now, it appears that Weller afterwards found out that he had incurred greater liability for costs than he had anticipated. By what I may call an accident—I am not going into the particulars—he found out that orders were being made dismissing the plaintiff's appeal with costs, and that his name had been added as one of the plaintiffs. He says he never intended that Toppin should, without consulting him, go on and expose him to the risk of costs. He does not deny that he did verbally consent, but he says it was upon the understanding I have mentioned, and only upon conditions. He now finds himself in a difficulty, for there is a series of orders for costs against him, and naturally he looks about to see if he cannot escape. It is now argued by his counsel that the consent given by Comins and Drewry in the words I have read did not authorize the addition of Weller's name as co-plaintiff. That question turns on the construction of ord. 16 r. 11. [The Lord Justice read the material part of the rule, and continued:—] Now, the question is, what is the meaning of that rule? Unless the word "own" means a good deal, one would have thought a person who assented to what was being done in his presence would have been bound by that. But when you come to look at what the word "own" does mean, and when you understand the history of this rule, the inference is almost unavoidable that "own" means a good deal, and is, in fact, simply an abbreviated mode of expressing what was previously found more at length in section 34 of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852. The language of the Act makes it plain enough that the consent ought to have been the consent of the party himself in writing, and the reason for that is perfectly intelligible. The reason was to prevent any discussion about understandings or misunderstandings as to authority. A person is not be added as a co-plaintiff, nor is a person's name to be used as a next friend unless he consents in writing and signs the writing with his own hand. It must be his written consent—that is what the Common Law Procedure Act said in language that is quite unmistakeable. The word "own" appears to me to have been introduced into this rule to emphasise what the language would have been if the Act had been closely followed, and to be a short form for continuing the enactment of the Common Law Procedure Act. Now, if that be the true construction, as I think it is—though, certainly, I hesitated a little at first—that fiat ought never to have been made, and Mr. Weller, who I think on the whole has the merits of the case on his side, is entitled to take advantage of the defect. I think that contention is right. I think the learned judge has attached too little importance to the use of the word "own" in the rule; he seems to treat that word as not meaning anything at all. I do not doubt that the chief clerk was too lax. He ought not to have passed that consent, but ought to have said that it was not a proper consent; and Weller's name ought never to have been put on as a plaintiff.

(a.) Reported by W. SHALLCROSS GODDARD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

This case illustrates the very evil which the rule was intended to prevent. It is a very serious thing to make a man a plaintiff without his consent. It exposes him to very serious risks; and the rule has accordingly provided that it is not to be done without his consent in writing.

It is said that this is a consent in writing; Weller did consent, and this writing was made in his presence and with his approval. But the rule means —I have not the slightest doubt, now that we understand it—that there must be his own personal writing. That is the first point in Weller's favour.

What, then, ought to be done? It appears that before he knew anything about it proceedings had been taken, and unsuccessfully, and the plaintiffs, includ- himself, had been ordered to pay certain costs. As soon as he found that out he did not lose any time. On the 3rd of March he took out the summons which is now before us, asking that the fiat of the chief clerk, giving leave to add the appellant as a plaintiff, may be rescinded and that his name may be removed from the amended writ of summons, and all subsequent proceedings in the action. The question now is, what is the right thing to be done in such circumstances? There was a time, both at common law and in Chancery, when, if a man's name had been used in litigation without his authority, and an order had been made against him, he was bound by it, and his only remedy was against the solicitor who had improperly used his name. That was discussed in Reynolds v. Howell, where Lord Blackburn reviewed the decisions, and came to the conclusion that the old practice had been departed from, and that the proper order was to stay the proceedings without ordering the party improperly joined to pay the costs. The old Chancery practice seems not to have been altered so early, or, at any rate, not much before. That is exemplified in Bligh v. Tredgett, 5 De G. & Sm. 74. There a bill had been filed in the name of a next friend, and the next friend had to pay all the costs, and was told that his only remedy was against the solicitor by whom the suit had been commenced. The question here is, which of those two rules is the correct one, or the one which ought now to be adopted. The matter was discussed twice in 1879, after the Judicature Act and the rules thereunder, in the cases of Nurse v. Durnford and Newbiggin-by-the-Sea Gas Co. v. Armstrong. In both those cases the point was raised distinctly whether the common law practice, as settled by the decision of Lord Blackburn, or the old Chancery practice, should prevail, and the decision in both was that the practice established in the Queen's Bench Division was the more reasonable and convenient, and should prevail. In Newbiggin Gas Co. v. Armstrong, Jessel, M.R., says this: "The order follows the old practice of the Court of Chancery in such cases, by which the defendant was not served with notice of the application, but was left to get his costs from the person named as plaintiff, who had afterwards to get those costs over from the solicitor. The result was that the nominal plaintiff, who had never given any authority for the use of his name, had to pay the defendant's costs, and might be unable to recover them by reason of the insolvency of the solicitor. On the other hand, according to the practice of the common law courts, the defendant was served with notice of the application, and the solicitor had to pay the costs of both the plaintiff and the defendant. That appears to me to be the better practice. The question is, which practice is now to be followed? Since the passing of the Judicature Act that must be left to the court to determine. . . . I have no hesitation in saying, as I have already said at the Rolls Court, though not with the same authority with which I now say it, that I think the common law practice in this case is founded in natural justice, and ought to be followed for the future." So that was settled; and, as I said, the same view was acted upon again in Nurse v. Durnford.

That, then, being so, what ought we now to do? If we look at the case before Lord Blackburn we see that the name was not struck out ab initio, but all further proceedings were stayed; and that appears to me the right thing to do now. Nothing would be gained by undoing what has actually been done; and the staying of all further proceedings in the name of Weller, and all proceedings under any order made against him, will be sufficient to protect him and to stop all executions under the orders for payment of costs. As regards the money which the defendants have obtained by execution, that money ought to be returned. Obviously, except by consent, we could not now make an order to that effect, because we have no evidence on the subject, but Mr. Foote's clients, having authorized him to consent, they must give an undertaking that they will return the whole of the money which Weller paid to the sheriff.

As regards Toppin, he appears to me to have done that which he had no right to do. He got this informal consent and made use of it, and he has occasioned the whole of the consequences which we are endeavouring to set right. Therefore, following the authorities I have cited, I think he ought to pay to Weller all the costs which Weller has incurred or been ordered to pay up to the present time, and to pay to the defendants any costs they may have incurred; Weller's costs to be paid as between solicitor and client, and the defendant's as between party and party.

LOPES, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. This is a case, no doubt, of considerable importance in relation to practice. [The Lord Justice stated the facts, and continued:—] Then the question arises whether, under ord. 16, r. 11, that consent which I have mentioned is a sufficient consent. The important words are "without his own consent in writing thereto." What does that mean? Does it mean such a consent as was given by Comins and Drewry, Weller being present, in their handwriting, not his? or does it mean consent in writing, that writing being the writing of the person himself who consents? I am of opinion that it means the written consent of the person consenting; his own actual writing, his own actual signature. I think there is strong reason for so holding when section 34 of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1852, is looked at, because there, where provision is made for a similar state of things, we find that these words are used. [The Lord Justice read the section, and continued:—] In my opinion the words, "his own consent in writing," are intended to be equivalent to those words in the Common Law Procedure Act, "under his, her, or their hands." I have no doubt that before that Act consent might also have been given in person without writing, but that, I presume, was not thought desirable, and accordingly the rule was altered. In my judgment the consent in writing which was provided for by the rule was a consent, to be in the writing of the person consenting, and I think to be under his own hand, as provided by section 34 of the Act. Now that being so, it appears here that Mr. Weller, for some time after the proceedings were started, did not know the effect of what was being done. He happened to be in court, and in that way it came to his knowledge that he had been made liable to costs, and thereupon he takes out a summons asking that his name should be struck out. The chief clerk seems to have made the order allowing Mr. Weller's name to be added as co-plaintiff, upon materials on which he really ought not to have passed it. That is how the case stands; and accordingly Weller was improperly made a plaintiff in this action.

Then the question is, What is to be done now? I think Weller is entitled to have the proceedings stayed in the same way as in Reynolds v. Howell. It is clear that there was for a great many years a conflict between the practice at common law and the Chancery practice. For myself, I am familiar only with that at common law, and it seems to me a gross injustice, and I can scarcely believe that any court ever held that a person who has been made a plaintiff without his own knowledge and consent, and has been ordered to pay costs, should not be able to have his name struck out, but should be told he has no remedy except against the solicitor who improperly made him a party—it may be a solicitor who is insolvent. The judgment of Lord Blackburn in Reynolds v. Howell is very important. There it was held that where an attorney brings an action without proper authority, the plaintiff is entitled to have the proceedings stayed without payment of costs. The matter was subsequently discussed in Nurse v. Durnford and Newbiggin Gas Co. v. Armstrong, and finally it was held that the common law practice was that which was to be preferred. That, I take it, is the practice which is in force at the present time, both in the Chancery and in the Queen's Bench Division.

The only other question is, what order is to be made as to Toppin? He was in the wrong throughout, and was the person who brought about the making of Weller a party; and I think the order stated by Lindley, L.J., as to the costs he is to pay, is the right one. I also agree that the money actually received by Mr. Foote's clients ought to be returned; protection being given to them and also to the sheriff if he requires it against any action for trespass.

RIGBY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. First of all, as to the construction of the rule, I cannot entertain any doubt that the emphatic words there used were intended to be literally understood: "His own consent in writing thereto" must be his own personal authority in writing, and I think those words were intended absolutely and altogether to put an end to any dispute arising, on verbal evidence, as to whether a solicitor who joins a person as a plaintiff was really authorized or not. I agree that section 34 of the Act of 1852 makes that still more clear—if it could be made more clear—than the words of rule 11 make it; but, at any rate, I think the construction of that rule is plain. Then it is said that Weller did give his consent, which has been reduced into writing with his approval, and that, therefore, he is estopped from denying that this is "his consent in writing." I wish to say, upon that, that it is idle to say that a man shall only be bound by a written consent, but that, if he consents verbally, he will be estopped from denying that he is bound by a writing. I come, therefore, to the conclusion that there was no proper authority under ord. 16, r. 11, to make Weller a plaintiff in this action.

Then comes the important question, How is the wrong that has been done to be remedied? It appears that in such cases not the Court of Chancery alone, but the courts of common law as well, were in the habit of saying to a person who had been made a defendant or a plaintiff, "Though you never authorized it, the courts cannot go behind the record, but must treat you as if you had been properly made a party, and your only remedy is against the attorney who wrongly placed you on the record." That appears to have been the common law practice right down to the case of Robson v. Eaton, 1 T. R. 62, where Lord Mansfield took a bold line, as he often did, overruled the past practice, and said, "Make the order against the attorney." That was a remarkable case, somewhat resembling the present, because there the attorney who made the mistake was acting bonâ fide. There was brought to him a power of attorney which purported to have been executed before the Lord Mayor, and to be attested by the Lord Mayor, and if it was worth anything it was a clear authority from the person, who was afterwards made a plaintiff, to make him a plaintiff. So far the attorney had not acted improperly, yet Lord Mansfield held that as he had acted upon an authority which turned out to be a forgery, he must take the consequences; and he was made liable for all the costs which the plaintiff would have had to pay in the action. Even that did not settle the question, for afterwards Parke, B.—no mean authority—considered that the old authorities were the more correct. But ultimately, in Reynolds v. Howell, the common law courts, under the guidance of Lord Blackburn, emancipated themselves altogether from that doctrine, declared that they should hold themselves bound by the principle of Robson v. Eaton, and applied it to the case before them. That was followed in the Chancery Division by the two cases that have been referred to, the one being Newbiggin Gas Co. v. Armstrong, a decision of the Court of Appeal. Those decisions were afterwards followed in Cape Breton Co. v. Fenn, 29 W. R. 386, 17 Ch. D. 198, where, certain solicitors having commenced an action in the name of the company, it was held "that the action must be dismissed as having been instituted without authority, and that H. & Co."—those are the persons who had issued the writ—"must pay the costs of all parties; the costs of the company"—whose name had been used—"being taxed as between solicitor and client, and the other costs as between party and party." That case settled the matter on a more satisfactory basis.

Here Mr. Toppin may naturally feel that he has been rather a victim in this matter; but someone must be a victim when proceedings are wrongly instituted. The question is, Who is responsible for that wrong? If it be the solicitor, he is the person who ought to pay. I agree as to the form of order proposed by Lindley, L.J.

LOPES, L.J.—I quite agree with what Rigby, L.J., has said as to the common law practice being, up to Robson v. Eaton, the same as the Chancery practice. When I said that the common law practice was the other way, I meant the practice I was familiar with, and was referring to my own time.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Comins & Drewry; Sidney Toppin; Robbins, Billing, & Co.

From County Palatine Court of Lancaster. (Lindley and Lopes, L.JJ.) July 2, 1896.

In re HIGGINSHAW MILLS AND SPINNING CO. (LIMITED).

MANCHESTER AND COUNTY BANK (LIM.) v. HIGGINSHAW MILLS AND SPINNING CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Company—Winding up—Mortgage—Interest accrued after winding up order—Distress—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 87, 163.

The liquidators and receivers of the H. Co. entered into possession of their mills and kept them in working order, so as, if possible, to sell them as a going concern at an enhanced value. The mortgagees having applied for leave to distrain, for interest accrued due after the date of the entering into possession, were refused leave, on the ground that the possession of the liquidators was as beneficial to the mortgagees as to the company and to all its other creditors.

It is easier for a landlord to obtain leave to distrain for rent than for a mortgagee to obtain leave to distrain for interest accrued since the date of the winding up.

In re Lancashire Cotton Spinning Co., 36 W. R. 305, 35 Ch. D. 656, followed.

Appeal from a decision of the Vice-Chancellor of the County Palatine of Lancaster.

The company was incorporated in July, 1873.

By a mortgage deed, dated the 24th of October, 1873, the property of the company was mortgaged to Hilton Greaves to secure £40,000 and interest.

The mortgage contained the usual power of sale, and a power for the mortgagee to distrain for any interest in arrear "in such or the like manner as landlords are by law entitled to do in cases of distresses taken for non-payment of rent reserved on leases for years."

In 1888 the company issued debentures to the value of £30,000, charged upon its undertaking and property.

On the 4th of October, 1895, the company presented a petition for a winding-up order.

On the 11th of October the Manchester and County Bank, on behalf of themselves and all other debenture-holders, brought an action against the company, and on the 15th of October an order was made in the action for the appointment of a receiver, and ultimately, on the 14th of January, 1896, three receivers were appointed.

On the 24th of October the company passed an extraordinary resolution for winding up voluntarily, and the same three gentlemen were appointed as liquidators.

On the 18th of November a supervision order was made, and on the next day the liquidators went into possession of the mills.

From the 13th of December, 1895, until the 14th of January, 1896, they worked one of the mills.

On the 13th of April, 1896, the liquidators ceased to keep the machinery going, and Henry Greaves, one of the executors of the mortgagee, who had died, stated that the mortgagees would not pay any part of the expenses of keeping the machinery in working order.

The interest on the mortgage debt being in arrear, on the 8th of May, 1896, the executors took out a summons asking for leave to distrain after the commencement of the winding up.

The Vice-Chancellor gave them leave to distrain for interest accrued due to the applicants since the 19th of November, 1895, the date when the liquidators went into possession.

Section 163 of the Companies Act, 1862, provides as follows: "Where any company is being wound up by the court, or subject to the supervision of the court, any attachment, sequestration, distress, or execution put in force against the estate or effects of the company after the commencement of the winding up shall be void to all intents."

The liquidators appealed.

Buckley, Q.C., and Radford, for the appellants.—By section 163 of the Companies Act, 1862, a distress after a winding-up order has been made is void to all intents, but that is qualified by section 87, under which the court may give leave to proceed, distress being a "proceeding" under that section: In re Exhall Coal Mining Co., 4 D. G. J. & S. 377, 12 W. R. Dig. 136. The case is governed by In re Lancashire Cotton Spinning Co., Ex parte Carnelley, 36 W. R. 305, 35 Ch. D. 656. The court will only give leave to distrain in two classes of cases—(1) if the lessor says he will accept a surrender, but the lessee will not, then the court will give leave to distrain; (2) if it be shown that the cost incurred is in the winding up, then leave is given. That becomes a question of fact; was the cost incurred solely for the benefit of the winding up? if so distress is granted: In re Brown, Bayley, and Dixon, 30 W. R. 5, 18 Ch. D. 649, is against us, but is not binding on this court. The assets are worth considerably more than the debentures, so that In re New City Constitutional Club Co., Ex parte Purssell, 35 W. R. 421, 34 Ch. D. 646, is not in point.

Astbury, Q.C., and J. A. Tweedale, for the mortgagees.—The tests laid down by this court in In re Oak Pits Colliery Co., 30 W. R. 759, 21

(a.) Reported by W. SHALLCROSS GODDARD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Ch. D. 322, apply. In that case the court accepted the dictum of Fry, J., in In re Brown, Bayley, and Dixon, and made it authoritative. If the possession of the liquidator is for beneficial purposes, he ought to pay rent and not have the place free; if the possession is only to keep the place going, then he ought to have it free: In re Lancashire Cotton Spinning Co. does not suggest that there is no power to distrain.

Lindley, L.J.—I think the Vice-Chancellor was mistaken in granting leave to distrain. The case is a very simple one. [His lordship stated the facts and continued:—] Up to that time (when the liquidators took possession) the mortgagees had done nothing at all. Since then the liquidators have been trying to do the best they can with the mill. It was quite as much for the benefit of the mortgagees, as of the shareholders and creditors, that the mill should be kept going; and that makes an important difference between a mortgagee and a mere landlord. The liquidators kept the works going with a view to a sale. Now, the mortgagees ask to be paid in full or for leave to distrain for the interest which has accrued due since the date when the receivers entered. Upon what principle? They must have regard to the statutes. As was pointed out in In re Lancashire Cotton Spinning Co., anyone applying for leave to distrain must show good reason why leave should be given. That case shows that there may be cases in which leave to distrain will be given, and what are sufficient grounds are fully and accurately explained there, and in In re Oak Pits Colliery Co., which was a case of landlords. The distinction between the two cases is against the mortgagee; it is easier for a landlord to show cause why he ought to be allowed to distrain than for a mortgagee. The reason is obvious. It would be very unjust that the landlord's property should be used by a company for the purpose of carrying on its business, and that the company should pay no rent for it. The mortgagee has his security, and if the property is so managed as to sell at a better price, he has the benefit of it. That appears to be the ratio decidendi of In re Lancashire Cotton Spinning Co., where it was held that the mortgagees ought not to be allowed to distrain for interest accrued due after the commencement of the winding up. For leave to be given, there must be some conduct on the part of the liquidator which would make it inequitable for leave not to be given. This view is quite consistent with what Fry, J., said in In re Brown, Bayley, and Dixon. In my opinion this case is entirely governed in principle by In re Lancashire Cotton Spinning Co., and the appeal must be allowed, and leave to distrain refused.

Lopes, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The words in section 163 are explicit; but the section is to be read in conjunction with, and is controlled by section 87. That conclusion was arrived at thirty-two years ago, and has been acted upon ever since. This case is governed by In re Lancashire Cotton Spinning Co., and I entirely agree with what was said about the case of a landlord.

The Vice-Chancellor made a mistake in giving leave to distrain. The summons must be dismissed with costs here and below.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Bowcliffes, Rawle, & Co., for R. & J. Ascroft & Maw, Oldham; Woodcock, Ryland & Parker, for Tweedale, Sons, & Lees, Oldham.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } July 24, 1896.
Romer, J. }

In re Doetsch.
Matheson & Co. v. Ludwig. (a.)

Partnership — Debt — Spanish firm — Administration action—Separate estate of deceased partner—Lex fori.

A rule of Spanish law that the separate estate of a deceased partner cannot be proceeded against by a creditor of the partnership until the joint assets are first judicially proved insufficient, is a rule of procedure, and does not prevent the creditor of a Spanish firm obtaining administration in this country of the separate assets in this country of a deceased partner. The rule as to administration is a matter of the lex fori.

Trial of action.

This was an action for the administration of the estate of H. M. Doetsch, deceased, who had been a partner in the Spanish firm of Sundheim & Doetsch, merchants, carrying on business at Huelva in Spain.

By an agreement dated the 28th of November, 1893, between the said firm and Messrs. Matheson & Co. the plaintiffs, which referred to certain previous transactions that had taken place between the parties, the firm of Sundheim & Doetsch, became bound to pay Matheson & Co. the sum of £100,000. This agreement, it appeared during the course of the trial, was made in London.

H. M. Doetsch died on the 25th of May, 1894, domiciled in London, and leaving a will whereby he appointed the defendants G. Ludwig and C. Doetsch his executors. He died possessed of assets in this country. There was still owing the greater part of the £100,000.

The plaintiffs now brought this action on behalf of themselves and all others the joint creditors of the firm of Sundheim & Doetsch, claiming a declaration that the real and personal estate of H. M. Doetsch was liable in equity to the joint debts of the firm, and that it should be administered by the court. The defendants pleaded that Sundheim & Doetsch was a Spanish firm (sociedad colectiva), constituted according to Spanish law, according to which this action could not be brought, as the joint assets had not been proceeded against and proved insufficient, and that, therefore, administration here should be refused. It was admitted between the parties that by the Spanish law a creditor of a partnership such as that of Sundheim & Doetsch could not proceed in the Spanish courts against the separate estate of any partner, whether deceased or surviving, until the creditor had proceeded against and exhausted the joint estate of the partnership, or until the insufficiency of the joint estate to pay the creditor's debts in full had been judicially established.

Eve, Q.C., and Howard Wright, for the plaintiffs.—The rules as to the administration and distribution of the estates of debtors are governed by the lex fori: Wilkinson v. Henderson, 1 My. & K. 582; Thurburn v. Steward, 19 W. R. 678, 683, L. R. 3 P. C. 478; In re Kloebe, Kannreuther v. Geiselbrecht, 33 W. R. 391, L. R. 28 Ch. D. 175. The rules of the Spanish law do not apply to the courts here, as they relate to matters of procedure: Bullock v. Caird, 23 W. R. 827, L. R. 10 Q. B. 276. The ultimate right of the creditors is the same in both countries. The reason why a creditor may in this country proceed at once against the separate estate of the partner is merely to avoid circuity of action: Winter v. Innes, 4 My. & Cr. 101, 111; Wilkinson v. Henderson.

(a.) Reported by J. W. Greig, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

They also cited Lodge v. Pritchard, 11 W. R. 1086, 1 De G. J. & S. 610; Westlake Priv. Int. Law, 1st ed., p. 197; In re Melbourn, 19 W. R. 83, L. R. 6 Ch. App. 64; Ex parte Holthausen, In re Scheilber, L. R. 9 Ch. App. 722; Pardo v. Bingham, L. R. 6 Eq. 485, 17 W. R. Dig. 49; and Hamlyn & Co. v. Talisker Distillery, [1894] A. C. 202.

Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., and Cartmell, for the defendants.—This is not a question of procedure, but of liability. By the Spanish law the only liability that attaches in respect of this debtor's liability to the firm, sociedad colectiva, which is treated as an entity, as is the société commandite by the French law, and no liability attaches to the separate partners until the firm has been proceeded against and shown to be unable to pay the debt. This is a condition precedent to the liability arising, and consequently at the present time the separate estate of Doetsch is under no liability to the plaintiffs. The contractual liability of the parties at the date of the contract should be considered. The parties contracted with reference to the Spanish law, and the contract should be so construed: see Dicey on Domicile, p. 151. [ROMER, J.—But the contract was made in London.] If certain provisions of the contract, as, e.g., an arbitration clause, are to be governed by English law, still such matters as the general liability of the parties come under the Spanish law.

ROMER, J.—It is admitted that the plaintiffs are creditors of the firm of Sundheim & Doetsch. As such creditors they ask for the usual administration of the estate of Mr. Doetsch—that is to say, they ask to have the separate assets of Mr. Doetsch applied in paying the joint debts after first satisfying the separate creditors. Objection is taken to that relief on the ground that the firm of Sundheim & Doetsch is a Spanish firm, and that by the Spanish law the estate of one partner who dies cannot be reached by joint creditors of the firm until the estate of the firm has been proceeded against, or is exhausted, or there is proved insufficiency of the joint estate. I think that that objection fails. It is clear, according to English law, that, as a matter of procedure here, to avoid circuity of action, a creditor of a partnership of which one member is dead is entitled as a creditor to share in the administration of the separate estate of the deceased partner after the separate debts are paid without first proving that the surviving partner is insolvent and without being obliged first to have recourse to the joint assets. That was settled by Wilkinson v. Henderson and other cases which have been cited before me. Now from the admissions which alone are before me it appears to me that the Spanish differs from the English law only in the matter of procedure. It appears that the Spanish courts require a joint creditor before he seeks to reach the estate of a deceased partner, to first proceed against and exhaust or prove the insolvency of the joint estate. In my opinion that is unquestionably a method of procedure.

It is clear that the Spanish firm was not a corporation; that is not suggested, or if suggested is certainly not established. On the contrary the admissions show that the estate of the deceased partner can be reached after proper procedure is taken to exhaust or prove the insolvency of the joint estate, and certainly it cannot, I think, be successfully contended that the plaintiffs are to be considered as having contracted in any way not to take such proceedings as those before me.

Now, that being so, it appears to me that there is nothing here to prevent the plaintiffs asking for the relief they do. The procedure of the Spanish courts does not bind the courts here, nor does the Spanish law at all affect the right of a creditor here to avail himself of the benefits given by the English courts in administering estates here. For that Bullock v. Caird is a sufficient authority, and speaking generally, English assets have to be distributed according to the English law, according to the priorities recognized by courts in this country, and according to the rules of procedure and the course of distribution adopted here. That general proposition was pointed out in, amongst other places, the case of Thurburn v. Steward by Lord Cairns, where he says the proper order of priority of distribution of assets is always a matter for the lex fori, and the country where distribution takes place always claims to itself the right to regulate the course of distribution. For these reasons it appears to me, that the objection fails. I need only add that in my opinion the contract between the parties on which the rights of the plaintiffs turn is to be governed by the lex loci contractus, that is to say, by the English law.

Administration decreed.

Solicitors, Freshfield & Williams; Norton, Rose, & Co.

Q. B. Div.
(Grantham and Kennedy, JJ.) Oct. 27.

REG. v. JUSTICES OF LONDON.
Ex parte KERFOOT. (a.)

Justices—Bias—Hearing of an application for renewal of licence—Circular sent to magistrates to attend.

The justices of the Tower Division of the county of London refused to renew a licence to a certain public-house. Against their decision K., an aggrieved party, appealed to the Quarter Sessions. Prior to the hearing of the appeal the chairman of the Tower Bench issued a circular to all the magistrates of the county of London requesting them to attend on the day fixed for the hearing of the appeal, and informing them that on that day six appeals relating to one licensed house in the Tower Division would be heard. The appeal was heard and dismissed. K. then obtained a rule nisi directed to the justices of the county of London, to show cause why their decision dismissing the appeal should not be set aside on the ground of bias.

Held, that, as the circular did not ask those justices who attended to vote in any particular way, and as no interested justices took part in the proceedings except as mere spectators, the proceedings were not vitiated, and therefore a mandamus ought not to issue commanding the justices to hear and determine the application.

In this case a rule nisi for a mandamus had been obtained on behalf of J. R. Kerfoot, calling upon the justices of the county of London in quarter sessions assembled to hear and determine an appeal against the decision of the justices of the Tower Division on the 27th of March, 1896, refusing to renew a licence for the Wayland Hotel, Hackney.

The facts were these: A person of the name of Alfred Francis Rubury had been in possession of a public-house situated in Wayland-avenue, Dalston-lane, Hackney, called the "Wayland Hotel." At the adjourned annual licensing meeting of the Tower Division, on the 27th March of the present year, Rubury applied for a renewal of the licence to himself, and also for the transfer of the licence to a Mrs. Curtis. At the same meeting Mrs. Curtis applied to have it transferred to her or a licence granted her,

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The magistrates refused either to transfer or renew the licence to Rubury or Mrs. Curtis. Kerfoot, the freeholder of the "Wayland Hotel" and formerly its licensee, thereupon came forward, and as a party aggrieved by the decision of the magistrates, desired to have their decision reversed. Accordingly Mrs. Curtis and Kerfoot entered an appeal, but Rubury did not.

In May Mr. Martineau, the chairman of the justices of the Tower Division, thought it proper—because, as he stated in his affidavit, due information was not given to the justices of the business that was to be brought before them—to issue a circular in the following terms to all the acting magistrates of the county of London whose addresses were on the register:—

"Esher, Surrey.

"Dear Sir,—I am requested by my brother justices acting in the Tower Division, to send an intimation to all the acting justices of the county that six appeals relating to one licensed house in the Tower Division had been appointed for hearing at the Sessions House, Clerkenwell, on Thursday, the 4th of June, at 10.30 a.m. The Tower Bench attach so much importance to the case that they have instructed counsel to appear in support of their decision, and have asked me to express the hope that it may be convenient to all the justices who are interested in licensing matters to attend the hearing of the matter.—Yours faithfully,

"P. M. MARTINEAU,
"Chairman of the Tower Division."

This notice was posted to over 400 London justices. The appeal came on for hearing on the 4th of June, and was dismissed by a majority of 19 to 4. Kerfoot applied for and obtained the present rule on the ground that the decision given on the 4th of June by those magistrates who sat to hear the appeal was not given after the case had had a proper judicial hearing, as the minds of those taking part in the proceedings had been biassed by the sending of the circular.

Harper, for the justices of the county of London, expressed their regret that the circular had been issued.

Willis, Q.C. (with him Horace Avory), showed cause against the rule being made absolute. The rule had apparently been granted on the ground of bias on the part of the justices who heard the appeal. Whether it was a right or a wrong thing to send out a circular asking brother magistrates to attend when an important case was set down for hearing he did not intend to argue; but in justice to Mr. Martineau he put in an affidavit filed by that gentleman, in which he stated the sole object of sending out the circular was to secure at quarter sessions as large an attendance of the justices of the county as possible. The circular, he submitted, was not calculated to influence the minds of the magistrates one way or the other. [GRANTHAM, J.—There is nothing in the letter asking the London justices to vote in support of their decision.] The justices for the Tower Division present did not sit upon the bench or take any part whatever in the proceedings.

Bigham, Q.C., and Grain, in support of the rule.—No improper motive was imputed to Mr. Martineau, but the circular must be regarded as a four line whip asking them to support the decision of the Tower justices. The solicitor for Kerfoot had stated in his affidavit that when Sir Peter Edlin took his seat upon the bench he remarked very strongly upon having received one of these circulars, and expressed his opinion that the course which had been taken by the Tower justices was, in his experience, absolutely unprecedented, and asked that no member of the Tower Division who was present should take part in the proceedings. He submitted that in law the case had not been heard, as the tribunal had been influenced and biassed by the receipt of the circular and the presence of those who had come to take part in the proceedings in response to the invitation contained in the notice. As a fact an unusual number of justices attended. If any one of the magistrates who heard the appeal was interested in the result, the court was improperly constituted, and an order made under such circumstances would be quashed on certiorari.

They relied on the following cases: Reg. v. London County Council; Ex parte Akkersdyk, Ex parte Femenia, 40 W. R. 285, [1892] 1 Q. B. 190; Reg. v. Meyer and Others, Justices, 24 W. R. 392, 1 Q. B. D. 173; Reg. v. The Justices of Hertfordshire, 7 Q. B. R. 542.

GRANTHAM, J.—The rule must be discharged The only ground upon which the application was founded was that the magistrates of the county of London who sat at quarter sessions were biassed in their judgment in consequence of something done by the magistrates who first heard the application. All that the magistrates who first heard the case did—assuming that they were all responsible for what was done by their chairman—was to write a letter to their brother magistrates of the other divisions of the county of London, asking them to be present, as a case of very great importance was coming on. Instead of the case being heard by four or five, it was heard by something like twenty-three magistrates, and of these something like nineteen were against the appellant, and the rest in his favour. It is not suggested that the magistrates who attended were known personally to the magistrates of the Tower Division; it is not suggested that they were communicated with privately, and asked to uphold the decision which had previously been given, and the most that can be said is that they were asked as judges, so to speak, to be present in order that the matter might be dealt with before a full tribunal. Knowing the tribunal they were dealing with—namely, magistrates—gentlemen who had very important duties to perform, and who, as a rule, performed them with very great ability and undoubted honour, I think it is a great deal too much to ask the court to say that the magistrates of the county of London, whose chairman is Sir Peter Edlin, were in the slightest degree biassed or could be biassed by the receipt of such a letter. If any direct answer to such a suggestion be needed, it is to be found in the various affidavits filed by several of the magistrates, in which they distinctly state that they were in no way biassed by the receipt of the circular, and were fully prepared to allow the appeal, had the evidence in support of it been sufficient to warrant them doing so. For my own part I am not prepared to make this rule absolute on the slender evidence that has been given in support of it, and knowing as we do as a fact that the magistrates of the Tower Division never took any part in the discussion, I do not see how Mr. Grain can be surprised when we decline to extend the meaning of those cases which he cited to the extent he asked us in order to assist his case.

KENNEDY, J.—In concur. Nothing, in my opinion, is more important than that justice should be absolutely pure, untainted, and unbiassed, and however little ground there may have been for the present application, still, in view of the facts that some people have thought evil of the notice sent out, it is unfortunate that the circular was issued. One must, however, credit those who sent out this circular with the purest of motives. In my opinion they did so solely in order that the question—which admittedly is of great importance—might not be adjudicated upon by a tribunal consisting only of three or four, but by a full bench, so that the decision in this matter might guide them in the future. It was argued that convening the attendance of the justices of the different divisions was an interference with the course of justice. I do not see how anyone can fairly take that view of the matter. I think that this is not a case in which there is any evidence shown of bias, nor evidence that in fact there was bias in the decision given by the magistrates, nor do I think that the cases cited are authorities on which we can allow the application.

Rule discharged with costs.

Solicitor for the appellant, G. W. Coldham.

Solicitor for the Tower justices, E. W. Beal.

Solicitor for the London justices, Sir R. Nicholson.

Q. B. Div.
(Cave and Wills, JJ.) June 8, 1896.

VESTRY OF HAMMERSMITH v. LOWENFELD. (a.)

Metropolis—Nuisance order—Recovery of costs and expenses—Limitation of time—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43), s. 11—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), ss. 11, 117.

An action brought in the county court under section 11 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, to recover costs and expenses incurred in respect of a nuisance order is subject to the limitation of time imposed by section 11 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, in respect of making complaints and laying informations, and must therefore be commenced within six months from the time when the costs and expenses were incurred.

Tottenham Local Board v. Rowell, 25 W. R. 135, 1 Ex. D. 514, followed.

Appeal by the plaintiffs from the Brompton County Court.

The action was brought to recover £43 11s., being the costs and expenses incurred by the plaintiffs in serving notice, making a complaint, and obtaining and carrying into effect a nuisance order against the defendant under the Public Health (London) Act, 1891. The amount of the costs and expenses was not fixed by the magistrate who made the nuisance order.

It was admitted that the costs and expenses were incurred more than six months before the issue of the summons in the county court.

The county court judge held that the action was barred, being subject to the limitation of six months imposed by section 11 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, in respect of summary proceedings before magistrates.

The plaintiffs appealed.

The Public Health (London) Act, 1891, provides as follows:—

Section 11.—1. All reasonable costs and expenses incurred in serving notice, making a complaint, or obtaining a nuisance order, or in carrying the order into effect, shall be deemed to be money paid for the use and at the request of the person on whom the order is made. . . .

2. Such costs and expenses and any fines incurred in relation to any such nuisance may be recovered in a summary manner or in the county court or High Court. . . .

(a.) Reported by T. R. COLQUHOUN DILL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Section 117.—1. All offences, fines, penalties, forfeitures, costs, and expenses under this Act or any bye-law made under this Act directed to be prosecuted or recovered in a summary manner, or the prosecution or recovery of which is not otherwise provided for, may be prosecuted and recovered in manner directed by the Summary Jurisdiction Acts.

2. Proceedings for the recovery of a demand not exceeding fifty pounds, which a sanitary authority or any person are or is empowered to recover in a summary manner, may, at the option of the authority or person, be taken into the county court as if such demand were a debt.

The Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, provides:—

Section 11.—In all cases where no time is already or shall hereafter be specially limited for making any such complaint or laying any such information in the Act or Acts of Parliament relating to each particular case, such complaint shall be made and such information shall be laid within six calendar months from the time when the matter of such complaint or information respectively arose.

Macmorran, Q.C., for the appellants.—The limitation of time imposed by section 11 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, as to complaints and informations does not apply to actions brought under section 11 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891. If the action were brought under section 117 of the latter Act, Tottenham Local Board v. Rowell, 25 W. R. 135, 1 Ex. D. 514, would be in point, and the limitation of time would apply. That case was decided on the ground that the enactment under which the action was brought (section 24 of the Local Government Act, 1858, Amendment Act, 1861) gave an option to proceed in the county court instead of before the magistrates in cases where the demand was under £20. But in section 11 of the Act of 1891 there is no limit as to the amount of the demand and no such "option" given as in section 117. The language of the two sections and the subject-matter with which they deal are different, section 11 creates a civil debt recoverable without any special limitation of time.

H. Courthope Munroe, for the defendant.—It cannot have been intended that the local authority should be permitted to lie by for years before bringing their action under section 11. That section does in effect give an option to recover their costs and expenses, either summarily or in a county court or in the High Court, although the word "option" does not occur: Tottenham Local Board v. Rowell therefore applies, and an action under section 11 of the Act of 1891 must be brought within the period of six months mentioned in section 11 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848. The action does not lie unless the magistrate who made the nuisance order has assessed the amount of the costs and expenses: the amount to be recovered is within his discretion, and the county court is not the tribunal to ascertain it.

Macmorran, Q.C., in reply.—The magistrate is not required to assess the costs, and it is obvious that he cannot do so as far as regards the carrying into effect of his order.

CAVE, J.—I am of opinion that the defendant is entitled to our judgment. The action was brought under section 11 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891. [His lordship read the section.] We are bound to follow the decision in Tottenham Local Board v. Rowell if it applies. I think this case is really not distinguishable from that. The first mode pointed out by the Act of obtaining and enforcing a nuisance order is to go before the magistrate. If the order be made, or if a fine be imposed and not paid, an option is given of recovering the costs and expenses or the fine either by summary proceedings or by an action in the High Court or county court. The first and most natural thing to do is to proceed summarily; and if that course be taken, the limitation of time provided by section 11 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, applies. The decision in Tottenham Local Board v. Rowell is that when an option is given to proceed either summarily or in the county court, and a limitation of time is imposed with respect to proceedings summarily, that limitation applies also to the proceeding in the county court. The arguments by which that decision was arrived at may seem to run rather fine, but we are bound by it unless the case can be distinguished from the present. I am of opinion that it cannot be distinguished; and, therefore, upon that ground the judgment appealed against was right.

WILLS, J.—I am also of opinion that the decision of the county court judge was right. It is admitted by the appellant's counsel that if their action had been brought under section 117 of the Act of 1891 it would be impossible to contend that this case was not governed by the decision in Tottenham Local Board v. Rowell. The Court of Appeal there held that where under statutory provisions similar to those contained in section 117, the recovery of costs might be enforced at the option of the person seeking to recover them either in a court of summary jurisdiction or in the county court, the limitation fixed by the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, of the time within which summary proceedings may be taken, applied to an action in the county court—that the remedy in both cases was subject to the same limitation of the time within which it could be enforced. I think it is impossible to draw a distinction between section 117 and section 11.

The language of section 11 is somewhat different, but there is no difference in substance. Section 11 says that "such costs and expenses may be recovered in a summary manner or in the county court or High Court." What is that but saying that the person entitled to recover them may at his option select either the court of summary jurisdiction or the county court or the High Court in which to pursue his remedy? I cannot see that the option given is any the less an option because the words "at the option" are not used. If that view be right, no real distinction can be drawn between section 11 and section 117. I am of opinion that the case before us is really governed by the decision of the Court of Appeal in Tottenham Local Board v. Rowell, and, therefore, that this appeal ought to be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for appellants, Watson, Sons, & Room.

Solicitors for respondent, A. Arnold Hannay.

Q. B. Div. (Pollock, B., and Bruce, J.) — May 13, 14, 22, 1896.

SMELTING CO. OF AUSTRALIA v. COMMISSIONERS OF INLAND REVENUE. (a.)

Inland revenue—Stamp duty—Conveyance on sale—Share in a Colonial patent—Licence to use patent—"Property"—"Property locally situate out of the United Kingdom"—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 59, sub-section 1.

An agreement made in England for the sale of a share in a Colonial patent, and a licence to use the patent in a specified district of that colony, is an agreement for the sale of an interest in "property" within the meaning of of section 59, sub-section 1, of the Stamp Act, 1891, and therefore is liable to an ad valorem stamp duty "as if it were an actual conveyance on sale." Further, that such patent and the licence to use it are not "property locally situate out of the United Kingdom" within the meaning of the exception in that sub-section.

Case stated by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue pursuant to the 13th section of the Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39).

On the 13th day of November, 1895, an instrument, a copy of which was annexed to and formed part of this case, was presented on behalf of the Smelting Co. of Australia (Limited), the appellants, to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue under the provisions of the 12th section of the Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39) for the opinion of the commissioners as to the stamp duty with which the instrument was chargeable.

The instrument was an agreement under seal for the sale of the several rights and properties specified in the schedule thereto annexed under eight heads, and was dated the 1st day of August, 1895. It was made between the Camden Syndicate, Limited, of the one part, and the appellants of the other part. It was made and executed in England, and the syndicate and appellants were respectively companies incorporated under the Companies Acts, having registered offices and carrying on business in England.

By clause 1 of the instrument it was agreed that the syndicate should sell, and the appellants should purchase, the rights and properties, the particulars whereof were specified in the schedule thereto as mentioned above.

By clause 2 the consideration for the said sale was fixed at £300,000, to be paid and satisfied partly in cash and partly in shares, as therein mentioned.

The appellants satisfied the commissioners that all the rights and properties mentioned in the schedule, except those secondly and thirdly therein mentioned, came within one or other of the exceptions contained in the first sub-section of the 59th section of the Stamp Act, 1891, and were therefore exempt from the duty imposed by that sub-section. The proportion of the consideration attributable to the rights and properties so exempt was £250,000, leaving the sum of £50,000 attributable to the rights and properties secondly and thirdly described. These last mentioned rights and properties, as appears by the said schedule, consisted of a half-share in a patent which had been granted in New South Wales to Messrs. Marsh & Storer, and had been assigned to the syndicate, and also a licence to use this patent in a particular district of the colony which had been assigned to the syndicate.

These rights and properties were, by an indenture dated the 26th day of November, 1895, and executed in Australia, assigned unto the appellants. This indenture was stamped in accordance with the law of New South Wales with a stamp duty of £250, being Colonial stamp duty on the said consideration of £50,000. A copy of this indenture (which recites the licence mentioned in the second paragraph of the schedule to the agreement and also the assignment from the owner of the patent to the syndicate of one half-share therein mentioned in the third paragraph of such schedule) was made part of this case.

The commissioners were of opinion that the rights conferred by the said patent and licence were respectively interests in property within the meaning of section 59 (1) of the Stamp Act, 1891, and that the appellants had failed to show that the same came within any of the classes of property which, under the terms of the said sub-section, were excepted from liability to duty thereunder. They therefore held that the instrument was chargeable under the same section and sub-section with the duty chargeable under the head "Conveyance on Sale" in the first schedule to the Stamp Act, 1891, and they therefore assessed such duty at £250, being 5s. for every £50 of £50,000, the portion of the total consideration which was attributable thereto as above mentioned. The commissioners were also of opinion as to the rights and properties other than those secondly and thirdly in the in the schedule described, that the instrument was as an agreement under seal further chargeable under the head "Deed of any kind whatsoever not described in this schedule" in the first schedule to the Stamp Act, 1891, with the additional duty of 10s. They assessed the duty thereon accordingly, and the instrument was stamped in conformity with the assessment.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The questions for the opinion of the court were: (1) Whether the instrument was chargeable with the duties of £250 and 10s. in accordance with the assessment of the commissioners; (2) if not, with what duty the instrument was chargeable.

By section 59, sub-section 1, of the Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), it is provided that "any contract or agreement made in England or Ireland under seal or under hand only, or made in Scotland, with or without any clause of registration, for the sale of any equitable estate or interest in any property whatsoever, or for the sale of any estate or interest in any property except lands, tenements, hereditaments, or heritages, or property locally situate out of the United Kingdom . . . . . shall be charged with the same ad valorem duty, to be paid by the purchaser, as if it were an actual conveyance on sale of the estate, interest, or property, contracted or agreed to be sold."

A. T. Lawrence (J. W. St. L. Leslie with him) for the appellants.—This conveyance is not liable to an ad valorem duty under section 59 of the Stamp Act, 1891. Sub-section 1 is a new provision in order to meet cases where agreements are treated by the parties thereto as actual conveyances so as not to necessitate a formal conveyance. But in this case there has been a carrying out of the agreement by the deed of 26th November, 1895, which was stamped with an ad valorem duty. It was never intended that the duty should be paid twice over, which is what would happen if the contention of the Crown were right. Even if the patent and the licence to use it are "property," they are "property locally situate out of the United Kingdom" within the exception n sub-section 1. These words apply to a patent because the patent is only operative in a particular district. By the Colonial Acts (16 Vict. No. 24 and 51 Vict. No. 3) it is necessary that patents should be locally registered. The patent is, therefore, locally situate in New South Wales and the licence to use it must also be locally situate there. All property has some local situation, Attorney-General v. Bouwens, 4 M. & W. 171, see judgment of Abinger, C.B., at p. 191. A licence in itself, however, is not "property" at all, and unless coupled with a grant confers no property or interest. Heap v. Hartley, 38 W. R. 136, 42 Ch. D. 461, Limmer Asphalte Paving Co. v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 20 W. R. 610, L. R. 7 Ex. 211. A patent is a "franchise" within the meaning of the proviso in section 56 of the County Courts Act, 1888, see Reg. v. County Court Judge of Halifax, 39 W. R. 545, [1891] 2 Q. B. 263.

Sir R. Finlay, S.G. (Danckwerts with him), for the respondents.—Both the patent and the licence to use it are "property" within the meaning of section 59, sub-section 1. In Potter v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 2 W. R. 561, 10 Ex. 147, 23 L. J. Ex. 345, it was held that the assignment of the goodwill of a business was a conveyance of property, a fortiori a licence to use a patent would be property, and in many cases is property of a very great value. The Limmer Asphalte case is not in point; there it was held that no property was conveyed because the company had no ownership in that which was purported to be conveyed. Heap v. Hartley again is not in point; there it was only held that a licensee of a right could not sue in his own name for an infringement of such right. Further, neither the patent nor the licence comes within the exception "locally situate out of the United Kingdom." Those words refer to real property or something in the nature of it; but a licence to use a patent is only personal property to be enjoyed in a particular locality. Personal property can have no locality, and therefore a patent can have no local situation.

A. T. Lawrence replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 22.—The following judgments were delivered:—

POLLOCK, B.—The question raised in this case is whether a conveyance of a sole licence to exercise a Colonial patent in New South Wales, and of a half-share in the patent, is the subject-matter of stamp duty under section 59, sub-section 1, of the Stamp Act, 1891, and the title to the schedule to the Act, which relates to "any deed for the conveyance of property." The first question we have to determine is whether the patent and licence are "property." The word "property" is, of course, a word of very general meaning, and one of the most comprehensive words that can be used. It is very well defined in Stroud's and Sweet's Dictionaries. In the latter many interesting authorities are referred to, and, amongst others, Austin's Jurisprudence, vol. 2, where at p. 477 an attempt is made to define "property." There are decided cases, however, which I think show that the patent and licence are "property" within the meaning of this statute. In Birchall v. Pugin, 23 W. R. 923, L. R. 10 C. P. 397, it was held that a judgment debt was "property" recovered within the meaning of section 28 of the Solicitors Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 27). And certainly if it were asked whether a person who had bought this licence had an interest that could be called property in the ordinary meaning of laymen, there could be no doubt about it. In Potter v. Commissioners of Inland Revenue, it was held that the goodwill of a business was property. It has frequently been said by judges that in construing Revenue Acts the popular sense of words rather than the strict legal meaning ought to be looked at, and the reason for that is obvious. The object of these taxing Acts has nothing to do with the strict legal meaning of words, except when the words used are terms of art, such as words which describe an estate in real property, or other technical terms which are peculiar to the English law. The proposition is very well put in Maxwell on the Interpretation of Statutes at p. 29, where it is said: "To arrive at the real meaning, it is always necessary to get an exact conception of the aim, scope, and object of the whole Act"; and at p. 77 it is said that, "In dealing with matters relating to the general public statutes are presumed to use words in their popular sense, uti loquitur vulgus." Two cases were cited to show that this licence could not be called "property."

In Muskett v. Hill, 9 L. J. C. P. 201, 5 Bing. N. C. 694, which was a very technical case, the question was whether the plaintiff had such an interest in land as would enable him to sue in trespass; and in that particular case it was held that a mere licence did not convey such a right as to enable the plaintiff to sue in trespass. Upon that case was founded the decision of Heap v. Hartley, where it was held that an exclusive licence is leave to do a thing and a contract not to allow anyone else to do it; but that, unless coupled with a grant, it confers no interest or property in the thing, and the licensee has no title to sue in his own name. That decision is exactly on the same lines as Muskett v. Hill, and they both depend on technical rules of law, which in no way assist one in coming to a conclusion as to what is the meaning of the word "property" in this section. Speaking for myself, I am clearly of opinion that, looking at the object and scope of this statute, the word "property" does include this licence.

Then we come to the question whether it is "property locally situate out of the United Kingdom." It is well known that there can be no locality of a debt. It is said that the person of the creditor, wherever he may be, draws to him the debt. The subject has been very learnedly discussed in several decisions in the ecclesiastical courts when discussing the question of where probate can be obtained. But that law is not applicable to the present case, and the only question is, Can this licence be said to be property in itself which is locally situate out of the United Kingdom?

The expression "locally situate" seems to me clearly to be applicable properly to lands, tenements, hereditaments, or heritages, and there may be some other property ejusdem generis (quasi-real property, as it has been sometimes called) which may fitly be said to be locally situate out of the United Kingdom; and therefore those words "locally situate" are necessary for the purpose of carrying out the object of the Act. But I do not think that the expression "locally situate" applies to a thing which in truth and fact has no locality. In the result, therefore, I have come to the conclusion that this particular licence is "property," and is therefore the subject-matter of this stamp duty, and that it is not property which is locally situate so as to be within the exception.

BRUCE, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think that the benefit of a sole licence to use a patent in a specified district is an interest in property within the meaning of the section. The authorities cited by my learned brother are, I think, sufficient—if, indeed, authorities are needed—to establish that the words "any property whatsoever," used in the enacting part of section 59, are wide enough to include such rights as those in question.

Whether the interest of the appellants in improvements in the patent which may be hereafter patented is an interest in property may be open to doubt, but it is not necessary to decide that point. Then arises the question whether the interest of the appellants in the licence and patent comes within the exception. I think it does not. The words "lands, tenements, and hereditaments" in the exception are used with reference to land, and interests arising out of land; they are English law terms, and are used to include all such rights arising out of land as are known to, and recognised by, English law. The word "heritage" is a term of the real property law of Scotland, and I think that it is used in the section to include all such rights arising out of land as are known to, and recognised by, the law of that country. But, lest in dealing with rights of property beyond the United Kingdom the terms of the law of England and Scotland should not be comprehensive enough to include rights arising out of land recognised by other systems of law, the word "property" is added to the exception. I think that the word "property" in the exception is used to indicate rights of the same class and description as the preceding words. The words "locally situate" govern the whole exception, and shew that the legislature is dealing only with such rights of property as issue out of land or are connected with the user or enjoyment of land, and so may be said to have a local situation. What is manifestly intended is to exempt such property as is known to jurists as immovable property, if situate out of the United Kingdom.

Appeal dismissed, and judgment for the respondents.

Solicitors for the appellants, Ince, Colt, & Ince.

Solicitor for the respondents, Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Q. B. Div. (Vaughan Williams and Wright, JJ.) — Aug. 4, 1896.

In re NEWTON.

Ex parte NATIONAL PROVINCIAL BANK. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Proof—Secured creditor—Amendment of valuation of security—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), Schedule II., rr. 11, 12 (a), 13.

By the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, Schedule II., r. 11: "If a secured creditor does not either realize or surrender his security, he shall . . . state in his proof . . . the value at which he assesses it."

By rule 12 (a): "Where a security is so valued, the trustee may at any time redeem it on payment of the assessed value."

By rule 13: "Where a creditor has so valued his security, he may at any time amend the valuation and proof on showing . . . that the security has . . . increased in value."

The creditor in this case stated in his proof the value at which he assessed his security. The security increased in value, and the trustee tendered to the creditor the amount at which he had assessed it. The creditor refused the offer, and moved to amend the valuation and proof. The trustee opposed, on the ground that he had redeemed the security by tender of its assessed value.

Held, that tender was not equivalent to payment; therefore the security had not been redeemed, and the creditor still had a right to amend.

Appeal by the trustee in bankruptcy against a decision of his honour Judge Austin in the County Court of Bristol, allowing the bank to amend their proof.

The receiving order was made upon the 10th of December, 1894.

Upon the 9th of August, 1895, the bank proved for £517 15s. 7d., stating that they held as security a policy on the debtor's life for £500, and valuing the same at £10.

Upon the 10th of December, 1895, the debtor died, and upon the 21st of December the trustee tendered the £10 to the bank, which they refused to accept.

Upon the 9th of January, 1896, the bank served notice of motion upon the trustee for leave to amend their proof by increasing the valuation of their security to £500. The motion was heard before Judge

(a.) Reported by P. M. FRANCKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Austin on the 7th of February, when his honour gave the bank leave to amend.

The trustee appealed.

Muir Mackenzie, for the appellant.—The tender by the trustee of the assessed value of the security was equivalent to payment, and amendment cannot be allowed after the trustee, in the exercise of his right of redemption, has paid the assessed value of the security: Ex parte Norris, In re Sadler, 35 W. R. 19, 17 Q. B. D. 728.

Reed, Q.C., and Weatherley, for the respondent, were not called upon.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, J.—I am of opinion that the decision of the learned county court judge was perfectly right. The question depends entirely on the construction of rule 13, schedule II., of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, which provides that a creditor who has valued his security may "at any time" amend his valuation and proof. Now, Lord Esher, M.R., in Ex parte Norris, In re Sadler, pointed out that the words "at any time" must be subject to some limitation, because, he says, "it is impossible to suppose that after the trustee has paid the amount of the valuation and has thus, on behalf of the general body of creditors, become the purchaser of the security, the creditor can undo all that." He goes on: "Is there any other implied limitation? I think that there may be another with reference to the right which by clause (c) of rule 12 is given to the creditor to require the trustee to elect whether he will redeem the security. But no such limitation applies to the present case, for the conditions which give rise to that right of election do not exist. Therefore the only limitation which could apply is this: that after the trustee has paid the amount at which the security has been valued by the creditor, the creditor cannot re-open the transaction." In the case before us we have to say whether such time has elapsed or such events have happened as to deprive the creditor of his right of amendment, having regard to the limitation laid down in the Court of Appeal. In my judgment nothing of the sort has happened. It is not denied that there has been no payment by the trustees of the amount at which the security was valued, but it is said that there has been a tender of the amount, which is equivalent to payment. I may point out, however, that the distinction between this case and Ex parte Norris, In re Sadler is a very fine one, because there the trustee wrote to the creditor's solicitors giving notice that it was his intention to redeem the policy valued in the creditor's proof, and unless the additional fact relied on here as taking away the creditor's right to amend—namely, that the notice to redeem was coupled with a tender of the amount at which the policy was valued—makes a difference, there is none. I do not think that additional fact ought to make any difference whatever. I think the Court of Appeal meant to say, as a matter of principle, that the rule ought to be so construed as to give the creditor the right to amend, unless by something which has happened the position of the trustee and the creditor has become so altered that the rights of the parties concerned may be considered to be fixed on the basis of the alteration. That would be so where the trustee had paid the creditor the amount at which his security had been valued; but it is not so here. It is perfectly clear that the Legislature did not mean that the mere fact that the creditor's security had increased in value since his valuation of it, should take away his right to amend; because, by the very terms of rule (b), he may amend on showing to the satisfaction of the trustee or the court that his security had increased in value since its previous valuation. It is suggested that the Legislature intended there should be an unseemly race of this sort between trustee and creditor—that the trustee, on hearing of the death of the insured person, could rush off to the bank, tender the amount at which the policy had been valued, and require them to hand over their security. I cannot think that the Legislature intended anything of the kind. The creditor has a right to amend until the amount at which he has valued his security has not only been tendered to him, but accepted by him. I may add that I am very much inclined to doubt whether tender and acceptance together would be sufficient to take away the creditor's right to amend if he did not know the true facts at the time he accepted the amount tendered.

I am of opinion that this appeal fails.

WRIGHT, J., concurred.

Appeal dismissed; leave to appeal refused.

Solicitors for the appellant, Meredith, Roberts, & Mills, for Sibley & Dickenson, Bristol.

Solicitors for the respondents, Wilde, Berger, & Moore.

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. Divorce. } April 27; May 4, 1896.

CRAIG v. CRAIG AND HAMP. (a.)

Practice—Divorce—Sequestration—Damages against co-respondent—Interest of co-respondent in settlement—Motion against the trustees.

The right of sequestrators to attach moneys alleged to be held by third persons for the judgment debtor, but denied by them to be so held, cannot be determined upon a motion in the suit to which the third persons are not parties, unless they appear and submit to the jurisdiction of the court.

So held, on a motion by sequestrators against the trustees of a co-respondent's marriage settlement to enforce payment of damages ordered to be paid by the co-respondent to the petitioner in a suit for dissolution of marriage.

Motion against the trustees of the co-respondent's marriage settlement to show cause why they should not pay into court the sum of £50. The petitioner, on the 11th of March, 1892, obtained a decree nisi against the respondent for the dissolution of his marriage with her on the ground of her adultery with the co-respondent, and the co-respondent was ordered within fourteen days to pay to the petitioner the sum of £50, damages assessed by the jury. On the 8th of November, 1892, this decree was made absolute. The said sum of £50 was not paid by the co-respondent, and on the 27th of March, 1896, a writ of sequestration was issued against his property. On the 1st of April, 1896, it was ordered by the President, on the ex parte application of the sequestrators, that James Edward Wilkin and Charles Josiah Etherington, the trustees of an indenture of settlement dated the 10th of February, 1887, do verify by affidavit the funds or sums due or to accrue due to the co-respondent Horatio Hamp in their hands, and that they be restrained until after the 20th day of April, 1896, or further order, from paying the same or any part thereof, either to the said co-respondent or on his account, and that, unless cause be shown on the 20th of April, 1896, the said sums due or to become due be paid into court. The time for showing cause was extended to the 27th of April.

(a.) Reported by J. GERARD LAING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

April 27.—Inderwick, Q.C., and Chubb, for the trustees of the settlement, showed cause.

Bayford, Q.C., and Whinney, for the sequestrators.

Cur. adv. vult.

May 4.—BARNES, J., after stating the facts, said:—When the case was argued before me two points were raised on behalf of the trustees of the said settlement. First, that the court had no power to make an order against them in this suit on motion; and, secondly, that, according to the terms of the settlement and in the events which had happened, the trustees could not be compelled to pay any moneys to or for the co-respondent in discharge of liabilities contracted or incurred by him. The trustees are trustees under an indenture dated the 10th of February, 1887, made between the co-respondent and trustees in pursuance of the "Hamp's Estate Act, 1868," and certain orders in Chancery by which the trustees were to stand possessed of certain funds upon certain trusts for the benefit of the co-respondent, for his wife, and for his children, and in default of children as in the indenture declared. And the indenture contained certain powers and provisions, and amongst them a provision upon which the trustees relied in support of the second point above mentioned.

It was admitted that the trustees have in hand at the present time £21 14s. 1d. representing income of the said trust funds, and that further sums would be received by them from time to time in respect of income of the said trust funds. The co-respondent was married in December, 1892. The attempt is made by this motion in a suit to which the trustees are not parties to compel them to pay to the sequestrators £50 out of the income which it is alleged that the co-respondent should receive under the settlement. The trustees allege that under the circumstances which have happened the co-respondent is not entitled to receive any money from them, and they dispute the right of the sequestrators to proceed against them.

No argument in support of the application of the sequestrators on principle was addressed to me, but some of the cases which I will later on refer to were mentioned. If there had been no cases in which the subject had been considered I should have been of opinion that upon principle the right of sequestrators to attach moneys alleged to be held by third persons for the judgment debtor but denied by them to be so held could not be determined upon a motion in a suit to which the third persons are not parties unless they appear and submit to the jurisdiction of the court. Such third persons are entitled to have their liability determined in the usual way, in which it would be dealt with in an action. But the matter has been considered in many cases. In the year 1827 the case of Johnson v. Chippindall, 2 Sim. 55, came before Shadwell, V.C. All the earlier cases were then carefully examined and discussed in argument, and amongst them Franclyn v. Colhoun, 3 Swanston 276, where the debt seems to have been admitted, and an order was made partly in a certain interpleader action, see 2 Sim. p. 60 note (i.); Simmonds v. Lord Kinnaird, 4 Ves. 735, where a bill for discovery and account against bankers who were alleged to have moneys of the plaintiff's debtors in their hands was filed and argued on demurrer. In his judgment Shadwell, V.C., says, 2 Sim. p. 64: "I find no instance in which the court has compelled a third party to pay in a chose in action without a bill, where any resistance has been made by the holder of the chose in action." The later cases are Wilson v. Metcalfe, 1 Beav. 263; Crispin v. Cumano, 17 W. R. 535, L. R. 1 P. & D. 622; Manton v. Manton, 40 L. J. Ch. 93, 19 W. R. Ch. Dig. 88; Slade v. Hulme, 30 W. R. 28, 18 Ch. D. 653; Claydon v. Finch, L. R. 15 Eq. 266, 21 W. R. Dig. 146; and Miller v. Huddlestone, 31 W. R. 138, 22 Ch. D. 233; and the result of examining these is that there appears to be no case in which an order was made to enforce a sequestration against third persons, who disputed their liability to the debtor, on motion in a suit to which they were not parties.

The present proceeding is not taken under Order 45 R. S. C., and I was not asked to consider whether that order can be used in this divorce suit to enforce proceedings against the trustees; but I may observe that under that order, if the garnishee disputes his liability to the judgment debtor his liability is not determined on motion, but an order is made that any question necessary for determining his liability be tried or determined in any manner in which any issue or question in an action may be tried and determined, rules 3 & 4 of order 45.

I am of opinion, therefore, that the trustees are entitled to have the orders of the 1st of April and those continuing that order against them discharged. I express no opinion upon the merits of the second question raised by the trustees, which depends upon the construction of the settlement, and perhaps may have to be argued in other proceedings, possibly in the Chancery Division, where the terms of the settlement can be conveniently considered.

Leave to appeal was refused.

Solicitor for the sequestrators, F. A. R. Doyle.

Solicitors for the trustees, Whitehouse & Etherington.

House of Lords.

From C. A. (England.) June 18, 1896.

LOCK v. QUEENSLAND INVESTMENT AND LAND MORTGAGE CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Company—Shares—Shares paid up in advance of calls—Payment of interest out of capital as such prepayments—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 14, Table A, clause 7.

Where one of the articles of association of a company authorized the directors to receive payment from any shareholder of the whole or any part of the amount remaining unpaid on any shares held by him upon such terms as they thought fit, and also to pay out of the capital of the company interest on sums paid up on shares in advance of calls,

Held, that the above article, being in substance Table A, clause 7, of the Companies Act, 1862, was not ultra vires; that advances obtained from shareholders under it were in the nature of a debt due to an ordinary creditor of the company; and, consequently, it was lawful to pay the stipulated interest out of capital, though the company had made no profits.

Decision of Court of Appeal (44 W. R. 257, [1896] 1 Ch. 397, affirmed.

This was an appeal by the plaintiff from an order of the Court of Appeal (Lindley, Smith, and Kay, L.JJ.), reported 44 W. R. 257, [1896] 1 Ch. 397, which affirmed a decision of Stirling, J.

The facts are set out at length in the report in the court below, and raised the question whether articles of association of a company can lawfully authorize directors to pay interest out of capital to shareholders who have prepaid their shares in full in advance of calls.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

There had been no profits during the year.

The article empowering the directors so to do was substantially Table A, clause 7, of the Companies Act, 1862.

The Court of Appeal held that the company was entitled to pay interest out of capital on the amount prepaid.

Millar, Q.C., and Brodie Cooper, for the appellant.—The clause was ultra vires. These shareholders cannot be considered as outside creditors: Dale v. Martin, 11 L. R. Ir. 371, 32 W. R. Dig. 36, is distinguishable.

They referred to Oorejum Gold Mining Co. v. Roper, 41 W. R. 90, [1892] A. C. 125; Trevor v. Whitworth, 36 W. R. 145, 12 App. Cas. 409; McDougall v. Jersey Imperial Hotel Co., 12 W. R. 1142, 2 H. & M. 528; In re Sharpe, 40 W. R. 241, [1892] 1 Ch. 154.

Graham Hastings, Q.C., and C. E. E. Jenkins, for the respondents, were not called upon.

Lord HALSBURY, L.C.—I have heard with surprise that some difficulty has been supposed to arise with regard to the true construction of the statute to which reference has been made in this case. It appears to me that, applying the ordinary principle of construing statutes in the usual way, by giving to each member of a sentence its true and ordinary meaning, there is no difficulty in the proper decision of this case.

The language of the 7th clause of Table A seems to me not susceptible of any doubt at all. Whatever might have been argued with reference to what has been called the general law without Table A, or without that portion of it to which reference has been made, I confess I do not think it very material to consider; because, to my mind, the insertion of Table A with the 7th clause, giving a sanction by the Legislature to an arrangement which is exactly the same as the present arrangement in principle, and indeed almost in words, seems to me to remove all doubt whatever from this matter. The relation between a company and the members is intelligible enough, and, but for the example given in Table A, some of the arguments that we have heard might have found some place. I suppose it was by reason of there being a doubt in the minds of the Legislature as to whether or not that would be considered to be a legitimate arrangement that the 7th clause was expressly inserted. Whatever may be the meaning of it, or whatever reason the Legislature may have had for placing it there, there it is, and to argue that it is ultra vires to do that which the Legislature has expressly sanctioned in the example it has given of articles of association in the statute itself, seems to me to be somewhat absurd.

Of course, if you can introduce into the language which the Legislature has used other language which would have a different effect (and that has been practically the argument addressed to your lordships), you may turn any statute or any section of any statute into an absurdity. But Table A and the 7th clause expressly say that "the directors may, if they think fit," make such an arrangement as has here been made; and every effort to turn those plain words into something else has resulted, on the part of the learned counsel who argued it, in an admission that, without the addition of some words, they cannot get into that 7th clause that which their argument requires.

Then it remains that that is an arrangement which the Legislature has sanctioned in the case of Table A, and the statute expressly gives that as an example of what may be done unless the company think proper to adopt articles of their own. In this case they have adopted articles of their own which have precisely the same effect. Under these circumstances it appears to me that it is an undue compliment to the doubts which have been suggested to do more than say that I entirely concur in every word of the judgment of FitzGibbon, L.J., in Ireland (in Dale v. Martin), and in every word of the judgment of Lindley, L.J., in the present case.

The only commentary I am disposed to make is that Lindley, L.J., does seem to suggest that the words are not absolutely apt for the purpose. With the greatest deference to his lordship, I do not concur in that opinion. It seems to me that the words are very plain and apt for the purpose for which they are designed by the Legislature, and it would be, to my mind, a most perverse proceeding to construe these words in any different sense, because by some improper use of the power thus given it might be made mischievous in its operation. If it were mischievous in its operation and necessarily mischievous in its operation it would, to my mind, be no argument, if the statute has expressly authorized the thing to be done. But, as a matter of fact, what has been done in this particular case is admitted to have been done perfectly bona fide, and with no such abuse as it has been pointed out might result. What the case would be if any directors thought proper to abuse the power so given for the indirect purpose of doing that which the statute forbids, it is not necessary to consider, because that question does not arise here. It appears to me that the argument is reduced to this: that because a particular provision is capable of being misused, although the Legislature has sanctioned the use of it, therefore your lordships are called upon to repeal the statute, and to say that the legitimate and proper use should not be permitted. That seems to me to be a view which is wholly inadmissible.

I therefore move your lordships that this appeal be dismissed with costs.

Lord HERSCHELL.—I am of the same opinion, and I shall trouble your lordships with very few words, because I entirely agree with my noble and learned friend that the case is a particularly clear one.

It is not susceptible of contention that to do what clause 7 of Table A provides for can be ultra vires. The Legislature can never have enacted that if the company do not otherwise provide their articles of association shall be such as will provide for something ultra vires. The present case comes within the very terms of clause 7 of Table A.

But then it is said that these terms must be qualified or limited, inasmuch as it never can be lawful to make a payment to a member in his character of member out of the capital of the company—that such a payment could only be made out of profits. It seems to me that there is no justification for inserting any qualification or limitation in the very clear words used in clause 7 of Table A.

But, besides that, I think it is a fallacy to speak of this payment of interest as being a payment made to a member in his character of member. As member he has no right to have that interest paid to him: he could not claim it. As member he was under no obligation to make the payments in consideration of which the company undertook to pay the interest. When, therefore, the company, although they received the money from a member, received it from him without any obligation upon him as a member to pay it, and undertook to make a payment to him in consideration of it, which they were not under any obligation to make to him as a member, it seems to me that it is manifestly erroneous to describe this as a payment made to a member in his character of member. If so, the whole argument falls to the ground.

Lord MACNAGHTEN.—I agree. Clause 7 of Table A authorizes the directors of a company limited by shares to agree with any member for an advance of money, on the terms that the money so advanced is to be applied in discharge of the member's liability on his shares, when and as that liability ripens into a debt presently payable, and that in the meantime the member is to be entitled to interest on the advance as if he were an ordinary creditor of the company. The interest is to be due to him in the character of creditor, not in his character as member. I think that is the plain meaning of the clause, and that you cannot give the section another meaning unless you qualify the word "interest" by reading in or inserting the words "contingent on profits," or some other words indicating that interest is payable only out of moneys applicable for the payment of dividends. Of course, an arrangement of this sort to be good and valid must be made in good faith and in the honest exercise of the discretion confided to directors. Directors acting otherwise would be exposed to very serious liability, and might be called upon to repay all moneys improperly paid out of capital under colour of paying interest.

Lord MORRIS.—I concur.

Lord SHAND.—I am of the same opinion. I think the reasons in support of the judgment have been extremely well expressed, if I may venture to say so, by Lindley and Kay, L.JJ., in the court below, and I entirely concur in the reasons which your lordships have also given for affirming the judgment.

Order appealed from affirmed, and appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors for the appellants, Ashurst, Morris, Crisp, & Co.

Solicitors for the respondents, Trinder & Capron.

Court of Appeal.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, Lopes, and Rigby, L.JJ.) July 6, 20, 21; Aug. 7, 1896.

In re CHAPMAN.
COCKS v. CHAPMAN. (a.)

Trustee—Mortgages of agricultural land—Will authorizing such investments—Duty to call in—Liability for retaining—Trustees acting honestly and without wilful default.

Trustees under a will authorizing investments in mortgages of real estate will not, if they have acted honestly and with reasonable care, be held liable for loss caused by their retention for more than twelve months after the the testator's death of mortgages of agricultural land originally made to the testator himself. Nor is the fact that the trustees never had the mortgage securities valued by a professional surveyor conclusive against them.

Decision of Kekewich, J. (44 W. R. 311), reversed.

Appeal from a decision of Kekewich, J. (reported 44 W. R. 311, where the facts are fully stated).

By her notice of appeal as originally framed, the defendant Miss Chapman did not seek to vary the chief clerk's certificate, but during the hearing of her appeal the court suggested that it was necessary for her to do so, and gave her leave to issue a summons to vary. The plaintiffs then issued a similar summons and also appealed against the decision of Kekewich, J.

Swinfen Eady, Q.C., and E. C. Macnaghten, for Miss Chapman.

Warrington, Q.C., and Gatey, for the plaintiffs.—The respondents must prove that the trustees have been guilty of wilful default.

Warmington, Q.C., and Micklem, for the defendant Sydney Cozens Hardy, the remainderman who had served the trustees with notice alleging a breach of trust.—These securities were doubtful ones even at the date of the testator's death, and the trustees ought at once to have called in the money. They cited In re Whiteley, Whiteley v. Learoyd, 34 W. R. 450; on appeal, 33 Ch. D. 347, pp. 350, 358; In re Brogden, Billing v. Brogden, 37 W. R. 84, 38 Ch. D. 546; In re Medland, Eland v. Medland, 37 W. R. 753, 41 Ch. D. 476, 481; and Ames v. Parkinson, 7 Beav. 379.

Swinfen Eady, Q.C., replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

Aug. 7.—LINDLEY, L.J.—After stating the facts of the case, and analysing the evidence as to each of the mortgages, continued:—It is true that the trustees did not consult professional surveyors or valuers, but there was nothing special in the nature of the property, as there was in Whiteley v. Learoyd, to render the assistance of an expert really necessary for the guidance of a prudent man. A man need not be a professional surveyor or valuer to form a trustworthy opinion of the value of ordinary agricultural land, and the law is not so stringent as to compel us to say that the trustees were guilty of a dereliction of duty in not seeking advice from such persons. Mr. Henry Chapman, the acting trustee, was himself well acquainted with land and its value, and the testator thought well of him and trusted his judgment. He had no personal interest to serve in not doing his best for the trust estate. When he felt that he wanted further advice he consulted the two Carters, Mr. Robins, and Mr. Francis, all men of good judgment and experience. Mr. Francis was a solicitor in Norwich, and he told us—what I entirely believe—that for some years after the testator's death Mr. Henry Chapman's opinion and the general opinion in Norfolk was that the fall in value of land would be temporary only, that its value would improve, and that it was unwise for mortgagees to attempt to realise their securities.

These, however, are merely general observations, and it is necessary to examine more closely what the duties of the trustees were at various periods, and to ascertain whether and in what respects there was any failure to discharge those duties. The same persons being executors and trustees, it will be convenient to consider their duties, first as executors, and secondly as trustees, as if the same persons did not fill both characters.

Under such a will as this the duty of the executors was simply to call in the testator's unsecured debts, and to convert into money so much of his personal estate as was necessary to enable them to pay his funeral and testamentary expenses, and his debts and pecuniary legacies, and to hand over to the trustees whatever personal estate was not wanted for those purposes. No doubt, speaking generally, it is the duty of executors to get in debts due to their testator; but it was no part of the duty of the executors as such to realize mortgage securities of their testator not wanted for the above-mentioned purposes: see Orr v. Newton, 2 Cox 274, which contains some useful observations upon that point; and the executors were not, as executors, guilty of any devastavit in not realizing such securities.

(a.) Reported by R. C. MACKENZIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The duties of the trustees have to be considered, first, with reference to their acceptance of these mortgages from the executors in the first instance; secondly, with reference to their retention of the mortgages up to the present time. As regards the acceptance of the mortgages from the executors in the first instance, or, in this case, the retention of the mortgages as part of the trust estate at the end, say, of a year from the death of the testator, it must be borne in mind that investments on mortgage were authorized by the will. The trustees had to consider, not whether they should invest money on a particular security, but whether they ought to get rid of a security of a kind which they were authorized to invest money upon. These two considerations are by no means practically the same. Confining myself at present to the end of a year after the testator's death, what the trustees had then to consider was whether they ought to refuse to keep the mortgages as part of the trust estate. Most of the mortgages were for two-thirds of the prices paid for the lands. Some were for less. But, as pointed out in In re Medland, the retention of such a mortgage is not necessarily a breach of trust. Having regard to the evidence in this case, I am not prepared to hold that there was any breach of trust in not realizing the securities by calling in the mortgage debts, or by proceeding to sell or foreclose in 1881 or 1882. In July, 1881, no one foresaw that the value of land would deteriorate more and more, as we now know that it has done, and to have called in the mortgages at that time would have been to do what no competent person would seriously have advised the trustees to do. No witness says that Heading's, Boldero's, Francis's, or even Aves's mortgages were so insecure that the trustees acting with reasonable prudence ought to have called them in. Banham (who was an auctioneer and valuer, and gave evidence on behalf of Mr. Cozens-Hardy) no doubt says that if the mortgages had been called in shortly after the testator's death there would have been no loss; but that is quite another matter. The chief clerk has found that these mortgages ought to have been got in or realized in July, 1881. I cannot adopt that view. The evidence is entirely the other way as to all the important mortgages. There may be some doubt about some of the smaller ones. But as regards those which are of any importance, it would, in my opinion, be wrong to hold that the trustees committed a breach of trust in retaining the testator's mortgages in the first instance as part of the trust estate.

But the mortgages are still unrealized, and it is now unfortunately true that, with one or two exceptions, they cannot be realized except at a great loss, and the real question is whether the trustees are liable for this loss. A mortgage security is unlike an ordinary investment, inasmuch as it consists of a debt which can be enforced by action, and also of a security which can be realized by sale or foreclosure. A trustee of a mortgage security is, therefore, liable for loss sustained by his wilful default in not obtaining payment in either of these ways. But a trustee is not a surety, nor is he an insurer; he is only liable for some wrong done by himself, and loss of trust money is not per se proof of such wrong. We have to deal here with authorized investments, and this must never be lost sight of. Everything turns upon it. Bearing this point in mind, and bearing also in mind that we have to deal with honest trustees, placed in great difficulties by the constant fall in value of land, what is it that they have done wrong? First, it is said that they ought long ago to have called upon the mortgagors for payment. But so long as the land was a satisfactory security, the trustees committed no breach of duty in not calling in the money; and when the land ceased to be a satisfactory security the mortgagors were themselves in such difficulties that nothing could be got from them. Moreover, the mortgagors for the large sums were farmers, and could not have paid off or materially reduced the mortgage debts and have kept on their farms. To have pressed them would have been to have thrown the farms on the hands of the trustees, and this certainly would not have been for the benefit of the trust estate. What could the trustees have done? They might have given up their securities, and have proved for their debts; or they might have sold or valued their securities and proved for the difference; or they might have held aloof and retained their securities. The trustees adopted the last course, not hastily nor without consideration and advice, but after advice. Mr. Francis now says it was, in his opinion, the best course they could have taken. No one says the contrary; for Banham refers to a time when the mortgagors were still solvent. I cannot say that the trustees were guilty of such imprudence as to render them liable for the consequences of adopting the course they did. Then it is said that the trustees ought to have realized the securities; but how? Foreclosure would have cost money, and would have benefited no one. The trustees have the mortgaged lands now, and nothing has been lost by not foreclosing. On the other hand, the expenses of foreclosing have been saved to the trust estate. The only other mode of realizing would have been by sale. But not a single person is called to say that it would have been a prudent or judicious step to try to sell. On the other hand, there is evidence that it would not; and it is clear that, unless the mortgaged property had been sold whilst the securities were good, sales, even if effected at all, would have resulted in serious loss. There is no rule of law which compels the court to hold that an honest trustee is liable to make good loss sustained by retaining an authorized security in a falling market, if he did so honestly and prudently in the belief that it was the best course to take in the interest of all parties. Trustees acting honestly with ordinary prudence, and within the limits of their trust, are not liable for mere errors of judgment. Any loss sustained by the trust estate under such circumstances falls upon and must be borne by the owners of the property—that is, the cestuis que trust—and cannot be thrown by them on their trustees, who have done no wrong, though the result may prove that they possibly might have done better. Whiteley v. Learoyd is a clear authority to this effect; so are Buxton v. Buxton, 1 My. & Cr. 80, and Marsden v. Kent, 25 W. R. 522, 5 Ch. D. 598.

The case is an important one, not only to the trustees of this particular will, but to trustees of mortgages generally. Owing to the great fall in the value of agricultural land, trustees of mortgage securities have been placed in a position of great difficulty. To throw on the trustees the loss sustained by the fall in value of securities authorized by the trust, wilful default, which includes want of ordinary prudence on the part of the trustees, must be proved; but it is not proved in this case. In my opinion, wilful default is disproved in all the important cases, and is not proved in the doubtful ones. The appeal must be allowed.

LOPES, L.J., read the following judgment: In this case it is sought to throw upon the trustees under the will of James Chapman, trustees who were also his executors, a loss in the value of certain mortgage securities occasioned by the depreciation in the value of land. The case is a most important one; and, having regard to the gradual and persistent depression of the agricultural industry in this country, most intimately concerns the position of a large body of persons who have incurred the responsibility of trustees. The testator, James Chapman, died in July, 1880. The securities in question were authorized by the trusts, and were all created during the life of the testator (a man who had largely invested in real securities and had acquired much experience as to their desirability), and were at the time of their creation respectively of sufficient value to justify the mortgage debts secured by them.

The facts of the case, so far as necessary, have been fully stated. I propose to deal with the case only so far as concerns the liability of the trustees. In 1879 the depression in the value of land, caused by the importation into this country of foreign produce, began first to be sensibly felt; a series of bad seasons followed; the season of 1879 being probably the worst of all. The depression, though it has fluctuated at times, has gradually increased. Expectation, however, of improved times has never, in the minds of those most competent to judge, become extinct. I unhesitatingly say that it would have been considered unwise until quite recently, when each succeeding year had rendered the future less hopeful, to have realised real securities such as these mortgages, when that realization would of necessity have been attended with heavy loss. It is very easy to be wise after the event; but, in order to exercise a fair judgment with regard to the conduct of trustees at a particular time, we must place ourselves in the position they occupied at that time, and determine for ourselves what, having regard to the opinion prevalent at that time, would have been considered the prudent course for them to have adopted.

As I have said, the trustees and executors were the same persons, and it was faintly urged that they as executors ought to have realized these real securities at the end of a year after the testator's death. That is easily disposed of; it cannot be seriously contended that it was the duty of the executors to realize mortgages created by the testator himself, when their realization was not required for any testamentary purpose, and when the securities themselves were not in any peril.

I will now state what I believe to be the law applicable to trustees circumstanced like the trustees in the present case. A trustee who is honest and reasonably competent is not to be held responsible for a mere error in judgment, when the question which he has to consider is whether a security of a class authorized, but depreciated in value, should be retained or realized, provided he acts with reasonable care, prudence, and circumspection. The liability of trustees should not, in my judgment, be extended. What was said by Jessel, M.R., in In re Speight, Speight v. Gaunt, 31 W. R. 401, 22 Ch. D. 727, is very applicable to this case. He says, at p. 746: "I think it is the duty of the court in these cases, where there is a question of nicety as to construction or otherwise, to lean to the side of the honest trustee, and not to be anxious to find fine and extraordinary reasons for fixing him with any liability upon the contract. You are to endeavour as far as possible, having regard to the whole transaction, to avoid making an honest man, who is not paid for the performance of an unthankful office, liable for the failure of other people from whom he receives no benefit. I think that is the view which has been taken by modern judges, and some of the older cases in which a different view has been taken would now be repudiated with indignation. It appears to me that the Vice-Chancellor has adopted an entirely different view. I think he has inferred that which is not fairly to be inferred in this case; and even if he were right it could only be inferred by taking one of two views, and we ought not to take the adverse view if the other view, being equally as good, can be adopted." See In re Medland, 37 W. R. 753, and Whiteley v. Learoyd.

Adopting that as my formula, have the trustees in this case sinned against it? In 1881 they took the mortgages from the executors, and most certainly would not have been justified in realizing them—mortgages created by the testator, authorized by the trust, and at that time in no possible jeopardy. But they retained them. What was the state of things in 1881? No one could anticipate what was about to happen; it was not a question of value, it was a question of the prospects of the landed interest. Those prospects depended on an infinite variety of circumstances, the happening and effect of which no one but a prophet could foresee. The trustees admittedly were honest, admittedly they were competent. It is said they ought to have consulted valuers. I do not believe any valuer could have given any advice which would have assisted them Valuers could have ascertained the then value of the land; but with regard to the prospects of land, or of its ultimate recovery, absolute or partial, they were powerless to express an opinion. I doubt much whether the opinion of a practical farmer, cultivating his own land, was not preferable to that of any ordinary expert. Henry Chapman was a practical farmer, and well acquainted with land, and able, therefore, to form an opinion as to future prospects. Francis said, in answer to me in the witness box, that the preponderance of opinion in the county was in favour of retaining mortgage securities rather than of realizing them, and no evidence was adduced to rebut that statement. But it is said that the largest mortgagors were unable to pay the interest due on the mortgages, and that then the trustees ought to have adopted means to realize the debt. This, no doubt, is the strongest point made against the trustees, and involves considerations which require careful examination. The trustees might have brought an action on the covenants, they might have exercised the powers of sale contained in the mortgage deeds, or they might have foreclosed; and if any of these remedies could be shown to have been imprudently neglected by the trustees, and thereby loss to the trust estate caused, they would be liable for wilful default. But the answer is that it would not have been wise as things then stood to have pressed any of these remedies. So long as the land afforded a sufficient security, it would clearly have been unwise to precipitate events which there was reasonable ground for believing never would happen; and even in the case of the smaller mortgages it would be difficult to say that, having regard to the general opinion then prevalent, it was unwise to wait for better times, when it was clear that taking proceedings would in all probability have placed the land in the hands of the trustees for them to cultivate without any available capital, and would have resulted in a sale at a ruinously low price. When it was apprehended that the securities were insufficient, the trustees were placed in a most difficult position. I do not believe anything substantial would have been obtained from the mortgagors if actions had been brought on the covenants, and if those mortgagors who were farming the land, the subject-matter of the mortgages, had been pressed, the probability is that they would have been compelled to give up their farms, or, at any rate, for want of capital, to cultivate them in such a way as to make them unremunerative, and in that case the farms would have been thrown on the hands of the trustees, who would have had to find new tenants or to have cultivated the land themselves, and have found capital for so doing. The same answer may be made to the suggestion that the trustees ought to have foreclosed. Clearly this would not have been desirable, nor do I think giving up their securities and proving for their debts, or selling or valuing their securities and proving for the difference, would have benefited the trust estate.

The only other course was to retain the mortgages as they have done. I am unable to say that this was unwise, or amounted to a breach of trust; having regard to the very peculiar circumstances in which the trustees were placed, bearing in mind that the securities were authorized securities, and that nobody could, with any degree of certainty, anticipate the contingencies to which land was subject, or form any reliable opinion as to its future. There is evidence, and I believe it, to show that the better-received opinion was that it was advisable to retain mortgage securities like these in hopes of better times. I cannot find that the trustees committed, in these circumstances, any breach of trust or made wilful default. I think the appeal should be allowed.

RIGBY, L.J., stated the nature of the case, and continued:—I think that the misconception in this case has arisen altogether from confounding two totally different questions—the one, What is the duty of trustees who have money in their possession for investment? the other, What is the duty of trustees with respect to investments for which they are not primarily liable, and which, in the exercise of their discretion, they have chosen not to call in? The things are totally different. In the one case you have the money safe, and capable of being invested in securities which would involve no risk at all—I mean investments such that the court would not anticipate any risk—and no liability on the part of the trustees. It is to be remembered that as to any investigations into the value of the property offered as a security, and for any fees payable to experts, the mortgagees can, and do as a matter of fact, throw those expenses upon the intended mortgagor. Therefore these things can be done without throwing any expense upon the estate. If in these circumstances the trustees choose to disregard the well-known general rules of the court, including the rule—which is most material for this purpose—that they are not to invest on the security of agricultural land to an amount more than two-thirds of its value, they are incurring a risk with their eyes open—a risk which is the consequence of their own acts altogether. The case is entirely different when you have to deal with existing securities. So far as I know, the court has never laid down that even with regard to risky securities—Turkish bonds, for instance—there is an absolute unvarying obligation on executors or trustees to get them in within the twelve months, regardless of what the opinion of the trustees may be as to the advisability of doing so. Buxton v. Buxton and Marsden v. Kent show that there is no such rule.

What is the duty of trustees who get possession of an estate consisting wholly or partly of mortgage securities? If the mortgage securities appear to be good, certainly there is no obligation on the trustees to call in those securities. It would be a very idle thing to do so for the purpose of investing in other securities perhaps no more advantageous to the estate. At any rate, the supposed rule does not exist. The trustees must act honestly; and here they did that. One of them, Miss Chapman, was tenant for life of the property. Her interest, of course, was to have the property safe. Further, trustees must act prudently; as a prudent man acting prudently would do with regard to his own affairs.

Now let us consider the state of things as to these mortgages. [The Lord Justice examined the evidence as to the several mortgages, and continued:—] I do not mention all the cases which were cited in argument, but, with regard to Ames v. Parkinson, decided by Lord Langdale, Mr. Warmington asked us to come to the conclusion, on the authority of that case, that there was a duty on trustees to call in mortgage debts, corresponding and in fact co-extensive, with the duty which they are under when they invest money on mortgage. I do not think that is the effect of that case at all. The question there was between a specific legatee of a legacy of £1,500 and the residuary legatees, one of whom was the very trustee it was sought to make liable. The evidence was that it was not a sufficient security, and therefore as between the specific legatee and the residuary legatees it was not a proper mortgage to appropriate. The trust there was to invest on mortgage securities or Government securities, one of which is somewhat risky, the other perfectly safe. The trustees were carrying out their trust to invest in that case by appropriation, and Lord Langdale said that under the circumstances they were bound to get in this security in order to invest the money. I do not think that that is a case at all like the present, where the investment has taken place without any responsibility on the part of the trustees, and where the only question is what, under difficult circumstances, the trustees ought to do. I quite agree with the order that Lindley, L.J., has proposed.

Appeals allowed.

Solicitors, Collyer-Bristow, Russell, Hill, & Co., for J. C. Taylor & Sons, Norwich; H. A. Maude, for Francis & Back, Norwich; Waterhouse, Winterbotham, & Harrison.

From Q. B. Div.
Lord Esher, M.R., and Kay and A. L. Smith, L.JJ.) July 30, 1896.

BALLANTYNE & CO. v. MACKINNON. (a.)

Insurance—Marine—Salvage—Absence of sea peril—Towage services—Award—Conclusiveness of judgment of Admiralty Division as to supervening of sea peril.

The plaintiffs' ship, while insured by a time policy, sailed from port with an insufficient supply of coal, and by reason thereof she sailed in an unseaworthy condition. The coal having run short, she was towed by a trawler and a tug to her port of destination. There was no rough weather, neither did any accident or casualty happen to the ship. The Admiralty Division awarded salvage to the trawler and the tug. The plaintiffs having brought an action to recover from the underwriters the amount which they had been adjudged to pay,

Held, that the judgment of the Admiralty Division was not conclusive to show that some peril of the sea must have supervened; and that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover.

Appeal from the judgment of Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J., at the trial of the action without a jury.

The action was brought by shipowners under a time policy of marine assurance to recover from the underwriters a sum of money which the plaintiffs had been adjudged to pay for salvage services rendered to their steamship Progress.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-at-Law.

The policy ran from the 20th of February, 1894, to the 20th of February, 1895.

On the 11th of December, 1894, the steamship sailed from Hamburg for Sunderland with a cargo of wheat. She left Hamburg with an insufficient supply of coal, and by reason thereof she sailed in an unseaworthy condition. When she was distant from Sunderland about forty-one miles it was discovered that the coal had run short. The weather was then fine and clear, and there was a bright breeze and a moderate sea, which was rapidly decreasing. The captain, observing a steam fishing trawler about two miles distant, fired a small rocket, and ultimately The Progress was towed to Sunderland by the trawler and a tug.

The Admiralty Division awarded £350 to the trawler and the tug for the salvage services rendered.

It was admitted by the plaintiffs at the trial that there was no weather which rendered salvage assistance necessary, and that the need for the assistance of the trawler and tug was occasioned by the want of coal.

Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J., gave judgment for the defendants, holding that the salvage services were not rendered necessary by reason of any peril insured against, but that the need of salvage aid, if any, was caused by the unseaworthiness of the ship, and that no peril of the sea supervened.

The plaintiffs appealed, and the principal question argued on the appeal was whether the judgment of the Admiralty Division was not conclusive as to the existence of some supervening peril of the sea.

Bigham, Q.C., and H. F. Boyd, for the plaintiffs.

Joseph Walton, Q.C., J. Hurst, and H. C. S. Dumas, for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 30.—A. L. SMITH, L.J., delivered the judgment of the court:—This is an action by shipowners against an underwriter upon a time policy which covered their steamship Progress against losses occasioned by perils of the sea, and the plaintiffs' case is that, whilst so covered, by reason of such perils, salvage services were rendered to their ship for which they have been compelled to pay the sum of £350, and the plaintiffs now seek to recover this amount from their underwriter as being a loss caused by the direct and immediate consequences of perils of the sea. If they make out this case, the loss is recoverable under an averment that there has been a loss by a peril of the sea, and this was so held in the House of Lords in Aitchison v. Lohre, 28 W. R. 1, 4 App. Cas. 755, and it is not recoverable under the sue and labour clause in the policy. The defence set up is that the loss sued for did not arise from a peril of the sea, but solely from the vice of the subject-matter insured—in particular, that the loss arose solely in consequence of the plaintiffs' ship when she sailed having an insufficiency of coal on board for the contemplated voyage without the intervention of any sea peril, and this is what, as we understand, the Lord Chief Justice has found to have been established by the evidence before him. [The judgment then referred to the evidence and to the facts as found by the Lord Chief Justice, and proceeded:—] Upon this evidence how can this court find, as we were invited to do by the plaintiffs, that the Lord Chief Justice came to a wrong conclusion upon this question of fact as to the non-existence of a sea peril when the towage services were rendered to the Progress? There was no weather, no sea on, no accident or casualty of any kind to the ship, no incursion of salt water into the ship, which could have completed the voyage under sail, and no reasonable apprehension of danger. Cases were cited on the one side and on the other to show what did or did not constitute a sea peril. For instance, The West India and Panama Telegraph Co. v. Home and Colonial Marine Insurance Co., 29 W. R. 92, 6 Q. B. D. 51, where the explosion of a boiler was held covered by the policy; The Thames and Mersey Marine Insurance Co. v. Hamilton, Fraser, & Co., 36 W. R. 337, 12 App. Cas. 484, where the last case was disapproved of and damage to a donkey engine was held not to be covered by a policy covering perils of the sea; the case of Hamilton, Fraser, & Co. v. Pandorf & Co., 36 W. R. 369, 12 App. Cas. 518, where sea water was let into a ship and damage resulted therefrom by reason of rats gnawing a hole in a pipe, in which it was held that this damage was a danger and accident of the sea; and the ruling of Lush, J., in the case of the Golden Fleece, which will be found cited by Blackburn, J., in his judgment in Dudgeon v. Pembroke, 22 W. R. 914, L. R. 9 Q. B. 581, where Lush, J., pointed out to the jury, when considering what was or was not a peril of the sea, that the question was whether the loss arose from injury from without, or from weakness from within, and that what underwriters insured against were casualties that might happen, and not consequences which must happen.

These cases and others which might be cited are obviously not decisions which can be applied as decisions to the present case, for they arose under totally different circumstances and different facts, but they are of value in showing the reasoning by which in given states of facts it has been held that a loss was or was not occasioned by a peril of the sea. We agree with the Lord Chief Justice when he held upon the evidence before him that the loss sustained was not occasioned by a peril of the sea, for, in our judgment, the loss complained of arose solely by reason of the inherent vice of the subject-matter insured—we mean the insufficiency of coal with which the ship started upon her voyage, the consequence of which was that, what in fact did happen, must have happened—viz., that the ship ran short of coal, no sea peril bringing this about in any shape or way or placing the ship in a position of danger thereby.

But a further point is now taken before us, which was not taken before the Lord Chief Justice, and it is that the Admiralty Court had held that the owners of the steamship Progress, her cargo, and freight, were liable to the owners of the steam trawler for salvage services amounting to the sum of £350 rendered by the trawler in towing the steamship into Sunderland, and it is said that this judgment concludes the matter as to the existence of a supervening of perils of the sea. What happened in the Admiralty Court was this. The owners of the steam trawler instituted a salvage suit against the owners of the steamship Progress, her cargo, and freight, for salvage services rendered to her. The owners of The Progress in that suit admitted that salvage services had been rendered to her by the steam trawler, and paid £300 into court, and asserted that this amount was sufficient recompense to the plaintiffs. Upon these pleadings the Admiralty Court proceeded to try the case, and there was awarded to the owners of the steam trawler for their admitted services £50 in excess of the £300 paid into court, making £350 in all. Upon what ground the owners of the steamship admitted that £300 was due does not appear, and whether it was based upon the fact of an agreement, or upon the fact of the trawler having been hailed, as she was, by the steamship, or upon a salvage service proper having been rendered, it is immaterial for the reasons below to inquire.

That this suit was a proceeding against the steamship Progress, and that the judgment was a judgment in rem which constituted an effective maritime lien upon the steamship we do not doubt, but the defendant was no party to this suit, and the question is as to what, as against the defendant, is this judgment conclusive. Unless it concludes the question in the affirmative that a sea peril did supervene, the defendant, in our opinion, is entitled to judgment. That a judgment in rem by a court of competent jurisdiction is conclusive against all the world as to the status of the res—that is, of the thing adjudicated upon—is clear, and consequently as regards the question as to whether a lien attaches to the steamship Progress for £350 there can be no doubt, for this has been conclusively determined by this judgment of the Court of Admiralty and against all the world. The question is whether this judgment is also conclusive as to the grounds upon which the judgment must have proceeded. There is a passage in the judgment of Blackburn, J., in Castrique v. Imrie, 19 W. R. 1, at p. 5, L. R. 4 E. & I. App. 414, p. 434, when delivering his own opinion and that of Bramwell and Cleasby, BB., Mellor and Brett, JJ., in the House of Lords, which is so pertinent to this point that I will read it. The learned judge says: "A judgment in an English court is not conclusive as to anything but the point decided, and therefore a judgment of conviction on an indictment for forging a bill of exchange, though conclusive as to the prisoner being a convicted felon, is not only not conclusive but is not even admissible evidence of the forgery in an action on the bill, though the conviction must have proceeded on the ground that the bill was forged." As to a judgment being only conclusive as to the point decided, there is as to this, in our opinion, no distinction between a judgment in rem and a judgment in personam, except that in the one "the point" adjudicated upon (which in a judgment in rem is always as to the status of the res) is conclusive against all the world as to that status, whereas in the other "the point," whatever it may be, which is adjudicated upon, it not being as to the status of the res, is only conclusive between parties or privies.

Now, what was "the point" decided by the judgment in rem in the Admiralty Court in the present case? It was that a valid maritime lien to the amount of £350 attached to the steamship Progress, and to this extent its status was conclusively determined. It was argued that there might be a claim for salvage without the intervention of a sea peril, and a judgment of Dr. Lushington in The Batavier, 1 Spink 169, was cited. It is not necessary to decide whether this can be so, but we say if it can, then such a salvage claim is not recoverable upon a policy against sea perils, for the obvious reason that the risk covered will not have occurred. Authorities were referred to in which judgments of prize courts condemning vessels as being the property of an enemy were held to be not only conclusive evidence that the vessels were condemned, but also were conclusive evidence of the fact that the vessel was not a neutral. Counsel for the defendant asserted that these were exceptional cases. We agree that they are, and that they have no application to judgments in rem in general. This will be found by looking through the cases cited in the Duchess of Kingston's case, 2 Smith's Leading Cases, 10th ed., p. 713, and we refer also to what Blackburn, J., for himself and the other learned judges in Castrique v. Imrie stated as to this.

For these reasons we think the appeal should be dismissed, with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Stokes, Saunders, & Stokes, for Lietch, Dodd, Bramwell, & Bell, North Shields.

Solicitors for the defendants, Botterell & Roche.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } Chitty, J. } Oct. 29.

In re HORN & FRANCIS. (a.)

Solicitor — Remuneration — Lease — Premium — Negotiating fee—Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 44), General Order, Sched. I., Part II., rule 5.

Where a lease is granted partly in consideration of a premium and partly in consideration of a rent, the lessor's solicitors are not entitled, under rule 5 of part 2 of Schedule I. to the General Order under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, to a fee for negotiating in respect of the premium further than what is included in the scale fee chargeable in respect of the rent.

In re Robson, 38 W. R. 556, 45 Ch. D. 71, discussed.

Summons.

This was a summons to review taxation, raising a question arising under the General Order under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881. A lease of a house in Charles-street, Berkeley-square, having been granted in consideration of a premium of £5,000 and a rent of £250 a year, the lessor's solicitors included in their bill of costs in respect of the transaction a fee of £40 for negotiating, in addition to the rent scale fee amounting to £29, and the deducing title fee chargeable on the premium amounting to £45. The taxing-master disallowed the £40 for negotiating. The lessor's solicitors appealed to the court, contending that although in the case of a lease at a rent only the scale fee on the rent provided by part 2 of Schedule I. to the General Order covered all negotiations, yet where a lease was granted for a premium as well as a rent, rule 5 of this schedule authorized the allowance of a scale fee for negotiating as well as a scale fee for deducing title.

C. E. Jenkins, for the summons. — The taxing-master has relied on dicta in In Re Robson, 38 W. R. 556, 45 Ch. D. 71, in a way which would extend the effect of the judgment in In re Field, 33 W. R. 553, 29 Ch. D. 608, further than was intended. There is no direct authority on the question in this case. The lessor's solicitors are clearly entitled to something more under rule 5 in a lease such as in the present case than the scale fee on a lease at a rent only. There is no reason why the negotiation fee should not be divided into two parts, allowing the further sum on the premium corresponding with what would be allowed on a sale.

O. L. Clare, for the lessee.—The negotiation fee has been paid already in the scale fee allowed on the rent, and as decided in In re Field cannot be specifically charged for.

CHITTY, J.—The question is whether the lessor's solicitors are entitled to the scale fee prescribed for negotiating a sale where the lease is at a rent and in consideration of a premium. The taxing-master has allowed the scale fee calculated on the rent, and he has also made an allowance in respect of the premium, but he has confined the allowance in respect of the premium to the scale fee allowed in the case of a sale for deducing the title, and he has declined to allow the solicitor the fee for negotiation.

(a.) Reported by RALEGH B. PHILLPOTTS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The taxing-master's certificate, so far as it has allowed to the solicitor the fee for deducing title, is in accordance with North, J.'s, decision in In re Robson, 38 W. R. 556, 45 Ch. D. 71, and there is no question in regard to that allowance; but the solicitor is dissatisfied, and asks for the further allowance that I have mentioned. Now, it is plain that solicitors, where the lease is such as the present lease, are entitled to something more than the scale fee calculated on the rent. Rule 5 of part 2 of Schedule I. prescribes that there shall be paid to the solicitor in such a case a further sum equal to the remuneration on a purchase (which is distinctly a slip for on a sale) at a price equal to such money payment or premium. The language is not happy, it is referential, and the question is, to what does it refer.

North, J., in the case of In re Robson carefully considered the rule where the lease was partly at a premium, and ascertained, according to his judgment, to what portion of part 1 of Schedule I. reference was made. He says: "The remuneration on sales is given by part 1 of Schedule I. to vendors' solicitors for three things: (1) Negotiating a sale by private contract; (2) conducting a sale by public auction; and (3) deducing title to property and perusing and completing conveyance. The first of these cannot be intended." Now, this was part of the groundwork of the learned judge's decision; no doubt he was not there asked to decide the point whether the solicitor could claim the negotiation fee. In that case the taxing-master had not allowed the solicitor anything under the latter part of rule 5 to which I have referred. North, J., considered that the solicitor was entitled to something, and I think it is clear, on the rules, that he was entitled to something more than the scale fee calculated on the rental, and he held that the reference was made to deducing title because he allowed him that remuneration, although in that particular case the solicitor appears not to have deduced the title at all. He allowed it on the ground that he was bound to allow something more by virtue of the express words of the 5th rule, but he made it plain, as part of the ground of his decision, that the solicitor was not entitled to any fee for negotiation. In his decision North, J., referred to the case of In re Field, 33 W. R. 553, 29 Ch. D. 606, which decided that in the ordinary case of a lease at a rent (and there there was no question of premium) the allowance prescribed in the way of percentage included the solicitor's trouble for negotiating. There is no express remuneration by way of percentage given to the solicitor, but the percentage remuneration given to the solicitor in that case includes payment for his trouble for negotiating.

Now, in the case before me, the solicitor has got by reason of the allowance calculated on the rent, payment for the negotiation. That, I think, is quite plain, having regard to the decision in In re Field, which has been approved by the House of Lords in Savery v. Enfield Local Board, 42 W. R. 33, [1893] A. C. 218. In my opinion the solicitor here is asking to be paid twice over in respect of the negotiation.

The 5th rule, as is obvious, might have been framed in a different way. It might have been framed in this manner—that where there is a lease at a rent, and also in consideration of a money payment the transaction shall be divided into two parts, and in regard to the rent the rent scale shall apply, and in regard to the premium the sale scale shall apply. But that is not the form, nor in my opinion the substance of the rule, and there is no division into two parts. The rule merely provides that a further sum shall be added to the remuneration, which the solicitor obtains according to the scale fee in respect of the rent. Then, as I said before, arises the question what that further sum is to be, and it is not, I admit, easy to find out exactly to what part of the scale reference is made. I think North, J., was right in what he said, although he had not the question before him of allowing or disallowing the negotiation fee. The solicitor in that case was not bold enough to claim it, and it appears to me that I should be allowing the solicitor to be doubly paid for negotiating if I acceded to the solicitor's request in the present case. The scale fee calculated on the rent does not attribute any portion of the amount of remuneration that the solicitor gets on that footing, to the negotiation. It is impossible to say how much mathematically was allowed to the solicitor on that head, but he is paid for it. And I think it would be inconsistent to give him the fee prescribed on a sale at a percentage in reference to the premium for negotiating. For these reasons I think the application fails, and is dismissed with costs.

Solicitors, Horn & Francis; Walfords.

Chan. Div. }
Stirling, J. } Oct. 30.

GRIFFITHS v. TOWER PUBLISHING CO. (LIMITED) AND MONCRIEFF. (a.)

Contract—Author and publisher—Agreement with a limited company—Assignability of contract.

The principle laid down in Stevens v. Benning, 3 W. R. 149, 6 De G. M. & G. 223; Reade v. Bentley, 6 W. R. 240, 4 K. & J. 656; and Hole v. Bradbury, 28 W. R. 39, 12 Ch. D. 886, that a contract between an author and a publisher is of a personal nature, and therefore not assignable, is not affected by the publisher being a limited company instead of an individual or a partnership firm consisting of individuals.

Action for an injunction to restrain the defendants from selling without the consent of the plaintiff any of the property or assets in their possession, under or by virtue of certain agreements in writing entered into between the plaintiff and the defendant company, and also from selling or assigning without the like consent the benefits, rights, or interest alleged by the defendants to be vested in them under the agreement.

The plaintiff, who was the author of three novels which had been published in serial form in Pearson's Weekly, entered into agreements with the defendant company for the publication of the works in volumes. The agreements were made by letters passing between the company's manager and the plaintiff, and were upon the terms that the company took all risks, and that the plaintiff was to be charged only with the actual out of pocket cost of printing and advertising, and was to receive half profits. The plaintiff and Mr. Pearson were to retain the copyright in the books, but the company were to have the sole right of producing the works in volume form, subject to the terms of the agreements.

The company having become insolvent, an action was brought against it by a debenture-holder, and the defendant Moncrieff was appointed receiver in the action. He informed the plaintiff that it was his intention to sell, without the plaintiff's consent, the whole of the assets of the company, including the benefit of the agreements between the plaintiff and the company. The plaintiff now moved for an injunction in the above terms. The company did not appear at the trial.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq. Barrister-at-Law.

Millar, Q.C., and T. B. Napier, for the plaintiff.—This is a personal contract, and therefore not assignable.

They referred to Stevens v. Benning, 3 W. R. 149, 6 De. G. M. & G. 223; Reade v. Bentley, 6 W. R. 240, 4 K. & J. 656; Hole v. Bradbury, 28 W. R. 39, 12 Ch. D. 886.

Graham Hastings, Q.C., and E. Ford, for the defendant Moncrieff.—The cases cited only apply to agreements between individuals. With regard to the first part of the motion we will undertake not to dispose of the books and plates in our possession except under the direction of the court.

STIRLING, J., stated the facts, and continued:—Now, if this agreement had been made with a single individual or a partnership consisting of individuals, the cases are clear that the contract is of a personal nature, and on that ground is not assignable. There are three authorities which were referred to in the course of the argument. I do not go through them, but they seem to me to be clear that an agreement of this kind is not assignable. I will refer to one point which struck me, that the copyright is to remain with the plaintiff and Mr. Pearson, subject to the right of the company to produce the novels in volumes under the several agreements. That seems at first sight to give something in the nature of a copyright interest to the company, but on consideration it seems to me that it simply gives a right of production in the volume form. That simply forms a license to produce the novel for the purpose of the agreement. Similar agreements were entered into with regard to the other two novels. Unfortunately, now, the Tower Publishing Co. has become insolvent. It is unable to perform the agreement, and a receiver has been appointed. It is suggested that there is a difference between a company contractor and an individual contractor. It is said that although a contract of this nature entered into between an author and a publisher who is an individual, or publishers who are a firm consisting of individuals, may not be assignable, yet a contract entered into with a limited company is assignable. I should hesitate long before laying down such law as that. If the contract is assignable it must be assignable at any moment, and not merely in the case of winding up or liquidation, and I think it would be startling to those authors who have entered into agreements with publishers in the city of London, who have recently been converted into limited companies, if they were told that although the agreements they entered into were not assignable by the old firms who converted themselves into companies, yet they were assignable by the companies. It seems to me that that would be pushing too far the doctrine that the non-assignability of contracts such as these rests on the personal confidence placed in individuals. I cannot hold that the non-assignability of agreements such as these rests on the view that the contract is entered into with persons in whom the author has confidence. An author may have confidence in a limited company as well as in an individual. A limited company may have a reputation for producing books in a good form, and in a mode that attracts the public, and an author selecting the company as his publishers may do so in the reasonable expectation that the company, though the members and officers may fluctuate, will nevertheless consider themselves under an obligation to maintain the reputation they have acquired. In the present case what attracted the plaintiff to this company was that they had published one novel in a style of which he approved. No doubt part of the inducement was that the company had at that time a very efficient manager, and it is said that the company might have dismissed him the next day, without giving the plaintiff cause of complaint. That observation is well founded. They might have discharged the manager next day, and new officers of the company might have been appointed, but I repeat that the plaintiff would be entitled to assume that the Tower Co. and those under its direction would, in selecting a manager and officers, have regard to the best interests of the company. It seems to me I should be doing wrong if I drew any distinction in law between agreements made between an author and an individual or a firm consisting of individuals on the one hand, and agreements made between an author and a limited company on the other hand. If agreements of the former class are, as is well established, non-assignable, I think that contracts of the second class should not be assignable either. I think, therefore, that as regards the second part of the motion an injunction ought to go. It is quite true that an assignment might be ineffective, but nevertheless it might give rise to conflicts between the plaintiff and other persons who might become innocent assignees of the defendants, and so increase the costs of this action.

With regard to the other part of the motion, his lordship said that the case had been very fairly met by the defendant, and he accepted the undertaking.

Injunction granted as to the second part of the motion, and the defendant's undertaking accepted as to the rest.

Solicitors, Harrison & Davies; McKenna & Co.

Chan. Div. Stirling, J. } April 15, 16; Aug. 5, 1896.

In re HERBAGE RENTS CHARITY, GREENWICH. CHARITY COMMISSIONERS v. GREEN. (a.)

Rent-charge—Tenant for years—Personal liability—Charitable Trusts (Recovery) Act, 1891 (54 Vict. c. 17), ss. 3, 5, sub-section 2.

A mere tenant for years is not liable in an action of debt for non-payment of a rent-charge issuing out of the land of which he is in occupation, except under special circumstances.

When a legal rent-charge has been created for charitable purposes, the Attorney-General may in equity enforce payment against the persons legally liable to pay, even though the legal title may not be clear, or be defective; but, in the absence of special circumstances, there is no legal liability on the tenant for years to pay such a charitable rent-charge, which can be enforced in an action in the Chancery Division, either by the Attorney-General or by the Charity Commissioners, under the Charitable Trusts (Recovery) Act, 1891.

This was a summons taken out by the Charity Commissioners under the Act 54 Vict. c. 17, asking for a declaration that a freehold house at Blackheath, occupied by the defendant, was subject to the payment of a perpetual rent-charge of £3 for the benefit of the above-named charity, which was regulated by a scheme of the Charity Commissioners dated the 16th of January, 1877, that an account might be taken of what was due for arrears in respect of the said rent-charge, and that the defendant might be ordered to pay what was found due to the official trustees of charitable funds.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The house in question formed part of the possessions of the Crown, and was occupied by the defendant under a lease for twenty-one years, commencing from the 10th of October, 1886, at a rent of £150.

The house was occupied as a private house, and the defendant received no profits from his occupation.

The Crown, admitting that the property was subject to the rent-charge, the lessee was made the sole defendant to the summons.

It did not appear in whom the rent-charge was legally vested, but it was not disputed that the proceedings were properly instituted under the Act, and that the house was liable.

The defendant alleged that he knew nothing about the rent-charge when he took the house, and it was admitted that it had not been paid during his occupancy.

Vaughan Hawkins, in support of the summons.—The person liable both at law and equity is the person legally in possession. Christie v. Barker, 63 L. J. Q. B. 537, 33 W. R. Dig. 217, and Thomas v. Sylvester, 21 W. R. 912, L. R. 8 Q. B. 368, show that an action for debt will lie against the person in occupation. The person to be sued can only be the tenant in possession. In the case of a lease for years the person liable is the temporary owner of the lease. This is not a legal action for debt, but takes the place of the action by distress. Proceedings under the Statute of Charitable Uses are all in the nature of suits for breach of trust. The case of Attorney-General v. Jackson, 11 Ves. 365, which was followed in Attorney-General v. Naylor, 12 W. R. 192, 1 H. & M. 809, shows that where there are several owners you can sue any one of them. Here it is impossible to say who can distrain. Where there is no power to recover a rent-seck, you can come into Chancery: Collett v. Jacques, 1 Ch. Cas. 120, 147, cited in Gilbert on Rents, at pp. 117, 110. If you have a right to come into equity as in the case of a rent-charge that shows that the person on whom you can distrain is the person liable. The plaintiffs are entitled to the whole of the arrears and the question of the Statute of Limitations ought to have been raised by the defendant in his affidavits (ord. 19, r. 15).

He also referred to Grant v. Ellis, 9 M. & W. 123; Searle v. Cooke, 43 Ch. D. 519, 38 W. R. Dig. 49; Cook v. Fountain, 3 Swans. 585, 596; Inhabitants of Woodford v. Parkhurst, Duke's Charitable Uses, p. 70, (edit. 1805) p. 378; Corporation of Burford v. Lenthall, 2 Atk. 551; Story's Equity Jurisprudence, section 1161; Cocks v. Foley, 1 Vern. 359; Steward v. Bridger, 2 Vern. 516; Gilbert on Rents, pp. 3, 73, 75, 101; Gilbert on Uses, Sugden's Edition, pp. 23 and 25; Duke's Charitable Uses, pp. 148 and 149.

Ingle Joyce, contrâ.—The terre-tenant, according to the definition in Sweet's Law Dictionary, is not the occupier, but the person who has the seisin. The argument in this case goes beyond Thomas v. Sylvester. It is that you can go against anyone in possession. According to this a person with a mere possessory title would be liable. Such an action as Thomas v. Sylvester will not lie against a man who is not a freeholder and has not all the estate of the grantor of the rent (Swift v. Kelly, 24 L. R. Ir. 107, 478). This case is analogous to that of an underlessee and a lessor. A lessor cannot maintain an action on the covenant for rent against an underlessee (Holford v. Hatch, 1 Douglas, 183.) [STIRLING, J.—Your goods and chattels can be distrained. If this charge were vested in the official trustee of charity lands, he or any other duly appointed trustee could distrain for arrears. Cannot the Attorney-General sue in equity as being cestui que trust without having a trustee appointed?] The legal owner could not sue. He could distrain, and my remedy would be replevin. I am not liable for an unlimited amount. [STIRLING, J.—I do not say an unlimited amount, but you are liable. Parkhurst's case in Duke seems to me to be very near an authority.] That was the case of a rent-charge granted by the owner in fee, and the land was held liable to the charge. [STIRLING, J.—The person against whom distress would have lain is liable. Tudor on Charitable Trusts, at p. 244, says that the person liable to pay a rent-charge in favour of a charity commits a breach of trust if he does not.] A personal liability cannot depend on the possession of goods and chattels to distrain. The pernor of rents and profits is the Crown. [STIRLING, J.—As you are liable for distress, are you not equally liable for the amount that may be levied and distrained?] If this were law the doctrine would only apply to the owner of the freehold. All the cases cited have been cases where a person has had the seisin. There is no one who can distrain, and in any case only six years' arrears can be recovered under the Statute of Limitations. My client has taken a rack-rent, and he is now said to be liable for rent-charges of which he had no notice, and which had been allowed to fall into arrear.

Vaughan Hawkins, in reply.—The defendant would be liable in an action at law upon Thomas v. Sylvester. The case in the Year Book, 22 Hen. 6, fol. 16, referred to in Reeves's History of the English Law, vol. 2, p. 537, shows that a landlord merely receiving rent is not a pernor of the profits, and could not be sued in a real action. Swift v. Kelly is not to the point; it only decided that the person sued was not pernor. Here privity of estate exists (Gilbert on Rent, p. 96). There is no difference between a grant for years and a lease for life. Terms of years were ignored in the real actions, because when they were established the possession of the freeholder was the actual possession (Bushby v. Dixon, 3 B. & C. 298).

He also referred to Littleton, section 572; Gilbert on Uses and Trusts, pp. 24 and 25; Bernard Hide's case, Duke 76; Peacock v. Thewer, Duke 82.

Cur. adv. vult.

August 5.—STIRLING, J., stated the facts and continued:—] It is not disputed that the legal owner of the rent-charge, if known, might have distrained for the arrears; and if by means of a vesting order or otherwise the legal estate was vested in trusts for the charity, those trustees might, I apprehend have distrained upon the tenant's goods. This course, however, has not been adopted. The question which is raised by the summons is whether the defendant, as tenant for years of the property subject to the rent-charge, is personally liable for the payment of those arrears. Regard being had to the not infrequent occurrence of charitable rent-charges of small amounts such as that which is the subject of these proceedings, this question is one of considerable importance to the applicants. It is also one of some difficulty, and in my judgment cannot be decided simply on considerations turning on the liability of the respondent's goods to distress, for the goods of a perfect stranger might be taken in distress if they happened to be on the land, although no action whatever could lie against him. The liability of the respondent was sought to be based on two grounds. It was said, first, that under the present law the occupier of land subject to a rent-charge is liable to an action for debt in respect of arrears of rent-charge; and secondly, if that was not so as regards rent-charges generally, still there was in the case of a charitable rent-charge a personal duty to pay, which might be enforced by the Attorney-General, and under the statute 54 Vict. c. 17 by the charity commissioners. These two propositions I propose to consider separately in the order in which I have stated them.

The question beng one of personal liability I do not concern myself either with the legal remedy by distress against goods found on the land charged or the equitable remedy against the land itself as illustrated in the series of cases of which Cupit v. Jackson, 13 Price 721, and Hambro v. Hambro, 43 W. R. 92, [1894] 2 Ch. 564, may be taken as examples.

As regards the first question, the leading authority on the liability of the possessors of land subject to a rent-charge to an action for debt is Thomas v. Sylvester, 21 W. R. 912, L. R. 8 Q. B. 368. There the declaration stated that the plaintiffs, being seised in fee of certain messuages granted them by indenture to C. subject to the payments to the plaintiff, his heirs and assigns, of a rent-charge, and C. covenanted to pay the rent-charge. Afterwards all the estate of C. vested in the defendants, who did not pay the rent-charge and it was held on demurrer that the declaration was good. The person there sued was the person in whom the land had become vested, for all the estate of the grantor of the rent-charge and the grounds on which he was held liable are thus stated: [His lordship then read from the judgment of Blackburn, J., p. 370 of the L. R.: "I think the only question . . . . entitled to the rent-charge"; and "If the present case . . . he may maintain the action"; and continued:—] Quain, J., puts it thus: "If a man comes into possession of lands as tenant in fee he is the pernor of the profits of the land and was liable to a real action for the non-payment of the rent-charge created by a former tenant in fee; if this be so, since real actions are abolished an action of debt will lie." Now, that case has been repeatedly followed in subsequent decisions. It was followed by the Court of Appeal in the case of Christie v. Barker in 1884 where the decision in Thomas v. Sylvester and the reasons given for it were approved, and it was there held that the action of debt would lie against the owner and occupier of a portion only of the lands subject to a rent-charge. Then, in the case of In re Blackburn and District Benefit Building Society, 38 W. R. 178, 42 Ch. D. 343, it was explained by the Court of Appeal that though an action of debt lay the rent-charge itself did not constitute a debt. [His Lordship then read from the judgment of Cotton, L.J. ibid at p. 349: "Undoubtedly an action for debt . . . while he holds the land," and continued:—] And it was there decided that the liquidators of the building society who got no profits and did their best to get rid of the land were not personally liable. In Searle v. Cooke the Court of Appeal again followed Thomas v. Sylvester and ordered the tenant on the roll of the copyholds who was in possession and receipt of the rents to an amount exceeding the rent-charge to pay personally the arrears of the rent-charge. In Swift v. Kelly it was held by the Court of Queen's Bench in Ireland that where by a marriage settlement lands were granted to a trustee to the use that A., in case she should survive the settlor, should, after his decease, take and enjoy for her own benefit a yearly rent-charge of £100 by way of jointure during her life and subject thereto to the use of trustees for the term of one hundred years upon trust for securing payment of the rent-charge and subject thereto to the use of the grantor in fee, and the grantor died having devised the lands to the defendant, who entered into possession, the defendant, as terre tenant, was liable to an action of debt whether he received profits from the land or not; but this was reversed on appeal on the ground of the existence of the term of 100 years. It was afterwards held by the Vice-Chancellor of Ireland, in Odlum v. Thompson, 31 L. R. (Ir.) 394, that the owner of the rent-charge was only entitled to the amount of the profits received by the owner of the land. But in a recent case in this country of Pertwee v. Townsend, [1896] 2 Q. B. 129, 44 W. R. Dig. 58, Collins, J., has come to the same conclusion as that arrived at by the Court of Queen's Bench in Ireland—namely, that where the action lies, the owner of the rent-charge is entitled to recover, whether the defendant in possession has or has not received profits. I have had an opportunity of reading the judgment and I agree with the conclusion at which the learned judge arrived. The fact, therefore, if such it be, that the respondent has not received any profits from his occupation affords no answer to the claim made against him.

In all these cases, however, the action was brought against the owner in fee of the land, and the question of whether a tenant for years is liable to an action of debt is one on which I have been unable to find any reported authority, and I feel compelled, therefore, to enter into the construction of the law as found in the more ancient authorities.

In section 233 of Littleton the nature of the remedy given to the owner of a rent-seck is thus stated. [His lordship read the passage: "If a man who hath . . . the costs of his writ and of his plea," and continued:—] And in section 238, Littleton deals with the case of rent-charge, and there he says: "Denial is a disseisin of a rent-charge as is said before of a rent-seck." It appears therefore that against the person designated in that section as tenant the owner of the rent-charge might by assize of novel disseisin recover not merely seisin of his rent, but the arrears of the rent-charge and damages. A form of judgment in accordance with the law thus laid down is to be found in Rastell's Entries at p. 78*b*, and it appears to me that the conclusion is that the person liable in law for payment of the rent is the person thus designated as tenant. Who is the "tenant" thus referred to? Must he be the tenant of the freehold or does it include a tenant for years? On this light may be thrown if we discover who is the proper defendant to an assize of novel disseisin for non-payment of rents. Now, this point is discussed in Brediman's case, 6 Co. 56*b*. It was there held that the payment of a rent-charge by the tenant for years created no seisin so as to bind the tenant of the freeholds and enable him, the owner of the rent-charge, to sue in an assize of novel disseisin. This was supported on several grounds. The first is this: [His lordship read from, "In respect of the imbecility and smallness . . . of the interest of the tenant for years . . . he who had a freehold," and "It was further agreed" to "the perfection thereof," and continued:—] It appears, therefore, that in an action of novel disseisin all the terre-tenants whose lands were liable for payment of rent ought to be named, and it was further laid down that if they were not named the defendant might plead an abatement (see Dyer's Reports, fol. 31, placitum 216).

According to our modern practise, as has already been decided in the case to which I have already referred of Christie v. Barker, it is no longer necessary that all terre tenants should be parties, but the passage which I have just quoted appears to me to show that the tenant of the freehold was the proper and necessary defendant to an assize of novel disseisin for rent-charge or rent-seck, and prima facie, therefore the person contemplated in section 233 of Littleton as liable for payment of it.

In Ognell's case, 4 Co. 48*b*, it was held that as long as the rent-charge continued an action of debt could not lie. In Lillingstone's case, 7 Co. 38a, it was held that when the rent-charge ceased an action of debt would lie even though the deed creating the rent-charge contained a provision that the grantor should not be charged on a writ of annuity, and the report states the law thus at p. 39*b*. [His lordship read the passage "It was also resolved . . . he hath no other remedy," and continued:—] The person therefore against whom the action lay was the terre tenant—that is, the tenant of the freehold. One reason why a tenant for years could not by payment of the rent give seisin as against the tenant of the freehold was, as already pointed out in Brediman's case, "the imbecility and smallness of the interest of tenant for years."

Where the freehold interest is preceded by a chattel interest only, the freehold is, as laid down in Burton's Compendium, 8th ed., p. 270, a present interest in most of the circumstances and incidents of the title. Th freeholder is in possession through the tenant for years who, in early times, was looked upon by the law as merely the bailiff of the freeholder. This may be the reason why no mention is made in these early cases of the tenant for years being liable in an action for non-payment of the rent-charge; and in only one reported case have I been able to find any judgment against the tenant for years. That is the case of Cutts v. West, 1 Dyer, fol. 141, plac. 47, and there the tenant for years not merely did not pay the rent-charge but deliberately paid it to a person not entitled. It was there held that the true owner might, under these circumstances, treat him as a disseizor and have a remedy against him by assize.

By the statute 32 Hen. 8, cap. 37, provision was made for the recovery of arrears of rent in certain cases where the common law gave either no remedy or an imperfect remedy; and under that statute the liability of the tenant for years was discussed in three cases but was not finally determined. The first is the case of Lambert v. Austin, Cro. Eliz. 332, more fully reported in Owen's Reports, 117. I will read from the shorter report. [His lordship read: "The defendant avowed . . . upon this it was demurred." and continued:—] "The question," it is stated by the reporter, "rests only for the rent incurred during the term if by the statute he may distrain for it after the term expired upon him in the reversion." [He also read from the judgments of Gawdy and Turner, JJ.: "The tenant of the freehold . . . in the life of the testator," and Clench and Popham, JJ., contra: "That the tenant for years . . . the intent of the statute," and continued:—] Then they discussed the statute. There the court was equally divided on the question and no decision appears to have been come to. It will be observed, however, that all the members of the court are agreed that during the continuance of the rent-charge assize lay against the tenant of the freehold and that the tenant for years could only be affected by distress. Is is not suggested that in the cases in which the common law gives a right of action of debt the tenant for years could be sued, and the point on which a difference of opinion arose was really on the true construction of 32 Hen. 8, cap. 37. The same question was raised in Bingham and Parkhurst's case, Littleton's Reports, 93, and caused a similar division of opinion; but no decision was called for in the peculiar circumstances of that case. In Danah v. Smith, Aleyn's Reports, p. 62, an action was brought under the statute 32 Hen. 8 for arrears of a rent-charge against a mere occupier [His lordship read the report—"In an action for debt . . . inclined against the plaintiff"—and continued:—] This was an action brought against a mere occupier, and it would be inconsistent with the decision arrived at by the Court of Appeal in Ireland in Swift v. Kelly to hold that mere occupation imposed an obligation to pay the rent-charge.

Such is the state of the authorities so far as I have been able to discover, and in my judgment they do not support the conclusion that a mere tenant for years is liable in an action of debt for non-payment of a rent-charge arising out of the land of which he is in occupation, except under special circumstances, such as occurred in the case of Cutts v. West.

I now pass on to consider the second proposition—namely, whether, if the Attorney-General were suing, he could recover from the respondent the amount of the arrears in an action in the Chancery Division. It is well established that the Attorney-General may enforce payment of arrears of a rent-charge created in favour of a charity against the person liable for the payment. Examples are to be found in Attorney-General v. Bolton, 3 Anst. 820, and Attorney-General v. Gascoigne, 2 My. & K. 647. In the cases of Attorney-General v. Jackson, 11 Ves. 365, and Attorney-General v. Naylor, 12 W. R. 192, 1 H. & M. 809, which were cited and relied on in the arguments, the suits are spoken of as directed against the terre tenants, or the tenants of the freehold, and in no case, so far as I have been able to find, has the defendant ever been a mere tenant for years. The case of The Inhabitants of Woodford v. Parkhurst's is referred to in Duke's Charitable Uses, p. 70. The case which is reported at p. 378 (edit. 1805) of that volume was this: [His lordship read the report—Sir Henry Leigh did purchase . . . resolve that these points . . . also it being objected . . . accrue in their time"—and continued:—] Then the remedy by distress is spoken of, but still only as against the terre tenant or tenant of the freehold, and there are to be found other passages in Duke to the like effect. I have considered them all, but in my judgment they do not go beyond this, that when a legal rent-charge has been created for charitable purposes the Attorney-General may in equity enforce payment against the persons legally liable to pay, even although the legal title may not be clear or be defective.

I therefore come to the conclusion that it is not made out, in the absence of special circumstances, that the tenant for years is legally liable, and I think that the present summons fails, and must be dismissed.

Solicitors, Clabon; Ingle, Holmes, & Sons.

Q. B. Div.
(Grantham and Kennedy, JJ.) Oct. 29.

TRAVERS AND ANOTHER v. MASON. (a.)

Landlord and tenant—Yearly tenancy—Notice to quit, six calendar months—Notice given on customary half-year—Notice insufficient.

In a lease for a yearly tenancy, determinable on the 13th of May in any succeeding year, it was expressly provided that six calendar months' notice to quit should be given by either side. In that part of the country (county Durham) it was admittedly the custom for tenants of small holdings to pay rent on the 22nd of November and on the 13th of May in each year; and notice to quit given after the 13th but before the 22nd of November was commonly accepted as a full six months' notice expiring on the 13th of May following.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

On the 21st of November, 1895, a notice to quit on the 13th of May, 1896, having been served on the tenant under the lease above mentioned,

Held, that, notwithstanding the custom, the notice was invalid, it not being a six calendar months' notice as required by the terms of the lease.

Special case stated by justices sitting in petty sessions at Barnard Castle, in the county of Durham.

The question for the decision of the court was whether a customary notice to quit given to a tenant was a sufficient notice or not.

The justices held that the notice was insufficient in point of time.

The material facts were these: A cottage situated within the jurisdiction of the justices was let some years ago to one Mason, the defendant in the action. The lease contained the following clause: "Provided also and it is hereby agreed that either party shall be at liberty to put an end to the tenancy hereby created on giving to the other six calendar months' notice of their intention to do so, such notice to expire on the 13th day of May."

It was proved that a notice to quit was served on the tenant by the solicitors acting on behalf of the trustees of the late landlord, Sampson Waller, Esq., deceased, on the 21st of November, 1895, in these terms: "We hereby give you notice to quit and deliver up possession of the dwelling-house and premises, 8, Cockfield, in the county of Durham, which you now hold of them on the 13th day of May, 1896."

The tenant, however, refused when the 13th of May came to move out, and an application was made to the magistrates under section (i) of 1 & 2 Vict. c. 74, that a writ of ejectment might be served by a constable upon the tenant, the rental of the premises being less than £20 a year.

The tenant opposed the application on the ground that the notice required under the lease was six calendar months, and that the one served upon him was insufficient in point of time.

The magistrates ruled the objection as good, and refused to issue a writ.

The trustees appealed.

Manisty, for the appellants.—The period of time between the 22nd of November, 1895, and the 13th of May, 1896, when the notice, if a good notice, must expire, is less than six calendar months, but I submit that it is in law a sufficient notice under the words of the lease, because in that part of the country it is the custom to pay rent on those two days only, and those dates are treated as the division of the year into two equal portions. I rely on the case of Howard v. Wemsley, 6 Esp. 53. There it was held that a notice given on the 26th of September to quit at the end of six calendar months was good to determine a holding commencing on the 25th of March. The case was tried by Ellenborough, L J., who, in ruling the notice to be sufficient, said "that the 25th of March was the usual half-year, by computation from the 29th of September, though not exactly corresponding in duration of time; the word calendar was surplusage, for if he had omitted the word calendar or said half-year it would be good." [Morgan v. Davies, 26 W. R. 816, 3 C. P. D. 260, was also referred to, and the cases mentioned in Woodfall's Landlord and Tenant, 15th ed., p. 372, under the heading of Customary Half-year's Notice Considered.] The question is of great importance to landlords and tenants in the North of England, especially in Northumberland and Durham, where notice given on one customary rent-day has hitherto been treated as a full half-year's notice, expiring on the next rent-day, however expressed in the lease. [GRANTHAM, J.—Your difficulty is this. In this particular lease the notice to quit must be given six months previous to the 13th of May in any particular year. The notice served fails to comply with that condition, which is perfectly clear and reasonable.]

The respondent did not appear either by counsel or in person.

GRANTHAM, J.—The appeal must be dismissed. It would not do for us—indeed we have no power—to allow such an alteration to be read into the clearly expressed condition in the lease, the meaning of which is perfectly clear and reasonable merely because we are assured, and I do not for a moment doubt correctly, that it is customary in the North of England to pay rent but twice a year, and to treat the period of time between one pay-day and the other as being equivalent to a full half-year.

KENNEDY, J.—I concur.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Field, Roscoe, & Co., agents for Maw, Teale, & Thomlinson, Bishop Auckland.

Q. B. Div.
(Grantham and Kennedy, JJ.) Oct. 28.

BRIDGE v. HOWARD. (a.)

Adulteration—Food and Drugs—Certificate of analysis, Form of—Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 63), s. 18.

In a prosecution under the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 1875, for selling adulterated milk to the prejudice of the purchaser, the certificate of the analyst which was given in evidence stated, as his opinion, that the sample submitted to him "contained the parts as under—milk, 94 per cent.; added water, 6 per cent. This opinion is based on the fact that the sample contained 7·97 per cent. solids, not fat, whereas genuine milk contains not less than 8·5 per cent. solids, not fat."

Held, that the certificate was good as evidence of adulteration.

Fortune v. Hanson, 44 W. R. 431; [1896] 1 Q. B. 202, distinguished.

Case stated by magistrates.

An information was laid by the appellant under section 6 of the Sale of Food and Drugs Act, 187 charging the respondent with selling adulterat milk to the prejudice of the appellant. A sample the milk was submitted to a public analyst, who pr pared the following certificate:

"I, the undersigned, public analyst for the coun of Middlesex, do hereby certify that I received on t 26th day of March, 1896, from Mr. Hargreaves sample of new milk, E. M. 159, for analysis (whi then weighed about six ounces), and have analys the same, and declare the result of my analysis to as follows: I am of opinion that it contains the pa as under—milk, 94 per cent.; added water, 6 cent. This opinion is based on the fact that sample contained 7·97 per cent. solids, not fat, when genuine milk contains not less than 8·5 per ce solids, not fat. The sample had undergone no chan which would interfere with the analysis. As witn my hand this 2nd day of April, 1896."

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Ba rister-at-Law.

The certificate was tendered as evidence of adulteration, and it was objected to on the ground that it did not specifically state, as the result of the analysis, the quantities of the parts contained in the sample analysed.

The magistrates held, on the authority of Fortune v. Hanson, 44 W. R. 431; [1896] 1 Q. B. 202, that the certificate was bad and inadmissible as evidence, and dismissed the information.

Earle, for the appellant.—The certificate is in the form approved by the Society of Public Analysts. The test of adulterated milk by means of the quantity of water contained in it was found to be unsatisfactory, inasmuch as the proportion of water in genuine milk was variable. But the proportion of solids other than fat was found to be nearly constant. Therefore the test was adopted of ascertaining the proportion of solids other than fat in the sample, and if that proportion fell below the minimum it was certain that the milk was adulterated, and the proportion of the foreign ingredient was ascertained by means of a simple arithmetical calculation. The certificate complied with section 18 of the Act, and was drawn up in the form prescribed in the schedule thereto. In setting out the grounds for the analyst's conclusion, it afforded the magistrates sufficient material from which they could judge for themselves, and it therefore complied with the decision in Fortune v. Hanson.

The respondent did not appear.

GRANTHAM, J.—The magistrates were wrong in rejecting the certificate. It is not necessary to refer to Fortune v. Hanson. All we have to do is to inquire whether the analyst has stated all that it was necessary for him to state. I say that he has done so. Those who know anything about the production of milk know how hopeless it is to go into the question of how much water there is in a sample in order to ascertain whether it is adulterated or not, because the amount of water in genuine milk varies so much. In his certificate the analyst states, as his opinion, that there was in the sample submitted to him 94 per cent. milk and 6 per cent. foreign ingredient. He goes on to give figures, which show that there was rather more than less than 6 per cent. of foreign ingredient. The certificate complies with all the requirements of the Act, and is good.

KENNEDY, J.—As I was one of the court which decided the case of Fortune v. Hanson, I should like to add a few words. In that case the question was whether the certificate of the analysis was sufficient. All that was told on the certificate to the other party was, that there was in the sample submitted to the analyst so much added water. That was clearly a matter of opinion, and that was why the court decided as it did, for there was nothing in the certificate to show on what scientific grounds the opinion was based. I still think that the fairest thing would be to set out the parts contained in the sample; but, in this instance, the analyst has not merely confined himself to saying that there was so much added water; he has given the facts on which that opinion was based, so that the magistrate was able to judge for himself. He says there was only 7.97 per cent. solids, other than fat in the sample, and he infers from that that there was 6 per cent. of foreign ingredient. This case is not similar to the case of Fortune v. Hanson.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitor for the appellant, Sir R. Nicholson.

Q. B. Div. (Vaughan Williams and Wright, JJ.) — Oct. 25, 1895; Aug. 3, 1896.

In re DAGNALL.
Ex parte SOANE & MORLEY. (a.)

Bankruptcy — Married woman carrying on a trade separately from her husband — Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75), s. 1 (5)—Notice of intention to suspend payment—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 4 (1) h.

By section 1 (5) of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, it is enacted: "Every woman carrying on a trade separately from her husband shall, in respect of her separate property, be subject to the bankruptcy laws in the same way as if she were a feme sole."

Held, that a woman does not cease from "carrying on a trade" until she has paid all debts incurred by her in respect of her trading.

By section 4 (1) h of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, it is enacted that "If the debtor gives notice to any of his creditors that he has suspended, or is about to suspend, payment of his debts," he commits an act of bankruptcy.

Held, that a circular issued by the debtor's solicitors to her creditors summoning them to a meeting and requesting them to send in their accounts is equivalent to a notice of intention to suspend payment.

Appeal against the refusal of the registrar of the Brighton County Court to make a receiving order against Mrs. Dagnall.

In April, 1894, Mrs. Dagnall took a public-house at Crawley, which she carried on, trading separately from her husband, until the 15th of December, 1894, when she sold her interest in the house, the licence necessarily remaining in her name.

Upon the 2nd of January, 1895, she instructed her solicitor to send out a circular calling a meeting of her creditors and requesting each one of them to send in his account, but not stating that she was insolvent, or intended to suspend payment.

Messrs. Soane & Morley presented a petition against her, alleging that the circular was an act of bankruptcy, but the registrar dismissed the petition upon the ground that at the date of the alleged act of bankruptcy the debtor had ceased to trade, and therefore was not "a married woman carrying on a trade separately from her husband" within section 1 (5) of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882.

Messrs. Soane & Morley appealed, and the case came before the court (Vaughan Williams and Kennedy, JJ.) upon the 25th of October, 1895, when, after lengthy argument, it was remitted to the registrar of the county court for him to determine the following questions:

1. Had Mrs. Dagnall separate estate at the date of the petition? Answer: Yes.
2. Had she separate trade property at the same date? Answer: Yes.
3. Had she committed an act of bankruptcy? Answer: Yes.
4. Had she ever carried on a trade separately from her husband? Answer. Yes; from the 24th of April to the 15th of December, 1894.

The case came on for hearing again upon the 3rd of August, 1896.

Bigham, Q.C., and R. G. Glenn, for the appellants.—Where a woman once begins to trade separately from her husband she brings herself within the bankruptcy law, and this liability having once attached to her, she cannot get rid of it in five minutes by ceasing to trade; but we admit that she should only be made a bankrupt in respect of debts incurred in connection with her trading.

(a.) Reported by P. M. FRANCKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

They cited Meggot v. Mills, 1 Lord Raymond 286; Ex parte Bamford, 15 Ves. 449; Ex parte Schomberg, 23 W. R. 204, L. R. 10 Ch. App. 172; Ex parte Salaman, 31 W. R. 282, 21 Ch. D. 394; and distinguished Ex parte McGeorge, 30 W. R. 817, 20 Ch. D. 697.

Witt, Q.C., and Poley, for the respondent.—Unless the appellants contend that a married woman who has once traded is ever after subject to the bankruptcy laws, they must insert in the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, words to show that after ceasing to trade, a woman is to be liable to bankruptcy in respect of any debts incurred while trading. [VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, J.—One may say that the words "carrying on a trade" include having trade debts unpaid; we must say what is evidence of "carrying on a trade."] It would be a strong thing to say that "carrying on a trade" means more than "trading" or "being a trader." [VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, J.—Compare section 16 of the same Act, where "doing any act" means "who has done."]

They cited Ex parte Reynolds, 31 W. R. 323, 52 L. J. Ch. 431, and further argued that the letter of the 2nd of January, 1895, was not an act of bankruptcy, as it did not state in terms any intention to suspend payment.

R. G. Glenn replied.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, J.—The question in this case is whether Mrs. Dagnall committed an act of bankruptcy and was liable to the bankruptcy laws under the circumstances found by the registrar. No doubt she once did carry on a trade, but on the 15th of December, 1894, she sold her business, and on the 2nd of January, 1895, she issued a circular by her solicitors. This circular was an act of bankruptcy because, although it does not state in terms that she intends to suspend payment, yet it is such a circular as would have rendered it dishonest for Mrs. Dagnall to pay anyone of her creditors separately before the date of the meeting appointed.

Then as to the other matter; that is a serious and difficult point, turning on the words of section 1 (5) of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882: "Every married woman carrying on a trade separately from her husband shall, in respect of her separate property, be subject to the bankruptcy laws in the same way as if she were a feme sole."

It was contended for the appellants that these words mean that every woman who once trades is thenceforth for ever liable to the bankruptcy laws. In my judgment that is not the true construction, though grammatically the words may be capable of bearing it. Mr. Bigham himself hesitated so to construe the words as to make a married woman perpetually liable to the bankruptcy laws, even after the trade debts are discharged.

I therefore think that where the statute says "carrying on a trade," it means so long as the woman carries on a trade, and that she is not to be liable to the bankruptcy laws after she has ceased to trade.

Whether a woman is "carrying on a trade" or not is a question of fact, and if it were not for the case of Ex parte McGeorge I should have said without any hesitation that so long as she had not paid her trade debts she was continuing to trade. It seems to me that the trading is not concluded until all the obligations attaching thereto had been performed. That was the view in the older cases, as is pointed out by Jessel, M.R., in his judgment in Ex parte McGeorge: "According to the decisions of the former bankruptcy statutes a man was in law 'using the trade of merchandize' so long as he did not pay the debts he had contracted while he was engaged in the trade"; but he goes on to point out why he does not follow them, because, in the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, which he was engaged in interpreting, the words had been altered to "being a trader," and the Court of Appeal in Ex parte Schomberg had defined them to mean being actually a trader at the time when bankruptcy proceedings were taken.

I think, however, that I am entitled to say here that the case of Ex parte McGeorge is not technically a binding decision on these words in the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, the meaning of which I have now to determine. Take the whole scope of the Act, as it enables women to do business which they could not do before, so it imposes certain liabilities upon them. It seems to me that the intention of section 1 (5) is to show the extent of their personal liability, and that it should be construed as including the status of being a debtor in respect of debts incurred in trade carried on separately from a husband.

I therefore think that Mrs. Dagnall was trading when she issued her circular. The collective dealing with her trade creditors after she had ceased to trade shows that she treated them as her trade creditors. A receiving order ought, therefore, to be made against her.

WRIGHT, J., concurred.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitor for the appellants, Burnett.

Solicitors for the respondent, Barraud, Pegge, & Jupp.

Q. B. Div. (Vaughan Williams, J.) } July 27; Aug. 10, 1896.

In re GOUDIE.

Ex parte OFFICIAL RECEIVER. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Practice—Equitable execution—Appointment of receiver—Jurisdiction—Judicature Act, 1873 (36 & 37 Vict. c. 66), s. 25, sub-section (8)—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 93—Bankruptcy Rules, 1886, r. 93.

The Court of Bankruptcy has jurisdiction to appoint a receiver by way of equitable execution for the purpose of enforcing orders of the court for the payment of money; but such jurisdiction should rarely be exercised.

Motion by the official receiver for the appointment of a receiver of the interest of one Stroud under a will.

The official receiver had obtained an order of the court against Stroud for the payment of £15 and costs taxed at £11 2s. 4d.

Stroud refused to pay, so the official receiver made this application for the appointment of a receiver of Stroud's interest under his father's will from the trustees of such will until the order of the court should be satisfied.

Macklin and Schiller, for the official receiver.—The court has jurisdiction to make the order. By section 93 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, the Bankruptcy Court is consolidated with the Supreme Court of Judicature, and has the same powers, and by section 25, sub-section (8), of the Judicature Act, 1873, a receiver may be appointed in all cases in which may appear just or convenient that such an order should be made. [VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, J.—It has never been done before, and bankruptcy has been going on for a long time. As early as 1869 the Bankruptcy Court administered both law and equity. Why is there no prior instance of this?] Perhaps, because, until recently, bills in equity were always started when the appointment of a receiver was desired.

(a.) Reported by P. M. FRANCKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Poley and Kimber, for the trustees of the will.—The trustees have no objection to the order, but doubt whether the court has jurisdiction to make it.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, J.—I think I have discretion, but Stroud must have notice of the application. [Adjourned.]

Aug. 10.—Schiller stated that Stroud had been served with notice of the application, but did not appear.

Poley conceded that the court had discretion to make the order.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, J.—That is my idea, but these orders should rarely be made; however, as you have served the debtor you can take an order for the appointment of a receiver.

Solicitors for the official receiver, Adams & Adams.

Solicitors for the trustees, Samuel Price & Sons.

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div.
(Lord Esher, M.R., and Lopes and Rigby, L.JJ.) Nov. 14.

VESTRY OF ST. MARTIN-IN-THE-FIELDS v. WARD. (a.)

Metropolis management—Sewer—Drain—New sewer—House insufficiently drained—Liability of owner to make new drain—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), ss. 69, 73.

Where a vestry, acting under section 69 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, provide a new sewer in substitution for an old sewer, they are not entitled under section 73 to charge the owner of a house which was drained into the old sewer with the expenses of connecting his house with the new sewer, on the ground that the drain connecting the house with the old sewer is an insufficient drain.

Vestry of St. Marylebone v. Viret, 13 W. R. 1064, followed.

Appeal by the plaintiff vestry from the judgment of Wills, J., at the trial of the action without a jury.

The action was brought by the plaintiff vestry to recover £167, the amount of costs and expenses incurred in constructing a drain to the defendant's house, and in connecting the drain with a sewer within a hundred feet of the house. The defendant's house had been formerly drained into an old sewer in the rear of the premises, but in 1894 the vestry, in accordance with a resolution adopting a report presented to them by their surveyor, made a new sewer in the road in front of the premises. The vestry called upon the defendant to connect his house with the new sewer, but he neglected to do so. The vestry then served him with notice under section 73 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, requiring him, on the ground that his house was not sufficiently or properly drained, to construct a drain from his house into the new sewer, and, on his failure to comply with their notice, caused the necessary work to be done, and sought in this action to recover the expenses.

Section 73 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, enacts as follows: "If any house or building . . . be found not to be drained by a sufficient drain communicating with some sewer and emptying itself into the same to the satisfaction of the vestry . . . , and if a sewer of sufficient size be within one hundred feet of any part of such house or building, on a lower level than such house or building, it shall be lawful for the vestry . . . by notice in writing to require the owner of such house or building . . . to construct and make from such house or building into any such sewer a covered drain . . . adequate for the drainage of such house or bulding . . . ; and if the owner of such house or building neglect or refuse, during twenty-eight days after the said notice has been delivered to such owner, or left at such house or building, to begin to construct such drain and other works as aforesaid . . . it shall be lawful for the vestry to cause the same to be constructed and made, and to recover the expenses to be incurred thereby from such owner."

The defendant contended that by section 69 of the Act it was the duty of the vestry to provide the new drain and connect it with the new sewer, and that, therefore, they were not entitled to recover the expenses from him.

Section 69 contains the following proviso: "Provided also that where the vestry alter any sewer, or provide a new sewer in substitution for a sewer discontinued, closed up, or destroyed, they may contract or otherwise alter the private drains communicating with the sewer so altered, or with the sewer so discontinued, closed up, or destroyed, or may close up or destroy such private drains, and provide new drains in lieu thereof, as the circumstances of the sewerage may appear to them to require, but so that in every case the altered or substituted drain shall be as effectual for the use of the person entitled thereto as the drain previously used."

At the trial Wills, J., found as a fact that the drain connecting the defendant's house with the old sewer was not a proper or sufficient drain, but he gave judgment for the defendant on the ground that section 73 did not apply to the case.

Macmorran, Q.C., and T. Beven, for the plaintiffs.—The learned judge held that this case came within section 69, and that therefore the provisions of section 73 did not apply. But the fact that the vestry were making a new sewer did not exclude the operation of section 73. The drain which connected the defendant's house with the old sewer was insufficient; it had no proper fall, and no ventilation, and the joints were leaking. That insufficiency gave the vestry jurisdiction to require the defendant, under section 73, to make a proper drain into a sewer within 100 feet of the house, or on his default to do the work at his expense.

Channell, Q.C., and R. Cunningham Glen, for the defendant, were not called upon.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—In this case the vestry have made a new sewer, and contrary to the will of the defendant they have made a new drain from his house to the new sewer. The question is, Can they make the defendant pay for the work of constructing this absolutely new drain? Two sections of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855—viz., sections 69 and 73—give the vestry certain powers in two different sets of circumstances. The practical effect of section 73 is that, if they have a sewer vested in them, and if the owner of a house within a hundred feet of the sewer has a drain running into it and he lets the drain get out of order, they may require him to repair his drain or construct a proper drain, and on his making default they may do the necessary work themselves and charge him with the expenses. Another power is given by section 69. By this section they have the right to consider the existing state of the sewerage in any district, and if they come to the conclusion that the system of sewerage is bad, they may make a new system, and they may cause any house which was drained into the old sewer to be drained into the new sewer which is substituted for it. In this case they do not repair old drains for the benefit of particular houses, but they make new drains or alter existing drains for the general welfare of the district. Under such circumstances they cannot make the owners of the houses pay for the work, they must pay for it themselves.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

There may sometimes be a dispute which of its powers the vestry is exercising, the power of requiring the owner of a house to repair an insufficient drain, or the power of making a new system of sewerage. Where there is such a dispute, I think the law is as laid down by Willes, J., in Vestry of St. Marylebone v. Viret, 13 W. R. 1064, 34 L. J. M. C. 214: "But is said that the vestry has found that the drains were insufficient; assume that that is so, yet it must be ascertained whether the proceedings were proceedings properly under section 73 or section 69." Let it be taken that in the present case the defendant's old drain was insufficient. That gave the vestry the power of acting under section 73. But in my opinion they have not done that. On the contrary they have considered the benefit of the district generally, they have passed a resolution that the old system of sewerage shall come to an end, and they have made a new sewer. They have disregarded the old drains, and they have made all the houses drain into the new sewer. This has not been the case of repairing or reconstructing anything old. Everything which has been done has had reference to the new sewer. I therefore think that the vestry acted under section 69, and that they have no power to make the defendant pay the costs of work which they have done for the benefit of the public. The judgment of the learned judge was right, and the appeal must be dismissed.

LOPES, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The question is whether the case comes within section 69 or section 73. The alteration in the drainage of the defendant's house was rendered necessary by the substitution of the new sewer for the old sewer. It may be that the defendant's old drain was insufficient, but the old sewer was discontinued by resolution of the vestry, and the new sewer was made in substitution for it, and this was done for the improvement of the district and in the public interest. I therefore think that the case comes within section 69, and that the expense of connecting the defendant's house with the new sewer must be borne by the vestry.

RIGBY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The plaintiffs have tried to combine these two sections together; but I think that section 73 does not apply at all to a case where a new sewer is constructed for the purposes of section 69.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Fladgate & Co.

Solicitors for the defendant, Angell, Imbert-Terry, & Page.

From Q. B. Div. (Lord Esher, M.R., and Lopes and Rigby, L.JJ.) — Nov. 5.

MANCHESTER, SHEFFIELD, AND LINCOLNSHIRE RAILWAY CO. v. GUARDIANS OF DONCASTER. (a.)

Poor law—Costs—Limitation of time—Judgment ordering guardians to pay costs—Taxation—Debt, claim, or demand incurred or become due—Poor Law (Payment of Debts) Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 49), s. 1.

Where guardians of the poor are ordered by a judgment of the court to pay costs, the time within which, under section 1 of 22 & 23 Vict. c. 49, it is lawful for them to pay such costs is to be reckoned, not from the date when the judgment was delivered, but from the date when the costs were taxed.

The decision of the House of Lords in Guardians of West Ham v. Churchwardens, [&c., of St. Matthew, Bethnal Green, [1896] A. C. 477, held to apply to the case of an order for the payment of costs made by the Supreme Court.

Appeal by the plaintiffs from the judgment of Day, J., at the trial of the action without a jury.

The plaintiff railway company claimed a mandamus addressed to the defendants, the Guardians of Doncaster Union, commanding them to pay to the plaintiffs the sum of £105 2s. 10d., with interest from the 9th of December, 1895.

In 1892 the railway company, being assessed to certain poor rates in respect of their property within the Doncaster Union, had appealed against such rates to quarter sessions, the respondents to the appeal being the Assessment Committee of Doncaster Union. A special case was stated for the opinion of the Queen's Bench Division and came before the Court of Appeal. On the 17th of July, 1893, the Court of Appeal gave judgment for the railway company with costs. This decision was subsequently affirmed by the House of Lords.

On the 9th of December, 1895, the company's costs of the rating appeal were taxed and were allowed by the taxing-master at the sum of £105 2s. 10d., and the plaintiffs now sought to compel the defendants to pay to them that sum.

The defendants relied on section 1 of the Poor Law (Payment of Debts) Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 49), which enacts as follows:—"With respect to any debt, claim, or demand which may after the passing of this Act be lawfully incurred by, or become due from, the guardians of any union or parish . . . such debt, claim, or demand shall be paid within the half-year in which the same shall have been incurred or become due, or within three months after the expiration of such half-year, but not afterwards."

The defendants' contention was that the sum of £105 2s. 10d. was a debt, claim, or demand which was incurred by, or became due from, them at the date of the judgment of the Court of Appeal—viz., on the 17th of July, 1893—and that therefore it could only be lawfully paid by them during the half-year ending the 29th of September, 1893, or within three months afterwards.

The plaintiffs' contention was that the sum did not become due till the date of the taxing-master's allocatur—viz., the 9th of December, 1895.

It was admitted by the defendants that, if the latter contention was right, the plaintiffs were entitled to succeed in the action.

Day, J., at the trial, gave judgment in favour of the defendants.

The plaintiffs appealed.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

C. A. Russell and J. W. Mansfield, for the plaintiffs.—The learned judge based his decision on the judgment of the Court of Appeal in Guardians of West Ham v. Churchwardens, &c., of St. Matthew, Bethnal Green, 43 W. R. 419, [1895] 1 Q. B. 662. But that judgment has since been reversed by the House of Lords, [1896] A. C. 477. It is now settled that where guardians are ordered to pay costs the period limited by section 1 of the Poor Law (Payment of Debts) Act runs from the date of the allocatur and not from the date of the judgment; see also Midland Railway Co. v. Guardians of Edmonton Union, 43 W. R. 309, [1895] A. C. 485.

Macmorran, Q.C., and W. A. Meek, for the defendants.—An order for payment of costs gives rise to a debt, claim, or demand, on which an action may be brought before taxation: Holdsworth v. Wilson, 4 B. & S. 1, 11 W. R. C. L. Dig. 128; Metropolitan District Railway Co. v. Sharpe, 28 W. R. 617, 5 App. Cas. 425. The words "debt, claim, or demand" are wide enough to include unliquidated claims. The period of limitation therefore runs from the date of the judgment. In the West Ham case the House of Lords did not overrule the construction which this court had put upon the statute; the ground on which they allowed the appeal was that this court had not given effect to one of the Standing Orders of the House of Lords.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—In this case there were proceedings to which guardians of the poor were parties, and judgment was given against them, and they were directed to pay costs. They now say that the time within which, under the Poor Law (Payment of Debts) Act, it was lawful for them to pay those costs is to be reckoned from the date when the judgment was given, and that the period limited by the statute has elapsed, and that, therefore, they cannot pay now, and cannot be ordered to pay. On the other side it is said that the time is to be reckoned, not from the date of the judgment, but from the date of the taxation of the costs, and that the period so reckoned has not elapsed.

It is a question of the construction of the Act of Parliament. The point is whether, following the decision of the House of Lords in Guardians of West Ham v. Churchwardens, &c., of St. Matthew, Bethnal Green, and giving to it its legitimate effects, we are not bound to say that this case is governed by that case. There the question arose when the time limited by the statute began to run with regard to an amount of costs payable under an order of the House of Lords, and it was held that the time only began to run when the amount had been ascertained by taxation. It may be argued that that decision of the House of Lords was based on the true construction of a Standing Order of the House, which provides that, when an order for payment of costs does not in itself specify the amount, there shall be a taxation by an officer of the House and a certificate by the Clerk of the Parliaments, and then goes on to direct that the amount in money certified by the Clerk of the Parliaments shall be the sum to be demanded and paid under or by virtue of such order. But I do not think that the learned lords confined themselves to that. I think that they went further, and intended to put an interpretation on the statute. If it were not so it would have been unnecessary for Lord Herschell to refer to Midland Railway Co. v. Guardians of Edmonton Union. It seems to me that he meant to found his judgment on the construction of the statute which had been intimated in the previous case by Lord Watson and himself. That construction is this, that where there has been a judgment for costs, the time limited by the statute runs from the date of taxation. We must follow that construction, and the appeal must be allowed.

LOPES, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I cannot distinguish in principle between this case and the case of Guardians of West Ham v. Churchwardens, &c., of St. Matthew, Bethnal Green, in the House of Lords. The question is whether the period of limitation prescribed by section 1 of the Poor Law (Payment of Debts) Act, when applicable to a judgment for costs, runs from the date of the judgment or from the date of taxation. The learned lords clearly intended to base their decision on the construction of the section, and they adopted the construction which made the period run from the time of the ascertainment of the debt by taxation. It seems to me that no distinction can be drawn in this respect between a taxation of costs by the Clerk of the Parliaments and a taxation by the officer of this court. The appeal must therefore be allowed.

RIGBY, L.J., concurred.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Cunliffes & Davenport, for Lingard-Monk, Manchester.

Solicitors for the defendants, Van Sandau & Co., for F. E. Nicholson, Doncaster.

From Q. B. Div. (Lord Esher, M.R., and A. L. Smith and Rigby, L.JJ.) — Aug. 4, 1896.

In re AN ARBITRATION BETWEEN GONTY AND THE MANCHESTER, SHEFFIELD, AND LINCOLNSHIRE RAILWAY CO. (a.)

Lands Clauses Acts—Taking lands—Part of building—Material detriment to remainder—New access to building—Railways Clauses Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), s. 68—Lands Clauses Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 18), s. 92—Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Act, 1892 (56 & 57 Vict. c. lxxix.), s. 42—Costs of special case—Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49), ss. 7, 20.

A railway company's special Act provided that the owners of houses or other buildings, whereof parts only were required for the purposes of the Act, might, if such portions could be severed from the remainder of such properties without material detriment thereto, be required to sell to the company the portions only of the premises so required, without the company being obliged to purchase the whole.

The railway company gave notice to treat for a portion of a factory. The notice to treat comprised a portion of land over which lay the only access for vehicles from the public highway to the factory. The sole purpose for which the railway would use the land was to build a viaduct to carry the railway, and sufficient access to the remainder of the land could be provided through an archway of the viaduct. At the arbitration the company contended that the provision of such access was an accommodation work which they would be bound to make under section 68 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845; and, whether so bound or not, they undertook to make and maintain the access in question and to grant a perpetual right of way through the archway.

Held, that, in considering whether the portion proposed to be taken could be severed from the remainder without material detriment thereto, the arbitrator was entitled to take into consideration the obligation imposed upon the company under section 68 of the Railways Clauses Act 1845, to make and maintain accommodation works fo, providing access to the remainder of the land.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Held, also, by Lord Esher, M.R., and A. L. Smith, L.J., that, apart from section 68, the company had power to grant a perpetual right of way through the archway; and that therefore the arbitrator was entitled to take that into consideration.

The costs of a special case stated by an arbitrator appointed under the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, are now, by section 20 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, in the discretion of the court.

Holliday v. Mayor, &c., of Wakefield, 20 Q. B. D. 699, 36 W. R. Dig. 8, upon this point held to be no longer applicable.

Appeal from the judgment of a Divisional Court upon a special case stated by an umpire.

The Manchester, Sheffield, and Lincolnshire Railway Co., who had, in 1893, obtained statutory powers for constructing a line of railway, gave notice to Gonty, the owner of a factory at Leicester, to treat for a portion of his factory under section 42 of the company's special Act of 1893.* The factory was one of the buildings specified in the schedule to the Act. The only access for vehicles to the factory was from public highway, and this access was included in the portion of land comprised in the notice to treat. If the railway company took the portion of land comprised in the notice to treat, there would be no access for vehicles to and from the remainder of the land from and to the highway, except over the land so taken by the company. The railway was carried over portion of the land in question by a viaduct, which was in course of construction, and sufficient access for vehicles to and from the remainder of the land from and to the highway could be provided through an archway of the viaduct. The sole purpose for which the company would use or were likely to use the land was to carry the viaduct over which the lines passed and no other, and save for letting out for non-railway purposes the company were not likely to require any further or other use of the land.

The company contended that the provision of such access was an accommodation work which, in the event of their taking the portion of the land in question, they would be bound to make and maintain under section 68 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, and, whether so bound or not, they offered and undertook before the umpire to make and at all times thereafter to maintain for the accommodation of the owners and occupiers of the remainder of the land such an access to and from the said highway by means of a roadway under one of the arches of the viaduct, and to execute any assurance necessary to secure to the owners and occupiers a perpetual easement of such right of passage under such viaduct.

The claimant contended that in determining, under section 42 of the special Act, whether the portion of the land could be severed from the remainder thereof without material detriment thereto, the umpire was bound to consider only the effect which the taking of the portion required by the company and the severing of the same from the remainder would have upon such remainder, and that he was not authorized by the Act to take into consideration any offers, whether of works, easements, or other matters, made by the company with the object of neutralizing such effect; and the claimant further contended that the company could not in law fulfil their undertaking to convey the easement in perpetuity.

The umpire decided, first, that if the land taken by the company prevented all access to the claimants' works through or under the viaduct, the company must purchase the entire property; and secondly, that if the company had power to give the access offered through the archway, there was not such material detriment to the property as to entitle the claimant to claim that the company must purchase the whole.

The question for the opinion of the court was whether the umpire was entitled to take into consideration the matters mentioned in the above contentions in forming an opinion whether the portion of the land could be severed from the remainder thereof without material detriment thereto. The Divisional Court held that the umpire was not entitled to take the matters mentioned in the company's contention into consideration, and that the company had no power in law to give the access.

The railway company appealed.

C. A. Russell and J. E. Bankes, for the appellants.

J. Lawson Walton, Q.C., and S. M. Everard, for the respondent.

The following cases were referred to: Mulliner v. Midland Railway Co., 27 W. R. 330, 11 Ch. D. 611; Grand Junction Canal Co. v. Petty, 36 W. R. 795, 21 Q. B. D. 273; Foster v. London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Co., 43 W. R. 116, [1895] 1 Q. B. 711; Wilkinson v. Hull, Barnsley, and West Riding Railway Co., 30 W. R. 617, 20 Ch. D. 323; Byles v. Ipswich Dock Commissioners, 11 Ex. 464, 4 W. R., C. L. Dig. 178.

LORD ESHER, M.R.—Considering what the law would have been if section 42 of the Special Act of 1893 had not been enacted, and then looking at that section, in my opinion that section ought to be construed so as, if possible, to meet the grievance sought to be remedied. Formerly, if a railway company took the smallest part of a house, though the severance of that part from the rest caused no material detriment, the owner could require the company to take the whole of the house. That was the grievance which was created by section 92 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and which placed a great obstruction in the way of railway construction. Section 42 seems to me to have been enacted with a view to take away that power from the landowner, upon a certain condition being fulfilled. The section throws upon the arbitrator or jury, as the case may be, the duty of determining whether that condition has been fulfilled —namely, whether, where part of a house is proposed to be taken, it can be taken so as to cause no material detriment to the rest of the house. If the tribunal determines that no material detriment will ensue, then the power of the owner under section 92 is gone.

* By 56 & 57 Vict. c. lxxix., s. 42, notwithstanding section 92 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, the owners of and other persons interested in the houses or other buildings or manufactories described in the schedule to the Act, and whereof parts only are required for the purposes of the Act, may, if such portions can, in the opinion of the jury, arbitrators, or other authority to whom the question of disputed compensation shall be submitted, be severed from the remainder of such properties without material detriment thereto, be required to sell and convey to the company the portions only of the premises so required, without the company being obliged or compellable to purchase the whole or any greater portion thereof, the company paying for the portions required by them and making compensation for any damage sustained by the owners thereof and other persons interested therein by severance or otherwise.

Considering that section 42 was passed to remedy an acknowledged grievance affecting the railway company, it seems to me that it should be construed as widely as possible to meet that grievance. I think that the proper construction of the section is that the arbitrator or jury should take into consideration all the circumstances, and the mode in which the piece of land is proposed to be taken. Here a certain part of a manufactory is proposed to be taken, and the owner says that material detriment will be caused to the remainder by cutting off access to it. The railway company say to that, that though that might be true if they took the land simply, yet they would undertake, and they did undertake before the umpire, to enter into a deed binding them to give a perpetual right of way over the piece of land taken; that they were carrying the railway over the land on arches, and that one arch would span the very piece of land over which the owner now has access, and that the arch would be so high and so wide, and the gradients so slightly altered that the road under it would be almost exactly the same as the present road. If that is so, can anyone say that there is any material detriment to the remainder of the land? The umpire found that there was no material detriment. It is urged that the umpire cannot take those considerations into account. That contention, to my mind, would do away with the beneficial effect of section 42.

It is also urged that the company cannot give a right of way. If the right of way proposed to be given were inconsistent with the purpose for which the land was taken, I should think that the company could not give it. But looking at the cases which have been cited, they seem to me to show that the company can give this right of way, inasmuch as it is not inconsistent with any purpose for which the land is taken. The company have given the requisite undertaking before the umpire, and the court would enjoin them to carry out that undertaking. It is a positive obligation from which they cannot escape.

There is this further point. Even if the company had not undertaken to give this right of way, they could be compelled to give access under section 68 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845. But I desire to rest my judgment on section 42 of the special Act, apart altogether from section 68. We must, therefore, answer the question by saying that the arbitrator had a right to take into consideration the mode in which the company proposed to, and bound themselves to, cross the land. The appeal must therefore be allowed.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. Under section 92 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, if a company took part of a house, the owner could compel them to take the whole house. To meet that state of the law section 42 of the company's special Act was enacted. The meaning of that section seems to me to be that, with respect to certain properties the owner shall no longer have the power I have stated under section 92, where the tribunal is satisfied that the severance will cause no material detriment to the remainder of the property. If the tribunal finds that there will be material detriment to the remainder, the owner can compel the company to take the whole. If there is no material detriment, he cannot. How is the tribunal to ascertain if there is material detriment caused by the severance? The first thing must be to ascertain how the severance is going to be effected. Is it in a tunnel, or in a cutting, or on an embankment, or in what other mode? All these things must be investigated by the arbitrator. If that is so, why is he not to inquire whether the roadway giving access to the premises is to be cut in two, or whether an archway is to be built allowing the same access as before? If that were not so, section 42 would be done away with. I think therefore that the question must be answered in the affirmative. The umpire has found that if the company have power to give the access through the archway there is not such material detriment to the property as to entitle the claimant to claim that the company must purchase the whole.

As to the case of Mulliner v. Midland Railway Co., if that case decided that the company could never grant an easement through an archway, I should have to differ from it. I am certain, however, that case never intended to decide that if a field is cut in two the railway company cannot grant a right of way by means of a bridge under the embankment. Then, as regards the two cases of Grand Junction Canal Co. v. Petty and Foster v. London, Chatham, and Dover Railway Co., they were both decided upon a passage in Parke, J.'s, judgment in Rex v. Inhabitants of Leake, 5 B. & Ad. 469, at p. 478. That dictum, in my opinion, shows that the company can voluntarily execute works so as to give a right of way under their line. Further, I see no reason why, under section 68 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, the company are not compelled to give an access.

RIGBY, L.J.—The only question we have to consider is whether the umpire was entitled to take into consideration the matters mentioned in certain paragraphs of the case. In my opinion that question must be answered in the affirmative. The company alleged that they would be bound under section 68 to provide an access to the road for the accommodation of the remainder of the land. I do not rely upon the alternative proposition that, whether they were bound or not, they agreed by their counsel before the umpire to do so. I think that the company would be bound, under section 68 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, to provide a sufficient and proper access to that portion of the claimant's property for which they had not given notice to treat. The archway gives an actual and physical access to the remainder of the property, and it is, in my opinion, such an access as under section 68 they would be bound to provide. It is not a question of their willingness to give access; they were bound to give it. I have no doubt that if the matter had been brought before justices under section 69 they would have held it to be a sufficient accommodation work. Therefore the company were bound to give the access, and the claimant was bound to take it as complying with section 68. The company being bound to give an access in perpetuity, it was the duty of the umpire to have regard to those facts in determining whether there was material detriment to the remainder of the land, and having taken those facts into consideration he came to the conclusion that there was no material detriment.

As to the case of Mulliner v. Midland Railway Co., it has no sort of reference to a case of this kind. There the land was taken for building a station at Northampton. The land was required for the purposes of the railway. That case has never been disputed, and is the law. It has been attempted to extend it to other cases to which it has no application. That land taken and required for the purposes of the railway cannot be alienated without the special authority of Parliament cannot be doubted. And the late Master of the Rolls went a step further and said that a perpetual easement over it could not be granted, and I think that follows as a necessary corollary. The appeal must therefore be allowed.

C. A. Russell asked that the appeal should be allowed with costs.

S. M. Everard, for the claimant, contended that this court in Holliday v. Mayor, &c., of Wakefield, 20 Q. B. D. 699, 36 W. R. Dig. 8, decided that the costs of a special case were costs incident to the arbitration within section 34 of the Lands Clauses Act, 1845, and were to be borne as therein provided, and that the court had no jurisdiction over them.

C. A. Russell, for the railway company.—Holliday v. Mayor, &c., of Wakefield was decided in 1888, when section 5 of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, which gave the arbitrator power to state a case, but said nothing about costs, was in force. That section has been repealed by the Arbitration Act, 1889, and section 7 of this latter Act has been enacted in its stead, and section 20 gives the court power to make any order as to costs it may think just. Holliday's case is therefore no longer applicable.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—Holliday's case came before the court under section 5 of the Common Law Procedure Act, 1854, which has now been repealed, and wider powers are given to the court. That case, therefore, is no longer applicable. We accordingly give the appellants the costs of the appeal.

A. L. SMITH and RIGBY, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Cunliffes & Davenport, for Lingard-Monk, Manchester.

Solicitors for the respondent, Bower, Cotton, & Bower, for Sir Thomas Wright & Son, Leicester.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley and A. L. Smith, L.JJ.) } Nov. 4, 10.

ERNEST v. THE LOMA GOLD MINES (LIMITED). (a.)

Company—Meeting of shareholders—Special resolution—Proxies—Mode of counting votes—Show of hands—Companies Acts, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 51—Blanks in proxy—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 80.

At a meeting of the shareholders of a company, the articles of which provided that every motion submitted to a general meeting should be decided, in the first instance, by a majority to be ascertained by a show of hands; that every member should have one vote for every share he should hold in the company; and that votes might be given either personally or by proxy, the chairman of the meeting refused to count proxies on taking votes by show of hands.

Held, that the chairman was right in so refusing.

In re Caloric Engine and Siren Fog Signals Co., 52 L. T. N. S. 846; approved.

In re Bidwell Brothers, 41 W. R. 363, [1893] 1 Ch. 603, overruled.

By a printer's error, the day and hour appointed for a meeting of shareholders had been omitted from the proxy which was sent to each shareholder with the notice convening the meeting. The secretary of the company, having discovered the error, sent a postcard to each member saying that, if the proxy had already been returned to him, he should assume that he had authority to fill in the blanks, and accordingly did so.

Held, that the proxies were valid, and had been duly stamped within the meaning of the Stamp Act, 1891.

Decision of Chitty, J. (ante, p. 45, [1896] 2 Ch. 572), affirmed on both points.

(a.) Reported by W. SHALLCROSS GODDARD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Appeal of the plaintiff from a decision of Chitty, J., reported ante, p. 45, and [1896] 2 Ch. 572, where the facts are fully stated.

Chitty, J., held that at a meeting of shareholders of the company the chairman was right in refusing to count proxies on taking votes by show of hands, and, further, that forms of proxy, the dates of which were filled in after signature, were valid within section 80 of the Stamp Act, 1891.

The plaintiff, a shareholder in the company, appealed.

Ashton Cross, for the appellant, used the same arguments as in the court below, and referred to Queen v. Government Stock Investment Co., 3 Q. B. D. 442, 26 W. R. Dig. 136; In re Haven Gold Mining Co., 30 W. R. 389, 20 Ch. D. 151. [LINDLEY, L.J., referred to Young v. South African, &c., Syndicate, 44 W. R. 509, [1896] 2 Ch. 268.]

Byrne, Q.C., and E. W. Stock, for the respondent company.

Cur. adv. vult.

Nov. 10.—LINDLEY, L.J., read the judgment of the court as follows:—The question raised by this appeal is how absent members of a registered company are to vote at a meeting called under section 51 of the Companies Act, 1862, when no poll is demanded. The question is important, because different views have been taken by different judges of the High Court. Before referring to the decisions it is necessary to read section 51, on the construction of which the question really turns. [His lordship read the section, and continued:—] It will be observed that this section contemplates cases in which a poll is demanded, and cases in which no poll is demanded. A valid resolution may be carried without a poll as well as with a poll. The section does not say how votes are to be given or counted when a poll is not demanded. The section is framed upon the assumption that the mode of voting in such a case is well known, as in truth it was and is—viz., by show of hands—i.e., by counting the persons present who are entitled to vote and who choose to vote by holding up their hands. We can find nothing in the section to alter or to exclude this well-known mode of conducting business, nor, so far, is there any controversy. The controversy arises in this way. Absent members who have appointed proxies vote by those proxies; but, unless a poll is demanded, the person present is only counted once, however numerous may be the persons whom he represents. Such is admitted to be the common practice. But it is contended that the practice in this respect is inconsistent with section 51, and that when that section applies, as it does in this case, each absentee whose proxy is present and who votes is entitled to be treated as present himself and as holding up his hand, so that on a show of hands each person present and entitled to vote and voting ought to be counted not once only, but once for every person present whom he represents.

It is not contended that the number of votes which each absentee can give on a poll is to be counted; the contention is that each absentee who has given a proxy, who is present and votes, is to be counted as a member present and holding up his hand. This contention is based on the words "present in person or by proxy." Absentees, it is contended, are present by their proxies, and must therefore be counted as persons present if those proxies vote. This ingenious argument, however, fails to give sufficient effect to the words "entitled according to the regulations of the company to vote." The regulations of each company must therefore be regarded. The regulations of each company are, however, themselves framed with reference to ordinary business habits, and are based upon the assumption that business will be conducted in the ordinary way. Section 51 of the Act is intended to be worked with the regulations contained in Table A in the case of companies having no other regulations, and Table A impliedly authorizes voting by show of hands in the ordinary way if no poll is demanded; and it also authorizes voting by proxy (see Art. 48); but the proxies must be members of the company (Art. 49). The articles of association of the present company exclude Table A, but contain similar provisions as regards voting, and also an express provision (60) that "at any general meeting every motion made and submitted shall be decided, in the first instance, by a majority in number of the members to be ascertained by a show of hands." The express provision is not in Table A; but, in our opinion, it is implied although not expressed. Section 51 of the Act does not render this article inapplicable to general meetings called to pass special resolutions. The section and the article must be read together, and so read the argument of the appellant renders it necessary to say that the effect of section 51 is to introduce a mode of voting by show of hands which is quite contrary to ordinary business habits and which no one has ever known adopted in practice. Absent members who vote by one and the same proxy, when no poll is demanded vote not separately as if they were individually present but as an aggregate, their proxy, if a member, holding his hand up and so giving one vote, but only one for himself and them. Absentees, if they are to be regarded as present by proxy before a poll is demanded, vote in this way and no other. The above mode of voting and no other is that which is contemplated by the Legislature when no poll is demanded, as is shown by Table A; and this mode and no other is consistent with the articles of this company. This was Chitty, J.'s, view. The same view was taken by Kay, J., in In re Caloric Engine Signal Co., 52 L. T., N. S. 846, and by the Court of Appeal in In re Horbury Bridge Wagon Co., 27 W. R. 433, 11 Ch. D. 109. It is true that the only point decided in this last case was that on a show of hands shares ought not to be counted. No one suggested that absentees should be counted as present. The observations of Sir George Jessel, M.R., on the mode of voting by show of hands are clearly against the propriety of so counting them. In In re Bidwell Brothers, 41 W. R. 363, [1893] 1 Ch. 603, Vaughan Williams, J., however, decided that on a show of hands absent members entitled to vote by proxy ought to be counted as present if their proxy is himself present and votes. We agree that this is true if the proxy is a non-member and represents only one person—viz., the absentee for whom he votes. The proxy's vote must be counted, and that vote is in effect the vote of the absentee. But to hold that on a show of hands a proxy has more than one vote is to introduce a mode of voting never heard of in practice, and not, in our opinion, required by law. Section 51 of the Companies Act, 1862, is a reproduction of section 34 of the Joint Stock Companies Act, 1857, and if Vaughan Williams, J.'s, decision is right, a practice which has prevailed ever since 1856, if not for even a longer period, will have been improper. Such a conclusion makes it necessary to examine the grounds on which it is based with great care and some suspicion; and for the reasons above stated we have come to the conclusion that the decision in In re Bidwell Brothers is erroneous and ought not to be followed. The appeal must be dismissed with costs.

On the second point the court, without delivering a formal judgment, held that the proxy forms had complied with the requirements of section 80 of the Stamp Act, 1891, and were therefore valid.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, W. T. Hart; Powell & Burt.

From Chan. Div.
Lindley, Lopes, and Rigby, L.JJ. — June 17, 26, 1896.

In re LE BRASSEUR & OAKLEY. (a.)

Solicitor — Costs — Taxation—Common order—Moneys received by solicitor in different capacities—Counsel's fees.

The clause in the common order to tax directing credit to be given for all sums received must be read as including and as confined to all moneys which the solicitor, in his character of solicitor or agent of the client, has received of, or on account of, or is legally or equitably liable to pay over to, the client, and against which, if sued for by the client, the solicitor could set off his costs when taxed.

Fees received, or alleged to have been received, by solicitors on account of a client, who was also a barrister, as counsel's fees are not included in the above clause, and therefore are not liable to be brought into account in the taxation of a bill of costs between the solicitor and such client.

Mr. Terrell, a barrister, employed a firm of solicitors, Messrs. Le Brasseur & Oakley, to transact some conveyancing business for him, and on the 14th of January, 1896, a common order to deliver a bill of costs and to tax was obtained by Mr. Terrell in the Chancery Division.

The form of order contained these words: "It is ordered that the said solicitors do give credit for all sums of money by them received of or on account of the petitioner."

The petitioner alleged that he had been employed by the solicitors as counsel before a committee of the House of Commons in connection with a bill promoted by two railway companies, and that his fees had not been paid. He also made an affidavit, swearing that he was informed and believed that the solicitors had received from their clients money enough to cover those fees, and that they ought to have handed them over to him.

In the proceedings the petitioner asked that those fees should be brought into account in order that they might be set off against what might be found due from him to the solicitors upon the taxation of their bill.

The solicitors, in reply, denied that they had ever received the fees, and said that there were no fees owing by them to the petitioner.

The taxing-master directed the solicitors to file an affidavit with reference to the fees, and to produce all correspondence and documents relating to them.

The solicitors thereupon gave the following notice of motion before Kekewich, J.: "That the order dated the 21st of April, 1896, by the taxing-master, Mr. Spofforth, to whom the taxation of costs directed by the order herein dated the 14th of January, 1896, has been referred, whereby he directed that the said solicitors should file an affidavit relating to the claim of Frank Arnold Hull Terrell (the petitioner named in the said order of the 14th of January, 1896) to have credit in the said taxation for fees alleged to be due to him in respect of the Great Northern and City Railway

(a.) Reported by W. SHALLCROSS GODDARD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Bill and the London, Walthamstow, and Epping Forest Railway Bill, and should produce to the said Frank A. H. Terrell or his solicitors all correspondence and accounts relating to the expenses of the said bills or the promotion thereof, may be discharged, and that the taxing-master be directed to proceed with the said taxation without regard to such claim, and that Mr. Terrell may be ordered to pay their costs of the motion."

Kekewich, J., made no order on the motion, and the order of the court as drawn up contained the following words: "This court doth not think fit to make any order on the said motion, but is of opinion that in his taxation the taxing-master ought not to include any item alleged to have been received by the said solicitors on behalf of the said Mr. Terrell as counsel's fees."

Mr. Terrell appealed.

Cababé, for the appellant.—The proper course would have been for the bill to be delivered and taxed in the usual way, and then for the solicitors to carry in objections to the taxing-master's certificate.

Warrington, Q.C., and George Cave, for the solicitors.—The receipts to be brought in must be receipts connected with the particular bill of costs to be taxed: Jones v. James, 1 Beav. 307; In re Smith, 4 Beav. 309; Russel v. Buchanan, 9 Sim. 167; Cooper v. Ewart, 2 Ph. 362. It is a mere accident that the person who receives the money is a solicitor, and that may possibly give the court jurisdiction. We submit this is not money received to the use of the client. [LINDLEY, L.J.—The practice is uniform to exclude all receipts which have no reference to the subject-matter of the bill: that is the result of our inquiries.]

Cababé in reply.—The moneys must have been received in fact on behalf of the client and by the solicitor in his professional capacity. The principle applies to all moneys received by the solicitor in his capacity of a solicitor, and in fact received on account of the client. The true test is, Has the solicitor moneys in his hands out of which he can properly pay himself?

Cur. adv. vult.

June 26.—LINDLEY, L.J.—This appeal against an order made by Kekewich, J., in the course of the taxation of a bill of costs gives rise to three questions of some little importance, but before alluding to them I will state shortly the facts of the case. [His lordship stated the facts, and continued:—] The first question is as to the procedure. The second question is as to the meaning of that clause in the common order to tax. The third question is as to counsel's fees. They raise altogether distinct points, and must be dealt with separately.

Now, first of all as to the procedure. Kekewich, J., himself said that the procedure was all wrong, and that with regard to the supposed order of the taxing-master, which in the notice of motion is treated as an order of the 21st of April, 1896, by which the master directed the solicitors to file an affidavit and to produce documents, there never was any such order, and the whole thing is a myth. As I understand the facts, it was an expression of intention by the taxing-master that he should require those things to be done. Thus the application to the judge for an expression of his opinion was utterly irregular. Kekewich, J., felt that and said so. Then he went on to say that, inasmuch as the case had been discussed before him, and it was a matter of some importance, notwithstanding the irregularity of the procedure, he should express his opinion upon it, and he did express his opinion upon it. I cannot help thinking that it would have been very much better if Kekewich, J., had declined to hear the application at all. It is entirely contrary to the present practice. I do not say that it never was done in old times, perhaps it was. But ever since the present rules have been in existence—I mean ord. 65, rr. 39-42—the mode of procedure on questions of this kind is for the taxing-master to make a certificate; to carry in objections, and to let the master make an answer to them, and then to appeal from that. Thus the court before whom the case comes knows exactly what the facts are; whereas, by this short cut, although it has some advantages which Kekewich, J., thought justified him in making his order, the court is acting on a hypothetical state of things without knowing the real facts at all. That this course is irregular is obvious from reading the rules, which are perfectly clear. I can only venture to express my regret that the learned judge did not decline to hear the application and dismiss it altogether. However, I am not prepared to say, inasmuch as he did go into the case on the merits, and we have heard all the merits also, that it is our bounden duty to be such martinets as to dismiss the appeal without saying a word about the matter which is really at the bottom of this. Therefore I shall express my opinion on the merits of the case. At the same time I protest against any procedure of this kind, and venture to express a hope that it will not be made a precedent, and that if it is the Court of Appeal will not be so indulgent as it is now.

The next question is as to the meaning of the clause which I have read in the common order to tax. Now a discussion has been raised as to the meaning of that, and we have been asked to endeavour to expand it—not to interpret the order, but to endeavour to give some direction which may be useful for the guidance of taxing-masters and solicitors interested in taxing bills. We have all taken the trouble to make some inquiry about this, and we have seen one or two of the taxing-masters and the result is that the taxing-masters seem to differ somewhat in opinion about the exact scope of that clause in the common order to tax. In Morgan and Wurtzburg on Costs, which is a book known to all of us, and which is very accurate, there is this passage at p. 441 of the 2nd edition: "Under the common order for taxation the master is bound to take a general account of receipts and payments by the solicitor as agent to the client." A general account is exactly in accordance with the words of the clause. Nothing could be wider. The learned authors refer to Russel v. Buchanan and Cooper v. Ewart for that statement. Then they say "but see Jones v. James and In re Smith, from which it would seem that the master is not, under such an order, authorized to take an account of pecuniary matters between the solicitor and client generally, but must confine himself to payments by the client on account of the bill of costs, unless by agreement between the solicitor and client the moneys coming into the hands of the solicitor are to be applicable to payment of the bill of costs. See observations on these cases in Cooper v. Ewart." Now, one of the taxing-masters, as I stated when the case was before us, told us that, notwithstanding the general words directing the solicitor "to give credit for all sums of money by him received of, or on account of, the petitioner" he had been in the habit of construing them and giving effect to them as confined to all moneys received in respect of the bill of costs under taxation. That is no doubt warranted to some extent by the decision, or observations at all events, of Lord Langdale in the cases of Jones v. James and In re Smith, which are referred to in the book I have read and which were commented on before us. Other taxing-masters think that that is drawing the line too tight, and having regard to the authorities we have looked into, it seems to us that it is too tight to exclude everything which does not bear upon the bill of costs to be taxed.

It appears to us that the true principle is that laid down first of all in Russel v. Buchanan, and again by Lord Cottenham in Cooper v. Ewart. That makes the net a little wider. Putting our view into language so as to assist persons as much as possible to appreciate our meaning, the clause must be read as including and as confined to all moneys which the solicitor in his character of solicitor or agent of the client has received of, or on account of, or is legally or equitably liable to pay over to such client, and against which, if sued for by the client, the solicitor could set off his costs when taxed. Therefore the set-off is made the real criterion. The way that works out in practice will be this: Supposing the client brought an action against the solicitor for the money received by him for the client, could the solicitor defend himself in such an action by setting off his bill of costs as taxed? If yes, the taxing-master must take into account the receipts. If no, the taxing-master ought to exclude them. That is to say, there may be circumstances in which the solicitor receives money from his client, against which the solicitor could not set off his bill of costs; such as receiving it for a special purpose, or under circumstances or under arrangements which would preclude the set-off. If so, the master has nothing to do with it. But if on the other hand in an action brought to recover the money the solicitor could set off his bill of costs, it appears to us that Lord Cottenham and Shadwell, V.C., were quite right in saying as they did in effect that those receipts must be brought in.

Having made those comments upon the construction of the clause which enlarges its scope as understood by some of the taxing-masters, and at the same time does not throw open the net so wide as to include everything, I pass on to consider the third question in this case, which is the matter of counsel's fees. Now this brings us to the real substance of the present case. Are the solicitors right, or is Mr. Terrell right, in saying that the taxing-master ought not to go into the matter of those fees? The solicitors say that he ought not; Mr. Terrell asks us to say that he ought. Now it appears to me—I am speaking now for myself only—that upon that matter the solicitors are absolutely right. I think that it would be very much to be regretted if this court, either by itself or by its officers, did anything to enable counsel to recover fees from his client, be that client a lay client or a solicitor client. Such fees are payable as a matter of honour. The solicitor can, if required by counsel, be compelled either not to leave the brief or to pay the fee with the brief. That is the remedy of counsel. He has it in his own hands. If he does not choose to insist on payment of the fees with the brief, it becomes a matter of honour and not legal obligation at all as to whether the solicitor pays the fees or not. Having regard to the affidavits, I do not think that there is the slightest ground for suggesting that these solicitors have received money under such terms or under such circumstances that any action could be brought against them. I doubt whether anything short of a bond would enable a counsel to sue a solicitor for fees; but we need not go into that. The case of In re Hall, 2 Jur. N. S. 1076, which has been referred to, proceeds entirely on a certain admission of a solicitor which it is very difficult to get over, and I say nothing about that. But it is of the utmost importance that the court should not assist counsel to recover fees. If they do the whole relation between a barrister and his professional client will be altered, and a door will be opened which will not only lead to very important consequences as regards counsel, but which will inevitably, if persisted in, do away with that which is the great protection of counsel—viz., his immunity from an action for negligence. We have nothing to do with the matter of fees. The taxing-master ought not to have gone into it at all. In that matter the solicitors are absolutely in the right and Mr. Terrell absolutely in the wrong. Kekewich, J., was right in saying that the taxing-master ought not to have gone into it, and we affirm that view of the case. But, inasmuch as the whole thing has been so utterly irregular, it appears to us that we ought to do what is regular so far as we can—that is to say, having expressed our opinion as to what is right, we ought to discharge the order of Kekewich, J., which ought never to have been made, and give no costs either below or here.

LOPES, L.J.—Mr. Terrell, under the common order to tax, seeks to set off certain fees owing to him against his solicitors' bill of costs, incurred in a private matter of his own, unconnected with the fees said to be due to him in respect of either a brief or briefs delivered to him in a matter before a committee of the House of Commons. The mode of procedure that has been adopted in this case is most irregular. The matter was brought before Kekewich, J., by means of a notice of motion, which is most distinctly not the usual way. The matter ought to be dealt with in the usual way—viz., by objections to the certificate of the taxing-master. If that course had been adopted, the matter would have come before us in a different and more definite form, and it would have been much easier to deal with. Kekewich, J., in my opinion, ought to have declined to hear the motion as it came before him. However, he did hear it at some length, and we also have heard it at some length. In those circumstances it appears to me that the preferable course is for us to express an opinion on the merits.

The main question is this, What is the effect of the clause of the common order to tax directing credit to be given for all sums received? As has been said by my brother Lindley, we have taken a good deal of trouble to inquire into what the usual practice is, and different views are entertained by different taxing-masters. Some take a very narrow view, and think that there ought to be included under these words in the order only matters which have relation to the bill of costs then under taxation. Others take a much wider view. In the result we have adopted an intermediate view, and, after careful consideration, the conclusion at which we have arrived is that which has already been expressed by my brother Lindley—viz., that the clause must be read as including and as confined to all moneys which the solicitor, in his character of solicitor or agent of the client, has received of, or on account of, or is legally or equitably liable to pay over to such client, and against which, if sued for by the client, the solicitor could set off his costs when taxed. I think that is the proper rule to adopt; it seems to me it will be easy to work.

The only other question in the case is with regard to counsel's fees. I entirely agree with what has been already said that the court cannot and ought not to assist a barrister in recovering his fees. Payment of such fees is only a matter of honour. It is open to the learned counsel, if he thinks fit, not to accept the brief at all. He may require the brief to be prepaid, but it would be contrary to all the decisions and I think against good policy to hold that such fees are recoverable. The decision in the Court of Common Pleas in Kennedy v. Broun, 11 W. R. 284, 13

C. B. N. S. 677, is one that has already been acted upon, and establishes the unqualified doctrine that the relation of counsel and solicitor renders the parties mutually incapable of making any legal contract of hiring and service in litigation. That rule has existed for a long time and, speaking for myself, I should be very sorry to see it in any way interfered with. With regard to the costs there have been irregularities on both sides. I think the proper course to take is to discharge the order and give no costs on either side.

RIGBY, L.J., agreed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Cox & Lafone.

Solicitors for the respondents, Le Brasseur & Oakley.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. North, J. — Nov. 3, 4.

GUARDIANS OF WEST DERBY UNION v. METROPOLITAN LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

GUARDIANS OF WEST DERBY UNION v. PRIESTMAN. (a.)

Poor Law—Loan—Repayment—Union Loans Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 45), s. 5—Poor Law Loans Act, 1871 (34 Vict. c. 11), s. 2.

Where a board of guardians has borrowed money since 1871, and agreed to repay such sum by instalments, if money can be obtained at a cheaper rate, the board of guardians may, with the consent of the Poor Law Board, borrow money and repay the loan at once, without the consent of the lender.

The same point was raised in both these special cases, which were argued together. The Guardians of the West Derby Union had, since 1871, raised money payable by instalments extending over thirty years. Being able to borrow money at a lower rate of interest, they gave the defendants notice of their intention to pay off the loans. The defendants contended that the loans could not be paid off without their consent.

By the Union Loans Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 45), s. 5: "Any sum or sums of money borrowed by the guardians of any union or parish after the passing of this Act may, at the option of such guardians, and with the consent of the Poor Law Board, be repaid (1) by thirty equal annual payments of the principal sum borrowed, with the interest on the balance remaining unpaid each year; (2) by such equal annual payments as, reckoning principal and interest together, will repay the sum borrowed within thirty years."

By the Poor Law Loans Act, 1871 (34 Vict. c. 11), s. 2: "If any guardians or managers having borrowed, or hereafter borrowing, money under the authority of the Acts referred to, shall be able at any time to obtain a loan at a lower rate of interest than that secured by the charge previously made by them, they may apply to the Poor Law Board for an order to enable them to redeem the balance of the loan and to borrow so much money as may be necessary for that purpose; and if the said Board shall issue their order in that behalf the said guardians or managers may borrow the requisite amount to redeem such balance and charge the fund to which the original loan was charged with the repayment of this additional loan in so many instalments as shall be outstanding at the time when the loan is redeemed, but not more; provided that in the event of any loan outstanding at the time of the passing of this Act no such redemption shall take place without the consent of the person or persons to whom the loan shall be owing."

Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., Swinfen Eady, Q.C., R. J. Parker, and Cleaver, for the plaintiffs.—The Metropolitan Life Assurance Society refuses to be paid off, but the consent of the lender is not required under section 2 of the Act of 1871, except in the case of money borrowed before the passing of the Act. The security is in the form given in the schedule of the Act of 1869. The contract is not to pay off with the consent of the lender, but, even if it had been, any contract by the guardians to deprive themselves of their statutory power of paying off the money borrowed would have been ultrâ vires (Ayr Harbour Trustees v. Oswald, 8 App. Cas. 623, 32 W. R. Dig. 112).

Sir R. Reid, Q.C., and Danckwerts, for the Metropolitan Life Assurance Society.—The language of the section is plain; it does not contemplate redemption without the consent of the lenders, and the section cannot be enlarged because of the proviso.

They cited Smithett v. Blythe, 1 B. & Ad. 509; Fryer v. Morland, 25 W. R. 21, 5 Ch. D. 675; Mullins v. Treasurer of Surrey, 30 W. R. 157, 7 App. Cas. 1, pp. 9, 14; London Joint-Stock Bank v. Corporation of London, 1 C. P. D. 1, 24 W. R. Dig. 144.

Crawley, for the defendant Priestman, cited Hough v. Windus, 32 W. R. 452, 12 Q. B. D. 224.

Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., in reply.—The Act of 1871 applies to loans payable in instalments; it makes no difference whether the period of repayment extends over thirty years or less. It would not be right to redeem loans payable by instalments if the advance was made before 1871, and so no power to redeem is given except by consent in the case of loans made before the passing of the Act.

NORTH, J.—In my opinion the guardians are right. In 1869 an Act was passed (Unions Loans Act, 1869), behind which I do not think it is necessary to go. By section 5 any sum borrowed by the guardians of any union or parish after the passing of the Act may be repaid by thirty equal annual payments, or by such annual payments as will repay the sum borrowed within thirty years. Section 6 authorizes a form of security. The money is payable by sixty instalments, payable half-yearly; but it is provided that nothing in the deed contained should prevent payment earlier, if the parties were willing that this should be done. The contract is for payment by instalments, but the mortgagees can receive the money earlier if they like, and the persons who borrowed are willing to pay. That is the form of security contemplated in 1869. In 1871 new powers were conferred by the Poor Law Loans Act, 1871. Section 1 deals with persons who borrowed before the Act of 1869 (31 & 32 Vict.). The second section deals with money borrowed or to be borrowed. Money can only be borrowed for the purpose of the redemption of a loan. The plaintiffs now seek to make use of the powers conferred by this section. They now purpose to borrow money at a lower rate of interest, and pay off the loan. The money was borrowed after the passing of the Act of 1871, and the lenders must be taken to have known of its existence. It is said that the plaintiffs have power to borrow, but can only pay off if the persons who lent are willing to receive the money; on the other hand it is said that the plaintiffs are entitled to pay off the loans whether the persons who lent the money consent or not. The cases in which the money was borrowed before the Act are different, and on the wording of the section itself, I should hold that the borrowers were not entitled to pay off such sums without the lender's consent, because it is not absolutely clear that they are entitled to do so. Then comes the proviso, that loans due at the time of the passing of the Act can only be paid off with the lender's consent. It is said this is merely put in ex abundanti cautela. I do not think so. The persons whose money was lent before the passing of the Act are in a privileged position, that of not being compelled to take their money unless they are willing. The proviso shows that the section is applicable in all other cases. I declare that the guardians are entitled to redeem.

(a.) Reported by G. B. HAMILTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Sharpe, Parker, Pritchard, & Barham, for Cleaver, Holden, & Co., Liverpool.

Solicitors for Metropolitan Life Assurance Society, Travers, Smith, Braithwaite, & Robinson.

Solicitors for the defendant, Priestman, Evans, Foster, & Wadham, for J. & J. R. Thompson, Bradford.

Chan. Div. North, J. } July 29, 30, 1896.

In re WINTLE.
TUCKER v. WINTLE. (a.)

Will—Construction—Vesting.

A testator gave his residuary estate to trustees upon trust to divide the same between a class upon their respectively attaining the age of twenty-one years, and empowered the trustees to apply the whole, or such part as they should think fit, of the annual income of the share of any of the class during minority for his, her, or their education or maintenance.

Held, that the shares were not vested in members of the class who died under twenty-one.

FOX v. FOX, 23 W. R. 314, L. R. 19 Eq. 286, not followed.

Originating summons.

George Wintle by his will devised and bequeathed his residuary estate on trust for his wife for life, "and from and after the decease of my said wife, upon trust to pay and divide the whole of my said residuary estate unto and equally between all my children, if more than one, as or in the nature of tenants in common, or unto my child if only one, and the issue of any of them who may have previously died, such last-named issue to take their parent's share for their respective sole and separate use and benefit absolutely upon their respectively attaining the age of twenty-one years. I empower the trustees or trustee for the time being of this my will after the decease of my said wife to apply the whole or such part as they or he shall think fit of the annual income of the share or presumptive share of any of my children or grandchildren during minority for or towards his, her, or their education or maintenance."

The testator died on the 14th of March, 1880, leaving eleven children living. Two of the children, Elizabeth and Louisa, died in 1881 without having attained the age of twenty-one years, leaving the testator's eldest son Robert George their heir-at-law.

Robert George made a will devising and bequeathing all his estate to his wife (now Mrs. James), and died in 1884.

The testator's widow died on the 9th of October, 1895.

Robertson Macdonald, for the trustees of the will.

Brabant, for children now living.

Gatey and Romer, for children of deceased children of the testator.—The direction here is to apply so much of the income as the trustees think fit. This is not a gift of the whole intermediate income and does not vest the shares: Leake v. Robinson, 2 Mer. 363; In re Jobson, 44 Ch. D. 154, 38 W. R. Dig. 220.

Butcher, for Mrs. James.—The trust for maintenance is sufficient to vest the shares: Fox v. Fox, 23 W. R. 314, L. R. 19 Eq. 286.

Methold and Gilbart Smith, for other parties.

July 30.—NORTH, J.—The question is whether the effect of the clause as to maintenance is to vest the shares which, under the earlier part of the will, by itself would be contingent. The terms of the will in Fox v. Fox were very like those of the present case, and the Master of the Rolls decided on the construction of that clause that the interests were vested; it would not be fair to say that it was a mere obiter dictum. He referred to a difficulty that arose in his mind on In re Ashmore's Trusts, L. R. 9 Eq. 99, 18 W. R. Dig. 150, and Pulsford v. Hunter, 3 Bro. C. C. 416, and dissented from these cases, and after referring to Watson v. Hayes, 5 My. & Cr. 125, says: "If that be the law it is very difficult to support the decision in In re Ashmore's Trusts." But in the later case of In re Parker, 16 Ch. D. 44, he himself points out that the decision in Fox v. Fox is not so large as the language of his judgment.

Looking at In re Ashmore's Trusts and Pulsford v. Hunter, they may be perfectly right, and yet consistent with the decision in Fox v. Fox. In that case the Master of the Rolls refers to Harrison v. Grimwood, 12 Beav. 192, but with great deference his statement does not quite do justice to Harrison v. Grimwood. In point of fact, the trust was not to apply the income for the whole period till the child attained twenty-six; but only till the child attained twenty-one, the legacy being contingent on its attaining twenty-six years. Though the decision was, that the shares were vested, it was only arrived at on the construction of the whole will. I should follow Fox v. Fox if it was the only case on the subject, but it has not been altogether accepted. In In re Grimshaw's Trusts, 27 W. R. 544, 11 Ch. D. 406, Hall, V.C., held that shares did not vest until the children attained twenty-one, and in the later case of Dewar v. Brooke, 28 W. R. 613, 14 Ch. D. 529, he clearly dissented from Fox v. Fox. The case of In re Sanderson's Trust, 5 W. R. 864, 3 K. & J. 497, contains a very clear statement by a very able judge of the effect of a discretionary trust for maintenance. [His lordship also referred to the judgment of Lord Cottenham in Watson v. Hayes.]

To apply those principles to the present case, Is there or is there not a gift of the whole income? It is clear from the authorities that a gift of the whole intermediate income vests a contingent legacy. It is also clear that a direction to apply the whole or part of such interest in the maintenance of the legatee makes no difference in the vesting if the whole interest is in fact given to the legatee. On the other hand, where the whole of the interest is not given, a direction for maintenance out of the interest will not vest the legacy. The authorities are in conflict, but the view I take is this: Where a legacy is given vesting at a future time, and the whole of the intermediate income is given to the legatee in any event, there the entire gift, principal and interest, is absolutely devoted to the legatee's use, and vests in præsenti. If only some discretionary portion of the intermediate interest is given, the gift does not vest in præsenti.

(a.) Reported by G. B. HAMILTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

In the present case I find no absolute dedication of the whole income to the legatee's use. If the trustees think fit to apply one moiety, where does the other moiety go? There is only a dedication of so much as is required for maintenance. The two children who died under twenty-one did not, therefore, take a vested share.

Solicitors, Robbins, Billing, & Co., for Abbot, Pope, & Co., Bristol; G. A. Collyer, for E. A. S. Locke, Bristol.

Chan. Div. } Nov. 11.
Kekewich, J. }

In re GURNEY.
CLIFFORD v. GURNEY. (a.)

Administration — Priorities — Judgment creditor — Liberty to sign judgment under R. S. C., ord. 14, not acted upon—R. S. C., ord. 41, rr. 3, 4.

Where a creditor had obtained an order under R. S. C., ord. 14, in the usual form, giving him liberty to sign final judgment against the debtor's administratrix, but had never acted upon the order by actually signing judgment,

Held, that he was not a judgment creditor entitled to priority over ordinary creditors in administration of the debtor's estate.

Adjourned summons.

This was an application in an administration action to vary the chief clerk's certificate under the following circumstances:

On the 13th of October, 1892, the "Bouillon Fleet, Limited," who were creditors of the deceased Edwin Gurney, had taken out in the Queen's Bench Division a writ of summons specially indorsed under R. S. C., Ord. 3, rule 6, against the administratrix of the deceased (who was defendant in the administration action), and, on the 31st of October, 1892, had obtained in that action an order by the master under R. S. C. Order 14 in the presence of the defendant, giving them, in the usual form, liberty to sign final judgment for the amount of the claim indorsed on their writ. The "Bouillon Fleet, Limited," however, took no steps under the order, and judgment was never signed or entered. On the 13th of November, 1893, an order for account and inquiries was made in the administration action, and under that order the chief clerk by his certificate dated the 31st of July, 1896, certified that a sum of £135 and interest thereon due to the "Bouillon Fleet, Limited" was entitled to priority over other debts which by the same certificate he allowed against the estate.

The plaintiff in the administration action now took out this summons to vary the chief clerk's certificate by striking out the finding that the "Bouillon Fleet, Limited" were entitled to priority, and substituting a finding that they were entitled to rank pari passu with the other creditors.

Micklem, for the plaintiff.—An order giving liberty to sign final judgment is not a judgment such as to give the right of a judgment creditor. The practice in the Queen's Bench Division is different from that in the Chancery Division of the High Court (Annual Practice 1895-96, pp. 1229 and 1241). A further step must be taken—that is to say, judgment must be actually signed by the "Bouillon Fleet, Limited"—before they have a right to priority as judgment creditors. The chief clerk acted under R. S. C., Order 41, rule 3, whereas rule 4 is the rule which applies, In re Maggi, Winehouse v. Winehouse, 30 W. R. 729, 20 Ch. D. 545.

Dunham, for the defendant.—Though the order is not technically a final judgment it is substantially the same thing. What remained to be done by the "Bouillon Fleet, Limited" in their action was merely a formal act and one to which the defendants in that action could offer no opposition. It would be strange if the fact that the "Bouillon Fleet, Limited" had proceeded in the Queen's Bench Division should bring about a result different from what it would have been had they gone to the Chancery Division.

KEKEWICH, J.—In my opinion the chief clerk is in error in this case. Looking at it as a matter of language, in my opinion the words "liberty to sign judgment" cannot in ordinary English be equivalent to "judgment." There is no compulsion on anyone to sign judgment, and as a matter of fact judgment may never be signed. Regarding it, however, as a matter of practice it is clear that liberty to sign judgment is not a judgment; a further step must be taken and a further order is necessary. The certificate must therefore be varied as asked in the summons.

Solicitors, C. P. Pritchard; Pearce Jones & Co.

(a.) Reported by C. C. HENSLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q. B. Div. } Nov. 3.
(Grantham and Wright, JJ.) }

VESTRY OF ST. JOHN, HACKNEY (APPELLANTS) v. HUTTON (RESPONDENT). (a.)

Local government—Public health—Insufficient water-closet accommodation—Sanitary authority—Notice—Non-compliance therewith — Justices—Jurisdiction—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), s. 37, sub-sections 3, 5.

The respondent was summoned before a magistrate for non-compliance with a notice served upon him by a sanitary authority under the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, s. 37, sub-section 3, requiring the respondent to provide additional water-closet accommodation at premises of which he was the owner.

Held, that the magistrate was bound by the decision of the sanitary authority that there was not sufficient water-closet accommodation at the respondent's premises; and that, on proof of non-compliance by the respondent with the notice, it was the duty of the magistrate to convict the respondent.

Special case stated by a metropolitan magistrate.

On the 2nd of August, 1895, the respondent, who was the owner of a house, No. 109, Southgate-road, in the parish of St. John at Hackney, was summoned at the North London Police Court, under the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, for having at the said premises insufficient and improper water-closet accommodation, notwithstanding a notice served on the respondent by the sanitary authority to rectify the same.

The magistrate thought that the matter was not a question of public health, but that it really arose out of a dispute between the respondent and his tenant, the latter alleging that the respondent had agreed to erect another water-closet on the premises, while the former alleged that there was only a conditional promise to do so, if the tenant was a satisfactory tenant to him, which he said was not the case. It appeared that the tenant had put the sanitary authorities in motion. Evidence was given on behalf of the appellants by the medical officer of health, that he was not satisfied with the existing water-closet accommodation.

(a.) Reported by F. O. ROBINSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The magistrate adjourned the summons for six months to give the tenant an opportunity of bringing an action against the respondent in the county court if he desired to do so. At the end of that time no such action having been brought the magistrate dismissed the summons.

The question for the opinion of the court was whether, under the circumstances, the magistrate was bound by the decision of the sanitary authority that the house was not furnished with proper and sufficient water-closet accommodation.

Public Health (London) Act, 1891, s. 37 (3), enacts: "If at any time it appears to the sanitary authority that any house, whether built before or after the commencement of this Act, is without such ashpit or water-closet, as aforesaid, the sanitary authority shall cause notice to be served on the owner or occupier of the house, requiring him forthwith, or within such reasonable time as is specified in the notice, to provide the same in accordance with the direction in the notice; and if the notice is not complied with, the said owner or occupier shall be liable to a fine not exceeding 40s. for each day during which the offence continues; or the sanitary authority, if they think fit, in lieu of proceeding for a fine, may enter on the premises and execute such works as the case may require, and may recover the expenses, incurred by them in so doing, from the owner of the house.

(5) Any person who thinks himself aggrieved by any notice or act of a sanitary authority under this section may appeal to the county council, whose decision shall be final.

Bevan, for the appellants.—The notice of the sanitary authority not having been complied with, and there having been no appeal to the county council, the magistrate was bound to convict the respondent. The magistrate has no jurisdiction to consider whether the works specified in the notice are necessary or not. [He was stopped by the court.]

Carrington, for the respondent.—Under section 37 there are two courses open to the sanitary authority. They may either do the work themselves and recover the cost as a civil debt, or they may proceed by way of summons and fine for disobedience to the notice. In the latter case the proceedings are criminal, and the whole matter must be inquired into and determined by the magistrate. It was not intended that the sanitary authority themselves should be the judge in the matter. Under section 36 of the Public Health Act, 1878, the sanitary authority had only power to do the work, and in such a case the magistrate's duties are merely ministerial, but where a criminal offence is created the magistrate has to act judicially, and he may come to the opinion, as he has done in this case, that the proceedings are of a vexatious character and, under such circumstances, he may refuse to convict.

GRANTHAM, J.—In my opinion the magistrate was bound to convict the respondent in this case. Whether the Legislature was wise in making the sanitary authority judges in these matters may be open to question, but, in my opinion, the Legislature has done so, and the magistrate is bound to act on the decision of the sanitary authority, or, in the event of an appeal, of the county council.

That leaves another question. Assuming that the magistrate is bound to convict, is he bound to inflict a fine? The section says that the owner or occupier shall be liable to a fine. It is, however, not necessary to decide that question in this case.

WRIGHT, J.—I agree entirely, with one slight modification. I do not think that the magistrate is bound to proceed at once to conviction in all cases. I think he might adjourn the case in order to permit of an appeal to the county council. With regard to the extent of punishment the magistrate, in my opinion, has all the ordinary discretionary powers of a judge. The only questions for a magistrate to determine are whether the notice has been served, whether the person on whom it has been served is the owner or occupier, whether the time allowed for doing the work is reasonable, and whether the notice has been complied with.

Appeal allowed; case remitted to magistrate.

Solicitor for the vestry, Tiddeman.

Solicitors for the respondent, Stones, Marcus, & Stone.

Q. B. Div. (Hawkins, J.) } May 16; Aug. 12, 1896.

THOMAS v. JENNINGS AND OTHERS. (a.)

Landlord and tenant—Mortgage—Tenant's fixtures—Removability — Rights of mortgagee in possession against owner of the fixtures.

A landlord demised certain premises to the plaintiff, who during his tenancy erected certain tenant's fixtures thereon. Prior to the determination of the tenancy the landlord agreed to give the tenant, on the expiration of his tenancy, permission to leave his fixtures on the premises, with a view to their being purchased by the incoming tenant, or, in the event of their not being purchased, to enter and remove them. Subsequent to the erection of the fixtures by the plaintiff, but prior to the said agreement, the landlord mortgaged the premises to the defendants, who, after the termination of the plaintiff's tenancy, became mortgagees in possession. The defendants, who were not parties to the said agreement, and had no knowledge of it, refused to permit the plaintiff, after he had quitted the premises on the termination of his tenancy, to remove the fixtures, claiming that they were entitled to them under the mortgage deed. In an action for the delivery up of the fixtures, and for damages for their wrongful detention,

Held, that, as the defendants were mortgagees in possession under a deed subsequent to the erection of the fixtures, the agreement between the landlord and the defendant could not affect their rights to the fixtures under their mortgage deed.

Further consideration.

In this action, which came on for trial before Hawkins, J., and a special jury on the 12th of March, 1896, the plaintiff claimed damages against the defendants for wrongfully preventing the plaintiff from removing certain fixtures and chattels from "The Manor House," Southall, and for wrongfully depriving the plaintiff of the same.

On the 12th of April, 1872, Alfred Welch demised the Manor-house to Edward Weston for twenty-one years from the 25th of March, 1872.

On the 17th of September, 1879, Edward Weston assigned the residue of his term to the plaintiff, who paid rent to Welch.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

In paragraph 3 of the statement of claim it was pleaded that before the expiration of the term the plaintiff alleged that Alfred Welch consented and agreed to the plaintiff leaving certain tenant's fixtures and chattels on the premises after the expiration of the said term with a view to their being purchased, and, failing such purchase, that the plaintiff should be entitled to remove them.

The fixtures were not purchased, and thereupon the plaintiff sought to remove them but was prevented by Ellis, one of the defendants, on behalf of Jennings and Finch, who claimed to be entitled to the fixtures as mortgagees.

The defendants denied the said agreement between the plaintiff and Welch; and further pleaded that Welch had no right to enter into such an agreement, and that, if such agreement existed, it would not be binding on them; and they also pleaded that section 4 of the Statute of Frauds had not been complied with, and that the fixtures were part of the freehold, and could not be severed without damage to the latter.

During the trial it was agreed that the question which the jury should be asked to deal with should be whether such a contract was made as stated in the third paragraph of the statement of claim, and that the jury when they had found their verdict on that issue should be discharged, and the rest of the case tried by the learned judge alone on further consideration, and this was accordingly done, the jury having found as a fact that such a contract had been entered into.

The full facts of the case and the arguments of counsel are set out in the following judgment.

Channell, Q.C., and Plumptree, for the plaintiff.

Crump, Q.C., and Rolland, for the defendants.

Cur. ad. vult.

Aug. 12.—HAWKINS, J., read the following judgment.—On the 12nd of April, 1872, one Alfred Welch, being the owner in fee simple of "the Manor-house," gardens, &c., situate at Southall, Middlesex, demised the same to Edward Weston for a term of twenty-one years from the 25th of March, 1872. In the said lease is contained a covenant on the part of the lessee on the termination of the demise "peaceably and quietly to leave, surrender, and deliver up unto the said Alfred Welch" the demised premises, "together with all landlord's fixtures and all erections and buildings to be erected and built on the said demised premises or any part thereof."

On the 17th of September, 1879, Weston assigned the residue of his term to the plaintiff Thomas, who thereupon entered upon the premises and paid rent and became tenant to Welch. During the said term, after the said assignment and before the execution of the mortgage hereinafter mentioned, the said Thomas erected and built upon the demised premises a vinery, with shed adjoining, a peach house, and a forcing house, four top-lights to a pit, and a sundial. These, it is not disputed, were tenant's fixtures, which in the ordinary course and in the absence of express stipulation to the contrary might have been removed by the tenant during the term of the tenancy.

In the month of September, 1890, a correspondence went on between Mr. Thomas and Mr. Welch with reference to these fixtures. In the first letter, dated the 4th of September, after stating that he had only two years and a half to run before the expiration of his lease, Mr. Thomas continued: "I should also wish to ask you whether at the expiration of my lease, and presuming the property to be unlet, you would allow the greenhouses, &c., which belong to me, to remain, so that they could be taken by an incoming tenant, or that I should be at liberty to remove them if he did not take them." In reply to this Mr. Welch requested to know what fixtures Mr. Thomas proposed to remove, but no arrangement was then come to.

So matters remained until the beginning of March, 1893, when Mr. Thomas, having had a list and a valuation made of the fixtures, sent a copy to Mr. Welch. By the letter which contained the list Mr. Thomas requested to be informed if Mr. Welch would take away any of the items, as time was running short—in fact, the lease was about to expire on the 25th of that month. In reply to this letter Mr. Welch on the 11th of March wrote to Mr. Thomas a note containing this paragraph: "Meanwhile, allow me to say that you need not tie yourself to the 25th in removing anything belonging to you, as you are quite welcome to send your workmen on the premises of the Manor-house at any time whilst it is in my possession and unlet." Interviews were had during that month, and before the lease expired, by Mr. Thomas and his valuer with Mr. Welch. Mr. Thomas's memory was very imperfect as to them; he only remembered that Mr. Welch said the fixtures might be taken by an incoming tenant, but he did not remember anything being said about leaving the fixtures on the premises at the end of the term. Mr. Newall, the valuer for Mr. Thomas, however, said that Mr. Welch told him the things could be removed (this must mean after the expiration of the lease), though nothing was said about the time when the removal was to be, and that there would be no difficulty in the houses being taken away as soon as it suited the plaintiff's convenience. Mr. Welch did not deny this, and added, "I very likely said what I wrote." The jury upon this correspondence and evidence found that an agreement was come to between the parties as alleged in the statement of of claim—namely, that Mr. Alfred Welch consented and agreed to permit the plaintiff to leave the said fixtures and chattels on the premises after the expiration of the said term, with the view of their being purchased by the said Alfred Welch or by an incoming tenant, and, failing such purchase, that the plaintiff should be entitled to remove the same. It will be observed that no time within which such removal should take place is named in the statement of the contract as set out in the pleadings. The letter, however, of the 11th of March, refers to "any time whilst it" (i.e., the Manor-house) "is in my possession and unlet."

It seems to me obvious that would be the limit of reasonable time, and that, I have no doubt was the intention of both parties, who probably never thought of or contemplated any interference by the mortgagees hereafter mentioned. Relying upon the said agreement, Mr. Thomas quitted the premises at the expiration of the lease, leaving behind him the fixtures in dispute still annexed to the freehold, and so they have remained down to the present time.

I must now state the case as it was presented for and against the defendants. On the 24th of June, 1890, Welch mortgaged the demised premises, subject to prior encumbrances, to the defendants Jennings and Finch, to secure a sum of £697 2s. 11d. and interest, and they on the 8th of February, 1894, duly appointed the defendant Ellis to be the receiver of the rents, &c., of the mortgaged property under the provisions of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881, section 24 and he entered into possession of the premises on their behalf, and has held such possession for them ever since. No reletting of the premises took place between the time of the plaintiff's quitting and the month of March, 1895. In that month a proposed new tenant opened negotiations with Mr. Ellis on behalf of the mortgagees for taking the house, but he was not willing to purchase the fixtures at the price put upon them by Mr. Thomas's valuer. Mr. Thomas then determined to remove them, and on the 12th of March, 1895, through his solicitor, by letter of that date, requested Mr. Ellis to inform him when it would be convenient for him to do so. Mr. Ellis, acting for the other defendants, declined to give his permission to such removal, except under the conditions that £30 should be deposited to make good damage which would be occasioned by the removal, and that the removal should be under his control, and that all should be cleared away within a week. These conditions were not assented to by the plaintiff, and, under those circumstances, the defendants refused to permit the plaintiff to remove any of the fixtures, denying his right to do so, or to enter on the premises for that purpose.

It was agreed that I should finally and absolutely and without appeal settle the principle upon which the damages shall be assessed if the defendants are liable in this action. This I do by stating that the amount of damages should be arrived at by ascertaining, first of all, what would be the value of the materials of the fixtures on the premises when and as severed from the freehold, for the purpose of re-erecting them elsewhere, having regard to their age and condition minus the cost of severing them (if severed by the mortgagees), and taking also the amount of the reasonable cost of making good as far as possible the damages and cost occasioned to the premises in severing the fixtures, storing the materials, and any damage occasioned in carrying them away, and any permanent damage, if any, occasioned to the premises which cannot be made good. Had this been an action against Mr. Welch for non-fulfilment of his agreement to allow the plaintiff to remove his fixtures after the expiration of his time, and while Welch had possession of the premises, I should have been of opinion that a binding contract, such as stated in paragraph 3 of the claim, might be established between them without any writing at all. For such a contract cannot be properly described as a contract for the sale of goods or chattels under section 17 of the Statute of Frauds, nor could it be correctly described as a contract or sale of an interest concerning lands within the meaning of section 4 of that statute. For tenants removable fixtures while annexed to the freehold are not goods and chattels, and the right to sever and remove them from the freehold to which they are attached, does not give the tenant an interest in the freehold itself. This has been conclusively established by the cases of Hallen v. Runder, 1 C. M. & R., 266, and Lee v. Gaskill, 24 W. R. 824, 1 Q. B. D. 700. It is only when severed from the freehold that they become goods and chattels, and it is only when the tenant has no longer a right so to sever them that they become permanently parts of the freehold itself. I am strongly disposed to agree in the argument of the defendants that if the contract found by the jury was sought to be treated as a grant of a licence to enter upon the premises at a future time and to sever the fixtures from the freehold, it would be invalid, as not being in writing and under seal, Wood v. Leadbitter, 13 M. & W. 838, Roffey v. Henderson, 17 Q. B. 574. But I need not discuss that point further, for the agreement does not purport to be such a grant. It does not in its terms amount to more than a promise on the part of Mr. Welch to give the required permission to leave the fixtures on the premises after the expiration of the term, and in the particular event that the plaintiff should be entitled to remove them.

But, assuming the agreement purported in its terms to amount to a right and licence to make entry upon the land and to sever the materials from the freehold and was in law invalid as a grant, because not in writing and under seal, I see no reason why it should not operate as a contract, and as a contract such as I have suggested; and, as a contract, it would clearly have been operative against Welch so long as he was in possession or the premises unlet. As between landlord and tenant, and those claiming under them respectively, as a general rule the tenant's right to sever his fixtures from the freehold exists only during the continuance of his tenancy, unless by special contract between the parties they otherwise agree, Lyde v. Russell, 1 B. & Ad. 394. The landlord's right to claim the fixtures commences when his tenant ceases to occupy as tenant under the term during which the fixtures are attached to the freehold. See per North, J., in In re Maryport Hematite Iron and Steel Company, 40 W. R. 280, [1892] 1 Ch. 415. A mortgagee with a right to enter and take possession may as a general rule enter at any time after default. In this case we have to consider the rights of landlord, tenant, and mortgagee. As between the tenant Thomas the plaintiff, and Welch, his landlord, the verbal agreement to which they alone were parties was to give to the former an extended time, so far as the latter had the power to grant it, within which to remove his fixtures, and during such time the landlord was bound to forego his ordinary right to treat the fixtures as part of his freehold; and if the matter had rested solely between Welch and Thomas it would have been simple enough, and in one shape or another Thomas would have had either the fixtures or their value in the shape of damages for breach of contract. This, however, is an action, not between the tenant and his lessor, but between the tenant and the mortgagees of the premises, who, when the fixtures were claimed from them, were and still are rightfully in possession under a mortgage executed in June, 1890, after the making of the lease and the erection of the fixtures and prior to the making of the agreement. This mortgage entitled them to the benefit of all the stipulations in the lease affecting the mortgaged premises and to take possession in default. In the lease there is a covenant on the part of Weston, the original lessee, to leave, surrender, and deliver up to the landlord at the end of the tenancy all erections and buildings to be erected and built on the demised premises or any part thereof. In the teeth of this covenant it is difficult to see what legal rights the plaintiff, who was Weston's assignee, had to insist upon removing at all, or at any time, the buildings and erections constituting fixtures now claimed. It is true Mr. Welch, the landlord and mortgagor, on the expiration of the lease seems to have waived his right to insist on that covenant. Whether he could have insisted upon it after the agreement he had made it is not necessary for me to discuss; but, be that as it may, his waiver could not bind or affect the rights of his mortgagees, who are not shown to have acquiesced in it, or even to have had any knowledge of it, until the differences which led to this action arose. Porter v. Drew, 28 W. R. 672, 5 C. P. D. 143. There may be defects in the statement in the pleadings of a defence based on this covenant, but they are amendable. I find nothing in the conduct of the defendants to satisfy me that they ever waived their right to have that covenant performed, though undoubtedly the correspondence shows a willingness to be conciliatory and to allow the fixtures to be removed on not very hard conditions. The construction of the agreement between Welch and the plaintiff requires some discussion. In the verbal agreement spoken to by Mr. Newall no time was mentioned in which the fixtures might be removed. I take it therefore to mean within a reasonable time, having regard to the circumstances. Now, what was such a reasonable time? The letter of Mr. Welch of the 11th of March, 1893, points to what was passing in his mind—namely, "at any time whilst it" (i e., the Manor-house) "is in my possession and unlet." If it is my duty to decide the question what was a reasonable time, I adopt the time named in that letter. For, after Welch was out of possession and the premises let to a new tenant, his control over the premises was at an end. If this is the true construction of the contract, then, as the plaintiff did not seek to remove the fixtures till after Welch was out of possession and the defendants, the mortgagees, had entered, it was too late. But, whatever be the true meaning of the contract, I see no ground for saying that the defendants were legally bound by it. They were neither parties nor privy to it. The concession, which they were clearly willing to make upon not unreasonable conditions, was not, in my opinion, legally enforceable upon them; and upon the plaintiff's refusing to accept such conditions they were clearly entitled to stand upon their legal right. The case of Sanders v. Davis, 33 W. R. 655. 15 Q. B. D. 218, carefully considered, is not opposed to the view I have taken, nor is the case of Moreland v. Richardson, 5 W. R. 672, 24 Beav. 33; nor do either of those cases assist in the solution of the present. The facts in each are widely different. As to the case of Torrey v. Burnett, 20 American Reports 421, it differs in its material facts from that with which I am now dealing. There the plaintiff was landlord of the premises from which the fixture in question, which was attached to the premises, was removed by some of his creditors by legal process. Before the removal, the tenant being about to leave, had entrusted to the landlord the fixture, and he had agreed to sell it for his tenant. The tenant quitted the premises before the fixture could be sold, and before any sale the creditors seized, severed, and removed it. The landlord sued for injury to the premises and for the value of the fixture, treating it as part of his freehold. It was held that under the circumstances the tenant was entitled to a reasonable time to remove it, and his creditors had the same right by attachment. I agree in all that was said by Beasley, C.J., in that case, but it does not assist the plaintiff in this, for there the landlord who sued had himself agreed to hold the fixture for sale on account of the tenant. Here the defendants, as mortgagees, claim the fixtures under their mortgage after both landlord and tenant were out of possession, and they are not, in my opinion, bound by the agreement of the landlord as he would have been had he remained in possession. The case of Gough v. Wood & Co., 42 W. R. 469, [1894] 1 Q. B. 713, was cited as an authority supporting the case of the plaintiff, and I should not be sorry if I could come to the conclusion that it was so. This, however, I am unable to do, for, on a very careful perusal of it, it appears to me that there are material distinctions between that case and the present There the plaintiff was mortgagee of a piece of land of which the mortgagor, one Edmonds, was tenant for a term of years, and on it he carried on the business of a nurseryman. In November, 1889, he entered into an agreement with the defendants, engineers, to supply him, for the purposes of his trade with a boiler and fittings to be erected on that land upon the terms that the price should be paid by instalments, and that until payment of the whole of the instalments the boiler, &c., should remain the exclusive property of the defendants, and be treated as on hire only; that in case of default in any payment the defendants should be entitled to resume possession of it, and Edmonds granted permission to the defendants to enter on the premises, and in case of breach of the agreement to resume possession of and remove the same. The lessor of Edmonds joined in this grant of permission. After the making of this agreement Edmonds mortgaged his leasehold interest to the plaintiff but gave him no notice of the agreement. The plaintiff allowed Edmonds to remain in possession of the premises, and in December and January, 1889-90, the boiler was delivered under the agreement and fixed to them. Edmonds remained in possession and paid some, but made default in payment of other of the instalments, thereupon in October, 1892, the defendants (the vendors of the boiler), the tenants, the mortgagees, being still in possession, entered on the land, unfixed the boiler, and took it away. Thereupon and therefore the action was brought by the mortgagees against the defendants. The Court of Appeal, upholding a judgment of Wright, J., held that the defendants were justified in removing the boiler as they did. In the present case the fixtures were actually the property of the tenant, and they were attached to the freehold before the mortgage was executed. They were left upon the premises, after the tenant had quitted possession, by an agreement with the mortgagor only, made after the mortgagees' reversionary interests, subject to the leases, had become vested in them. Under ordinary circumstances they would have become absolutely irremovable after the tenant had quitted possession leaving them still affixed. And the claim of the plaintiff rests only upon an agreement made by the landlord with him for their mutual convenience—an agreement valid so long as the lessor was in possession, but inoperative as against the mortgagees when they took possession. I do not think it necessary to comment at length on the judgments of the Court of Appeal in Gough v. Wood & Co., but I would call especial attention to the expressions of Lindley, L.J., at page 718 of the report, all of which are applied to the circumstances of the particular case before the court. I do not refer to the details of Sanders v. Davis because it is discussed and its legal effect fully stated in Gough v. Wood & Co.

As the result of my consideration of this case I have come to the conclusion that the mortgagees, the defendants, are entitled to my judgment. I may add that no amendment of the pleadings was asked for.

Judgment for defendants.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, A. Lawrence Houlder.

Solicitors for the defendants, Jennings & Finch.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Q. B. Div.
Vaughan Williams, J. } Aug. 11, 1896.

In re YOUNG.
Ex parte JONES. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Proof—Partnership—Loan to trader—Fixed weekly payment out of profits—Partnership Act 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 39), s. 2, sub-section 3 (d) s. 3.

J. advanced £500 to the bankrupt under an agreemen which gave J. the sum of £3 per week out of the profit of the bankrupt's business, if any, and £3 per week a payment for his services. Further, he was to have fo seven months from the date of the loan a large contr over the business, and the option of entering into partnership with the bankrupt. He never exercised this option, and proved in the bankruptcy for the £500.

(a.) Reported by P. M. FRANCKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Held, that, by the terms of the agreement, he was not a partner of the bankrupt, but that the loan was a loan to a trader within section 2, sub-section 3 (d), of the Partnership Act, 1890, and must be postponed until all other creditors of the bankrupt were paid in full.

Appeal by a creditor of the bankrupt against the rejection of his proof by the trustee in bankruptcy.

Jones, the creditor, had lent the bankrupt £500 subject to the terms of an agreement dated the 21st of September, 1895, whereby it was agreed, inter alia, that Jones should, during a period of seven months from the 28th of September, 1895, take charge of the office work of the business carried on by the bankrupt, and control the financial arrangements and affairs thereof, and should be entitled to draw and be paid out of the profits of the business for such services the sum of £3 per week, and should have a right at any time during the term of seven months to declare his option to enter into partnership with the bankrupt; and that Jones should, on signing the agreement, pay into a banking account to be opened in his name at a specified bank the sum of £500, which was to be used under the sole superintendence and control of Jones in defraying the trade debts and in discharging the current business liabilities from time to time during the continuance of the agreement; and that there was to be paid to Jones out of the profits of the business during the continuance of the agreement, for the use of the £500, the sum of £3 per week; but if there were no profits Jones was to get nothing for his services or by way of interest on the £500.

Jones never exercised his option to enter into partnership with the bankrupt, and proved in the bankruptcy for the £500 he had advanced.

The trustee rejected his proof, upon the grounds that he was a partner of the bankrupt's, or, alternatively, that he was a person coming within section 2, sub-section 3 (d), and section 3 of the Partnership Act, 1890, the material portions of which are as follows:—

Section 2, sub-section 3 (d).—"The advance of money by way of loan to a person engaged . . . in any business on a contract with that person that the lender shall receive a rate of interest varying with the rate of profits, or shall receive a share of the profits arising from carrying on the business, does not of itself make the lender a partner with the person or persons carrying on the business or liable as such."

Section 3.—"In the event of any person to whom money has been advanced by way of loan upon such a contract as is mentioned in the last foregoing section . . . being adjudged a bankrupt . . . the lender of the loan shall not be entitled to recover anything in respect of the loan . . . until the claims of the other creditors of the borrower . . . for valuable consideration in money or money's worth have been satisfied."

Jones appealed.

Ashton Cross, for the appellant.

E. W. Hansell, for the trustee in bankruptcy.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, J.—The question in this case is whether the trustee was right in rejecting the appellant's proof, and entirely depends upon the Partnership Act, 1890. There was an agreement entered into by the appellant and the bankrupt upon the 21st of September, 1895, as to which the trustee says, firstly, that it was an agreement of partnership; secondly, that it was a contract for a loan of money within section 3 of the Partnership Act, 1890. I will deal first with the question whether it was an agreement of partnership. Section 2, sub-section 3, of the Partnership Act, 1890, says: "The receipt by a person of the share of the profits in a business is primâ facie evidence that he is a partner in the business, but the receipt of such a share, or of a payment contingent on, or varying with, the profits of a business does not of itself make him a partner in the business." Now, it is common ground that the agreement in this case provides for payment to the appellant contingent on the profits of the business, and I shall therefore deal with the document on the basis that the payments therein agreed to be made are primâ facie evidence of partnership. This being so, it is urged for the appellant that I ought to look at the agreement as a whole, and that if I so do it will appear that it negatives partnership, and merely refers to a contemplated partnership at the option of the appellant. The respondent, on the other hand, contends that the agreement as a whole gives the appellant such a large control over the business as is only consistent with the rights of a partner.

On this point I think that the appellant is right, that although there is primâ facie evidence of partnership, on the whole I ought not to hold that the large powers given to the appellant constituted him a partner, and I conclude that it was not the intention of the parties that there should be a partnership unless and until the appellant exercised the option given him by the terms of the agreement.

Now I have to consider whether this sum of £500 was a loan within section 2, sub-section 3, of the Partnership Act, 1890, and ought to be postponed until all the other creditors of the bankrupt have been paid in full, and I conclude that it was a loan to the bankrupt under a contract by which the lender was to receive a share of the profits. The fund is distinctly fixed out of which the £3 per week were to be paid—namely, the profits. I am, therefore, of opinion that the trustee was right in not admitting this proof.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Wynne Baxter & Keeble.

Solicitor for the respondent, Leslie Williams.

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div. (Lord Esher, M.R., and Lopes and Rigby, L.JJ.) — Nov. 18.

SIMS v. TROLLOPE & SONS. (a.)

Bill of sale — Attestation — Description of witness — Statutory form—Bills of Sale Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43), s. 9.

A bill of sale which does not contain the description of the attesting witness is void for non-compliance with the statutory form, even though the witness has no business or occupation.

Parsons v. Brand and Coulson v. Dickson, 38 W. R. 388, 25 Q. B. D. 110, followed.

Appeal from a judgment of Grantham, J.

This was an interpleader issue between the holder of a bill of sale and an execution creditor of the grantor. The question was whether the bill of sal, was void, under section 9 of the Bills of Sale Act.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-at-Law.

1882, for non-compliance with the statutory forme The bill of sale was expressed to have been signed and sealed by the grantor "in the presence of me, John Henry Crawford, 5, Victoria-street, Westminster." No description of the attesting witness was added. The statutory form directs that the witness's name, address, and description shall be given.

The attesting witness had no business or occupation, and the learned judge so found, but he thought that he ought to have been described as a gentleman, and he held that the failure to give any description rendered the bill of sale void.

The plaintiff, the holder of the bill of sale, appealed.

Jelf, Q.C., and Clavell Salter, for the plaintiff.—"Description" in the statutory form means description of occupation; it cannot mean personal or physical description. This witness had no occupation, therefore he had no description. In the cases of Parsons v. Brand and Coulson v. Dickson, 38 W. R. 388, 25 Q. B. D. 110, it was held fatal not to give a description of the witness where he had one; and it was clear from the affidavit that he had a description. But if there is no description it cannot be given. No doubt this witness, who lived on his father's means and was what is ordinarily called a gentleman, might have been stated to be a "gentleman," or "of no occupation," but either of these expressions would have been exactly equivalent to giving no description at all. The object of the Act must be considered, which is merely to enable the witness to be identified and traced. In Ex parte Young, In re Symonds, 28 W. R. 924, 42 L. T. N. S. 744, under the Bills of Sale Act, 1854, it was held that where the attesting witness to a bill of sale was a person of no occupation, his description in the affidavit of execution might be left blank.

Marchant, for the defendants.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—It seems to me a dreadful thing to have to come to the conclusion that the objection which has been taken to this bill of sale must prevail. But the Act says that a bill of sale shall be void unless made in accordance with the form in the schedule. And in Parsons v. Brand and Coulson v. Dickson this court appears to have held that the exact form must be followed, and that if a single word is left out the bill of sale is void. The statutory form contains a direction to "add witness's name, address, and description." This bill of sale gives the name and address, but it leaves the description blank. The Act of 1854 required that the verifying affidavit shall contain a description of the occupation of the witness. This Act speaks of "description" simply. We cannot hold that "description" here is synonymous with description of occupation. Therefore the appellant cannot rely on Ex parte Young, In re Symonds. But if description meant occupation and nothing else, I should be disposed to follow that case. The form has a blank space for the rate of interest; I am not inclined to say that, if no interest was payable, that blank space must necessarily be filled up. Description no doubt includes occupation, but it includes something else. It is not necessary to decide what that something else is, but I suppose it embraces what is known as a man's addition in the legal sense of that term. It is not shown that this witness has no addition; and, as far as I understand, every one may have an addition. This case comes within the decision of this court in Parsons v. Brand and Coulson v. Dickson, and we cannot depart from it.

LOPES, L.J.—We are bound to obey this Act of Parliament, which says that a bill of sale shall be void unless it is in the form in the schedule. The form requires that the witness's name, address, and description shall be given. This bill of sale gives the witness's name and address, but there is a total omission of any description. I do not see how it can be said that a blank in the form with a direction that it shall be filled up, need not be filled up. In my opinion "description" means profession, trade, or occupation, or, if there is no occupation, style. If the matter were res integra, I should have come to the same conclusion on the Act of Parliament. But the point was really determined in our decision in Parsons v. Brand and Coulson v. Dickson. The appeal must be dismissed.

RIGBY, L.J.—We are asked to consider the Bills of Sale Act, and to have regard to what must have been the intention of the Legislature. All that I can find as to the policy of the Act is this—that bills of sale appear to be looked upon by the Legislature with particular disfavour; in some cases they are absolutely prohibited, in other cases difficulties are thrown in the way of persons lending money on this class of security.

In Parsons v. Brand and Coulson v. Dickson this court held that, where the blank space left for the description of the attesting witness was not filled up, the bill of sale was void. That is the present case. It is argued that there the witness had a description as appeared from the affidavit, and that that distinguishes the case from the present. But that was not the ground of the decision; it was the leaving the blank which the court held to be fatal. That case governs us here; I cannot get out of it, neither do I wish to do so.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, Alfred Slater.

Solicitors for the defendants, Trollope & Winckworth.

From Q. B. Div. (Lord Esher, M.R., and Lopes and Rigby, L.JJ.) — Nov. 6.

In re BETTS.
Ex parte BETTS. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Receiving order—Debtor an undischarged bankrupt—No assets—Discretion of court—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 5, 7, sub-section 3.

A debtor, against whom a bankruptcy petition was presented, was an undischarged bankrupt, and the court came to the conclusion that there were no assets, and no probability of any assets, available for distribution in a second bankruptcy.

Held, that, as the only effect of making a receiving order would be a waste of money in costs, the court would, in the exercise of its discretion, refuse to make a receiving order.

Appeal from a receiving order made by Mr. Registrar Giffard.

The petitioning creditor, in May, 1893, recovered judgment against the debtor for a sum of money, and presented a bankruptcy petition in respect thereof.

In 1882 the annual income of certain property, which was vested in trustees, was settled upon the debtor for life, with a proviso for forfeiture in the event of his bankruptcy, the trustees having power in that event in their discretion to make him an allowance in respect thereof. In May, 1892, the debtor was adjudicated bankrupt, and had not obtained his discharge, only a small dividend having been paid. The present petitioning creditor had proved in that bankruptcy in respect of another debt. The debtor in an affidavit stated that he had no assets.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

S. G. Lushington, for the debtor.—The debtor is an undischarged bankrupt, and the income to which he was entitled under the settlement became forfeited on the previous bankruptcy. There can be no assets available in a second bankruptcy, as any possible assets will belong to the trustee in the first bankruptcy. It would therefore be useless to make a receiving order against him now.

Muir Mackenzie, for the petitioning creditor.—This is not the time to enquire whether there are any assets. The court cannot now tell whether there will be assets, and ought not to refuse make a receiving order: In re Murrieta, 3 Manson Bank. Rep. 35; In re Leonard, Ex parte Leonard, 44 W. R. 438, [1896] 1 Q. B. 473; In re Hecquard, Ex parte Hecquard, 38 W. R. 148, 24 Q. B. D. 71. There is always a possibility of assets coming in, and the court will not refuse to make a receiving order.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—In this case there is a proposal to make the debtor bankrupt. He has made an affidavit to the effect that it is no use to make a receiving order, as he has no assets and no prospect of having any assets. It is clear that his affidavit to that effect is not enough to induce the court to refuse to make a receiving order. If that were all, I should repeat what has been said in former cases, that the court is not in a position to accept the affidavit as accurate, and therefore the court would make a receiving order. But if the court, from the circumstances of the case, and not relying merely upon the affidavit of the debtor, is convinced that there are no assets and no likelihood of any assets, and that it would be a mere waste of money in costs to make a receiving order, it will be justified in the exercise of its discretion in refusing to make a receiving order. Is the court justified in this case in so acting? More than four years ago the debtor was adjudicated bankrupt. Certain income had been settled upon him upon the terms that if he became bankrupt his right to it would be lost. It is true that the trustees of the settlement might in their discretion make him an allowance. But that would not be an asset in the bankruptcy, because they might withdraw it at any moment. That bankruptcy is still standing. The present petitioning creditor proved as a creditor in that bankruptcy in respect of another debt, and if he thought that there were any assets now he would put the trustee in that bankruptcy in motion to get hold of those assets. He does not do that. Why does he propose to make the debtor a bankrupt now? It seems clear to me that he also knows that there are no assets, and no probability of any assets. It is said that there is a possibility of assets. There is no possibility in the business sense of any assets which will pay off the first bankruptcy and be available for distribution among the creditors in a second bankruptcy. Under these circumstances it would be a mere waste of money to make a receiving order, and in the exercise of its discretion the court will decline to do so. The receiving order will therefore be rescinded.

LOPES, L.J.—I am of the some opinion. I agree that the law is that if the court is convinced that there are no assets and no reasonable probability of any assets in the future, it ought not to make a receiving order. The only effect of making a receiving order would be a useless heaping up of costs. In so stating the law we are not in conflict with any of the decided cases. The annuity here was forfeited on the previous bankruptcy, and there is now no asset nor any probability of any. I agree that the affidavit of the debtor is not enough upon that point. But there is a great deal more in this case. The debtor is an undischarged bankrupt, and any asset would go to the trustee in that bankruptcy; and this petitioning creditor is a creditor under that bankruptcy, and if there were anything to be got he would try to get it under that bankruptcy. In my opinion he is only trying to make the debtor bankrupt with a view to extract money from his relations. It would, in my opinion, be a wanton piling up of costs if we were to make a receiving order. I may add that this case depends upon its own special facts, and cannot be a precedent except in a similar state of facts.

RIGBY, L.J.—There is no doubt about the law as laid down by the Master of the Rolls. The court has a discretion as to making a receiving order, and the question always must be whether on the particular facts of the case that discretion should be exercised by making or refusing to make a receiving order. I say that this case cannot be a precedent for any other except perhaps in an exactly similar state of facts. The question before us is, Is it not made reasonably clear on the facts in this case that the receiving order should not be made? There is a former bankruptcy which has swept away the annuity. This petitioning creditor proved in the former bankruptcy in respect of another debt. Only a small dividend appears to to have been paid in that bankruptcy, and there is apparently nothing more to be obtained under it. Under these circumstances I do not dissent from the conclusion arrived at by the rest of the court as to the exercise of our discretion in the matter.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitor for the debtor, J. Laidman.

Solicitors for the petitioning creditor, Hicks, Arnold, and Mozley.

From Chan. Div. (Lord Halsbury, C., and A. L. Smith & Rigby, L.JJ.) — Nov. 4, 1895; Aug. 3, 1896.

CUNNACK v. EDWARDS. (a.)

Friendly society—Failure of objects—Unexpended fund—Bona vacantia.

In 1810 a society consisting of honorary and ordinary members was formed for the purpose of providing annuities for the widows of deceased members. All the members and members' widows having died, and there being in the hands of the trustees unexpended funds of the society,

Held, that, upon the construction of its rules, the society was not a charity; that there was no resulting trust in favour of the representatives of deceased members; but that the Crown was entitled to the unexpended funds as bona vacantia.

Decision of Chitty, J., 43 W. R. 325, [1895] 1 Ch. 489, reversed.

Appeal from the decision of Chitty, J., 43 W. R. 325, [1895] 1 Ch. 489.

This case raised a question as to the destination of the undistributed funds of a voluntary society where the objects of the society had all been exhausted, but the society had not been dissolved.

The Helston Equitable Annuitant Society was founded in March, 1810, for the purpose of raising by subscriptions, fines, and forfeitures a fund for the relief of the widows of its deceased members.

(a.) Reported by W. SCOTT THOMPSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

In 1830 the rules were revised, and the society subsequently conformed to the provisions of the Friendly Societies Act, 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 56).

The society consisted of ordinary and honorary members. The last surviving ordinary member, one T. H. Edwards, through whom the defendant claimed, died a widower in 1878, and the last known honorary member, Sir Richard R. Vyvian, died in 1879.

On joining the society an honorary member signed a declaration that his object in joining the society was not that any widow of his should derive any benefit therefrom (to which he altogether relinquished his right), but merely for the encouragement of the society.

The last annuitant died in 1892, and there remained in the hands of the trustees of the society a sum of about £1,250, being undistributed funds of the society.

The action was instituted by the trustees of the society to have it determined how these funds were to be applied by them.

The representatives of Sir R. R. Vyvian disclaimed any interest in the funds.

At the trial it was held by Chitty, J., that the funds were subject to a resulting trust in favour of the ordinary members of the society from time to time, or their respective legal personal representatives, in shares proportional to the amounts contributed by each such ordinary member to the funds of the society.

Against that decision the Attorney-General appealed, claiming either that the society was a charity, or that the Crown was entitled to the funds as bona vacantia.

The rules of the society are fully stated in the judgments of the Lords Justices.

Ingle Joyce, for the appellant.—There is here no resulting trust. In none of the books is there any statement of the doctrine of resulting trusts which would cover this case. Lewin on Trusts, 9th ed., p. 150. Here each member paid his money out and out, and as between a member and the society no trust was constituted or intended. This was a mere club, the members interests in which only continued during the lives (In re St. James's Club, 2 De G. M. & G. 383). I submit that these funds are bona vacantia. Where you have funds in the hands of trustees and no existing trust then the funds are bona vacantia, and belong to the Crown (Barclay v. Russell, 3 Ves. 424). In the alternative I submit that this society was a charity, and the funds must be dealt with cy-près: Spiller v. Maude, 32 Ch. D. 158*n*; Collinson v. Pater, 2 Russ. & My. 344.

Robertson Macdonald, for the trustees, took no part in the argument.

Farwell, Q.C., and W. D. Rawlins, for the ordinary members, supported the decision of Chitty, J. This is not a charity, it was a mere matter of contract between the members: In re Clark's Trusts, 24 W. R. 233, 1 Ch. D. 497. [Lord HALSBURY, C., referred to Commissioners of Income Tax v. Pemsel, [1891] A. C. 531, 40 W. R. Dig. 217.] Attorney-General v. Duke of Northumberland, 26 W. R. 586, 7 Ch. D. 745. We submit that to hold that these funds are bona vacantia will be to extend the doctrine in a novel manner.

Ingle Joyce replied.

In addition to the case above cited the following cases were referred to:—Pease v. Pattinson, 34 W. R 361, 32 Ch. D. 154, and Smith v. Cooke, 40 W. R. 67, [1891] A. C. 297.

Lord HALSBURY, C.—In the year 1810 a certain number of persons associated themselves together for the purpose of providing for their widows. They were not incorporated, and though they obtained some of the advantages which are involved in incorporation—inasmuch as they came under the protection of the Friendly Societies Acts—I do not think for the purpose of this inquiry those facts are important. The question which the court has to determine would, I think, have remained the same if they had been simply an associated body of persons for the purpose which I have described. The society has lasted to a very recent period, but is now extinct. All the members are dead, but a remnant of the common fund, amounting to something over £1,200, now remains. Chitty, J., has held that there is a resulting trust in favour of the personal representatives of those who contributed to the fund. I think we are all of opinion that that view cannot be maintained. The entire beneficial interest has been exhausted in respect of each contributor. It was, as I shall have to repeat in another view of the case, a perfectly businesslike arrangement; each man contributed a certain sum of money to a common fund upon the bargain that his widow was to receive, upon terms definitely settled, a certain annuity proportionate to the time during which the husband had contributed to the common fund. There never was and never could be any interest remaining in the contributor other than the right that his wife, if she survived him, should become entitled to a widow's portion thus provided. This was the final and exhaustive destination of all the sums contributed to the common fund. Under these circumstances I am at a loss to see what room there is for the contention that there is any resulting trust.

It is contended, however, that this association may be regarded as a charity. Wide as has been the meaning given to the word "charity" in the Court of Chancery, and, indeed, in one case by the House of Lords, a width of interpretation which I confess has seemed to me in some cases extravagant, I do not think that a perfectly business-like arrangement like this, in which a number of persons associate together and contribute funds to provide for their own widows, has ever been regarded as charity. I think the observations of Hall, V.C., in the case of Clark's Trust are entitled to great weight. His observations were directed to a society whose members were to provide by subscriptions and fines a fund to be distributed for their mutual benefit in cases of sickness, lameness, or old age. In Pease v. Pattinson and Spiller v. Maude it was assumed by the judges in those cases, whether rightly or wrongly it is immaterial to consider, that the relief of poverty and suffering formed one of the elements of the associations therein discussed. Here no such question can possibly arise; it cannot be pretended that a wealthy widow would not be entitled to claim her annuity equally with a poor one. If this be a charitable institution it would be difficult to contend that every life insurance company did not fall under the same category. I am therefore of opinion that this was not a charitable institution. The only other alternative remaining is that which I adopt—viz., that these funds are bona vacantia, and belong to the Crown in that character.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—Chitty, J., has decided that in this case there existed no gift expressing a general intent of charity so that the fund in question could be applied cy-près for charitable purposes; also that the Crown did not take the fund as bona vacantia; and he held that there existed a resulting trust in favour of the personal representatives of all those who had been subscribers to the fund, and he directed inquiries accordingly. The fund was started in 1810. The last surviving ordinary member died in 1878, the last honorary member in 1879, and the last widow in 1892, at which time the trustees of the society had £1,200 in hand undisposed of. The question is, What is to become of this fund? In order to determine if there be a resulting trust it is necessary to ascertain what were the conditions under which each subscriber subscribed to the fund. In the year 1810 certain persons in the town of Helston formed themselves into a society called the Helston Equitable Annuitant Society, and agreed inter se that they would subscribe to a common fund, out of which each member's widow should be provided for to the maximum extent of £25 per annum during her widowhood. Each subscriber to this common fund (I am not now dealing with honorary members) did so upon the terms that if he left a widow the trustees of the society should, out of that fund, provide for her in the prescribed manner during her widowhood. If a member died leaving no widow, there was no resulting trust in favour of his personal representatives upon his death; his subscriptions were not to be returned to them, but were to remain with the society and form part of its common fund. If a member left a widow she was to be provided for during her widowhood, and although the amount of subscriptions the member had paid might possibly not have been exhausted by making the contemplated provision for his widow, nevertheless the surplus was not to be returned to his personal representatives when the widow died, but the whole beneficial interest in what was left also formed part of the common fund of the society. In neither case was there any resulting trust in favour of the representatives of the deceased member.

But it was argued that the proper implication is that when the society itself came to an end, as it has done, there was then a resulting trust of what might happen to be in the coffers of the society in favour of all the personal representatives of those who had been members since the year 1810, and Chitty, J., has so held.

Now, it was never contemplated that the society would come to an end, but, on the contrary, provision was made for the introduction of new members for its perpetual existence, and the existing members had power to alter and revise the rules, so that if it was found that the society was too affluent, provision might be made as to what was to be done with what money might not be wanted. As the member paid his money to the society so he divested himself of all interest in this money for ever, with this one reservation, that if the member left a widow she was to be provided for during her widowhood. Except as to this, he abandoned and gave up the money for ever. The case of Smith v. Cooke, it which it was held there was no resulting trust, shows the principle applicable to such a point. In my opinion this case cannot be likened to that of a man providing a fund by way of trust for the payment of an annuity to his widow during her life, and making no provision for the fund when the widow died and her interest therein ceased, in which case there would be a resulting trust, because the implication in such a case would be that the settlor intended that when the trust came to an end the fund should revert to his representatives, he not having provided to whom it should then go. In such a case there would be no abandonment of the fund as in the present case. In my opinion there was no resulting trust in favour of all those members who had ever subscribed to the fund.

The question then arises, To whom does the £1,200 belong? It is admitted it does not belong to the society, for its objects have come to an end; nor to the trustees of the society, nor to the representatives of the last surviving subscriber; and as for the reasons above it does not belong to the representatives of the members who have subscribed since 1810, all possible claimants being exhausted, it belongs to the Crown as bona vacantia, unless the doctrine of cy-près is to be applied, as where there is a trust which manifests a general intention to devote a fund to charity. The question is, Do the facts of this case show such a trust? The society, it will be noticed, was not a corporation. It had no entity different from that of each of its members. Take the society as it originally existed in 1810 down to 1830, before it adopted the Friendly Societies Act of 1829. During that period, what was the object and intention of each member joining and becoming a member of the society? Was his object to aid the widows of the other members or only to aid his own particular widow? I cannot doubt that his sole and real object was that by becoming a member he might thus be enabled to provide for his widow more efficiently than he otherwise would have been able to do. Some of the members appear to have been of position and importance in Helston, one having been, it was stated, twice mayor, one a solicitor, and others tradesmen of the town. His object and intention in becoming a member was not to provide for the widows of the other members, that was not his object at all. It was simply and solely to make a provision for his own widow, not only by means of his own subscriptions, but also by means of the subscriptions of those members who might happen to die leaving no widows or whose widows might die shortly after becoming widows, augmenting the common fund, together with what might be obtained by means of the subscriptions of such honorary members as could be induced to subscribe. What each man did in becoming a member was to set up and keep going a sort of mutual insurance whereby to insure a better provision for his own widow after his death than he otherwise would have been able to make.

Now, has such an act as this ever been held to manifest a general intention to devote a fund to charity, or indeed to constitute charity at all? I am aware that there are many objects besides those enumerated as charitable objects in the preamble to the Statute of Elizabeth (43 Eliz. c. 4) of which providing for one's own widow is not one, which the courts have held to be charitable and of a public nature, either as being analogous to the enumerated objects or by being within the spirit and intent of the Act, and the recent case in the House of Lords of Commissioners of Income Tax v. Pemsel shows that this is so, but nothing can be found in that case which gives countenance to the argument that a man, by providing a fund for the benefit of his own wife after his death, creates a charitable trust for a public purpose. There are, it is true, cases in which a gift to widows and orphans of a parish, to widows of seamen of a particular port, to twenty aged widows and spinsters, to the widows of respectable tradesmen, to poor relations generally, have been held to show a general intention of charity; but these are gifts to a class, and very different from a gift to a man's own wife to take effect after his death. No case has been cited, nor can I find one, in which such a gift has been held to be charitable, to which cy-près applies. It has been pointed out that the members of the Helston Society altered its rules in 1830 so as to conform with the provisions of the Friendly Societies Act, 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 56), but I cannot see that by so doing they created a charitable trust for a public purpose if they had not done so before. What the society was before the adoption of the Friendly Societies Act as regards being a charity for a public purpose so it remained, the provisions of that Act, as it appears to me, having been adopted, not for the purpose of altering the objects of its members, but for purposes of administration. To hold in this case that each member must be taken to have created a charitable trust for the public benefit of the place where his widow might happen to reside after his death, because his widow might otherwise have possibly gone upon the rates of that place, is to me, with all submission, so far-fetched that I cannot adopt it. It appears to me to be stretching beyond all bounds anything that has been held before, to hold that this is a charitable trust for a public purpose, and for the reasons I have endeavoured to give I agree with Chitty, J., and hold that it is not. In my judgment the Crown is entitled to the £1,200 as bona vacantia, and it should be so declared, and that the costs of all parties should come out of the fund.

RIGBY, L.J.—In this case we have to determine the ownership of a fund of about £1,250, the whole remaining property which formerly belonged to a friendly society called the Helston Equitable Annuitant Society. All claims on the society have been satisfied, and the society itself has ceased to exist by reason of the death of all its members. The learned judge from whose judgment this appeal has been brought, has held that there is a resulting trust in favour of all members of the society from its commencement, or their personal representatives in proportion to the respective contributions made by the members. The members of the society might be ordinary and honorary members, as afterwards explained. In the court below the personal representatives of T. H. Edwards, the last surviving ordinary member, who died in 1878, claimed that he, as survivor, was entitled to the whole fund, but on the appeal this claim was not urged, and the personal representative of Edwards joined in supporting the judgment of the learned judge in favour of members generally. The last surviving member was an honorary member, Sir R. Vyvian, who died in 1879. His personal representatives have disclaimed all interest in the fund.

On behalf of the Attorney-General the fund was claimed for the Crown as bona vacantia and as an alternative case — though this, I think, was not before us argued as the main point—argued that the fund is a charitable fund, and ought to be applied under the sign manual for charitable purposes. I do not feel sure that if the case had come before me for the first time sitting alone I should not have held the society a charity. This conclusion, however, would have been founded upon a number of reasons, no one of which could have been conclusive in itself, derived from the special rules of the society and indications contained in the statutes regulating friendly societies during the existence of the society and since repealed. And I do not think I ought in such a case to differ from the learned judge in the court below and my colleagues in this court, and I say nothing more on the point.

The society was first established in 1810, but in April, 1830, its rules were revised so as to conform with the provisions of the Act of 1829 (10 Geo. 4, c. 56) for the encouragement of friendly societies. And thereby it obtained the benefit of that Act. We had not before us the original rules of the society but only the revised rules of April, 1830, from which we find that the society is formed for the purpose of raising by the subscriptions and also by fines and forfeitures a stock or fund for the relief of widows of deceased members in manner provided by the rules. Among other rules it is provided to the effect following:—Each member on admittance is to pay down eight guineas and one years' contribution as set forth in a table of annual payments. Every person on being admitted is to sign a declaration in writing, which declaration is to be the basis of the contract between the society and the person becoming a member, and if any false or fraudulent representation is used in the declaration the sums paid are to be forfeited to the use of the society, and all claims on that behalf are to cease and be void to all intents and purposes subject to a provision in favour of a widow not privy to the fraud. Fines are imposed on officers and members for not attending meetings and for neglecting to pay contributions, and if contributions and fines remain unpaid for twelve months the defaulter is to be excluded from the society subject to a provision in certain cases in favour of a widow. Other fines are imposed for breach of rules. A person may discontinue being a member on written notice to the secretary. Elaborate provisions are made for payment of different annuities to widows of members and for the forfeiture of annuities, including a provision that no annuitant shall sell or dispose of her annuity, and if it appears that she has done so the annuity is to cease and the purchaser is to lose all benefit and advantage therefrom. The annual contributions of members are to vary according to a table from £2 8s. on a scale increasing to £3 8s., having regard to the length of time during which they have been members. The annuities payable to widows are to vary from £12 to £25 according to the number of years that their husbands have been members. Honorary members are provided for whose widows are to have no benefit. There was at least one honorary member, the said Sir R. Vyvian, and there may have been others.

The provisions of the Act of 1829, which appear material for consideration whether there is a resulting trust, may be summarized as follows: Section 3 makes it obligatory on every society established under the Act before confirmation of the rules to declare by one or more of the rules to be confirmed, all and every the intents and purposes for which the society is intended to be established, and by such rules to direct all and every the uses and purposes to which the money which shall from time to time be subscribed, paid, or given to, or for the use or benefit of such society, or which shall arise therefrom, or in anywise shall belong to the society, shall be appropriated and applied, and in what circumstances any member of the society or other person shall become entitled to any part thereof. Section 8 provides for the rules, when confirmed, becoming binding on the members and officers of the society and the several contributories thereto. Section 26 provides for the dissolution of the society, and among other things that it shall not be lawful for the society by any rule made on the dissolution or determination to direct the division or distribution of any part of the stock or fund to or amongst the members, other than for carrying into effect the general intents and purposes of the society declared by them and confirmed by the justices. Section 39 provides that the Act is to extend to all friendly societies thereafter to be established and also to societies already established, as soon as they should think fit to conform to it. The Act of 1829 appears to have remained in force until repealed with other Acts by 13 & 14 Vict. c. 115, but the repealed Acts remained in force subject to immaterial exceptions with reference to societies under them.

In my judgment there is no resulting trust on the following grounds. All the contributions of ordinary and honorary members and all fines and forfeitures are to go into one common fund. Probably, even if all the accounts of the society from the year 1810 were in existence, it would be impossible to follow the destination of the particular contributions made by each member, or to separate them from the voluntary contributions and funds arising from fines and forfeitures. All the books of the society up to 1850 have, however, been lost, and there is nothing to show how far the £1,250 remaining has been made up of contributions of honorary members, or of fines or forfeitures, or what contributions of ordinary members form part of it.

Probably the only safe inference is that the contributions of members for many years after the establishment of the society have long ago been entirely expended in payments to widows of former members, or for other purposes or the society, and that the £1,250 contains no part of such earlier contributions. The members were not cestuis que trustent of the funds, or of any part thereof, but persons who under contracts or quasi contracts with the society secured for valuable consideration certain contingent benefits for their widows in manner provided by the Acts. Any surplus would, according to the scheme of the rules, be properly used up (under appropriate amendments of the rules) either in payment of large annuities or in reduction of contributions. It is true that no such alterations were made, and it is now too late so to distribute the funds, but I do not think that such omission can give to the contracting parties any benefit which they did not bargain for. The rules, which according to the Act are to state all the uses of the stock, contain no provisions in favour of members, and completely dispose of the contributions in another manner. It is difficult to see why the personal representatives of deceased members should be entitled to any money produced by voluntary contributions, fines, or forfeitures, but no doctrine of resulting trust would entitle them. On the whole I conclude that there is no resulting trust.

Solicitors, Hare & Co.; Robbins, Billings, & Co., for Marrack, Nalder, & Hockin, Truro.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, Lopes, and Rigby, L.JJ.) June 23, 25; July 22, 1896.

HOW v. EARL WINTERTON. (a.)

Trustee—Breach of trust—Neglect to provide fund for payment of annuity—Account—Statutes of Limitation—Trustee Act, 1888 (51 & 52 Vict. c. 59), s. 8.

Where a trustee has committed a breach of trust by neglecting to accumulate a fund to secure the payment of an annuity, section 8 of the Trustee Act, 1888, protects him from any claim for an account of moneys received by him more than six years before action brought.

Appeal from Kekewich, J.

Mrs. Mary Rabett by her will directed that the rents and profits of her real estate should be accumulated for fourteen years, and bequeathed to the plaintiff an annuity to commence at the end of the period of accumulation. The will, as construed by Kekewich, J., and by the Court of Appeal, charged the annuity on the accumulations of rents and profits, as well as on the real estate itself. The testatrix died in 1875. The annuity was paid from 1889 till 1894, after which date it fell into arrear.

(a.) Reported by R. C. MACKENZIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

In August, 1895, the plaintiff commenced an action against the defendant the trustee of the will, claiming an account of the rents and profits which he ought to have accumulated as a fund to meet the annuity, and also claiming to have any deficiency in the fund made good by the defendant. The defendant admitted that he had within six years before action brought, received rents and profits which he ought to have accumulated. Kekewich, J., directed an account of all such rents and profits. Against this order, and also against his lordship's decision (already mentioned) on the construction of the will, the defendant appealed. His appeal was dismissed; and the only matter requiring a report is the plaintiff's cross-appeal, by which she sought to have the account taken as from the death of the testatrix.

Micklem, for the cross-appeal.—Even if the Trustee Act, 1888, applies to a claim for an account, this action is not within section 8, for we seek to recover funds still retained by the trustee. [LINDLEY, L.J., referred to Thorne v. Heard, 44 W. R. 155, [1895] A. C. 495, 503.] An annuitant could not have brought an action unless and until his annuity was in arrear. Even then, only the arrears can be barred, for each year the annuity begins to run anew. In In re Hyatt, Bowles v. Hyatt, 38 Ch. D. 609, 37 W. R. Dig. 79, it was held that an executor could not set up as a defence that he had wrongfully parted with the trust fund.

He also cited In re Bowden, Andrew v. Cooper, 39 W. R. 219, 45 Ch. D. 444.

Bramwell Davis, Q.C., and Godefroi, for the defendant trustee.—Either clause (a) or clause (b) of sub-section 1 of section 8 of the Act of 1888 applies to actions for an account, and such an action must now be brought against a trustee within six years. The plaintiff might have brought an action for administration at any time. This is really an action to recover damages for a breach of trust in not investing the trust funds in a proper way.

They cited Thomas v. Sylvester, 21 W. R. 912, L. R. 8 Q. B. 368.

Micklem replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 22.—LINDLEY, L.J., stated the facts, and continued:—It appears that the defendant has acted perfectly honestly throughout; he did not understand that the annuity was a charge on the rents directed to be accumulated, and instead of accumulating the surplus rents he applied what ought to have been accumulated in keeping down interest on incumbrances and in necessary repairs. The defendant relies on section 8 of the Trustee Act, 1888, as an answer to the plaintiff's present demand. There is no fraud or fraudulent breach of trust to which the trustee is party or privy. The defendant had no trust-money in his hands or under his control at the time of the commencement of the action, nor is it suggested that the defendant has converted to his own use trust-money previously received by him. This action, therefore, is not one of those which are excepted from the operation of clauses (a) and (b) of sub-section 1 of section 8.

Before considering the application of those clauses to the case, it is necessary to ascertain the true nature of the plaintiff's cause of action, and when that cause of action accrued. The breaches of trust of which the plaintiff complains are a series of omissions on the part of the trustee, during fourteen years prior to the 20th of May, 1889, to form a fund for the payment, in case of need, of her annuity. It has been decided that his duty in this respect did not terminate at the end of the term on the 20th of May, 1889, so as to exonerate him from all liability in respect of rents which became payable to him before that date, although they were not in fact paid to him until afterwards. He was bound to accumulate those rents as if he had received them when they became due. They were as much subject to the trusts of the term as the rents which were paid to him during its continuance. Each time the defendant failed to invest what he ought to have invested he committed a breach of trust, in respect of which the plaintiff might have sued him. A series of separate causes of action thus arose, each breach of trust giving her a fresh cause of action. But her annuity did not begin until the end of the term—namely, on the 20th of May, 1889. Until that day she was rather in the position of a person entitled in remainder than in the position of a person entitled in possesion. Although she might have sued the trustee before her interest accrued in possession, she was not bound to do so. For the purposes of the Statutes of Limitation, therefore, her causes of action cannot be regarded as having first accrued before the 20th of May, 1889. Even then she could not have sued for her annuity. Her annuity commenced to run from that time, but no payment in respect of it became due to her until six months afterwards—namely, the 20th of November, 1889. She could not have sued for payment of any arrears of her annuity until that date. Her right, however, to sue for arrears is one thing; her right to sue her trustee for prior breaches of trust is another thing; and, although her right to sue for arrears did not accrue till November, 1889, her right to sue for the previous breaches of trust accrued six months earlier. In this particular case nothing really turns on this point, for the defendant has admitted that within six years next before the issuing of the writ in this action he had rents in his hands which he ought to have invested and accumulated, and there is reason to suppose that he has received some more since. Thorne v. Heard shows that he cannot be treated as if he still retained these moneys so as to deprive him of the benefit of section 8 of the Trustee Act, 1888; but neither that nor any other statute protects him from liability to account for breaches of trust committed by him within the six years next before the commencement of this action. The writ was issued on the 9th of August, 1895, and the account which has been directed is confined to that period.

With these preliminary observations, I pass to clauses (a) and (b) of sub-section 1 of section 8 of the Trustee Act, 1888, on which the question to be decided ultimately depends. It was strenuously contended on behalf of the plaintiff that this case falls within clause (a), and not within clause (b); and further, that if it fell within clause (a) the account must be carried back to the death of the testatrix. I am not able to adopt either of these views, and even if the first is right, the second is, in my opinion, quite untenable. Clause (a) requires an answer to the question, What action or proceeding, if any, could the plaintiff have brought against the defendant in respect of the accounts complained of if he had not been her trustee? In In re Bowden, Andrew v. Cooper, Fry, L.J., said, with reference to this clause: "It is obvious that, if a person had not been a trustee, he could not be sued for a breach of trust; and further, that there is no right or privilege that I am aware of conferred by any Statute of Limitations in respect of a breach of trust. Therefore I should have great difficulty in applying that sub-section to the present case." The case before the Lord Justice was an action by a new trustee against an old trustee to compel him to make good trust funds which he had misapplied. The Lord Justice was right in saying that no action or other proceeding could be taken by such a plaintiff against such a defendant if there had been no trust. But although I share with Fry, L.J., the difficulty presented by clause (a), I cannot avoid the conclusion that to exclude the operation of clause (a) in all cases, on the short ground stated by him would be really to deprive it of all meaning whatever. I cannot think that Fry, L.J., intended to go so far as that. The Legislature appears to have assumed that there might be cases in which, if there were no trust, some action or proceeding might be taken by the plaintiff against the defendant to which some Statute of Limitations would be a defence. It is necessary, therefore, to proceed to inquire what action or proceeding, if any, could have been taken in such a case as this if there had been no trust. First, I will take actions at law. An action on an implied promise, or an action on the case, for a breach of duty, is the only action or proceeding which occurs to me as capable of being maintained under the circumstances supposed. But six years are a bar to any such actions as those. A common law action of account only lay to recover a balance claimed by the plaintiff, and which on taking the account he said would be found payable by the defendant to him. (See Comyns' Digest, "Accompt," which shows how limited the scope of such an action was.) A common law action clearly would not be applicable to such a case as this. I will now turn to equity. An account in equity, excluding all trust, would have no equitable element in it. It would be based on legal and not equitable rights; it would afford better machinery than an action at law, because of the discovery which could be enforced in it, but that is all. To any such action the Statute of Limitations would be as much a bar in equity as at law. (See Foley v. Hill, 1 Ph. 399, and Knox v. Gye, L. R. 5 H. L. 656.) But, assuming that the plaintiff could have sued the defendant in equity for an account if there had been no trust, to what claims could such an account extend? Clause (a) of section 8 of the Trustee Act, 1888, if it applies to trustees' accounts at all, assumes that some Statute of Limitations would be applicable and put trustees' accounts on the same footing as other accounts to which the Statutes of Limitations apply. Under the Statute of James I., as amended first by Lord Tenterden's Act (9 Geo. 4, c. 14), and afterwards by section 9 of the Mercantile Law Amendment Act (19 & 20 Vict. c. 97), no claim could be made in respect of matters more than six years old. This is plain from the language of the last enactment, and was one of the points decided in Knox v. Gye. As Lord Westbury in that case said, the Statute forbids any claim in respect of a matter more than six years before action. This I take to be the law applicable to all cases which can be brought within clause (a) of section 8 of the Trustee Act, 1888.

In the present case the action is maintainable in respect of the defendant's receipts since the 9th of August, 1889, and in respect of rents then in his hands which he ought to have accumulated. It is said that the amount of what he then had cannot be ascertained without taking an account from the death of the testatrix. This, however, is not so. What the defendant had in his hands in 1889 can be ascertained by an inquiry. It is a mere question of fact to be ascertained by evidence, and in particular by the examination of the defendant on oath, and the production of his earlier accounts, which of course are evidence against him. An account of his receipts and payments from 1875 is quite another matter. That involves the disallowance of every payment which the defendant cannot now prove that he is entitled to have allowed as against the plaintiff.

Such an account is necessary to ascertain what the defendant ought to have had on the 9th of August, 1889, but it is not necessary to ascertain what in fact he then had. I see nothing in the nature of the accounts which renders it necessary in this case to go further back than six years, even if clause (a) does apply; and to do so would, in my opinion, be inconsistent with that clause. If clause (a) does not apply, clause (b) clearly does, and by introducing the analogy of an action of debt for money had and received, clause (b) protects the defendant from all liability to account for more than six years before action. Whichever clause applies, the defendant is protected from demands more than six years old. Section 8 is cumbrously worded, and it is difficult to grasp the idea which underlies it, but the short effect of section 8 appears to me to be that, except in three specified cases (namely—fraud, retention by a trustee of trust money when an action is commenced against him, and conversion of trust money to his own use), a trustee who has committed a breach of trust is entitled to the protection of the several Statutes of Limitations as if actions and suits for breaches of trust were enumerated in them. For the above reasons I am of opinion that the plaintiff's cross-notice must be dismissed with costs.

Lopes, L.J.—I have had an opportunity of reading the judgment which has been delivered by Lindley, L.J., and I entirely agree with it.

Rigby, L.J.—I am of the same opinion, but I feel it my duty to say a few words about the construction of section 8. I have nothing to add about the earlier part. That seems plain enough, having regard to the decisions. With regard to clause (a), that, of course, assumes there is a right of action against the trustee. That must be founded on some act or some omission of his, which act or omission would be, from the fact of his being a trustee, a breach of trust. [The lord justice read clause (a) of section 8, and continued:—] It think it is quite obvious that this clause (a), which has to do with remedies only, and not with causes of action, is not intended to suppose a case in which the cause of action, or the corresponding obligation, had gone. That was supposed to continue; and if in such a case there had been any Statute of Limitations applicable as against a person who was not a trustee, I understand clause (a) to provide that that particular right or privilege is to be given to a trustee, as though he had not been a trustee. I am not saying as though he had not committed any breach of duty, or been guilty of any negligence—not that at all—but as though, the breach of duty being the same as it was, he had not been a trustee. That I conceive to be the meaning of clause (a). You must suppose the right of action to exist, and generally one may say that a trustee who undertakes a trust agrees to perform that trust. Throw away the idea of breach of trust, and of the equitable position in which he is placed by the fact that he is a trustee, he is still guilty of a breach of duty, and he is to be treated as though the breach of trust were nothing more or less than a breach of duty by reason of some act or omission of his. I very much incline to the opinion—in fact, I entertain it with some confidence—that this case may be brought within clause (a), and that here it was the trustee's duty yearly to set apart the balance he had in his hands of the rents and profits towards providing a fund on which the annuitant in case of necessity would have a charge. It was a clear breach of duty on the defendant's part not to do that. It was also a breach of trust; but as I read clause (a) it is now to be treated as though it were simply a breach of duty. It is not to be treated as harmless, but it is to be treated as would be the case with any person who was placed under such circumstances under a duty. Of course it may happen that a duty is thrown on him by virtue of his obligation to undertake the trust, or it may be by reason of a covenant to perform a certain duty where the duty is thrown on him by a deed. Then you must look to the appropriate Act of Limitations, that which would have been applicable if the duty had arisen otherwise than by reason of a trust. Throwing aside the question whether it was a breach of trust or not, and for the reasons given, I agree that in this case the appropriate Statute would be the one applicable to an action on an implied promise, or an action on the case, and that the period of limitation would be six years. In other cases the appropriate Statute might be a different one, and the length of period for the running of the Statute might be different. I do not think it necessary that I should say anything about clause (b), because if the true view is that this case does not fall within clause (a), then I think on a proper interpretation of clause (b) it ought to be held to fall within clause (b). The only thing is, you might say this is not an action to recover money. But I do not think that means money belonging to the person suing. It is in substance an action to make the trustee pay money, and to make him pay money into a fund as against which the applicant has a claim. Whether it falls within clause (a) or clause (b), I feel reasonably satisfied it falls within one or the other. Preferably I should say clause (a), but, whether one or the other, the period in each case is six years, and therefore the cross-appeal fails.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Crowders & Vizard, for R. H. Mellersh, Godalming; Bramall, White, & Sanders, for Harvey & Harvey, Southsea.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } Nov. 19.
Chitty, J. }

In re The Streatham and General Estates Co. (Limited). (a.)

Company—Debentures—Charge on uncalled capital—Property—Liquidation.

Where a company having power to charge its uncalled capital, by a debenture charges "the undertaking and all the property of the company whatsoever and wheresoever, both present and future," such a charge does not include uncalled capital got in during liquidation.

Summons.

By the memorandum and articles of the company it was specifically provided that the company might borrow money on debentures charged upon any of the company's property both present and future, including its uncalled capital.

Debentures were issued by which the company charged as security for the money due on such debentures "its undertaking and all its property whatsoever and wheresoever, present and future."

Shortly after the issue of these debentures the company went into liquidation. The only assets in the hands of the liquidator were unpaid calls got in during the liquidation.

(a.) Reported by Ralegh B. Phillpotts, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The question was whether the words of the charge were sufficient to include in the security such uncalled capital.

Robert E. Moore, for the liquidator.

A. F. Peterson, for a debenture-holder.

A. W. Rowden, for the debenture trustees.

CHITTY, J.—The company had power to charge its uncalled capital, and the question is whether the company has exercised that power to its fullest extent. [His lordship read the charge in the debentures.] The term "property" in similar cases has been much discussed. The leading case on the question is that of Ex parte Stanley, 12 W. R. 894, 4 De G. J. & S. 407, afterwards approved by the Privy Council in The Bank of South Australia v. Abrahams, 23 W. R. 668, L. R. 6 P. C. 265, where the judgment was delivered by James, L.J., and the same case was recently approved in Newton v. Anglo-Australian Investment, &c., Co., 43 W. R. 401, [1895] A. C. 244. In Ex parte Stanley there was power to charge "the property or funds" of the company, and there seemed to be no doubt that the property charged was not confined to the property existing at the time when the charge was created. James, L.J., said, in a passage often quoted, that unpaid calls "are property, not of the society immediately, but which may be called up by the directors of the society at their discretion." Of course the addition of other words, such as "properties and rights," or any other apt and proper words, or the context, may be sufficient to enlarge the power of the company or extend the meaning of a term.

The question in the present case is whether there are sufficient words to extend the meaning of the word "property." When it is borne in mind that, according to the decision of Jessel, M.R., in In re Colonial Trusts Corporation, 15 Ch. D. 465, the word "property" in the debentures would include all that existed as property of the company down to the commencement of the winding up, it would be a strange thing to hold that the meaning of the word "property" should be further extended merely because the words of the instrument were "present and future property." To do so would be altering the meaning of the word "property." To use the word "future" does not add anything to the meaning of the word "property."

The debentures, therefore, at the date of their issue, did not include the uncalled capital got in by the liquidator.

Solicitors, C. H. T. Wharton; J. D. Arthur; H. C. Godfray.

Chan. Div. }
Kekewich, J. } Aug. 4, 5, 1896.

In re BUCK.
BRUTY v. MACKEY. (a.)

*Charity—Friendly society—Poverty—Failure of objects—Lapse—*Cy-près.

A testator who died in 1893 bequeathed a legacy of £500 to a friendly society. This society was formed in 1800 for the relief of sick and distressed members, their widows and children. It was supported by subscriptions of members and outside donations, and was not maintained on strictly actuarial principles. Poverty was a necessary qualification to obtain relief. At the testator's death only one member and three annuitants were alive, and two of the latter had since died. The annuity of the last annuitant was fully covered by funds of the society in court.

Held, that the society was a charity, and was in existence at the date of the testator's death; that the legacy had not lapsed, and was applicable cy-près for charitable purposes.

Cunnack v. Edwards, ante, p. 99, [1896] 2 Ch. 679, distinguished.

Thomas Buck, who died on the 8th of January, 1893, by his will dated the 28th of June, 1884, bequeathed a sum of £500 to the Commercial Travellers' Society free from legacy duty, and directed the legacy and the duty thereon to be paid out of his pure personal estate. The testator devised and bequeathed his residuary estate upon trusts in favour of his children as therein set out.

The Commercial Travellers' Society was established in 1800 as a friendly society at 17, Philpot-lane, City of London. Its rules set out that the object of the society was to provide a fund for the relief of sick and distressed members their widows and children, that its affairs should be managed by a committee, and that its members should pay certain fixed sums as subscriptions. The rules also contemplated outside contributions, and the funds of the society were in fact so assisted.

Rule 14 was as follows: "In case a member shall be afflicted with sickness, so as to render him incapable of employment, and in distressed circumstances, or shall become infirm, or meet with any other infirmity which may, in the opinion of the committee, render him an object deserving the assistance of the society, he shall be entitled, at the discretion of the committee, to a sum not exceeding one guinea per week during the time he shall so remain sick and distressed, or such fit object as aforesaid . . . "; and rule 15 provided that, "In case a member shall die and shall leave a widow . . . and one or more child or children in distressed circumstances, the said widow . . . shall receive a sum not exceeding £20 per annum for herself at the discretion of the committee, and in like manner a further sum not exceeding £5 per annum for each child . . . and if such member shall die leaving a child or children in distressed circumstances, and no widow surviving him . . . each such child shall be entitled to a sum not exceeding £10 pounds per annum at the discretion of the committee. . . ."

At the date of the testator's death in 1893 J. B. Mackey was the sole surviving member of the society. He was also trustee and member of the committee, and there were only three annuitants living, of whom two died before 1896, leaving only one, Harriet L. Cage, who was in receipt of an annuity of £32 per annum. This annuity was fully covered by the existing funds of the society, amounting to £4,836 Indian Three per Cent. Stock and £300 in cash, which had been paid into court in 1888 by the then surviving trustees, on the grounds that there were then only five members and six annuitants alive, that no new members had been admitted since 1850, no general meeting held since 1871, and no subscription received since 1874, and that it was impossible to hold meetings and dissolve the society under the Friendly Society Act, 1875.

This was a summons taken out by the executors and trustees of the testator, who had retained the legacy of £500 by which it was asked: (1) Whether the Commercial Travellers Society was so existing at the date of the testator's death as to have become entitled to the legacy of £500, or was not so existing? (2) whether if the society was so existing the legacy ought to be paid into court, or how otherwise it ought to be dealt with? (3) whether if the society was not so existing the legacy ought to be treated as lapsed and fallen into the residuary estate of the testator, or ought to be applied cy-prés for charitable purposes? To this summons J. B. Mackey, Harriet L. Cage, the residuary legatees of the testator, and the Attorney-General were made defendants.

(a.) Reported by C. C. HENSLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law

D. G. Begg, for the plaintiffs.

Sheldon, for J. B. Mackey and Harriet L. Cage.—This society existed at the testator's death. It is a friendly society and not a charity, the cy-prés doctrine does not therefore apply, In re Clark's Trust, 24 W. R. 233, 1 Ch. D. 497. The money should be paid into court or to J. B. Mackey as trustee for the society.

Renshaw, Q.C., and A. M. Begg, for the residuary legatees.—This society was practically dead at the date of the testator's death. The legacy therefore lapsed. It fell into residue and is not applicable cy-prés—In re Rymer, Rymer v. Stanfield, 43 W. R. 87, [1895] 1 Ch. 19. It is doubtful whether this society is a charity or not—a friendly society is not a charity: In re Clark's Trust, and Cunnack v. Edwards, ante, p. 99, [1896] 2 Ch. 679.

Ingle Joyce, for the Attorney-General.—This society is a charity. Friendly societies may, in some cases, be charities. Here poverty is necessary for obtaining relief. This case is distinguishable from Cunnack v. Edwards. The legacy is applicable cy-prés: In re Slevin, Slevin v. Hepburn, 39 W. R. 578, [1891] 2 Ch. 236; Spiller v. Maude,, 13 W. R. 69, 32 Ch. D. 158n.

KEKEWICH, J.—There are here two questions to be decided quite independent of one another. The first question is whether the Commercial Travellers' Society, to which society through its treasurer the testator gives £500 for the purposes of the Society, is a charity within the ordinary doctrine of the court as expounded in the case of The Commissioners for Special Purposes of the Income Tax v. Pemsel, [1891] A. C. 531, 40 W. R. Dig. 217. Until that first question is decided we cannot make any progress with the other. If I were uncontrolled by decision the tendency of my opinion would be to hold this society to be a charity. Am I, then, controlled by decision? I think not. The case of Cunnack v. Edwards, and all the other cases cited, dwell on the absence of the ingredient of povery in persons entitled to the benefit of the institution. Lord Halsbury, in giving judgment in that case of Cunnack v. Edwards, speaks of the society he there had to consider as "a perfectly business-like arrangement," and this society has been described in argument as a mutual insurance society. If this is a case of a perfectly business-like arrangement, if it is a mutual insurance society, then it seems to me that not only am I bound by authority, but that it is a case which would clearly, reasonably, and fairly fall outside the definition of a charity.

But it has been pointed out that this society has been maintained and has reached its present position, which is one at least of perfect solvency, not merely by subscriptions of members whether life or annual, whose subscriptions would be in certain fixed sums, but also by donations or voluntary subscriptions either given by living persons or by will. That is a matter, perhaps, of some importance though by no means conclusive, taking it into consideration in connection with other things. It is obvious, I think, on the face of those rules, that this is not a society formed and maintained on actuarial principles. That is true of a large number of societies either charitable or in the nature of mutual insurance societies. Some excellent institutions of that character could not have been maintained and kept solvent but for large donations; many of them, and certainly this society, were not founded on actuarial principles. It depended on adventitious aid, donations from those who did not themselves desire to have any benefit from the society. That is really why it is not of so much importance that there were donations at all. They are for a different purpose. They are to raise the level of the benefits which ought, in a perfectly business-like arrangement, to be arrived at by actuarial calculations. Now, the funds of the society, passing over members, are to be applied in payment of certain annuities. Widows are to take £20, children £10. There is no provision that those annuities are to vary according to the funds of the society. There is no calculation that the funds would provide those annuities. They depend, no doubt, on outside subscriptions. It is not, therefore, a mutual insurance society, it is not a perfectly business-like arrangement. It is, I think, partly business and partly charitable. But I find this, that as regards both widows and children the provision is strictly for those who are in what is called "distressed circumstances." I have before me the original rules of 1800, and since that time there appears to have been no substantial alteration. As regards members rule 14 provides that in case a member shall be afflicted with sickness so as to render him incapable of employment—that is a mere friendly society—and in distressed circumstances, or shall become infirm or meet with any other infirmity which may, in the opinion of the committee render him an object deserving the assistance of the society, he shall be entitled, "and so on." "Distressed circumstances," though capable of many interpretations grammatically, no doubt there means not only that a member is so sick that he cannot follow his ordinary employment, but that his position in life is such that he cannot live independently of that employment, that he is distressed in that state. I do not think there can be any doubt that that is the meaning of the words. Then as regards infirmity, it means some permanent disease, accident, or anything of that kind which may render him an object deserving of the assistance of the society. Although there is no further guide than the words themselves give, it is only reasonable to conclude that the committee would not be doing their duty in considering a man an object deserving the assistance of the society, if, however painful his physical state might be, he had ample means. I understand that that points distinctly to poverty. The same is true as regards the widows and children who are to be in distressed circumstances. So here I have every element of proverty, which Hall, V.C., in the case of In re Clark's Trust, thought was absent, and it has been pointed out in the case of The Commissioners for Special Purposes of the Income Tax v. Pemsel that although the decisions have gone far away from poverty as being the strict limit of charity, yet at the same time poverty is in itself an object of charity, and when you have it linked to the provisions of such a society as this, it is impossible to say that this is a business-like arrangement or a mutual insurance society. To my mind this society is a charity, and if I am not precluded, as I think I am not, from coming to such a decision, I think I am bound to say it is a charity.

Then, if it is a charity, comes the second question, Is there a lapse? I will assume that if this legacy of £500 is given to a charity which has ceased to exist at the date of the testator's death, which seems to be the critical point, then the law of lapse applies, at any rate to this extent, that the testator fails to specify the legatee, and, therefore, as there is no legatee, the society being non-existent, just as a person might be non-existent, the money falls into residue. But it is agreed that not only at the testator's death, but up to the present time, there is at least one annuitant claiming against the funds of the society, so that it is alive to that extent, and must remain alive so long at least as that annuitant survives. The society cannot be dead, though it may still be moribund. But there is a great difference between being in a moribund condition and being dead. Test it in this way. Suppose that this annuitant, who is entitled to be paid according to the rules of the society, is not paid; could she not assert her rights against this fund which is in court against its administrators? It seems to me there is a duty to provide for this annuity still existing, and that consequently the charitable institution is still existing. It does not follow, however, that because it is still existing that it has not practically failed. It seems to me that it has failed, except so far as it is necessary to provide for this particular annuitant. That is a matter of consideration as regards the fund in court, with which I am not now dealing. It must be dealt with at another time. As regards this £500, it is clearly not wanted for this particular annuity, and I ought to at once take care that it is applied to congenial objects—that is to say, objects akin to those to which the testator devoted his legacy, to which it cannot be strictly applied because there are no means of applying it.

His lordship then made an order declaring that the society was a charitable society, and was existing at the date of the testator's death, and that the legacy of £500 had not lapsed, and directed the £500 to be brought into court after payment of costs, with liberty to the Attorney-General to apply for a scheme.

Solicitors, Duffield & Bruty; Hare & Co.; West, King, Adams, & Co.

Chan. Div.
Romer, J. } Oct. 28.

DOUGLASS v. PINTSCH'S PATENT LIGHTING CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Patent law — Threats—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, s. 32.

A letter containing a threat of legal proceedings, written with the intention of being understood to refer to patent claims of the defendants, and the natural effect of which, under the circumstances, was to be so understood, but which contained no express reference to any such patent rights,

Held, to be a threat under section 32 of the Patents, &c., Act, 1883.

Trial of action.

This was an action to restrain threats, under section 32 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883.

The plaintiff had been consulting engineer to the Corporation of the Trinity House up to December, 1895. The defendant company were owners of a patent for floating lights, granted to C. D. Abel in 1876, which expired in 1890. They were also owners of other patents for improvements thereon which are still subsisting. Prior to November, 1895, the defendants in the course of their business supplied gas-buoy lanterns to the Trinity House. They had lately tendered for the supply of lanterns to the Lancashire and Yorkshire and London and North-Western Joint Railways for use at Fleetwood Harbour. In November, 1895, they were informed by Captain Jackson, the harbour master, that the contract for the supply of lanterns had been placed in the hands of the plaintiff.

Mr. Rickman, the secretary of the defendant company, thereupon, on the 23rd of November, 1895, sent to Captain Jackson the following letter:—

"Pintsch's Patent Lighting Company (Limited),
"38, Leadenhall-street, London, E.C.
"Captain Jackson, Fleetwood.

"Dear Sir,—I am in receipt of your letter of yesterday's date, and am sorry to hear what has happened. I think at any rate you might have asked me a price for my gas-buoy lanterns. I am very much afraid that the matter will lead to a great deal of difficulty and some unpleasantness and ill-feeling, and you must not be surprised if the company applies for an injunction against Mr. Douglass to restrain him from selling his gas-buoy lanterns.—Yours truly, "W. B. RICKMAN."

On the same day Rickman wrote a similar letter to the secretary of the joint railways, which also contained no mention of, or express reference to, any patent rights of the defendants.

The plaintiff claimed an injunction restraining the defendants from alleging that the gas-buoy lanterns sold by the plaintiff were an infringement of the patents of the defendants, and from threatening to take legal proceedings thereon.

The defendants stated that the letters in question were not written with reference to their rights as patentees, but under the bonâ fide belief that the plaintiff had obtained the design for the gas-buoys manufactured by him whilst at work at Trinity House, and that, such being the case, he had no right to make use of such knowledge in supplying goods in competition with them, and might be restrained from doing so. They gave evidence tending to show that such was their real belief.

The plaintiff denied these allegations.

Moulton, Q.C., and A. J. Walter, for the plaintiff.

Neville, Q.C., and Kirby, for the defendants.

ROMER, J.—The plaintiff is entitled to the relief sought. It is true that the letter of the 23rd of November, 1895, did not specify in terms the patents of the defendants or refer to any patents in particular, and was not written on behalf of the defendants expressly claiming as patentees. But the natural effect of such a letter upon the mind of an ordinary person would be that the threat of legal proceedings contained in it concerned the rights of the defendants as patentees. It is true that Rickman says he had not the patents of the company in his mind when he wrote that letter, but I distrust his memory, and I think that he had the patent rights in his mind, and knew that the person receiving the letter would probably think that the company, through Mr. Rickman, was claiming to be patentees of the gas-buoy lanterns. I also think that he doubted whether, in a court of law, the existing patents of the company would enable them to restrain the plaintiff selling the lanterns, and that he was not ready to act up to his threats. It occurred to him that there was another ground, though an absurd one in law, for restraining the plaintiff selling the lanterns—namely, his connection with Trinity House. But though that idea occurred to him when he wrote the letters, he also had the patents of the company in his mind, and intended them to operate upon the minds of the persons to whom he wrote.

(a.) Reported by NEVILLE TEBBUTT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Under the circumstances the case comes within section 32 of the Patents, &c., Act, 1883.

Judgment for the plaintiff.

Solicitors, Bridger & Son; Blyth, Dutton, Hartley, & Blyth.

Q. B. Div. (Grantham and Wright, JJ.) Nov. 6.

REG. v. MAYOR, &c., OF HASTINGS. (a.)

Local government—Public health—Drain or sewer—Single drain draining several houses—Liability of corporation to repair—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 15, 41—Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 59), s. 19.

The owner of several houses, each draining into a common drain at the rear of the houses and thence at one end into the public sewer in the road, applied for a mandamus to the corporation to repair and maintain the said drain as being a sewer. No application had previously been made to them under section 41 of the Public Health Act, 1875, on complaint of the existence of a nuisance.

Held, that the corporation was liable to repair and maintain the drain, and that their general liability under section 15 of the Public Health Act, 1875, to keep in repair all sewers belonging to them was not taken away by section 19 of the Amendment Act of 1890, which extends section 41 of the Act of 1875, and which was adopted by the corporation in their local Acts.

Held, further, that, as a general rule, in such cases as this, a mandamus was not the proper remedy, but that complaint should be made to the Local Government Board under section 299 of the Public Health Act, 1875.

In this case a rule nisi had been obtained by one W. R. Young, calling upon the Corporation of Hastings to show cause why a writ of mandamus should not issue directed to them to maintain and repair a certain sewer.

Young was the owner of twenty-nine houses in Athelston-road, Hastings.

In 1879 application was made on behalf of the then owner of the land on which these houses are situate to the urban sanitary authority for their approval of certain plans for these houses. These plans showed that each of these houses was to be drained into a common drain or sewer at their rear, which drain or sewer was to be conveyed at one end into to the sewer in Athelston-road. The authorities approved of these plans subject to the condition that each of the houses should be drained separately into the sewer in Athelston-road.

The original plans, however, were carried out, and the houses when completed were certified by the borough surveyor as being fit for human habitation.

Certain wells at the rear of these houses, and which supplied water to them, became polluted owing to defects in the common drain at the rear, which drained all these house. Young thereupon called upon the local authorities to put this drain into proper repair as being a sewer vested in and under their control within section 13 of the Public Health Act, 1875. The local authority refused to do this on the ground that the drain was not a sewer vested in them, but was a "single private drain," and was repairable by the owner of the houses. Thereupon the owner obtained the said rule.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Section 148 of the Hastings Improvement Act, 1885, provides that "in cases where two or more houses are connected with a single private drain which conveys their drainage into a public sewer, the corporation shall have all the powers conferred by section 41 of Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55)."

Section 41 of that Act provides that "on the written application of any person to a local authority, stating that any drain . . . is a nuisance or injurious to health, . . . the local authority may, by writing, empower their surveyor or inspector of nuisances . . . to enter such premises . . . and cause the ground to be opened and examine such drain. . . . If the drain . . . on examination appears to be in bad condition or to require alteration or amendment, the local authority shall forthwith cause notice in writing to be given to the owner or occupier of the premises requiring him . . . to do the necessary works; and if such notice is not complied with, the person to whom it is given shall be liable to a penalty, . . . and the local authority may . . . execute such works and may recover . . . from the owner the expenses incurred bythem in so doing."

Section 19 (1) of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 59), provides that "where two or more houses belonging to different owners are connected with a public sewer by a single private drain, an application may be made under section 41 of the Public Health Act, 1875," and subsection 3 says that "for the purposes of this section the expression 'drain' includes a drain used for the drainage of more than one building." Part III. of this Act, which contains the above section, was adopted by defendant corporation. By section 15 of the Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), it is, however, provided that "every local authority shall keep in repair all sewers belonging to them, and shall cause to be made such sewers as may be necessary for effectually draining their district for the purposes of this Act."

Bosanquet, Q.C. (Boxall and Trevor with him) showed cause. The whole question is whether the corporation or the owner is liable, and the cases decided show that the liability is on the private owner: Self v. Hove Commissioners, 43 W. R. 300, [1895] 1 Q. B. 685; Hill v. Hair, 43 W. R. 651, [1895] 1 Q. B. 906, is distinguishable from that case. Self v. Hove Commissioners was followed and approved of in Bradford v. Mayor, &c., of Eastbourne, ante, p. 31, [1896] 2 Q. B. 205, and Hill v. Hair disapproved. [WRIGHT, J.—These cases differ from the present one because here no application has been made to the corporation under section 41 of the Act of 1875, nor has the corporation taken any steps under that section.]

Macmorran, Q.C. (S. G. Lushington with him), in support of the rule, was not called upon, but in reply to a question by Wright, J., as to whether a mandamus could be granted in this case, cited Reg. v. Vestry of St. Matthew, Bethnal Green, 44 W. R. 697, [1896] 2 Q. B. 319.

GRANTHAM, J.—In this case the mandamus must go. The decision of Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J., and Wills, J., in Bradford v. The Mayor, &c., of Eastbourne does not apply to this case, as here the owner applied to the local authorities to do what was necessary with regard to this sewer, and sought to enforce the general obligation imposed upon them by section 15 of the Public Health Act, 1875. They refused to comply on the ground that it was a drain which the owner was liable to repair. I do not think they had any right to do that. The owner was exercising his undoubted right in applying to them to put this sewer in proper order. The language of section 15 is quite clear; and I do not think that section 41, which is relied upon by the local authorities, was intended to apply to such a case as this where no application has been made to them by anybody complaining of a nuisance. It simply comes to this, that the local authorities, to save themselves expense, are endeavouring to put in force a section which was intended for entirely different purposes.

WRIGHT, J.—Before I come to the case itself I will say a few words on the form in which it comes before us. A rule nisi for a mandamus has been obtained here, but I do not think it is an example which ought to be followed as a rule. In the case of the Bethnal Green Vestry it was allowed to save expense, but I do not think that applications for a prerogative mandamus should be made in small matters of this kind. That point was not argued at all in the Bethnal Green case. I think the proper remedy is by complaint to the Local Government Board under section 299 of the Public Health Act, 1875. [GRANTHAM, J.—I quite agree in what my learned brother has said that this should not have been in the form of an application for a mandamus.] The proper remedy is under section 299 of the Act which calls upon the local authorities to remedy what is complained of.

Now, coming to the case itself it seems to me the bulk of the argument has been entirely beside the general question in the case. First of all there is the general liability of the Urban Sanitary Authority under section 15 of the Public Health Act, 1875, to repair and maintain all sewers. There are many decisions that it does not matter by whom the sewers have been constructed so long as they are sewers within the meaning of the Act. The general liability has not been changed, and these drains when they drain two or more houses are just as much drains or sewers as in other cases. If it had been intended by section 19 of the Act of 1890 or by the local Act to repeal the general liability imposed upon local authorities to repair sewers of this kind, totally different language would have been used. It would have been very easy to have altered the language of the Public Health Act of 1875 so that a drain or sewer draining two or more houses should no longer be considered a sewer within the meaning of the Act of 1875, but nothing of the sort has been done. What has been done is this: the general liability to repair these sewers being left untouched, a section is enacted giving a very large measure of relief in certain cases to the local authorities, namely, section 19 of the Act of 1890 which applies to these sort of sewers, the powers as to drains contained in section 41 of the Act of 1875. What that section 41 does is this: it enables the local authority, when complaint is made to them of the existence of a nuisance of a drain, and not merely of a drain but all kinds of sanitary matters, to enter upon the premises and examine the drains, and if they find them not in good condition they may put them right again. That arises only where the thing has gone so far as that it is an actual nuisance and injurious to health. It is quite just that if an occupier or owner allows his sanitary arrangements to get into such a state as that they have become a nuisance to health he should be liable for the expense of pulling them up and putting them in repair. And that is what the Legislature has enacted by section 19 of the Act of 1890, and in the case of Bradford v. The Mayor, &c., of Eastbourne, it seems to me that the Lord Chief Justice and Wills, J., were dealing with the powers of the authorities under these sections, and were not holding that they took away the general liability for repairing any sewers under section 15. Certainly in the case of Self v. The Hove Commissioners there was no such intention of so holding. In Hill v. Hair Cave, J., drew an inference which has been disapproved by other judges.

It follows that section 41 is not applicable in such a case and the mandamus must therefore go.

Rule absolute.

Solicitors for the prosecutor, C. H. W. Osborne, for Young, Son, & Coles, Hastings.

Solicitors for the defendants, J. H. Lydall, for B. F. Meadows, Town Clerk, Hastings.

Q. B. Div.
(Grantham and Wright, JJ.) Nov. 5.

VESTRY OF THE PARISH OF ST. MARY, BATTERSEA (Appellants) v. PALMER AND ANOTHER (Respondents). (a.)

Metropolis management—Street—"New street"—Paving expenses—Apportionment—Road partially built along—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), s. 105—Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102), ss. 77, 112.

The respondents were the owners of two plots of land in and abutting that part of a road lying within the district of the appellant vestry, the road having been formed or laid out after 1862. So much of the road as was within the district of the appellant vestry was 200 yards long, and the present proceedings related to such portion only; on one side of such portion of the road was only one house, and on the other, one house, a church, and a hall. The rest of such portion of the road was unbuilt upon. The vestry, having paved such portion of the road, summoned the respondents before the magistrate for the payment of the sums apportioned by order of the vestry in respect of the land of which the respondents were owners towards the paving expenses. The magistrate dismissed the summons on the ground that such portion of the road was not a new street within the meaning of section 77 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102).

Held, that such portion of the road was not a "new street." The Legislature appeared to contemplate that in order that a road should be a street within the Metropolis Management Acts of 1855 and 1862 it must be composed wholly or partially of houses.

Special case.

This was a case stated by R. O. B. Lane, Esq., one of the metropolitan police court magistrates under 20 & 21 Vict. c. 43 and 42 & 43 Vict. c. 49.

The respondents were summoned in respect of a claim for £105 5s. 6d., being the sum apportioned by the order of the appellants, dated the 11th of December, 1895, in respect of certain premises of which the respondents were the owners, and being the proportion alleged to be payable in respect of such premises towards the expenses of paving a new street known as Ramsden-road.

The magistrate dismissed the summons.

The facts as set out in the case stated are as follows:—

1. The vestry are a vestry within the meaning of the Metropolis Local Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), and the various statutes amending the same.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

2. The road known as Ramsden-road is considerably over half a mile in length, is partly within the district of the appellants, and partly within the district of the Wandsworth Board of Works. The portion of Ramsden-road involved in the present proceedings is the portion lying within the district of the appellants—that is to say, the portion lying between Thurleigh-road and Nightingale-lane, and it is hereinafter referred to as the Battersea portion. The remainder of the road is referred to as the Wandsworth portion. The whole road is a highway, and was formed or laid out as a road or roads in or after the year 1866. The Wandsworth portion, or some parts thereof, have been considerably built upon, but the precise extent of such building did not appear.

3. The respondents are the owners and occupiers of two plots of land in and abutting on the Battersea portion.

4. On the 14th of November, 1894, the appellants deemed it necessary and expedient, and resolved that so much of Ramsden-road as is within their district should be paved, and the appellants accordingly did well and sufficiently pave that part of the said road. The costs and expenses of such paving having at a subsequent date—viz., the 11th of December, 1895—been ascertained, the appellants apportioned such costs and expenses on the owners of the houses and land bounding and abutting on the said road. The proportion and amount of such costs and expenses so charged and apportioned by the appellants to the respondents was £105 0s. 6d.

The appellants had in the year 1893 executed certain temporary repairs in the Battersea portion under the powers of section 3 of the Metropolis Management (Amendment) Act, 1890, and their object in paving the Battersea portion in the year 1894, was to obviate the necessity of making repeated applications to the adjoining owners under that section for the cost of current repairs.

The Battersea portion of Ramsden-road is about 200 yards long. On the west side there is only one building—namely, a house called "Courtlands"—which fronts towards Ramsden-road." On the east of the southern end there is a house named "Shetlands," which fronts towards Nightingale-lane and at the northern end are St. Luke's Church and hall, having an entrance in Thurleigh-road and another in Ramsden-road. These are the only buildings on the Battersea portion. No new buildings have been erected in the Battersea portion for the last twenty years.

6. On the part of the appellants it was contended that the Battersea portion of Ramsden-road was a street within the meaning of 18 & 19 Vict. c. 120, s. 250, and that it had been laid out and formed since the passing of the Act 25 & 26 Vict. c. 102, and was therefore in law a new street within the meaning of 25 & 26 Vict. c. 102, s. 112, and that the appellants were therefore entitled to pave it when they deemed it necessary or expedient to do so, and to recover the cost and expenses of doing so from the owners of the houses and land abutting on or bounding the said road.

7. On the part of the respondents it was contended that in the absence of any unusual features or circumstances before any road became a new street within the meaning of section 105 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), and section 77 of the Metropolis Management Amendment Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102), a substantial part of at any rate one side of the road must be occupied by buildings, and the following cases were referred to: St. George's Local Board v. Ballard, 43 W. R. 709, [1895] 1 Q. B. 702; Gozzett v. Malden Urban Sanitary Authority, [1894] 1 Q. B. 327; and The Greenwich Local Board v. Davis, 64 L. J. M. C. 257.

The learned magistrate found as a fact that the Battersea portion of Ramsden-road had not been built upon to such an extent as to have become a street in the popular sense of the term, and he dismissed the summons on the ground that the Battersea portion of Ramsden-road was not a new street within the meaning of the sections above referred to, and that the appellants had acted prematurely in paving it as such.

The question for the court was whether on the facts and findings above stated such decision was right in law.

Channell, Q.C., and Earle, for the appellants.—The magistrate was wrong in dismissing the summons. Section 250 of the Act of 1855 gives a definition of a "street," but section 112 of the Act of 1862 defines a "new street." This street was a street laid out subsequent to 1862, and therefore it comes within the terms of section 112. It is quite immaterial whether it has or has not a single house upon it According to the definition in section 112 the expression "new street" shall apply to and include "all streets hereafter to be formed or laid out." There are no authorities cutting down that definition, but several that extend it.

Freeman, Q.C., and Daldy, for the respondents.—The finding of the magistrate is in accordance with all the cases. In Pound v. Plumstead Board of Works, 20 W. R. 177, L. R. 7 Q. B. 183, Blackburn, J., says: "I think that it is plain the Legislature are here using the word "street" in its ordinary popular and natural sense, and mean a place with continuous houses on each side." In Davis v. Board of Works for Greenwich, [1895] 2 Q. B. 219, Lord Esher, M.R., speaking of a road, says, at p. 226: "It did not become a street in the ordinary sense of the term until a sufficient number of houses had been built alongside of it to make it a street in that sense. [WRIGHT, J.—I do not think there is any direct authority on the point before us.]

Earle, in reply.—Lord Esher, M.R., in the case just cited, says at p. 226: "It has been held by this court that if a street is a new street in the ordinary sense of the term, independently of the definition in section 112, it may be dealt with as such; and that the effect of the definition is to bring within the category of new streets things which would not in the ordinary sense of the term be called new streets, not to exclude things which come within the ordinary sense of the term." There is no case to show that the expression "new street" is to be taken in any sense but its full meaning.

GRANTHAM, J.—In this case we think that the learned magistrate was right in refusing to make the order for payment, although it may be that he was not quite right in some of the reasons that he gave. We think that although the learned counsel who appears for the appellants was right in saying that section 105 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), was undoubtedly extended by the 77th section of the Act of 1862 as far as its powers to recover money spent was concerned—because by the 77th section of the Act of 1862 they are enabled to recover it from the owners of land as well as from the owners of houses—yet his argument was obliged to be based on the fact that they were justified in acting purely on the 77th section, without saying that they were remitted back to the powers of the 105th section of the Act of 1855. The 77th section of the Act of 1862 says distinctly: "Where any vestry or district board shall, under the powers given by the 105th section of the firstly-recited Act" (that is the Act of 1855) "have paved, or be about to pave any new street, the owners of the land bounding or abutting on such street shall be liable to contribute to the expenses or estimated expenses of paving the same as well as the owners of houses therein." All that section 77 seems to have done is to have extended the powers of the authorities so as to enable them to bring in the owners of land as well as the owners of houses, but it was not intended to give them powers to make the owners of land exclusively pay. When I say exclusively, I mean practically exclusively, because the evidence is that there are only two houses in this street, both old houses, and that there are no other houses at all and no prospect of any being built within twenty years. That is how I understand the case and the findings of the learned magistrate. Then we have to refer back to section 105 of the Act of 1855 to see what the power is. There it says: "In case the owners of the houses forming the greater part of any new street laid out or made, or hereafter to be laid out or made, which is not paved to the satisfaction of the vestry or district board," &c., "be desirous of having the same paved, or if such vestry or district board deem it necessary or expedient that the same should be so paved, then in either of such cases such vestry or board shall well and sufficiently pave the same." That is where there are houses upon either side or one side of the street. That does not seem to give them power to pave a street where there are none of those houses, in the way it is suggested here. Under those circumstances, although I do not think we are justified in deciding it on the mere question of whether it is, in the popular meaning, a new street or not, we think that the definition clause of the Act of 1862 (see section 112) is not wide enough to cover it, and that on the principle of law, the magistrate was right in refusing to make the order for the payment in this case; and therefore this appeal must be dismissed.

WRIGHT, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think Mr. Earle has said everything that possibly can be said on the point, and I entirely agree with him that this street is or may be for some purposes a new street; but the question is whether it is a new street for the purpose of section 105 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, or section 77 of the Act of 1862. I really cannot feel any doubt, looking at the language of the section, although the question is a very important one; important because, as the learned counsel has pointed out, this road is only a section in the middle of a long road, and it may be very inconvenient that a portion of a long road should be imperfectly paved while the rest is properly paved. we cannot help that. If you look at section 105 it not merely begins by treating "houses" as the essence of what is a street for the purposes of the section, but you find that later on it uses this expression: "And the owners of the houses forming such street shall, on demand, pay to such vestry or board the amount of the estimated expenses." Clearly, when that section was passed, the Legislature was thinking of a street composed wholly or partially of houses, and I should say that, whether there were a sufficient number of houses or not to make a street according to that test, would be a question for the magistrate.

Then we come to section 77 of the Act of 1862, which provides that, under section 105 of the Act of 1855, the vestry or district board may charge persons whose land has no houses upon it as well as the owners of houses. I do not think that widens the scope of section 105. The question is a very important one from every point of view, but I do not think myself that there is any real doubt about it.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellants, W. W. Young & Son.

Solicitors for the respondents, Simpson, Palmer, & Winder.

Q. B. Div. (Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J.) June 27; Aug. 5, 1896.

JONES v. GERMAN. (a.)

Justices—Jurisdiction—Search warrant—Information—Validity of warrant—Liability of magistrate.

The information on which a search warrant to search for stolen goods is granted by a magistrate need not allege the actual commission of a felony. To justify the magistrate, it is sufficient if the information allege reasonable grounds of suspicion; and the warrant need not specify the particular goods for which search is desired.

Further consideration.

The action was tried before Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J., with a special jury, and upon the findings of the jury the case was reserved for further consideration.

The facts and the substance of the arguments appear in the judgment, and in addition to the cases referred to in the judgment, the following were cited: Caudle v. Seymour, 1 Q. B. 889; Cave v. Mountain, 1 Man. & G. 257; Lawrenson v. Hill, 10 Ir. C. L. R. 177; McDonald v. Bulwer, 13 Ir. C. L. R. 549; Wilkes v. Wood, 19 Howell's State Trials, 1153; and also section 2 of 22 Geo. 3, c. 58; section 103 of the Larceny Act, 1861, 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96; and section 2 of the Justices Protection Act, 1848, 11 & 12 Vict. c. 44, upon which the defendant relied.

Lawson Walton, Q.C., and A. E. Gill, for the plaintiff.

Carson, Q.C., and Hohler, for the defendant.

Cur. adv. vult.

Aug. 5.—Lord RUSSELL of Killowen, C.J., read the following judgment:—The action was an action for illegal arrest, false imprisonment, and trespass to goods. The plantiff was, at the times material in the action, employed as butler and bailiff to one Thomas Wood, at Brasted in Kent, and the defendant is a justice of the peace for the county of Kent. On the 8th of June, 1895, Thomas Wood swore an information before the defendant that "he hath just and reasonable cause to suspect, and doth suspect, that William Jones, of Brasted, has in his possession certain property belonging to the said Thomas Wood who upon his oath does depose and say that the said William Jones has been in his employ for five years and is now under notice to quit and that he has requested the said William Jones to allow him to search several boxes which the said William Jones has had packed ready to be taken away but which he refused to be looked through." On the same day the defendant granted a search warrant for the said goods authorizing the constable of the parish of Sevenoak in the following terms: "With proper assistance to enter the said premises occupied by the said William Jones, in the day-time, and there diligently search for the said goods, and if the same, or any part thereof shall be found upon such search, that you bring the goods so found, and also the body of the said William Jones, before me or some other of her Majesty's justices of the peace in and for the said county of Kent to be disposed of and dealt with according to law."

(a.) Reported by Sir SHERSTON BAKER, Bart., Barrister-at-Law.

In pursuance of the warrant a search for the property of Thomas Wood was made in the presence of the plaintiff and Thomas Wood, and Thomas Wood then identified and claimed as his property certain articles, all of which articles were found packed in the boxes of the plaintiff, and the plaintiff was thereupon charged by Thomas Wood with stealing them, and was taken into custody. Subsequently the plaintiff was in due course of law charged before the defendant with stealing the said goods, and was committed for trial at the quarter sessions, and the grand jury returned a true bill. Subsequently it was agreed between the plaintiff and Thomas Wood that in consideration of Thomas Wood not offering any evidence against the plaintiff, certain of the articles should be given up to Thomas Wood, and that the plaintiff would take no proceedings for false imprisonment, or malicious prosecution against Thomas Wood. In pursuance of the terms of this agreement no evidence was offered on the part of the prosecution, and a verdict of not guilty was returned. The plaintiff then brought the present action against the defendant, alleging that the warrant was granted illegally and without jurisdiction because the information did not charge the commission of any criminal offence, and did not specify the goods for which search was desired. The jury assessed the plaintiff's damages at £15 if the defendant was liable only in respect of the search, and at £75 if he was liable for the arrest and imprisonment until committal for trial, subject, however, to the question which was subsequently argued before me, whether the defendant was liable at all. I will deal with these two objections in the above-mentioned order.

Now it seems clear that at common law a justice has the general power to issue a search warrant for stolen goods (See 2 Hale's Pleas of the Crown, 113, 149, 150; Entick v. Carrington, 19 Howell's State Trials, at p. 1067; Burn's Justice of the Peace, vol. 5, p. 1180), and although the earlier authorities are not clear on the subject, it was expressly decided by a strong court in Elsee v. Smith, 1 Dow. & R. 97, that an allegation of the actual commission of a felony is not necessary to justify a magistrate in granting a search warrant. Abbott, C.J., in giving judgment in this case, said: "It need not be a positive and direct averment upon oath that the good are stolen, in order to justify the magistrate in granting his warrant. There are many cases in which a cautious man might not choose to swear that his property is stolen, nevertheless he might have great reason to suspect a particular party, and the magistrate would be well warranted in granting his search warrant. Suppose the case of a horse which has been lost by its owner, and it is found in the possession of any person, the owner in that case might not like to take upon himself to swear that the horse had been stolen; for it may have strayed. But when he finds that his horse is concealed in the stable of another person, he may very naturally conclude that it must be stolen, from the circumstance of the concealment, and therefore he may very conscientiously swear that he suspects it to have been stolen. If, under such circumstances, the magistrate is not authorized in issuing his search warrant, it might happen in many cases that felonies would go undetected." It seems to me therefore that on this part of the case the question is whether the information can be fairly understood as alleging reasonable grounds for suspecting that the goods were being feloniously dealt with by the defendant. I think it can. Supposing (to take the illustration put by the defendant's learned counsel) the same language to be the subject of an action of libel, with the innuendo suggested, it would be, in my judgment, wrong to rule that the words complained of were not capable of bearing that innuendo.

But it is said that this warrant is granted under section 103 of 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, which says: "If any credible witness shall prove upon oath before a justice of the peace a reasonable cause to suspect that any person has in his possession or on his premises any property whatsoever on or with respect to which any offence punishable either upon indictment or upon summary conviction by virtue of this Act shall have been committed, the justice may grant a warrant to search for such property as in the case of stolen goods." I greatly doubt whether this section applies to stolen goods, and, at any rate, I do not think it was meant to alter the law in respect of search warrants for goods supposed to be stolen. The language of the section suggests to my mind that its object is to apply the practice as regards search warrants for stolen goods, to goods in respect to which some offence under the Act (other than larceny) has been committed.

The conclusion, therefore, that I have come to on this point is that, on the authority of the case of Elsee v. Smith, the information was good at common law, and was sufficient to justify the warrant.

The second objection taken is that the information should have specified the goods for which search was desired, and that the warrant was a general warrant because it did not specify the goods, and that it was therefore bad. As to this, I cannot find it anywhere laid down that a search warrant must specify the goods; and indeed it is easy to suggest many cases where it might be impossible for the person laying the information to do so. Probably in most cases there is no difficulty in the matter, and for that reason the usual forms for the information and the warrant are drawn up in that way. I think, therefore, both objections fail, and my judgment is for the defendant.

Judgment for defendant.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, Charles Everett.

Solicitors for the defendant, Routh, Stacey, & Castle, for Knocker, Knocker, & Holcroft, Sevenoaks.

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div. (Lord Esher, M.R., and Lopes and Rigby, L.JJ.) — Nov. 18.

WILMOT v. ALTON. (a.)

*Bankruptcy—Assets—Property of bankrupt—Choses in action—Assignment of interest in contract—Validity of assignment as against trustee.*

A theatrical costumier entered into a contract to supply a theatre with dresses and keep them in repair during a certain period in consideration of certain weekly payments. She assigned all her interest in the contract to the plaintiff by way of mortgage, and she subsequently became bankrupt.

Held, that the assignment did not transfer to the plaintiff, as against the trustee in bankruptcy, any of the payments becoming due under the contract after the bankruptcy.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Decision of Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J., ante, p. 12, affirmed.

Appeal from the judgment of Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J., on the trial of an interpleader issue without a jury; reported ante, p. 12.

In June, 1895, a Mrs. May, who carried on business as a theatrical costumier, entered into a contract with the Blackpool Winter Gardens and Pavilion Co., by which she was to supply for hire and keep in repair during the hiring certain dresses and wigs. The terms of the contract were stated in the following letter addressed to Mrs. May by the manager of the company:—"Mrs. May,—I beg to acknowledge receipt of your contract to supply designs for the forthcoming ballets—viz., 'Eldorado, The Land of Gold,' and 'Sons of the Sea,' according to sketch. The terms to be £40 per week for twelve weeks commencing July 8, 1895, and wigs as may be required for the sum of £3 per week for the same period. You to find all materials and to keep in repair during the run. W. Holland (Manager)." The dresses were duly supplied by Mrs. May under the contract.

On the 4th of July, 1895, by an indenture of mortgage made between Mrs. May and the plaintiff, reciting the above contract and that the plaintiff had at her request accepted bills of exchange drawn by her to the amount of £330, she charged all her beneficial right, title, and interest in the said contract for securing to the plaintiff the said sum of £330. On the 13th of July a receiving order was made against Mrs. May on her own petition, and on the 26th of July she was adjudicated a bankrupt. On the 6th of August notice of the indenture of the 4th of July was, for the first time, given to the company.

Subsequently to the 13th of July there became due from the company in respect of the hire of the dresses a sum of £318 18s. This sum was claimed by the plaintiff and also by the defendants, who were the trustees in Mrs. May's bankruptcy. The company thereupon paid the amount into court, and this interpleader issue was directed to be tried.

Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J., gave judgment for the defendants (see ante, p. 12).

The plaintiff appealed.

Cooper Willis, Q.C., and Hawtin, for the plaintiff.

Herbert Reed, Q.C., and Scarlett, for the defendants.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—This is a contract between a costumier, and the manager of a theatre, and the terms of it are before us. If Mrs. May had not become bankrupt, and if she had desired to claim any payment under this contract, she would have been bound to show that she had made designs and supplied dresses, and that she was ready and willing to repair them when necessary, and that, if any wigs had been required, she had supplied them, and was ready and willing to continue to supply them. Her right to payment would depend on her proving that. The contract was onerous on her to this extent, that under it things had to be done by her requiring talent on her part with regard to her business. But on her becoming bankrupt she could not any longer fulfil the contract. How, then, was it to be fulfilled? Her trustee in bankruptcy might, if he thought proper, carry on her business and carry out the contract. But he was not obliged to do so, he could not be bound to repair the dresses, he might say that he would have nothing more to do with the contract. And, unless the trustee determined to go on with it, the manager would not be bound to make any further payments. Under these circumstances I am of opinion that the Chief Justice was right in holding that future payments under this contract were not debts due payable in futuro, but that they were only payable on the fulfilment of certain conditions. When the conditions were fulfilled, it would be by the trustee for the benefit of the estate, and the money would become due from the manager to him. I think that the case of Ex parte Nichols, In re Jones, 31 W. R. 661, 22 Ch. D. 782, shows that payments due under a contract which requires the fulfilment of certain conditions cannot be transferred so as to deprive the trustee in bankruptcy of his claim under the contract. The decision is therefore right, and the appeal must be dismissed.

LOPES and RIGBY, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, H. Reid.

Solicitor for the defendant, J. C. Button.

From Q. B. Div. (Lord Esher, M.R., and Lopes and Rigby, L.JJ.) — Nov. 17.

BENSAUDE v. THAMES AND MERSEY MARINE INSURANCE CO. (a.)

Insurance — Marine — Policy on freight—Exception—Claim consequent on loss of time—Delay caused by peril of the sea—Frustration of adventure.

A policy of marine insurance against total loss of freight contained the following exception: "Warranted free from any claim consequent on loss of time, whether arising from a peril of the sea or otherwise."

While the ship was proceeding on a voyage under a charter, her main shaft broke by perils of the sea, and in consequence thereof she was delayed for so long a time as to frustrate the objects of the adventure, and the owners thereby lost their chartered freight. In an action by the owners against the underwriters,

Held, that the claim was within the warranty, and that the defendants were not liable.

Appeal by the defendants from the judgment of Collins, J., at the trial of the action without a jury.

The action was brought against underwriters upon a policy of marine insurance for £1,500 upon freight valued at £2,500, covering total or constructive total loss and general average only, on the steamship Peninsular for and during twelve calendar months.

The plaintiffs' claim was for a total loss by perils of the sea.

On the 3rd of April, 1895, the Portuguese Government contracted with the Empreya Nacional and others for the transport of troops and stores from Lisbon to Lourenço Marques.

In pursuance of that contract a subsidiary contract was entered into on the 5th of April, 1895, between the Empreya Nacional and the plaintiffs by which it was provided that The Peninsular should transport certain of the troops and should also load and carry a cargo of Government stores from Lisbon to Lourenço Marques, and that the Empreya Nacional, in addition to the sum to be paid for the transport of the troops, should pay to the plaintiffs eight days after the arrival of The Peninsular at Lourenço Marques, and after having received the same from the Portuguese Government, the sum of 15,000,000 reis freight for the said cargo.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law

The Peninsular loaded the cargo at Lisbon and sailed for Lourenço Marques on the 15th of April.

On the following day her main shaft broke by perils of the sea, and she had to be towed back to Lisbon, where she arrived on the 19th of April.

On the 20th of April she was surveyed, and it was found that the damage which she had sustained could not be repaired at Lisbon, and that she would require to be taken to Cadiz to be repaired. All her cargo was thereupon discharged at Lisbon. The delay necessary for the purpose of taking The Peninsular to Cadiz and repairing the damage was such as to frustrate the objects of the adventure, and the Portuguese Government and the Empreya Nacional claimed that they were discharged from carrying out the agreement with the plaintiffs, and the plaintiffs thereby, by the aforesaid perils of the sea, totally lost the said freight.

Upon a claim being made upon the underwriters, they resisted payment, relying upon an exception in the policy as follows: "Warranted free from any claim consequent on loss of time, whether arising from a peril of the sea or otherwise."

Collins, J., held that there had been a total loss of freight by perils of the sea, that the claim was not consequent on loss of time, and therefore not within the warranty, and that the plaintiffs were entitled to judgment.

The defendants appealed.

Joseph Walton, Q.C. (T. E. Scrutton with him), for the defendants.—This is a claim consequent on loss of time arising from a peril of the sea; and the underwriters are therefore freed from liability by the warranty. This warranty is only applicable to insurances on freight, and in a policy against total loss only, the warranty only applies to a case exactly like the present. For where a loss of freight has not been brought about by a peril of the sea, it does not fall within the policy at all: Inman Steamship Co. v. Bischoff, 31 W. R. 141, 7 App. Cas. 670. This warranty was introduced after the case of Jackson v. Union Marine Insurance Co., 23 W. R. 169, L. R. 10 C. P. 125. It excludes the liability of the underwriter in such a case, to which the present case is exactly similar.

Leck (Bigham, Q.C., and Bucknill, Q.C., with him), for the plaintiffs.—This is not a claim consequent on loss of time. Loss of time did not cause the loss of freight here, it simply afforded a measure of the damage caused by perils of the sea. The burden is on the other side to show that the words of the warranty are apt and sufficient to exclude the underwriter's liability.

He cited In re Jamieson and The Newcastle Steamship Freight Insurance Association, 43 W. R. 530, [1895] 2 Q. B. 90.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—I am of opinion that this appeal must be allowed. The case depends on the true construction of this warranty in a policy of marine insurance: "Warranted free from any claim consequent on loss of time, whether arising from a peril of the sea or otherwise." The policy is against total loss of freight, and total loss only. If there had been a partial loss of freight, that would not have been insured against. The freight in question was chartered freight, the charter being for the carriage of troops and cargo from Lisbon to South America. Freight would be payable on arrival and delivery of the troops and cargo. If any part of the troops or cargo arrived, freight would be payable; but if none arrived, no freight would be payable. The ship sailed with the troops and cargo on board, and on the course of the voyage her main shaft broke by perils of the sea. It is clear that the mere breaking of the shaft did not by itself cause a total loss of freight. If the ship had been thereby delayed for twenty-four hours, she would have arrived at her destination though somewhat delayed, and freight would have been payable notwithstanding the delay; that is to say, there would have been no loss of freight. It is equally clear that the breaking of the shaft determined the loss in this sense, that at the moment when the shaft broke it might have been calculated that there would be a delay so long as to render the voyage nugatory and frustrate the object of the adventure. What brought about a total loss of freight by perils of the sea was the breaking of the shaft and the loss of time caused thereby. In my opinion therefore this claim cannot be said not to be a claim consequent on loss of time. With deference to the learned judge, I think that the case is within the warranty, and that the appeal must be allowed, and judgment entered for the defendants.

LOPES and RIGBY, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Lowless & Co.

Solicitors for the defendants, Waltons, Johnson, Bubb, & Whatton.

From Q. B. Div. (Lord Esher, M.R., and Lopes and Rigby, L.JJ.) — Nov. 3.

WESTERN v. BAILEY. (a.)

Copyhold—Heriot—Heriot custom—Power to seize beast off manor.

The lord of a manor has the right to seize a heriot, due by heriot custom, wherever it may be found, as well off as on the manor.

Appeal from the judgment of Wills, J., in favour of the plaintiff at the trial of the action without a jury: reported [1896] 2 Q. B. 234, 44 W. R. Dig. 44.

The action was by the lord of the manor of Mundon Hall, Essex, against the executors of George Christy, a copyhold tenant of the manor, to recover the value of two beasts which formed part of the estate of the said George Christy, and to which the plaintiff claimed to be entitled as heriots. Christy was admitted tenant of certain copyhold tenements of the manor, including two called Scotts and Langmead, and he died seised of these in 1894. Christy at the time of his death did not possess any beast which had ever been within the manor, but he died possessed of certain beasts on an estate outside the manor. These beasts were sold by Christy's executors, and the plaintiff claimed the value of the two best of these beasts, upon the ground that Scotts and Langmead were heriotable tenements, and that he was entitled to the best beast as a heriot in respect of each tenement. Wills, J., came to the conclusion upon the evidence that Langmead was a heriotable tenement, but that Scotts was not, and he held that a heriot was due by heriot service, and that the plaintiff was entitled to maintain the action in respect of one beast.

The defendants appealed.

Elton, Q.C., and J. C. Earle, for the defendants, contended that heriot service was in the nature of a rent service, and depended upon a reservation in a grant of lands, and was not applicable to a copyhold tenement; and that heriot custom, which was proved to exist in this manor, only applied to a beast within the manor, or to a beast driven away to avoid seizure.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Bosanquet, Q.C., and A. Lyttelton, for the plaintiff, contended that a heriot, whether due by heriot service or heriot custom, could be seized outside the manor.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—This is a claim, so far as the appeal is concerned, by the lord of the manor for wrongfully selling a beast to which the defendant is entitled. The question is whether upon the death of the tenant the lord was entitled to seize the beast which was not at that time within the manor. Wills, J., put his judgment upon the ground that the grant showed that the tenant and his successors held the tenement by heriot service, and that the lord could seize the beast wherever he found it. It was argued that the heriot was not and could not be due by heriot service, but that it was due as a customary heriot, and that such a custom is only applicable to beasts within the manor at the time of the death of the tenant. The plaintiff, without giving up his contention that this was a heriot service, contended that on the assumption that it was due by heriot custom, the lord could seize the beast outside the manor, and, therefore, even though the point decided by Wills, J., might be wrong, his conclusion was right. I myself, though it is not necessary to decide the point, have great difficulty in seeing how, if the claim to the heriot does not arise from heriot custom, it can be proved at all. If there be evidence that the heriot has been rendered for such a length of time that the true inference is that it was payable from time immemorial, it became a part of the custom of the manor and therefore a customary heriot. Hence, when Wills, J., held, and rightly held, that the heriot had been paid for so long that it was paid from time immemorial, the proper inference was that it was part of the custom of the manor, and therefore a customary heriot. I do not agree with the learned judge when he says that it is not a customary heriot, but a heriot service. The proper inference is that it is a customary heriot. Therefore, I take it that this is a customary heriot. The authorities show that, whether it be a customary heriot or a heriot service, upon the happening of the event which gives the right to the succession, the property in the beast vests in the lord of the manor. It is not necessary that he should actually seize it. If he has marked it beforehand or fixed upon it by description, in either case he would have identified it and it would become his beast. If the property in the beast passed to the lord then he can maintain an action in respect of it at common law. He can seize it wherever it is, and if it has been disposed of he can maintain trover. It is a mere question of authority. Parker v. Gage, 1 Show. 81; Austin v. Bennet, 1 Salk. 356; Notes to Saunders' Reports, vol. 2, pp. 487, 488; 2 Watkins on Copyholds, 4th ed., p. 125, all lay it down that a heriot due by heriot custom can be seized wherever it may be found. We cannot fly in the face of those authorities when there are no authorities the other way. The learned judge was therefore right in the conclusion at which he arrived, that the plaintiff had a right to seize the beast.

LOPES, L.J.—The question is whether the plaintiff has a right to seize a heriot outside the manor. There are two sorts of heriots. A heriot service is due upon a reservation in a grant or lease of lands. A heriot custom depends upon the custom of the manor. The question has been raised whether heriot service can attach to copyhold tenure. It is not necessary to determine that question. Speaking for myself I do not see why it should not. I cannot see why the lord of the manor, when he originally granted out the land to his villeins, should not have reserved it, and thus it became crystallized into a custom. But it is unnecessary to determine that point because we have to deal with a heriot custom. There is abundance of authority for holding that the lord of the manor can seize the best beast outside the manor. I need not go through all the authorities. I need only refer to Com. Dig. Tit. Copyhold, K. 25; Notes to Saunders' Reports, vol. 2, pp. 487, 488. Therefore the lord was justified in seizing outside the manor. I have looked into the old pleas justifying a seizure, and I cannot find that any of them contain an allegation that the seizure took place within the manor.

RIGBY, L.J.—The real question is whether the lord became entitled to the heriot on the death of the tenant of a copyhold tenement. The tenant died possessed of a beast which had never been within the manor. The question first raised was whether a heriot service could attach to copyhold tenements within the manor. If I had to decide that question, I should say that in such a case there was no way to account for it legally. It is based on a reservation in a grant. I cannot see how such an origin can be presumed in the case of a copyhold tenement. The custom of the manor determines all the rights of the copyhold tenants. That custom is ascertained by showing that it has existed continuously from time immemorial. I cannot see how it is possible to go behind legal memory. When one gets to that point one finds a custom existing, and because it is a custom of the manor it regulates the rights of the lord and the tenants. What right has a court to go behind legal memory and say that there was prior to that time a grant and a reservation? Nor do I think it consistent with the relation of landlord and tenant at will, which a copyhold tenant originally was. But that question does not arise in this case, because it is admitted that there is a custom of the manor which entitles the lord to a heriot in respect of this tenement. The custom extended to all the tenements in the manor, though in some it has been compounded for. It is admitted that a customary heriot is due in respect of this particular tenement.

It has been argued that, as it is a custom of a particular manor, the custom as regards all its incidents and effects must be confined within the manor, and therefore the lord cannot go outside the manor to get the best beast. That, no doubt, might be the custom of a particular manor. There is authority upon authority to show that as a general rule the custom vests the property in the beast in the lord on the death of the tenant. If there is more than one beast, the lord must do something to show which beast he elects to be his. But if there is only one beast, it would vest in the lord at once. There is nothing illegal in a custom which vests the best beast, wherever it may be found, in the lord of the manor. Therefore the plaintiff was entitled to this beast, and the judgment of the learned judge must be affirmed, though on different grounds.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Western & Sons.

Solicitors for the defendant, Baileys, Shaw, & Gillett.

From Chan. Div.
(Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J., and Lindley and A. L. Smith, L.JJ.) Nov. 13.

In re COSH'S CONTRACT. (a.)

Landlord and tenant—Assignment by tenant—Landlord's licence to assign—Landlord requiring consideration for licence—Deposit of money to secure performance of a contract between landlord and tenant—"Fine, or sum of money in the nature of a fine, payable for or in respect of such licence"—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1892 (55 & 56 Vict. c. 13), s. 3.

Where by a lease the lessee is forbidden to assign the premises without the licence of the lessor, the lessor is, notwithstanding section 3 of the Conveyancing Act, 1892, entitled to require, as a condition of granting such licence, that the lessee shall deposit in his hands a sum of money by way of security for the completion of improvements which the lessee has agreed to make upon the premises; such a deposit not being a "fine or sum of money in the nature of a fine payable for or in respect of such licence" within the meaning of that section.

Decision of Stirling, J., affirmed.

Appeal from Stirling, J.

The respondents had in 1894 granted to R. L. Cosh a lease of certain freehold property of which they were trustees, the lessee contracting to pull down certain buildings which were upon the premises, and to erect in their place other buildings in accordance with an agreed specification. By clause 8 of the agreement it was provided that the contractor should give such security for the due performance of the contract as the trustees should require. Under this clause the trustees required that Cosh and one Finch, who was a mortgagee under him and was financing him, or one of them, should deposit as security the sum of £1,000, and that Finch should guarantee the performance of the rest of the contract. This was done; and both Stirling, J., and the Court of Appeal were of opinion that clause 8 did not entitle the trustees to require any further security. Afterwards Cosh and Finch entered into an advantageous agreement to sell their interest for twenty-nine years in a public-house, part of the demised premises. The lease to Cosh, however, contained a proviso against assignment by the lessee of any part of the premises without the licence in writing of the lessors. Cosh's rent was then in arrear to the extent of over £3,000; and the trustees, on being applied to for a licence to assign, required as a condition of granting it that Finch or Cosh should deposit with them a further sum of £2,000 as security for the performance of the rest of the contract between Cosh and his lessors. The deposit was made under protest, and the licence was granted. The question whether section 3 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1892, did not forbid the lessors to demand such a deposit was brought before Stirling, J., on a vendor and purchaser summons; but by consent of the parties the case was treated as if it had been an action for money had and received. The learned judge held that section 3 did not apply to the case; and Cosh appealed.

Warrington, Q.C., and Dibdin, for the appellant.—Section 3 of the Conveyancing Act, 1892, forbids the trustees to demand this deposit. That section, as appears from the provisions of section 5, is wide enough to prohibit even a reasonable charge for legal expenses. This deposit is money paid, though it may have to be paid back; for the trustees have the use of the money, and as stakeholders are entitled to keep any interest it produces: Strachan v. Universal Stock Exchange, 43 W. R. 611, [1895] 2 Q. B. 329; Harington v. Hoggart, 1 B. & Ad. 577. "Sum of money in the nature of a fine," in section 3, means anything which gives to the lessor a pecuniary benefit, and imposes on the lessee a pecuniary disadvantage, such as would not arise from the contract. The legality of such a requirement does not depend on its reasonableness. [They referred to Woodfall on Landlord and Tenant, 15th ed., p. 695.]

Buckley, Q.C., and John Henderson, for the respondents, the trustees, were not called upon.

Lord RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN, C.J., stated the material facts, and continued: I think, taking a fair view of the whole correspondence, it is clear that the trustees were demanding this money as a condition of granting the licence, but that they were asking it only with a view to putting themselves in a position of more security as to the performance of the rest of the agreement. There is no doubt that some of the language used is a little inconsistent with that view; but, on the whole, I arrive at the conclusion, as the fair result of the correspondence, that this deposit was demanded as a condition of the trustees giving their assent to the assignment of the lease to a purchaser, and as security for the performance of the contract, but not as the security the trustees had a legal right under clause 8 to require. Then, if I am right in that view, the main question is, Was that demand illegal and contrary to section 3 of the Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1892? That is the simple remaining point. It is a point which depends entirely on the construction of the section, and which, I think, does not leave open to us any of those rather equitable considerations to which counsel for the appellant referred. That section quite clearly provides that where in a lease there is a stipulation that there shall not be any assignment of the demised premises without the licence or consent of the lessor, then, unless the lease contains an express provision to the contrary, no fine or sum of money in the nature of a fine, shall be payable for or in respect of such licence or consent. Was this, then, a fine or sum of money in the nature of a fine within that enactment? I think it was not. The language points to a fine or sum of money in the nature of a fine which is to go into the pocket of the person who is requiring the payment as a condition. But here the money was required as a deposit only. Now, when money is said to be paid—whether a fine or a sum not within that denomination—"paid" means that the payer is passing and intending to pass the right of property to somebody else, so that the money shall become that other person's property. Here, if the contract is properly carried out, and if the stipulations entered into are observed by Cosh, he will have the right to demand repayment of that sum of £2,000. I think there has not in this case been any contravention of section 3 of the Conveyancing Act, 1892, and I think the judgment of Stirling, J., is right.

LINDLEY, L.J.—I agree, and have nothing to add.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—I also agree.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, A. A. Timbrell; Baylis & Pearce.

(a.) Reported by R. C. MACKENZIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

App. Bankruptcy.
(Lord Esher, M.R., and Lopes and Rigby, L.JJ.) Oct. 30.

In re FLOWERS & CO.
Ex parte WARE & SONS (LIMITED). (a.)

Bankruptcy—Bankruptcy notice—Service—Partnership—Receiver and manager appointed by the court—Service of notice on receiver—Construction of rule 260 of General Rules of 1886, 1890.

A bankruptcy notice in respect of a judgment debt against a partnership cannot be served under rule 260 of the Bankruptcy General Rules of 1886, 1890, upon a person who has been appointed receiver and manager of the partnership business by order of the court in an action for dissolution of the partnership. The words "person having the control or management of the partnership business" mean a person having such control or management by the authority of the partners, and acting as their servant or agent.

This was an appeal by the petitioning creditors against an order of Mr. Registrar Hope, dated the 7th of August, 1896, dismissing a bankruptcy petition presented by them against the firm of Flowers & Co. This firm consisted of five members.

On the 26th of March, 1896, a writ in the Chancery Division was taken out by three of the members against the other two for the dissolution and winding up of the partnership, and for the appointment of a manager and receiver.

On the 1st of May a receiver was appointed by the court, and he took possession of the business.

On the 6th of May a writ was issued in the Queen's Bench Division by Ware & Sons, the petitioning creditors, against Flowers & Co. for the sum of £46 18s. 2d., for goods sold and delivered, and on the 14th of May they obtained final judgment for £50 18s. 2d.

A bankruptcy notice in respect of this sum was served upon four out of the five members of the firm; the fifth member was not able to be served personally, and consequently Ware & Sons caused the receiver, who was managing the business, to be served at the principal place of business in London of Flowers & Co.

Rule 260 of the Bankruptcy General Rules, 1886, 1890, provides that "any notice or petition for which personal service is necessary shall be deemed to be duly served on all the members of a firm if it is served at the principal place of business of the firm in England, on any one of the partners, or upon any person having at the time of service the control or management of the partnership business there."

On the 24th of June Ware & Sons presented a petition in bankruptcy against the several five members of the said firm of Flowers & Co., the alleged act of bankruptcy being non-compliance with the notice.

On the 7th of August the registrar dismissed the summons on the ground that the bankruptcy notice had not been properly served.

The petitioning creditors now appealed.

F. Cooper Willis, for the appellants.—The notice was properly served in accordance with rule 260 of the General Bankruptcy Rules, 1886, 1890. It was served upon the receiver, who was "the person having at the time of service the control or management of the partnership business." The receiver was the proper person to receive the notice and he would communicate the fact to the members of the firm, and it would be his duty to pay the judgment debt. [LOPES, L.J. referred to the case of Burt, Bolton, and Hayward v. Bull and Another, 43 W. R. 180, [1895] 1 Q. B. 276.] That case only decided that a receiver and manager of a business appointed by the court is personally liable for the price of goods which he orders.

Muir Mackenzie, for the respondents.—Rule 260 does not apply to a receiver who is appointed by order of the court, but only to one who is appointed as manager by the partners of the business, and who is appointed as their agent and servant. A receiver appointed by the court is not a servant or agent of the partners, and he is not bound to inform them of the fact that he has been served with a notice: In re Jameson & Sandys, Ex parte Cresswell & Jameson, 8 Morrell 278.

LORD ESHER, M.R.—I am of opinion that on the consideration of rule 260 as applied to the facts of this case this appeal must be dismissed. The receiver here was appointed by order of the court, and that being so, he is the servant or agent of the court, and is not in any legal sense the servant of the firm. I say this for the same reason that I gave in the case of Burt and Others v. Bull. Then I come to rule 260. [The learned judge then read that rule.] In my opinion that rule clearly implies that the person having the control or management of the partnership business is a person having such control or management by the authority of the partners, and is acting as their agent or servant. Such a receiver as we find in this case does not come within the terms of rule 260, and I am therefore of opinion that the decision of the registrar was right, and this appeal must be dismissed.

LOPES, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The material words of rule 260 are "if it is served at the principal place of business of the firm in England upon any person having at the time of service the control or management of the partnership business there." I think that means, if it is served upon any person having the control or management of the partnership for the partners. I do not think the rule applies to a receiver who is appointed by the court, as is this case, and who is not, in my opinion, an agent or servant of the partners. The registrar was right, and this appeal must be dismissed.

RIGBY, L.J.—A receiver appointed by the court is most certainly not the servant or agent of the firm, although he manages the business of that firm. I am not prepared to differ from the judgments that my learned brothers have delivered, although I think there is a good deal in the appellants' contention. This appeal must be therefore dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Kingsbury & Turner.

Solicitor for the respondents, George Coote.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

App. Bankruptcy.
(Lindley, Lopes, and Rigby, L.JJ.) Aug. 7, 1896.

In re CLARK.
Ex parte BEYER, PEACOCK, & CO. (a.)

Bankruptcy — Bankruptcy notice — Issue of notice — Foreign debtor out of jurisdiction at date of issue — Subsequent return—Service in England—Bankruptcy

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 4, sub-section 1 (g); s. 6, sub-section 1 (d).

A bankruptcy notice was issued under section 4, sub-section 1 (g), of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, against a debtor who was a foreign subject and out of the jurisdiction, and who, at the date of the issue of the notice, had not "ordinarily resided or had a dwelling-house or place of business in England" within the preceding year. He subsequently returned within the jurisdiction, and whilst there was served with the bankruptcy notice.

Held, that the issue of the bankruptcy notice was good, and could not be set aside.

This was an appeal by Beyer, Peacock, & Co. from an order of Mr. Registrar Giffard, setting aside a bankruptcy notice.

The appellants were creditors of the respondent Mateo Clark, and on the 13th of June, 1896, obtained judgment against him for £4,137.

On the 23rd of June, on the application of the appellants, a bankruptcy notice was issued against the debtor under section 4, sub-section 1 (g) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52). The debtor, a foreign subject, at the date of the issue of this notice, had been residing abroad for more than twelve months, but on his return to England for a day or two the notice was served upon him.

On the 14th of July the registrar, on the application of the debtor, set aside the notice on the ground that the debtor was a foreign subject and was not domiciled in England at the time when the notice was issued, and had not ordinarily resided or had a dwelling-house or place of business in England within the preceding year, and therefore the bankruptcy notice ought not to have been issued.

From this order the judgment creditors appealed.

T. Willes Chitty (Herbert Chitty with him), for the appellants.—The order of the registrar was wrong. A bankruptcy notice cannot be set aside for the reasons set out in section 6, sub-section 1 (d) of the Act of 1883, although a bankruptcy petition may be, therefore it is no objection to the validity of the notice that the debtor was not "domiciled in England, or within a year before the date of the presentation of the petition," or had not "ordinarily resided or had a dwelling-house or place of business in England." A bankruptcy notice can only be set aside for the reasons specified in section 4, sub-section 1 (g)—namely, that the debtor "has a counter-claim, set-off, or cross-demand which equals or exceeds the amount of the judgment debt, and which he could not set up in the action in which the judgment was obtained": In re Easton, Ex parte Dixon, 10 Morrell 111. The notice was served on the debtor on his returning within the jurisdiction when he became subject to the bankruptcy law of England.

Muir Mackenzie, for the respondent.—The notice was bad, and should be set aside, because at the time it was issued the debtor was a foreign subject, and was out of the jurisdiction, and was therefore not amenable to the bankruptcy law of England: Ex parte Moore, In re Faithfull, 33 W. R. 438, 14 Q. B. D. 627; In re Lynes, Ex parte Lester, 41 W. R. 488, [1893] 2 Q. B. 113. The respondent here was not properly speaking a debtor. "The word 'debtor' must be construed to mean a debtor properly subject to the laws of England, and thus, it seems, should be taken to include not only English subjects and denizens, but also foreigners, provided that in accordance with section 6 (1) (d) they are domiciled in England, or have within a year before the presentation of the petition ordinarily resided, or had a dwelling-house or place of business in England": see Williams on Bankruptcy, 6th ed., p. 2; Ex parte Blain, In re Sawers, 28 W. R. 334, 12 Ch. D. 522. This case was followed by In re Pearson, Ex parte Pearson, 40 W. R. 532, [1892] 2 Q. B. 263. The respondent could not commit an act of bankruptcy by not complying with the notice, as at the time it was issued he was a foreigner and out of the jurisdiction.

Herbert Chitty replied.

LINDLEY, L.J.—In this case I think the point taken by Mr. Chitty is a good one. The question here arises on the construction of section 4, sub-section 1 (g), of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883. Final judgment was here obtained by the creditors for £4,137 against Clark, and therefore he was clearly a "debtor." A bankruptcy notice was then issued. On the 23rd of June Clark came back to this country and then became liable to be proceeded against under the English bankruptcy laws, and in fact on that same day was served with a bankruptcy notice in respect of the judgment debt.

It is now said that Clark was not a "debtor" within the meaning of section 4 when the notice was issued because he was then a foreigner out of the jurisdiction, and therefore the notice ought not to have been issued, and the question we have to decide is whether such notice was in any way wrongly issued. I do not think the cases cited quite touch this point. It is contended that the notice is bad because it was issued whilst the debtor was not in this country, but I think if we were to hold it bad on that ground we should be putting a very narrow interpretation on the Act. I think the notice was a good one, and that it is immaterial whether the debtor was subject to the English bankruptcy law when it was issued, for he was clearly subject to it when the notice was served upon him. Therefore, it appears to me that the notice is valid and that the point taken on behalf of the appellants is a good one, and the appeal should be allowed.

LOPES, L.J.—I think section 4 should be looked at apart from and independently of the provisions contained in section 6, sub-section 1 (d). In my opinion this case clearly comes within the terms and meaning of section 4. The respondent is clearly a debtor, for a judgment was obtained against him. He comes to this country and thus becomes a debtor subject to the English bankruptcy laws. He then had a notice served upon him, and I am of opinion that this was a good service. But the point is taken that the notice was issued before he returned to this country, and that it is therefore not valid. I do not think that important. This seems analogous to the ordinary case of a writ of summons, which is often issued whilst the defendant is out of the jurisdiction, and is afterwards served when he comes within the jurisdiction.

I think this bankruptcy notice was a good one, and ought not to have been set aside.

RIGBY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. A debtor is not affected merely by the issuing of a bankruptcy notice; it is the service of such notice on him that affects him, and for that reason in section 4, sub-section 1 (g), nothing is said about the issue, but only the service of the notice is provided for. The important fact that brings a man within the provisions of the bankruptcy law is the service of the bankruptcy notice.

The respondent was served with the notice while he was in England and subject to the English law, and therefore it seems to me that both the issue and the service of the notice were good, and the appeal must therefore be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Pritchard, Englefield, & Co., for J. Leigh, Manchester.

Solicitors for the respondent, Harwood & Stephenson.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } Chitty, J. } Nov. 26.

In re MEYRICK.
MEYRICK v. HARGREAVES. (a.)

Inland revenue—Estate duty—Settlement—Apportionment—Finance Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 30), ss. 6-9, 14.

A settlor by a voluntary settlement in 1881 directed the trustees in certain events to set aside various sums out of the trust funds in their hands for the benefit of the settlor's daughters, to be held on trusts subsequently declared. On the respective marriages of his daughters these sums were settled upon them. The plaintiff was the trustee of the voluntary settlement, and was also the residuary legatee and executor of the settlor. On the settlor's death he had paid the estate duty on the whole of the funds comprised in the voluntary settlement.

Held, that he was entitled to recover from the persons taking the benefit of the various settled sums a proportionate amount of the duty paid.

Summons.

By a voluntary settlement dated the 4th of April, 1881, made between the settlor, Sir George Meyrick, and his wife, Lady Fanny T. G. Meyrick, the settlor, after reciting that certain securities had been assigned into his wife's name as trustee of the said settlement, assigned to her also as trustee the moneys recoverable on certain policies of assurance and a sum of bank annuities to be held on the trusts declared therein, which, inter alia, were as follow: To pay the income to the settlor for life, and after his death to raise £2,000 and pay that sum clear of all deductions except succession duty to the trustees of the marriage settlement of his eldest daughter, Mrs. Spencer, and subject thereto to pay the income of the trust funds to Lady Meyrick for her life. The settlement also contained the following directions: "And it is hereby agreed and declared that from and after the occurrence of whichever of the three events next hereinafter mentioned shall first happen, that is to say: First, the death of the said Sir George Meyrick if the said Clara Tapps Gervis Meyrick shall have married in his lifetime; second, the marriage of the said Clara Tapps Gervis Meyrick after the death of the said Sir G. Meyrick; third, the death of the survivor of the said Sir G. Meyrick and the said Dame Fanny T. G. Meyrick, the said trustees or trustee shall appropriate a part of the trust premises amounting at the time of appropriation to the value of £27,000, which said part so appropriated and the investments representing the same are hereinafter called the first trust fund, and shall hold the first trust fund in the trusts and with and subject to the powers and provisions hereinafter declared and contained concerning the same; and it is hereby agreed and declared that from and after the occurrence of whichever of the three events next hereinafter mentioned shall first happen, that is to say: First the death of the said Sir George Meyrick if the said Fanny T. G. Meyrick shall have married in his lifetime; second, the marriage of the said Fanny T. G. Meyrick after the death of the said Sir G. Meyrick; third, the death of the survivor of the said Sir G. Meyrick and Dame Fanny T. G. Meyrick, the said trustees or trustee shall appropriate another part of the said trust premises amounting in value at the time of appropriation to the sum of £27,000, which said part so appropriated and the investments representing the same are hereinafter called the second trust fund, on the trusts and with a subject to the powers and provisions hereinafter declared and contained concerning the same."

The settlor reserved a power of revocation and new appointment. Under these powers various sums were appointed from time to time, about £15,000 to the settlor himself and £2,000 to the defendant Julia Fulford. On the intended marriage of his daughter Fanny, Mrs. Douglas, in 1891, the settlor irrevocably appointed that from and after his death, if the intended marriage should take place in his lifetime (which happened), the trustees of the voluntary settlement should hold the second trust fund of £27,000 in trust for Mrs. Douglas absolutely. On the marriage of Mrs. Nugent in 1895 the settlor confirmed the trust for appropriation of the first trust fund contained in the settlement and released his power of revocation, but made no fresh appointment as in the case of Mrs. Douglas. In consequence of other directions given by the settlor this first trust fund had been reduced to a sum of £24,127 7s. By a deed of appointment dated the 8th of August, 1895, the settlor irrevocably appointed to his daughter Mrs. Spencer out of the said trust funds for her separate use the sum of £3,000, and released his power of revocation so far as regards the said sum.

Lady Meyrick died in 1892, the settlor died in March, 1896. The plaintiff, the present baronet, Sir George Augustus Meyrick, was the sole executor of his mother, and, as such, trustee of the voluntary settlement of 1881. He was also one of the trustees of the respective marriage settlements of each of his three sisters; he was also executor and residuary legatee under the will of the settlor.

The total amount of the trust funds in the voluntary settlement was £80,486 4s. 2d., and in the events which happened a residue of about £21,700 fell into the estate of the settlor. The estate duty in respect of the £80,486 4s. 2d., amounting to £6,054 13s. 6d., was paid by the plaintiff.

The defendants were the other trustees of the respective marriage settlements of the settlor's daughters—Miss Fulford, an appointee, and the eldest daughter, Mrs. Spencer.

The chief question raised by the plaintiff in his summons was whether the estate duty, which became payable under the Finance Act, 1894, upon the death of Sir George Meyrick on the 7th of March, 1896, in respect of funds held upon the trusts of the settlement of the 4th of April, 1881, ought to be paid entirely out of the residue of such funds, or divided rateably between the sum of £2,000, payable to the plaintiff and others as trustees of Mrs. Spencer's settlement; the sum of £24,427 7s., payable to the trustees of Mrs. Nugent's settlement; the sum of £27,000, payable to the trustees of Mrs. Douglas's settlement; the sum of £2,000, payable to the defendant, Miss Fulford; and the sum of £3,000, payable to the defendant, Mrs. Spencer, respectively.

Byrne, Q.C., and Jason Smith, for the plaintiff.—Under section 8 of the Finance Act, sub-section 4, the plaintiff is required to pay duty as trustee of the voluntary settlement, because the executor is not accountable in respect of such property. Then under section 14, sub-section 1, he may deduct from the whole fund a sum sufficient to make a rateable proportion between the various funds. If different persons had been trustee of the settlement and executor of the late Sir George Meyrick this question would not have arisen. By section 14 the duty would have been charged rateably. Or if under section 6, sub-section 2, the plaintiff as executor had paid the estate duty, then he could have recovered the amount under section 9, sub-section 4, or have raised the sum in the manner indicated by section 9, sub-section 5.

(a.) Reported by RALEGH B. PHILLPOTTS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

They referred to In re Countess Orford, 44 W. R. 383, [1896] 1 Ch. 257.

Farwell, Q.C., and J. Austen-Cartmell, for the defendants, the other trustees of Mrs. Nugent's settlement.—The intention of the settlor was to settle a definite sum clear of deductions on each daughter. The sums mentioned are in the nature of charges on the property. The executor, under sections 1 and 2, is accountable for the whole duty, and these charges being voluntary incumbrances are not within the exceptions of section 7, sub-section 1, but, according to the decision in In re Gray, 44 W. R. 406, [1896] 1 Ch. 620, must be borne by the executor, and he cannot recover under section 14, sub-section 1.

Farwell, Q.C., and F. L. Wright, for other defendants.

CHITTY, J.—The late Sir George Meyrick executed in 1881 a settlement. His death took place in 1896. Speaking of the property comprised in the settlement, in round numbers it was £80,000 odd. He reserved power of revocation, which he from time to time exercised and to a certain extent also released. At the time of his death the power of revocation had been altogether extinguished, and was at an end. There are two settlements to be found in this document of sums of £27,000 in favour of two daughters. One sum, however, was reduced, and properly reduced, under the powers to which I have shortly referred, by Sir George himself, to a sum of £24,427. The Commissioners of Inland Revenue have received from Sir George's executor the estate duty upon the property which Sir George himself was competent to dispose of, and also upon this settled fund of £80,000. The settlement, however, did not bind in favour of other persons the whole of the £80,000, but, again speaking in round numbers, there was a sum of about £20,000 which Sir George was competent to dispose of at the time of his death.

The question raised by the executor of Sir George is that he is entitled to receive from the persons interested under the settlement of that £20,000 and £24,000 odd and also from others—and there are subsidiary points of that which I will mention presently, I deal only now with those two sums—that he is entitled to receive from them a rateable proportion of what he has paid.

It is important at the outset, having regard to the arguments that I have listened to, to determine accurately what was the nature of the settlement in regard to the sums of £27,000 and £24,000 odd. I have only been speaking of that at the present moment in a general way. The property comprised in the settlement included policies which would be payable on the death of Sir George, and would be payable of course in money, and it comprised divers other stocks and securities which are mentioned. The declaration is this: that after the occurrence of whichever of three events mentioned first happens—that is to say, the death of Sir George, if a daughter shall be married, and married in his lifetime; secondly, the marriage of that daughter after his death; and thirdly, the death of the survivor of Sir George and his wife (I stay here to mention that his wife is the sole trustee in this settlement, and the event which did happen in which this became binding was the death of Sir George himself, who survived his wife), then the trustee or trustees of the settlement are to appropriate a part of the trust premises amounting at the time of the appropriation to the value of £27,000, which are set apart or appropriated and are called the trust fund, and to hold the trust fund on the trusts which are presently declared. That is a settlement in favour of one of the daughters, and the other is in substantially similar terms.

Now, I am told that there is by virtue of this clause and the subsequent trusts a clear charge of £27,000 upon the general trust fund. In my opinion that is not a correct description of this portion of the deed. Had the deed stated, as it might under the will, an appropriation on the face of it of £27,000, part of the investments to answer this settlement, it would have been a complete substantive settlement at the time. That was very properly admitted by Mr. Farwell, if not also by Mr. Cartmell. But it is said to be a charge or incumbrance upon the whole property, because the appropriation was not to be made, as I understand the argument, till after the death of Sir George in the events which have happened. Sir George had no power to pay off the £27,000, and Sir George had no voice in the appropriation. It was the duty of the trustee of the settlement to make the appropriation, and I am unable to find any distinction between this actual case and the supposed case of there being a schedule to the deed itself, showing what trust funds were settled to the trust of £27,000. To my mind it is just the same. The appropriation had to be made on the death of Sir George by the trustees for the time being. It was not a charge on any part of the trust estate in the proper sense of the term, nor an incumbrance. As I have said, there is no power to redeem, for Sir George could not have offered £27,000, nor could his executors have offered £27,000 to the trustee of this settlement. There may not be very much difference between receiving the sum in money, and money, of course, being part of the general settlement fund, could have been appropriated, but the trustee was to make the appropriation out of the property comprised in the settlement.

I hold therefore that this is not a charge or incumbrance, but in the event it was a substantive settlement. Consequently, it does not fall within the 7th section of the Act, though it was a voluntary instrument at the time it was made.

In regard to the surplus of the fund, or what is termed the residue, that was property which Sir George was competent to dispose of at the time of his death, and which he has disposed of by appointing an executor and otherwise by his will. Of course his estate will have to bear the rateable proportion of the estate duty attributable to the £20,000, or whatever the exact sum may be. There was some question raised whether this was property passing on the death of the deceased. Well, of course it was, I have not mentioned it before, but it has been in my mind. The whole of the property comprised in the settlement—that is to say, the settlement of the £80,000 was subject to the life interest of Sir George, which is determined at his death and without going into any particular parts of the Finance Act which I think it is quite unnecessary to do, it is plain that this was property passing on the death of Sir George. No question is raised as to its being—the whole of the £80,000—liable for duty.

Perhaps it is right in deference to the argument just to travel very shortly through some of the leading sections bearing on the point. Section 6, sub-section 2, says: "The executor of the deceased shall pay the estate duty in respect of all personal property (wheresoever situate) of which the deceased was competent to dispose at his death on delivering the Inland Revenue affidavit, and may pay in like manner the estate duty in respect of any other property passing on such death, which by virtue of any testamentary disposition of the deceased, is under the control of the executor; or, in the case of property not under his control, if the persons accountable for the duty in respect thereof request him to make such payment."

Now it turned out that Sir George's executor, the present plaintiff, was executor of his mother, and also trustee of the settlement; but this section in the earlier part of it relates to the plaintiff in his character of executor of Sir George. It was argued that by virtue of the testamentary disposition of the deceased the whole of this £80,000 was under the control of the plaintiff as executor of Sir George. That in my opinion is an argument which cannot be sustained. It was under his control as trustee of the settlement, for being executor of the mother he had accepted the trusts, as he was entitled to do, of the settlement himself. Then, in the case of property not under his control, which plainly means under his control as executor of the deceased person, "if the persons accountable for the duty in respect thereof request him to make such payment." Now, as trustee, he was one of those persons, and he did pay the duty. I need hardly say that he paid the duty on the whole rightly, and as for the request it was the request which he impliedly made to himself in the one character of trustee to himself as executor of the deceased.

Then section 8, sub-sections 3 and 4, have a bearing. "The executor of the deceased shall, to the best of his knowledge and belief, specify in appropriate accounts annexed to the Inland Revenue affidavit all the property in respect of which estate duty is payable upon the death of the deceased, and shall be accountable for the estate duty in respect of all personal property wheresoever situate of which the deceased was competent to dispose at his death." That would include the balance of the £80,000, which has been termed in the argument the "sum of about £20,000"; but shall not be liable for any duty in excess of the assets which he has received as executor, or might, but for his own neglect or default, have received. Then the 4th sub-section is: "Where property passes on the death of the deceased, and his executor is not accountable for the estate duty in respect of such property"; that in my opinion applies to the £60,000, part of the £80,000; he was not accountable as executor for the estate duty in respect of that property. Then the section goes on, "Every person to whom any property so passes for any beneficial interest in possession, and also to the extent of the property actually received or disposed of by him, every trustee," and so forth, shall be accountable for the estate duty. He was accountable in his character of trustee of the settlement for at least the £60,000, if not for the whole £80,000. It is not necessary to say anything more about the £20,000, because there is no question between the parties about that sum.

Then section 9, sub-sections 4 and 5, were referred to: "If the rateable part of the estate duty in respect of any property is paid by the executor it shall, where occasion requires, be repaid to him by the trustees or owners of the property." That is to say, that section applies to the plaintiff in his character of trustee of the settlement. I need not read the rest of the sub-section, for it affects real estate. Then the 5th sub-section is: "A person authorized or required to pay the estate duty in respect of any property shall, for the purpose of paying the duty or raising the amount of the duty when already paid, have power, whether the property is or is not vested in him, to raise the amount of such duty."

The 14th section, sub-section 1, was also referred to: "In the case of property which does not pass to the executor as such"—that is here the £80,000, apart from any question about the £20,000—"an amount equal to the proper rateable part of the estate duty may be recovered by the person who, being authorized"—now, as executor he was authorized to pay—"or required to pay the estate duty in respect of any property, has paid such duty from the person entitled to any sum charged on such property?"

Those are the main sections relied upon. Out of deference to the argument I have travelled through them. There is one which I have to mention which was relied upon by the defendants in the action. That is section 7, sub-section 1, particularly the part under letter (a): "In determining the value of an estate for the purpose of estate duty, allowance shall be made for reasonable funeral expenses, and for debts and incumbrances, but an allowance shall not be made"—now, it was said for the defendants that the case falls within this part of the 7th section—"for debts incurred by the deceased"—there was no debt here by the deceased—"or incumbrances created by a disposition made by the deceased unless such debts or incumbrances were incurred or created bonâ fide for full consideration in money or money's worth." I need not read the rest. I have disposed of the argument on that point by the earlier part of this judgment, in which I have held that on the facts and on the true effect of the settlement the sums of £27,000 and £24,400 were not charges and were not incumbrances, but were actual substantive settlements, in the events which happened, of securities or investments equivalent in money to the two sums I have mentioned.

That disposes of the case, except that there are some two or three subordinate points. Mr. Byrne admits that, in regard to one, there are words in the settlement itself which show that the sum is to be a free sum and to be exempt from any such charge as the Legislature might, by any subsequent Act of Parliament, think fit to impose. There will be an exception to that. With regard to other smaller sums no counsel has appeared to argue it. They seem entirely to stand on the same footing as the two large sums of £27,000 and £24,400 odd. My answer to the question will be the same as with reference to the £27,000 and £24,000 odd.

Counsel for the defendants were good enough to argue that on reading the settlement I should find the intention, on the part of the settlor, that the £27,000 and £24,400 odd were given in priority and given in such a manner as to be exempt from the incidence of this tax. I need hardly observe that the settlor had no prophetic spirit. He did not foresee the passing of this Finance Act. There are no words pointing to this Act or any such Act, and there are no words whatever that would justify me in holding these sums to be exempt. The settlor did not foresee the coming of this great Act of Parliament; and the Act of Parliament applies of its own force for the reasons that I have mentioned to the various interests that were taken under the settlement.

The result therefore is that I answer the question in favour of the plaintiff with reference to the £27,000 and the £24,400 odd and the other two sums.

Solicitors, Crawley, Arnold, & Co.; Pemberton, Garth, & Cope.

Chan. Div. Stirling, J. } Nov. 12, 21.

PATTLE v. HORNIBROOK. (a.)

Contract—Delivery as escrow—Evidence to show no contract.

Where an agreement for a lease had been signed by the plaintiff, and was subsequently signed by the defendant, but not in the presence of the plaintiff, and the defendant subsequently never delivered the agreement to the plaintiff,

Held, that evidence might be admitted to show that there was no true animus contrahendi between the parties.

Pym v. Campbell, 4 W. R. 528, 6 E. & B. 370, followed.

Action.

The question in this case was whether an agreement for a lease, which had been signed by the defendant, but never delivered, should be treated as an escrow to be delivered upon a condition, or whether there was in reality no contract at all between the parties.

The facts were as follow: On the 21st of September, 1895, Brown, a clerk of a house agent in whose hands the defendant had placed a leasehold house to procure a tenant, wrote to the defendant that he had a bonâ fide offer for the house, and asked for information as to what he was to say in reply. The name of the tenant was not mentioned in this letter.

On the 23rd of September the defendant told his solicitors, Messrs. Nisbet & Co., of the offer, and said he would arrange a meeting between them and the proposed tenant.

He afterwards saw Brown, and directed him to arrange the meeting.

On the 24th the plaintiff, her brother, and Brown called at Messrs. Nisbet's. An agreement which had been prepared was shown to them, and signed by the plaintiff. The agreement was then handed to Mr. Nisbet, who stated in his evidence that it was his invariable custom to tell an intending tenant on such occasion that he must satisfy the landlord of his responsibility, though he could not recollect what happened at this particular interview. The signed document remained with Mr. Nisbet. Subsequently Brown asked leave to bring it to the defendant, and permission was given.

The defendant, according to his evidence, demurred when he saw that the tenant was to be a lady, and signed without intending to let the property. He kept the signed document in his own possession.

The next morning he went to the house agents, where he saw the plaintiff's brother. There was some discrepancy as to what took place at this interview. The defendant, however, in the course of it asked whether two directors of the Lighting Corporation, of which the defendant's brother was manager, would not join as security, and two names were written down on a piece of paper, which, however, was lost before the trial of the action. The defendant then went on and handed the agreement and piece of paper to Mr. Nisbet, telling him he was not to complete till he had the names joined as security. There was subsequently considerable correspondence, and ultimately the defendant broke off negotiations and granted a lease of the house to another person. The plaintiff then brought an action claiming specific performance or damages.

At the trial damages only were sought.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Brown had absconded before the trial, and could not be found.

Germaine, for the plaintiff, having opened the case,

Graham Hastings, Q.C., and Younger, for the defendant.—There is no contract at all. You can have no agreement till the contract has been signed and delivered up to the opposite side. They referred to: Furness v. Meek, 27 L. J. Ex. 34, 6 W. R. Dig. 44; Pym v. Campbell, 4 W. R. 528, 6 E. & B. 370; Gudgen v. Bassett, 5 W. R. 47, 6 E. & B. 986.

Germaine, in reply.—Pym v. Campbell and Gudgen v. Bassett are really in my favour. The defendant is endeavouring to import by parol evidence a condition which contradicts the whole document, Wallis v. Littel, 10 W. R. 192, 11 C. B. N. S. 368, is conclusive on this point. [STIRLING, J.—The question is, Was there a contract made?] I submit there was. Doe d. Garnons v. Knight, 5 B. & C. 671, applies. [STIRLING, J., referred to Bowker v. Burdekin, 11 M. & W. 128.] The defendant cannot say that it was a contract, but that he intended to suspend its operation by imposing a condition at variance with the contract. In re Hoyle, 41 W. R. 81, [1893] 1 Ch. 84. There is nothing in the evidence to show that the defendant did not mean to sign the contract in the form in which it then stood.

Cur. adv. vult.

Nov. 21.—STIRLING, J., stated the facts, and continued: With reference to the various questions of fact which arise, I think, in the first place, that Mr. Nisbet made the remark which he stated in his evidence that he usually did. This amounted in substance to an acceptance on behalf of the defendant of the offer by the plaintiff to take the house on the terms of the written agreement, subject only to the defendant being satisfied as to the plaintiff's responsibility. If, however, no such remark was made, then it seems to me that the document signed by the plaintiff must be treated merely as an offer, not accepted to any extent at the time when the plaintiff left Messrs. Nisbet's office.

Secondly, I think that as a matter of fact the defendant signed the document without intending finally to bind himself to accept the plaintiff as his tenant, or to abandon any right which he had to object to the plaintiff's responsibility. I come to this conclusion because the defendant appeared to me to be a truthful witness, and further, because his conduct on the 25th of September appears to me to be consistent with his account of what took place at the interview between Brown and himself on the 24th of September.

Thirdly, I think the effect of the plaintiff's instructions to his solicitor was this, that he was not satisfied of plaintiff's responsibility, and consequently declined to accept her alone as tenant; but was willing to accept her and two responsible persons as joint tenants on the terms in other respects of the written document.

Then arises the question whether the defendant, after signing the document, could in point of law take the course which he did. The general law is laid down thus by Erle, J., in Pym v. Campbell: "The production of a paper purporting to be an agreement by a party, with his signature attached, affords a strong presumption that it is his written agreement; and, if, in fact, he did sign the paper animo contrahendi, the terms contained in it are conclusive, and cannot be varied by parol evidence. . . . The distinction in point of law is that evidence to vary the terms of an agreement in writing is not admissible, but evidence to show that there is not an agreement at all is admissible." In the same case Crompton, J., says: "I know of no rule of law to estop parties from showing that a paper, purporting to be a signed agreement, was in fact signed by mistake, or that it was signed on the terms that it should not be an agreement till money was paid, or something else done. . . . The parties may not vary a written agreement; but they may show that they never came to an agreement at all, and that the signed paper was never intended to be the record of the terms of the agreement; for they never had agreeing minds. Evidence to show that does not vary an agreement, and is admissible." Other authorities for the same proposition are Gudgen v. Bassett and Furness v. Meek.

It is said, however, that though this may be so generally, the doctrine thus stated does not apply, because the defendant has pleaded that he delivered the paper as an escrow on a condition; and that this condition is inconsistent with the written document—viz., that the plaintiff and two other persons not named should be joint lessees, and not the plaintiff alone. It may be that the form of pleading is open to some criticism; but in substance the defence of no contract appears to me to be proved. In the first place the law as stated in Pym v. Campbell is that evidence may be given to show that there was no agreement between the plaintiff and defendant; and the defendant has satisfied me that he never intended to accept the plaintiff as sole tenant. Secondly, I think that the true effect of what the defendant and his solicitors did was to decline the plaintiff as sole tenant on the ground that the defendant was not satisfied of her responsibility, and at the same time to express willingness to accept her along with two other persons as joint tenants; or in other words the defendant refused to enter into an agreement on the terms of the written document, but at the same time made a counter offer, which was declined.

In my judgment there was no contract between the plaintiff and defendant, and the action must be dismissed.

Action dismissed.

Solicitors, Rogers, Hartley, & Bastard; Nisbet, Daw, & Nisbet.

Chan. Div. } Kekewich, J. } Nov. 10, 11, 12.

WALTHAMSTOW URBAN DISTRICT COUNCIL v. HENWOOD. (a.)

Local government—Service of notices by post—"Prepaid letter"—Evidence of service—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 257, 267.

In order to prove that notices have been duly served by post under section 267 of the Public Health Act, 1875, it is not sufficient for the evidence adduced, to show that the letter containing the notice "was properly addressed and posted"; it must also show that the letter was prepaid.

This was a summons taken out by the Walthamstow Urban District Council asking for (1) a declaration that they were entitled under section 257 of the Public Health Act, 1875, to a charge of £40 17s. 2d. upon certain land and premises of which the defendant was the owner, such sum being the amount apportioned by the plaintiff council's surveyor in respect of the said premises for certain expenses incurred by the plaintiffs under section 41 of the said Act and section 19 of the Public Health Acts Amendment Act, 1890; and (2) a sale to enforce the said charge.

Notice of the apportionment referred to in the summons had been served on the defendant on the 4th of July, 1895; and on the 31st of October, after the expiration of the three months allowed by section 257 of the Act for the service of a written notice disputing such apportionment, a further notice was sent to the defendant, demanding payment of the amount apportioned. The defendant made default in payment, and these proceedings were commenced.

The defendant then filed an affidavit stating that on the 5th of July, 1895, after receiving notice of the apportionment, he wrote to the chairman of the plaintiff council a letter disputing the amount settled by the plaintiff's surveyor to be due from him. The clerk of the council filed an affidavit in reply stating that he could find no trace whatever of the defendant's letter or of its receipt by the plaintiff council, or by the chairman or clerk. The defendant then filed a further affidavit alleging that the letter was addressed to the chairman of the plaintiff council at their offices, and that he put it into the post himself.

Fleetwood Pritchard, for the defendant, took the preliminary objection that as the defendant had served a written notice disputing the apportionment within the time allowed by the statute, the apportionment was not binding upon him, and could not therefore be dealt with on the present summons, for, in the circumstances, the proper tribunal to fix the amount was a court of summary jurisdiction.

Naldrett, for the plaintiffs.

KEKEWICH, J., after stating the facts and referring to the provisions of section 267 of the Public Health Act, 1875, continued: It is a question to me whether the notice to the chairman is strictly sufficient, but I will not deal with that point. I base my decision on the fact that the defendant does not swear that he posted the notice in a prepaid letter. By section 267 of the Act it is made a condition precedent that the letter should be prepaid, and unless it is prepaid the notice is not good. The result is, therefore, that the preliminary objection fails, and I must hear the application on its merits.

On the merits of the case his lordship subsequently made the declaration asked for by the summons.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, G. Houghton.

Solicitor for the defendant, H. H. Wells.

(a.) Reported by R. J. A. MORRISON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

House of Lords.

From C. A. } (England). } July 31, 1896.

SCHOLFIELD v. EARL OF LONDESBOROUGH. (a.)

Bill of exchange—Acceptance with blank spaces—Alteration—Forgery—Negligence—Stamp—Liability of acceptor—Bill of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), s. 64, sub-section 1.

The acceptor of a bill of exchange does not become liable to an indorsee for value for a sum beyond the amount of his acceptance because the form of the document and the stamp used admit of a forgery in the hands of a dishonest person.

Young v. Grote, 4 Bing. 253, considered and commented upon.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (43 W. R. 331, [1895] 1 Q. B. 536) affirmed.

This was an appeal from an order of the Court of Appeal (Lord Esher, M.R., and Rigby, L.J.; Lopes, L.J., dissenting), 43 W. R. 331, [1895] 1 Q. B. 536, affirming the judgment of Charles, J., in favour of Lord Londesborough.

The facts were shortly as follow:—The action was brought by the appellant against the respondent, the defendant in the action, as the alleged acceptor of a bill of exchange for £3,500. The bill had been drawn by one Sanders, and accepted by the defendant. The bill as originally drawn and accepted was for £500, and afterwards, before indorsement, was fraudulently altered by the drawer into a bill for £3,500. The bill was dated London, the 8th of September, 1890, and bore a £2 stamp sufficient to cover £4,000; sufficient spaces had been left for the alterations. The defendant, after accepting it, handed it back in the ordinary course to the drawer; and then Sanders, having altered it, indorsed it, and it subsequently came into the hands of the plaintiff, the present appellant, who took it bonâ fide and for value.

Charles, J., held that the defendant was not estopped by having accepted the bill in the form in which it was originally drawn from setting up the subsequent alteration as a defence to the action for the full amount, but was liable for the £500, and that as this sum had been paid into court he was entitled to judgment.

On appeal Lord Esher, M.R., and Rigby, L.J., held that the acceptor of a bill owes no duty to subsequent holders not to accept a bill drawn in such a form as to facilitate fraud, and if there was such a duty there had been no negligence in this case, and even assuming negligence it was not the proximate cause of the loss. Lopes, L.J., took a different view, but in the result the judgment of Charles, J., was affirmed.

Against this decision the plaintiff appealed.

Asquith, Q.C., and E. Morten, for the appellant.

Jelf, Q.C., and A. T. Lawrence (C. K. Francis with them), for the respondents.

The arguments used and cases referred to sufficiently appear in the judgments.

LORD HALSBURY, L.C.—In this case the plaintiff below (the appellant here) brought an action against the respondent on what purported to be a bill of exchange for £3,500. The respondent's name attached to the bill in question was genuine. He had, in fact, accepted a bill for £500, but by fraudulent alteration, amounting to forgery, the amount for which the respondent accepted was increased to the sum sued for.

It is not contended that the bill is not a forgery, and if nothing else appeared it would, of course, be a sufficient defence for the acceptor to plead and prove that he never accepted any such bill as that for which the plaintiff brought his action. But it is contended that the form of the bill was such that the respondent was negligent in accepting it.

The bill as originally accepted was so far in ordinary form and perfect that but for some criminal act it was, in its then form, a complete bill of exchange, having nothing to be added to or taken from it. It is said, indeed, that certain spaces were left which gave opportunity for the insertion of the added words and figures, and if by that is meant that the words and figures were not written so closely together as to prevent the insertion of other words and figures, the observation is true. But when it is said that certain spaces were left, it is to be remembered that there was nothing unusual or calculated to excite attention in the intervals between the written words and figures by which the bill was made. As a matter of fact, the person who drew the bill intended to draw it in such a way as to enable him to fill up the intervals between the letters and figures in question; but, to my mind, there was nothing suspicious in the appearance of the bill when tendered to the respondent for acceptance calculated to put him on his guard.

I cannot myself understand why the particular form of fraud adopted in this case should have any different operation in giving validity to a forged instrument rather than other forms of fraud to which instruments are subject. I am not aware of any principle known to the law which should attach such consequences to a written instrument when no such principle is applicable in any other region of jurisprudence where a man's own carelessness has given opportunity for the commission of a crime.

A man, for instance, does not lose his right to his property if he has unnecessarily exposed his goods, or allowed his pocket-handkerchief to hang out of his pocket, but could recover against a bonâ fide purchaser of any article so lost, notwithstanding the fact that his conduct had to some extent assisted the thief. It is true that stolen goods sold in market overt could be retained by a bonâ fide purchaser for value, notwithstanding that they had been previously stolen; but the same result would follow equally whether the owner had been careful or careless in the custody of his goods.

The truth is that the whole doctrine that facilitating forgery, or giving opportunity for forgery, or so acting that a forgery is a possible result, affects the validity of the instrument forged, may be traced, in English law at all events, to the case of Young v. Grote, 4 Bing. 253, and probably beyond, to certain doctrines of the Roman civil law, which, to my mind, form no part of the law merchant so far as it exists in English jurisprudence. That case has been pushed so far in argument that I think the time has come when it would be desirable to deal with it authoritatively by your lordships, and to examine how far it ought to be quoted as an authority for anything. It is to be observed that when one looks at the judgments delivered, there is an inextricable confusion, not only among the different judges, but in the judgment of each judge in turn. Best, C.J., says: "If Young, instead of leaving the cheque with a female, had left it with a man of business, he would have guarded against fraud in the mode of filling it up." So that here the negligence is made to consist, so far as the drawer was concerned, in leaving a cheque, already signed in blank, with a female unacquainted with business, and in accordance with this view the learned judge goes on to distinguish Hall v. Fuller, 5 B. & C. 750, because, he says, the alteration in that case was not made by the drawer's clerk nor a person improperly trusted by him, but by an entire stranger who accidentally became possessed of the cheque. Park, J., again distinguishing Hall v. Fuller, says: "Can any one say that the cheque signed by Young is not a genuine order? I say it is. The cheques left by him to be filled up by his wife when filled up by her became his genuine orders." This is an intelligible ground; but the learned judge immediately adds that the arbitrator had found negligence on the part of the drawer, and he says he concurs, and then goes on: "He leaves blank cheques in the hands of his wife, who was ignorant of business, but having left them with her to be filled up as the exigency of the moment might require, they became upon her issuing them his genuine orders." It is manifest that the learned judge oscillates between the two views. In the perfectly sound view upon which he decides in the defendant's favour he adds the absolutely irrelevant statement that the cheques were left in the hands of the wife, who was ignorant of business. Burrough, J., seems only to deal with the question of negligence, and says the blame is all on one side; while Gaselee, J., points out the circumstances negativing the general authority of the clerk, who was the actual forger, either to fill up cheques or to receive money from the bank; these circumstances, he says, might have strengthened the case. It is not very surpising that a variety of reasons have been given by various judges for not disagreeing with the case. The arbitrator had decided that there was negligence, and Park, J., as is apparent, puts forward, and justly puts forward, the argument that by the act of the drawer's wife that cheque became the husband's genuine order. Shortly put, the argument is that he attached his genuine signature, leaving it to be filled up by his wife, and, as the learned judge emphatically says, "When filled up by his wife they became his genuine orders." If that is a true view of the case—and that is the learned judge's reasoning—it could not be doubted but that it was the drawer's genuine order.

I am not concerned to discuss whether the particular mode in which a written order, which was given by the banker to his customers for the purpose being filled up in the usual way before signing it, may afford ground for saying that the banker was misled by his own customer. If, to use Lord Cranworth's phraseology, the customer by any act of his has induced the banker to act upon the document by his act or neglect of some act usual in the course of dealing between them, it is quite intelligible that he should not be permitted to set up his own act or neglect to the prejudice of the banker whom he has thus misled, or by neglect permitted to be misled.

I do not say that had I been the arbitrator I could have agreed that there was in the particular case any such neglect as would have come up to this proposition; but the principle, as Lord Cranworth says, is a familiar one, though it may not have been properly applied to the then state of facts. Your lordships have acted upon it in Ireland v. Livingstone, L. R. 5 H. L. 395, and in Vagliano v. Bank of England, 39 W. R. 657, [1891] A. C. 107, and the minuteness with which the arbitrator described the printed forms of drafts which were supplied by the bankers to their customers indicates what was in his mind as to what I will describe as an agreed or assumed course of business between banker and customer, and under those circumstances the finding of negligence which was conclusive upon the court, might have justified it in assuming that the facts brought it up to the proposition which Lord Cranworth suggests; but, unfortunately, I think Best, C.J., adopted the argument presented to him that Pothier might be quoted as an authority decisive of the case; and I think some of the confusion that has arisen upon the frequent occasions when the case has been quoted, has resulted from a misapplication of what Pothier in fact has said, and the more serious assumption that what he has said forms any part of the mercantile law of England.

Now Pothier, in his Treatise on Bills of Exchange, and commenting on Scacchia, a Roman lawyer of the seventeenth century, gives a variety of illustrations, sometimes adopting and sometimes modifying the rules which Scacchia lays down. [His lordship referred at length to Scaccise, Tract. de Commer., pp. 390, 391, and to Pothier, vol. iv., pp. 516-518.]

I do not myself think that either the original by Scacchia or the commentary by Pothier are relevant to the matter in hand. We are not dealing here with either "mandant" or "mandatory," and I do not think that it is part of the commercial law of England howsoever applied; and before accepting the modified doctrine of Pothier it is well to see what that doctrine is.

That learned author, who gives the case of the forger who has added a cipher to the sum written in figures, and gives it expressly as an example illustrative of his principle, proceeds to show that it is founded on certain pronouncements of the civil law, and proceeds accordingly to show that a slave sold with a knowledge that he was a thief makes his master responsible to the purchaser for any theft he may commit.

M. Buguet, the learned commentator, points out in the note that it is impossible to render the drawer responsible for an act to which he is no party, and it would be impossible to particularize all the precautions that it would be necessary to take. The language used, la faute du tireur, may be satisfied by a great many things which certainly the English law would not recognize as an answer, but which the language of Pothier would obviously include.

The careless keeping of a cheque-book, like the careless keeping of the seal in the Bank of Ireland v. Trustees of Evans' Charities, 3 W. R. 573; 5 H. L. Cas. 389, might well satisfy the words faute du tireur, and I confess I should regard with great apprehension a decision that anything that a jury should regard as faute du tireur, should render a forged instrument valid.

As M. Bugnet truly says, it is impossible to particularize all those things that might have to be considered—the sort of paper, the ink. There are well known precautions which, for greater security, some banks take to prevent the forgery of their notes. There is some colour which prevents, or at all events renders difficult, imitations by photography; and is it to be in each case a question for the jury whether this or that precaution was omitted in drawing a bill, or in accepting it when drawn?

It seems to me it would be a very serious proposition to lay down that such questions should be permitted to arise when dealing with such an instrument as a bill of exchange; and other questions would then arise, as, I think, was pointed out in the course of the argument—a minute examination of every bill tendered for acceptance, and a consideration of how far its form might give an opportunity to a forger to forge and escape detection.

This very case has in almost precisely similar circumstances been already decided in the Adelphi Bank v. Edwards, and I regret very much that that case has not been reported. I entirely concur with what Lindley, L.J., said in that case, that it was wrong to contend that it is negligence to sign a negotiable instrument so that somebody else can tamper with it; and the wider proposition of Bovill, J., in a former case, Société Générale v. Metropolitan Bank, 21 W. R. 335, that people are not supposed to commit forgery, and that the protection against forgery is not the vigilance of parties excluding the possibility of committing forgery, but the law of the land.

It appears to me that even the modified rule laid down by Pothier, considering the principles on which that learned author himself relies for its acceptance, is not and never has been the law of England. I think this appeal ought to be dismissed with costs.

Lord WATSON.—The appellant, who is the onerous holder of a bill of exchange purporting to be for £3,500, seeks in this suit to recover that sum from the respondent. [His lordship stated the facts.] The case was tried before Charles, J., upon the facts already stated, with these further admissions made by the appellant: (1) That the respondent was ignorant of bill transactions; (2) that he knew nothing about the stamp laws; and (3) that he had good reason to place implicit confidence in the honesty of Scott Sanders. With regard to the first and second of these admissions, I must observe that, in my opinion, ignorance of bill transactions or of the stamp laws will not, in a question with an onerous and bonâ fide holder, absolve persons who, notwithstanding their ignorance, choose to engage in such transactions, from the fulfilment of any duty or obligation which the law imposes upon the parties to a bill of exchange. The reasonable belief of the respondent in the honesty of the person by whom the bill was drawn and presented to him for acceptance might, if he was under a legal duty to take precautions against its fraudulent alteration, be an element of importance in considering whether, as matter of fact, he acted negligently, as the appellant alleges.

The appellant did not maintain that the respondent either directly authorized, or meant to authorise, Scott Sanders to alter the amount of the bill. Nor did he maintain that the respondent had by his subsequent conduct homologated or adopted the alteration. He contended that the law merchant imposes upon every person who either draws or accepts a bill of exchange with a view to its circulation the duty of taking reasonable precautions, in order to prevent the possibility of its amount being fraudulently increased; that the respondent negligently failed to perform that duty, inasmuch as he accepted a bill written upon a stamp sufficient to cover the altered amount, and having spaces left blank in the writing which enabled the drawer to fill them up in such a manner as to effect and at the same time to conceal his fraud; and that, by reason of such negligence, the respondent is estopped from denying his liability for the full amount of £3,500 appearing on the face of the bill.

Charles, J., who appears to have relied upon the authority of Young v. Grote, held in point of law that, if the acceptor of a bill of exchange "signs it negligently in such a shape as to render alteration a likely result, he is responsible on the altered instrument." Upon the facts of the case the learned judge came to the conclusion that the respondent had not been guilty of negligence; but in respect that the alteration of the bill was not apparent, he found that the appellant was entitled to the money which had been paid into court, and entered judgment for the respondent. His decision was affirmed, but not upon the same grounds, by a majority of the Court of Appeal. The Master of the Rolls and Rigby, L.J., were of opinion that, although the rule contended for by the appellant might prevail as between a customer and his banker, it was not applicable according to English law as between the acceptor of a bill of exchange and subsequent holders. Their lordships were further of opinion that the rule, assuming it to have previously existed, was abolished by section 64 of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882. Lopes, L.J., dissented, being of opinion that the principle of Young v. Grote applied as between the acceptor and an indorsee acquiring right to the bill after his acceptance; and his lordship also, differing from Charles, J., held that the respondent had been negligent, and that the appellant ought, therefore, to have judgment for the full amount of the bill as fraudulently altered.

In these circumstances it becomes necessary to examine the authorities which were noticed by the learned judges or were cited in the able argument addressed to us on behalf of the appellant. Such of these authorities as really bear upon the doctrine propounded by the appellant are few in number. Of the rest, some have a very distant relation to it; whilst others are irrelevant.

The basis of the appellant's argument is to be found in Young v. Grote. In that case the customer of a bank signed several blank cheques and gave them to his wife, to be filled up and negotiated by her as she required. In one of these the sum of £50 was inserted, in her presence and at her request, by a clerk, to whom she then gave the cheque in order that he might get the money for her. In writing the sum the clerk had left spaces with fraudulent intent, so as to enable him to increase the amount to £350, which was paid to him by the banker. Best, C.J., and three other learned judges of the King's Bench held, in these circumstances, that the banker was entitled to take credit, in account with his customer, for the full amount which he had paid upon the cheque.

The doctrine laid down by Pothier (Traité du Contrat de change, Chap. IV., Art. III., s. 99) was referred to with approval by some of the learned judges. In that passage the author deals with the mutual rights and obligations arising out of the contract of mandate which subsists between a banker and the mandant whose cheques or orders he has undertaken to pay. He notices the rule of the Roman law, which had been followed by Scacchia, to the effect that mandator debet refundere mandatorio quicquid ei inculpabiliter abest ex causâ mandati. According to that rule the customer would be liable for the amount of a fraudulently altered cheque in every case where the banker could not have detected the alteration by the exercise of reasonable care. Pothier qualifies the rule, and in so far favours the customer, by limiting his liability to those cases in which his own negligence in drawing the cheque has given the opportunity for its alteration.

The reported opinions of the learned judges leave it doubtful whether their decision in Young v. Grote went upon the doctrine of Pothier, or upon the ground that the customer by signing a blank cheque had undertaken liability for any sum which might be filled in before it was presented for payment. I think the Lord Chancellor (Cranworth) must have had the first of these grounds in view when he said, in Bank of Ireland v. Trustees of Evans' Charities: "Now, the case of Young v. Grote went upon that ground (whether correctly arrived at in point of fact is immaterial) that the plaintiff there was estopped from saying that he did not sign the cheque for £350; and if the circumstances are such, whether arising from negligence or from any other cause, that, as between the customer and his banker, the customer is estopped from saying that he did not sign the cheque for a particular amount, that as between them is the same as if he had signed it." On the other hand, Lord Wensleydale (then Parke, B.), when delivering the opinion of seven judges of the Exchequer Chamber in Robarts v. Tucker, 16 Q. B. 560, indicates that Young v. Grote was decided upon the second ground. After referring to the facts of the case, he observed: "This was in truth considering that that customer had, by signing a blank cheque, given authority to the person in whose hands it was to fill up the cheque in any way the blank permitted."

Guardians of Halifax Union v. Wheelwright, 23 W. R. 704, L. R. 10 Ex. 183, appears to me to be a decision in entire conformity with the doctrine of Pothier. The guardians were in the habit of passing orders upon their treasurer, who was local agent of the bank in which their money was deposited. Some of these orders, written by their clerk, and thereafter signed by the guardians, were drawn by the clerk in such a way that he was enabled to increase their amounts before he presented them for payment. The court held that the treasurer was in the same position as if he had been their banker; and that the guardians were estopped, by their negligent drawing of the orders, from maintaiaing that he had not their authority to pay the full amount of these orders, as fraudulently increased.

In my opinion Young v. Grote can have no bearing upon the present case, if it was decided upon the ground that the customer, by signing a blank cheque, had given implied authority to fill it up to any subsequent holder. Whoever signs a cheque or accepts a bill in blank, and then puts it into circulation, must necessarily intend that either the person to whom he gives it, or some future holder, shall fill up the blank which he has left. No such inference would be reasonable in the case where the drawer or acceptor signs for a particular sum specified on the face of the document. If, on the other hand, the decision in Young v. Grote was based upon the ratio that the customer, in filling up the cheque through his wife, whom he had constituted his agent for that purpose, had failed in the duty which he owed to his banker by giving facilities for its fraudulent alteration, I am not prepared to affirm that it cannot be supported by authority. But it does not, in my opinion, necessarily follow that the same rule must be applied between the acceptor of a bill of exchange and a holder acquiring right to it after acceptance. The duty of the customer arises directly out of the contractual relation existing at the time between him and the banker, who is his mandatory. There is no such connection between the drawer or acceptor and possible future indorsees of a bill of exchange.

The duty which the appellant's argument assigns to an acceptor is towards the public, or what is much the same thing, toward those members of the public who may happen to acquire right to the bill after it has been criminally tampered with. Apart from authority, I do not think the imposition of such a duty can be justified on any sound legal principle. In many if not most cases which occur in the course of business, the bill is written out by the drawer, and sent by him to the acceptor, who is under an obligation to sign it. Assuming the appellant's argument to be well founded, it would be within the right of the acceptor to return the bill unsigned if it were not drawn so as to exclude all reasonable possibilities of fraud or forgery. The exercise of that right might lead to very serious complications in commercial transactions. Besides, it is not consistent with the general spirit of the law to hold innocent persons responsible for not taking measures to prevent the commission of a crime which they may have no reason to anticipate; although there may be an exception in the case where one of the parties to the instrument has, either by express agreement or by implication established in the law, become bound to use such precautions. I am therefore unwilling, in the case of an acceptor to affirm the doctrine upon which the appellant relies, unless it can be shown to be established by authority as part of the English law merchant.

I shall briefly refer to four decisions, because they are either cited in argument, or have been discussed, in this or similar cases by the court below. All of these cases related to bills of exchange; but in none of them had there been any alteration of the amount for which the acceptor signed.

In Ingham v. Primrose, 7 C. B. N. S. 82, 7 W. R. C. L. Dig. 12, the facts were, that a blank acceptance was returned to the acceptor in the same condition in which it had been issued by him. He tore the bill in two, and threw away both parts in the street, where they were picked up by a passer-by, who pasted them together and negotiated the restored bill. The acceptor was found liable to an onerous holder, not because he had signed a bill which facilitated fraud, but upon the obvious consideration that he had negligently put into circulation a negotiable document which had not been properly cancelled.

Arnold v. Cheque Bank, 24 W. R. 759, 1 C. P. D. 578, had its origin in these circumstances. A firm in New York purchased there a genuine bill on London, which they indorsed to an English creditor, and enclosed in a letter addressed to him. The letter enclosing the bill was stolen from their letter-box by one of their clerks; and the stolen bill was paid by the Cheque Bank in London upon a forged indorsation. It was held that such payment did not afford a good defence to the bank against a claim by the genuine indorsee and true owner of the bill. No question arose as to any duty owing by the acceptor of the bill.

In Baxendale v. Bennett, 26 W. R. 899, 3 Q. B. D. 525, it was decided that an acceptor was not liable to the holder upon a bill accepted by him in blank, which had been stolen from his drawer and filled up and circulated by the thief. A different decision was given in London and South-Western Bank v. Wentworth, 28 W. R. 516, 5 Ex. D. 96, where a bill signed by him in blank was entrusted by the acceptor, for the purpose of its being negotiated, to a person who fraudulently filled in a larger sum than the acceptor intended, disposed of the bill, and appropriated its proceeds. The difference of result in these two cases was plainly due to the fact that in the one the acceptor had not, and in the other he had, issued the bill as a negotiable document. But in neither case did the decision of the court turn upon the supposed duty of the acceptor to guard against fraudulent alterations of the bill.

I shall now proceed to consider the remaining and only English authorities which appear to me to be in point. Before doing so, I think it is not immaterial to observe that Pothier, who is the real author of the doctrine relied on by the appellant, in the passage cited by the learned judges who decided Young v. Grote, only applies it to the case of a banker and his customer. But in Art. III. of the same chapter of his treatise the learned author discusses the nature of the contract which is constituted between the drawer and the acceptor of a bill which he asserts to be un vrai contrat de mandat, mandatum solvendæ pecuniæ. I think it is apparent from the context of Art. III. that the rule laid down by Pothier in section 99 was meant by him to apply, not only as between banker and customer, but as between a drawer and an acceptor who pays in compliance with his drawer's mandate. But the rule has no application to parties between whom there is no subsisting contract of mandate. According to its terms, an acceptor, who paid the full sum appearing upon the face of a bill which he knew or had reason to believe had been fraudulently increased after his acceptance, would have no right to recover the increased amount from his drawer.

It was argued that certain expressions used by Lord Blackburn (at that time Blackburn, J.) in Swan v. North British Australasian Co., 11 W. R. 862, 2 H. & C. 175, tend to show that the rule which Pothier applies to a customer who draws a cheque upon his banker has application also as between the acceptor of a bill and possible future holders. His lordship there said, with reference to Young v. Grote: "It may be that the case is to be supported upon some of the grounds there stated or upon the broader ground apparently supported by the authority of Pothier in the passage cited in Young v. Grote, that the person putting into circulation a bill of exchange, by the law merchant owes a duty to all parties to the bill to take reasonable precautions against the possibility of fraudulent alterations in it; it is not necessary to inquire how that may be." Lopes, L.J., infers from these words that "it is impossible not to see that in the case of negotiable instruments Blackburn, J., thought the duty did exist." I am unable to assent to that inference. The words convey anything but a hearty approval of the decision in Young v. Grote, and at the most they do not even amount to obiter dicta. They contain no expression of judicial opinion, and do nothing more than state the tenor of an argument which the noble and learned lord had not found it necessary to consider. One thing seems certain, namely, that his lordship had not examined the text of Pothier, which contains no such doctrine as his words impute.

Several points were raised for the decision of the Court of Common Plea in Société Générale v. Metropolitan Bank (Limited), 21 W. R. 335, and one of these came very near to the question which your lordships have to consider in this case. The time of payment of a bill of exchange had, after issue, been fraudulently altered from eight to eighty days after date. The alteration being material, it was sought to make the acceptor liable, upon the ground that he had negligently left a vacant space in the bill, between the words "eight" and "days," which enabled the fraudulent holder to add the letter "y" without risk of the fraud being detected upon inspection of the document. The court, consisting of Bovill, C.J., with Keating and Brett, JJ., came to the conclusion that the acceptor was not liable. None of the learned judges affirmed that there was any duty incumbent upon the acceptor to take precautions against forgery; but, on that assumption, they all held that there had been no negligence. Two of them used language which does not appear to me to be consistent with the existence of such a duty. The Chief Justice observed: "Persons are not to be supposed to commit forgery, and the protection against such a claim is the law of the land, not the vigilance of parties in excluding all possibility of committing it." The present Master of the Rolls said: "I not only protest that there was no negligence, but say that no judge ought to leave to a jury the fact as evidence of negligence. But there is no duty on any one to suppose that those against whose character there is no imputation will commit forgery whenever the opportunity occurs."

The next and the last of the English authorities which raised the same questions of law and fact which occur in this appeal is Adelphi Bank v. Edwards, decided in the year 1882. The case has not been reported: but in the course of the argument your lordships had the advantage of considering the shorthand writer's notes of the opinions delivered by the learned judges, both in the court of first instance and in the Court of Appeal. From these it appears that the defendant Edwards had accepted a bill for £22 10s., which was written on a stamp sufficient to cover £300. Spaces were left in the writing, which enabled a fraudulent holder to increase the amount of the bill to £222 10s. by inserting the figure "2" between the letter "£" and the figures "22" in the corner of the bill, and by adding the words "two hundred" at the end of one line, and the word "and" at the beginning of the next. The plaintiff bank, having paid the increased amount, sued the acceptor, upon the same arguments which have been submitted to your lordships on behalf of the appellant. Chitty, J., before whom the case was tried, was of opinion that, upon the law contended for by the plaintiff, the defendant had not been guilty of negligence. At the same time, the learned judge did not accept that law. He said: "The defendant, in my opinion, as a prudent man of business, was not bound to contemplate that the bill was coming into fraudulent hands, nor that by the perpetration of a crime it would be altered in the manner in which it has been altered." In the Appeal Court, the learned judges took the same view of the facts as Chitty, J., but they also negatived the existence of any rule or principle requiring the acceptor of a bill to exclude facilities for its alteration. Baggallay, L.J., said: "It seems to me impossible to say that there was any duty on the part of the acceptor of this bill towards the party who might subsequently become the holder of the bill, so to criticise, and so to examine the bill before he signed, as to put it out of the possibility of any additional words being afterwards inserted in it." The present Master of the Rolls (then Brett, L.J.) stated forcibly the same opinions, which he has expressed in stronger language and at greater length in this case. Lindley, L.J., after referring to Young v. Grote and "that class of cases," proceeded thus: "We cannot say there was negligence here, unless we go the whole length of saying that it is negligence to sign a negotiable instrument so that somebody else can tamper with it. I cannot go that length. I think it would be wrong. There is no authority which compels us to do anything of the sort."

Two decisions of the Court of Session belonging to a period when the Commercial Law of Scotland was in its infancy, Grahame v. Gillespie, Morr. Dict. 1453, and Pagan & Hunter v. Wylie, Morr. Dict. 1660, were founded on by the appellant. Both cases were decided upon what I consider a false analogy, namely, that the acceptor of a bill for a definite amount, which is capable of being fraudulently increased by the insertion of additional words and figures, stands in exactly the same position as the acceptor of a blank bill. The American case of Garard v. Haddan, 67 Pennsylv. (17 Smith) 82, which was also cited for the appellant, is open to the same criticism.

The result of the English authorities is, in my opinion, decidedly adverse to the appellant. Before the present action was brought, the rule for which he contends had, so far as I have been able to find, never been enforced in an English court or affirmed by an English judge. On the contrary, it had been disapproved by Bovill, C.J., and the present Master of the Rolls in Société Générale v. Metropolitan Bank; and the case of Adelphi Bank v. Edwards, in which four judges were unanimous, is a direct precedent against it. It is, no doubt, within the competency of this House to overrule the decision in Adelphi Bank v. Edwards; but I see no reason why your lordships should do so. The doctrine of Pothier, out of which the contention of the bill-holder in this and previous litigations has grown, is founded upon reasons which have no application to any question between a drawer or acceptor and a holder acquiring right to the bill after acceptance; and I know of no principle of law which would warrant its extension to that case.

I desire to add that, had your Lordships thought fit to accept the legal argument of the appellant's, I should not have been of opinion that the claim which he makes in this action was excluded by section 64 of the Bills of Exchange Act. That clause admits an action for the altered amount of the bill, when the acceptor has authorized the alteration. Accordingly, on the supposition already made, if it had been shown that he had failed to discharge his legal duty to the appellant, the respondent would have been estopped from saying that he did not authorize the fraud committed by Scott Sanders. That estoppel by negligence would, in my opinion, have been sufficient to establish that the respondent had "authorized" the fraudulent alteration within the meaning of section 64.

For these reasons, I also am of opinion that the judgment appealed from ought to be affirmed.

Lord MACNAGHTEN.—Charles, J., and Lopes, L.J., are both of opinion that a person who accepts a bill of exchange intending that it should be put into circulation owes to every one who may become the holder a duty which they define or describe as the duty "not to be negligent with regard to the form of the instrument."

Agreeing so far, the opinions of the learned judges diverge at this point.

It is part of the history of the case that the bill presented to Lord Londesborough for his acceptance was designed to facilitate a premeditated forgery. But Charles, J., finds that under the circumstances the instrument as presented would not have aroused suspicion in the mind of a reasonably prudent person; and therefore he comes to the conclusion that Lord Londesborough was not guilty of that sort of negligence which would make him liable for the consequences of the crime afterwards consummated. Lopes, L.J., on the other hand, thinks that the bill before acceptance presented such obvious opportunities for alteration, and such a combination of suspicious circumstances, as ought to have attracted the attention of any man of ordinary prudence. He considers that Lord Londesborough by his want of care and caution "enabled" the drawer to commit the forgery. Thinking that forgery was the result "to be anticipated," he holds that Lord Londesborough must suffer for his neglect.

Assuming the existence of the duty which both these learned judges would cast upon the acceptor of a bill of exchange, I should be disposed to agree with Charles, J., rather than with the Lord Justice. To me it seems extravagant to suggest that the acceptor of a bill is bound to be familiar with the different steps in the scale of stamp duties, and to recognize a stamp of a higher grade than is required for the purpose in hand as an indication of fraud. With regard to the gaps, or vacant spaces in the bill as presented to Lord Londesborough. I think a person of ordinary prudence who had confidence in the man with whom he was dealing, and who never had had his attention called to this species of fraud, might well have passed them by unnoticed, or if he had happened to notice them might have thought them of no moment. I cannot think that there is any rule which forbids you to give a person with whom you are acquainted, and whom you believe to be honest, some little credit for honesty even when he comes for your promised acceptance to a bill of exchange. I cannot think that even on such an occasion you are bound to scan his handiwork with the eye of a detective, as if it were the production of a would-be forger. The prevention of crime is perhaps better left to the operation of the criminal law.

However that may be, I agree with your lordships in thinking that the supposed duty does not, in fact, exist.

Both the learned judges who are in favour of the doctrine refer it to "the principle of Young v. Grote." Young v. Grote is a case which has excited as much diversity of opinion as any case in the books. It has given rise to various explanations not altogether uniform or consistent. That circumstance of itself is regarded by some judges as a badge of merit and a passport to the confidence of the profession. But when you are in search of a principle, the effect is rather embarrassing. And therefore, it is with some diffidence that I venture to inquire, What, after all, is the true principle of Young v. Grote?

In Orr v. Union Bank of Scotland, 1 Macq. 513, 3 W. R. Dig. 143, in 1854, and again in Bank of Ireland v. Trustees of Evans' Charities, in 1855, Cranworth, L.C., had occasion to comment on Young v. Grote. In the former case, referring to Young v. Grote, he says: "Whether the conclusion, in point of fact, was in that case well warranted is not important to consider. The principle is a sound one, that when the customer's neglect of due caution has caused his bankers to make a payment on a forged order, he shall not set up against them the invalidity of a document which he has induced them to act on as genuine."

If that be the principle of Young v. Grote, I do not think it helps the appellant much. It will be observed that Lord Cranworth treats the relation of banker and customer as the governing feature in the case. That relation is, I think, a long way off from the connection between the acceptor of a bill and a subsequent holder.

The observations of Parke, B., on Young v. Grote, in delivering the opinions of the judges in Bank of Ireland v. Trustees of Evans' Charities, are much to the same effect. Nor do I think that there is any difference in substance between the views expressed by Lord Cranworth himself in the two cases. In the latter case he seems to treat the decision in Young v. Grote as founded on estoppel, though, as Cockburn, C.J., points out, Young v. Grote was "decided without reference to estoppel at all" (2 Ex. 189).

Other judges, including Parke, B., himself, in the earlier case of Robarts v. Tucker have held that Young v. Grote is to supported on the ground that the customer had by signing a blank cheque given authority to anyone in whose hand it was to fill it up in any way the blank permitted. If this is the real ground of the decision, it has still less bearing on the present case, where nothing further was required to be added after Lord Londesborough's acceptance to give effect or negotiability to the instrument.

Whatever may be the better ground for supporting the decision in Young v. Grote, it is obvious, on referring to the report in Bingham, that the court went very much on the authority of the doctrine laid down by Pothier, that in cases of mandate generally, and particularly in the case of banker and customer, if the person who receives the mandate is misled through the fault of the person who gives it, the loss must fall exclusively on the giver. That is not unreasonable; but the doctrine has no application to the present case. There is no mandate as between the acceptor of a bill and a subsequent holder.

The other case on which much reliance was placed on the part of the appellant was the case of Swan v. North British Australasian Co., which was cited for the observations of Blackburn, J. With the comments which have been made on those observations by my noble and learned friend Lord Watson, I quite agree. If the report is correct, the reference to Pothier is certainly inaccurate.

Passing from authority, I must say that I am not at all persuaded that the contention on the part of the appellant can be supported on principle or on grounds of convenience. It was said that the negotiability of bills of exchange would be seriously impaired if persons who act as Lord Londesborough acted are not to be held liable for all the consequences of their want of caution. But I must say I was very much struck with some observations which fell from one of your lordships during the argument that the consequences to the transaction and dispatch of mercantile business would be serious indeed if it were laid down that a person under obligation to accept a bill was at liberty to refuse or delay acceptance on the ground that there was something in the form of the instrument of which a skilful forger might perhaps take advantage. After all, it is the drawer of a bill of exchange who has control over its form: the obligation of the acceptor is to pay the bill at maturity. Censorship over the form of the instrument is, I think, no part of his duty.

I am of opinion that the appeal must be dismissed.

Lord MORRIS.—I am of the same opinion. The liability of the defendant must arise from either, first, his complicity in the fraud; or, secondly, from some contractual relation, express or implied, between him and the holder of the bill of exchange; or, thirdly, from some duty he owed to the holder. There is no complicity by the defendant; there is no privity between the plaintiff and the defendant from which any contract can be spelt out. Well, is there any duty on the acceptance of a bill to a subsequent holder that the acceptor should scrutinize the bill presented to him for acceptance? In my opinion, none beyond this—that he should see that he accepts a bill filled up, because if he accepts a bill in blank that implies an authority to the person getting the acceptance to fill up the amount.

In Young v. Grote the acceptance was in blank. Even if well decided on its particular facts, and a case between banker and customer, I fail to see how it governs this case, where the defendant accepted a regularly filled up bill. If the defendant could be held liable, it appears to me an indorser would also be bound to enter on a scrutiny of the bill in order to protect himself from a subsequent holder. This case is an attempt to impose a new duty on an acceptor of a bill of exchange. The doctrine of estoppel binds an acceptor who accepts a blank bill, because by doing so he is precluded from setting up as a defence that he did not authorize the filling up; that doctrine has no application to the present case.

Lord SHAND.—I concur in thinking the appeal ought to be disallowed.

The weight of judicial opinion and authority is clearly against the contention of the appellant, unless indeed it could be shown that the case of Young v. Grote had a direct application, and that the grounds of that decision were applicable to the facts which have been here proved.

The question here raised was expressly decided in 1882 against the view contended for by the appellant, in the case of the Adelphi Bank v. Edwards, in which the judgment of Chitty, J., was unanimously affirmed by the Court of Appeal; and, besides the opinion of Bovill, C.J., and the present Master of the Rolls in the case of the Société Générale v. Metropolitan Bank, the same judgment has now been repeated by a majority of the Court of Appeal.

As to the case of Young v. Grote, I find nothing in the grounds of the judgment which supports the proposition that an indorsee of a bill of exchange for value has a legal claim against the acceptor, against whom no want of bonâ fides can be alleged, for a sum beyond the amount for which the acceptance was given, on the ground of negligence in his having given his acceptance to a bill in such a form and impressed with such a stamp as enabled the drawer to commit a forgery by enlarging the amount for which the acceptance was granted in such a way as to escape detection by the indorsee. The case of Young v. Grote, between a banker and his customer, was one in which there was the relation of parties contracting with each other. It appears to me that the ground of decision, as reported, was in conformity with the limited doctrine of Pothier that this relation inferred, if not expressly, at least by implication, the duty and obligation on the customer's part, in issuing cheques on his banker to third parties, to take care that these were not in such a form as to give the means of enlarging their amount without this being readily detected. In that view of the case the decision does not apply here, where the acceptor and the indorsee of the bill were strangers to each other, having no relation as contracting parties, which could imply the duty and obligation of the banker's customer to the banker. If, as has been suggested, the decision in Young v. Grote turned on the fact that the customer had signed cheques wholly blank in amount, by which the person acquiring possession might be held to have a mandate to fill in any sum he chose, the case has no application to the present. The acceptor here signed no bill blank in the sum, for there was expressed in writing in the body of the bill the amount for which he agreed to undertake liability.

I agree with your lordships in holding that there is no sound reason or legal principle to support the view that, on the ground of negligence, an acceptor of a bill becomes liable to a subsequent holder for a sum beyond the amount of his acceptance because the form of the document and the stamp used admits of a forgery in the hands of a dishonest person, such as occurred in this case. As to the stamp, I do not believe that in the course of ordinary business persons accepting bills scrutinize the paper on which a bill is written to see the amount it will carry; and I am certainly not prepared to say they are in any way required, as a matter of duty or obligation, to do so. Stamps of higher value than necessary must be often used when it is difficult or inconvenient to get a stamp of the precise value wanted. As to the form of the document, I think an acceptor, while himself acting in bonâ fide, who has the sum for which he has agreed to grant his acceptance expressed in the body of the bill is not called upon to anticipate and provide against forgery. To hold the contrary would lead to great inconvenience in business. An acceptor scrutinizing a bill might think it left room for a fraudulent addition, and might refuse acceptance to the serious injury of the drawer residing at a distance or abroad, or of a drawer who might have indorsed the bill for value given before acceptance, and he might be involved in litigation and found to have been unduly apprehensive and in the wrong; while after acceptance numerous and difficult questions might frequently arise as to what constituted negligence in particular cases like the present, in which two learned judges have differed on the point.

I think the appellant has failed to show that his contention is founded on sound legal principles; and though cases of successful fraud and forgery will, no doubt, occur from time to time, notwithstanding the risk of penal consequences incurred by the forger, yet a decision giving effect to the appellant's argument would, I think, lead to so great inconvenience in business and so much litigation as to create a greater evil than can arise under the existing law as now settled by your lordships' judgment.

Lord DAVEY.—I have had an opportunity of reading and considering the judgment which has been delivered by my noble and learned friend opposite (Lord Watson), and I so entirely agree in the conclusion at which he has arrived and the reasons which the noble and learned lord has expressed in support of his view, that I have not felt it necessary to write a judgment of my own. I only desire to say that, in my opinion, our judgment in this case is outside the case of Young v. Grote. The doctrine of that case was one arising out of the relation of mandant and mandatory, which does not exist in the case of the drawer and holder of a bill of exchange.

Order appealed from affirmed and appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors for the appellant, Smith, Fawdon, & Low.

Solicitors for the respondent, Saltwell, Tryon, & Saltwell.

Privy Council.

(From the Supreme Court of New South Wales.)

July 28, 1896.

SMITH v. BROWN. (a.)

Company—Shares—Registration of contract—New South Wales Companies Act, 1874, s. 57—Companies Act, 1867 (30 & 31 Vict. c. 89), s. 25.

The contract in writing to be filed with the Registrar of Joint-Stock Companies at or before the issue of shares under section 57 of the New South Wales Companies Act, 1874, and the 25*th section of the Companies Act,* 1867, so as to avoid the liability of payment in full on such shares, must be a document creating legal rights, duties, or obligations as between the parties to it. A mere resolution between certain persons interested in a property, setting forth the manner in which they propose to put the property before the public is insufficient, though registered under the statute.

Hartley's case, 23 W. R. 203, L. R. 10 Ch. App. 157, considered and explained.

Appeal from the Supreme Court of New South Wales.

The facts sufficiently appear in their lordships' judgment.

Bray and Malcolm Macnaghten, for appellant.

The respondent did not appear.

The judgment of their lordships (Lord HALSBURY, L.C., Lord HERSCHELL, Lord WATSON, Lord HOBHOUSE, Lord MACNAGHTEN, Lord MORRIS, Lord DAVEY, Sir RICHARD COUCH) was delivered by Lord HOBHOUSE.—The appeal in this case raises a question of a class which frequently arises in the winding-up of joint-stock companies—viz., the question whether a registered shareholder is entitled to escape contribution on the ground that the calls on his shares are to be taken as having been paid up wholly or partially.

At the date of the winding-up the respondent was the registered holder of 2,032 £1 shares. He contended that they were fully paid up; three shillings by actual payments, and the balance of seventeen shillings by contract. As to 1,666 shares his claim has been rejected, and so far there is no further contest. As to the remaining 366 shares his claim has been sustained, and the official liquidator appeals from that decision. A number of other shareholders are in the same position, and their interests are affected by this appeal; but unfortunately no one appears to oppose it.

The company was formed under the Companies Act, 1874, the 57th section of which is to the same purport with section 25 of the English Act of 1867. Every share is to be taken as subject to the payment of its whole amount in cash, unless otherwise determined by contract duly made in writing and filed with the registrar of joint-stock companies at or before the issue of the shares. It is the common case that the respondent has paid only three shillings on the shares which are of the nominal value of one pound; and that the balance of seventeen shillings was the subject of negotiations before the company was formed. The question between the respondent and the company is whether the seventeen shillings are to be taken as paid up by virtue of (a) a contract in writing (b) filed with the registrar (c) before the issue of the shares.

On the 8th of March, 1888, Messrs. Fletcher offered the property afterwards worked by the company to a syndicate of twenty persons, each contributing £500. Upon this offer a syndicate was formed of more than twenty persons, some of whom took a fortieth share instead of a twentieth. They in effect purchased the property of Messrs. Fletcher for £10,000, and it has been duly paid for.

The next document is a deed by which four gentlemen, named Walford, Laidley, Dibbs, and Taylor, declared themselves trustees of the property in question for the syndicate, whose members were named in a schedule with the share of each opposite his name. The deed appears to have been executed by the four trustees in April, 1888, but it is not dated, and is not executed by any other members of the syndicate. Walford, Taylor, and Dibbs were themselves along with twenty others named in the schedule as members of the syndicate, and the shares ascribed to the twenty-three are $\frac{23}{40}$ths of the whole.

On the 12th of July, 1888, the syndicate met and resolved that a company should be formed with a capital divided into 100,000 shares, and the shares allotted pro rata among the syndicate and issued as paid-up to seventeen shillings per share. After this it seems that the syndicate acted as if a company had been formed; and among other acts they allotted shares, though no certificates were issued till the month of October.

On the 30th of July a deed was executed by Dibbs, Taylor, Walford, and Laidley (who are called the vendors) as trustees for the syndicate comprised of the persons named in the schedule thereto of the one part, and McKellar (who is called the trustee) of the other part. Thereby the vendors purport to agree with the trustee that a limited liability company shall be formed for working the mining property in question, which the vendors purport to sell and the trustee for the projected company purports to buy. The deed contained the following clauses:—

"3. That the capital of the said company shall be one hundred thousand pounds in one hundred thousand shares of one pound each, which shall be deemed to be and issued as paid up to seventeen shillings per share, and subject to a liability of three shillings per share and no more.

"5. That the consideration for the before-mentioned sale and for the transfer of the said property to the said company after formation shall be the issue of one hundred thousand shares paid up to the extent of seventeen shillings, and with a liability of three shillings per share, duly allotted to the persons named and in the numbers set out in the said schedule.

"6. The said trustee for and on behalf of the said proposed company agrees that the one hundred thousand shares in such company shall be issued to the subscribers therefor on the following terms; namely, that the sum of seventeen shillings per share, which represents the sum at which the proprietors value the property to be transferred to the company, shall be deemed to have been paid on each share by such transfer, and that such shares still have a liability thereon of three shillings per share and no more; and such three shillings may be called up by direction of the company from time to time as the money is required for developing the property.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

"7. That within thirty days after the registration of the company this agreement shall be adopted by the board of directors of the said company by a resolution, which shall be duly entered on the minutes of the proceedings of the said company.

"8. That the said trustee shall incur no personal liability whatever in respect of this agreement."

In the schedule, which contains the names of the syndicate and their shares in the concern, the respondent appears as the holder of 1,666 shares. The syndicate now consisted of twenty-six persons, Laidley and two others having been added since the deed of April. The whole 100,000 shares were distributed among them.

The memorandum of association is dated the 8th of August. By the 5th and 6th clauses the terms, conditions, and objects of the agreement of the 30th of July are adopted. The memorandum is signed by nine shareholders, among whom is the respondent, signing for 1,666 shares. On the 6th of September the memorandum and also the articles of association were filed with the registrar, and the company was then completely formed. On the next day the deed of the 30th of July was filed. On the 14th of September the directors passed a resolution adopting that agreement. This resolution has never been filed.

The Master in Equity held that the respondent ought to be excluded from the list of contributories. The official liquidator appealed, and the case was heard by Manning, J. That learned judge held that 1,666 shares for which the respondent signed the memorandum of association were issued to him on the 6th of September when the memorandum was filed. Therefore they could not be protected by the agreement of the 30th of July, which was not filed till the 7th of September.

The remaining shares held by the respondent were issued later. As regards them Manning, J., states that his own opinion, apart from decided cases, would be that, in order to give protection under section 57, there ought to be filed a formal document under the seal of the company, acknowledging itself bound by the agreement relied on. But then he thinks that the decision in Hartley's case, 23 W. R. 203, L. R. 10 Ch. App. 157, compels him to hold that the agreement of the 30th of July, which was registered before the issue of the 366 shares, is such an agreement as satisfies the 57th section. For this reason he made an order dated the 25th of August, 1893, by which he varied the master's certificate to the extent of making the respondent a contributory for 1,666 shares, with a liability to the extent of fourteen shillings a share and to no further extent.

The respondent did not appeal from this order. The official liquidator appealed for the purpose of making the respondent a contributory for the other 366 shares. The full court, without going into the other arguments, expressed their concurrence in Manning, J.'s, view of the effect of Hartley's case, and they dismissed the appeal.

Their lordships have been furnished with a copy of the agreement in Hartley's case. It was made between a Mr. Boden of the one part and a Mr. Field of the other part. Field is described as the agent of a company then being formed, and of the promoters thereof. Boden agrees to sell and Field to purchase certain property at the price of £6,000, to be paid as to £4,800 by an equivalent amount of fully paid-up shares in the intended company, and as to £1,200 in cash after the registration of the company. If the company should fail within thirty days of registration to adopt the agreement the vendor was to be at liberty to annul the sale. After the formation of the company, but before the registration of the agreement under the Act of 1867, 200 of the vendor's paid-up shares were issued to his assignee or nominee Hartley. After the issue, registration of the agreement, which had been previously overlooked, was effected. Then the 200 issued shares were cancelled and 240 new ones allotted to Hartley. Those proceedings gave rise to two questions. First, the official liquidator put Hartley on the list in respect of the 200 cancelled shares; and the question was whether the cancellation was valid. The court held that it was; pointing out that 200 paid-up shares were part of the purchase-money, and that if they were not granted the vendor would to that extent be still unpaid. Owing to inadvertence, the 200 shares first issued were liable to calls, and in rectifying that mistake the company were only doing without suit what the court would have ordered them to do.

Their lordships notice these facts because in the authorized Law Reports (18 Eq. 542, and 10 Ch. App. 157), the statement of the case is confined to the cancelled shares, and except for one passage in Lord Cairns's judgment, there is nothing to show that the sufficiency of the agreement was in controversy. But from other reports (23 W. R. 203; 44 L. J. 240; 32 L. T. N. S. 106) it is clear that the official liquidator put Hartley on the list in respect of the 240 new shares as well as the 200 cancelled ones, and that the sufficiency of the agreement came into question with respect to those shares, and was upheld in both courts, and that Mellish, L.J., expressed his concurrence with Lord Cairns.

In delivering his opinion Manning, J., went into a careful and learned examination of the question whether other cases to which he referred can be reconciled with Hartley's case. The full court also addressed themselves to the same point. They said that the cases suggested as being in conflict with Hartley's case are not really so, because in them there was either no contract, or a document executed as an escrow, or one purporting to be executed by a non-existent body. Whereas here, the court says, there is an actual valid contract made by a person who was a trustee holding property for the proposed company.

The only document purporting to be an agreement which has been registered in the present case, and the only document therefore which it is necessary to consider, is that of the 30th of July, 1888. The courts below regard it as a contract sufficient to comply with the exigencies of section 57 of the Act of 1874.

In the opinion of their lordships that document is not a contract in any proper sense of the word. It is nothing more than a resolution by certain persons interested in a mining property setting forth the manner in which they proposed to put the property before the public. It does not create nor was it intended to create any legal rights, duties, or obligations as between the persons expressed to be parties to it. It was a contract in form only. The persons interested in the property and the shareholders in the company to be registered were just the same persons over again in a different guise; they had, as stated above, already distributed the whole of the share capital among themselves. In Hartley's case there was a genuine sale, and a genuine purchase, and a genuine bargain to pay the price by paid-up shares issued to the vendor, who could enforce the bargain under peril of annulling the sale.

The result is that the respondent has not brought himself within the protection given by section 57; that the order of the full court dismissing the appeal to them should be discharged; and that Manning, J.'s, order of the 25th of August, 1893, should be varied so as to include the respondent in the list of contributories for the whole number of shares for which he was placed there by the Official Liquidator. In other respects that order should be affirmed. Their lordships will humbly advise Her Majesty in accordance with this opinion.

The Official Liquidator does not ask for costs against the respondent, which their lordships think to be a very reasonable course under the circumstances of the case. The appellant's costs will be answered by the estate that is being wound up along with the other costs of liquidation.

Solicitors for the appellant, Lumley & Lumley.

Court of Appeal.

From Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. (Lindley, Lopes, and Rigby, L.JJ.) } June 10, 1896.

THOMSON v. THOMSON. (a.)

Divorce—Variation of settlement—Death of petitioner after decree absolute—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859 (22 & 23 Vict. c. 61), s. 5—Matrimonial Causes Act, 1878 (41 Vict. c. 19), s. 3—Conveyancing and Law of Property Act, 1881 (44 & 45 Vict. c. 41), s. 39.

A petitioner (the husband) having obtained a decree absolute for dissolution of marriage, presented a petition to vary the trusts of the marriage settlement and to carry out the terms of an agreement which had been made with his wife on the hearing of the suit. Shortly afterwards the petitioner died. An application was made by his legal personal representative to be made a party in order to continue the proceedings.

Held, that the court has no jurisdiction, under section 5 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859, and section 3 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1878, to order the legal personal representative of a deceased petitioner to be made a party for the purpose of continuing proceedings for the variation of the settlement. The Act of 1859 was intended for the benefit of living persons only.

Appeal from a decision of the President of the Divorce Division.

The husband presented a petition for divorce by reason of his wife's adultery, and obtained a decree nisi on the 14th of June, 1895. On the marriage in 1873, the husband brought into settlement a sum of £10,000, which was invested and settled on the usual trusts—viz., the first life interest to the husband, second life interest to the wife without power of anticipation, remainder to the children of the marriage, and if there were no children, then to the husband absolutely. There were no children of the marriage.

On the hearing of the petition an agreement was made between the parties and was signed by their respective counsel, whereby the petitioner agreed to settle sufficient funds to secure to the respondent £120 per annum for her life, and the respondent agreed to the trusts of the settlement being set aside, and to the remainder of the trust funds being re-transferred to the petitioner absolutely. The respondent also agreed to the appointment of the same trustees of the new settlement as of the original settlement.

On the 19th of January, 1896, the decree nisi was made absolute, and on the 7th of February, 1896, the husband presented a petition to vary the trusts of the settlement and to carry out the agreement of the 14th of June, 1895. Shortly afterwards, on the 27th of February, and before the respondent's answer was delivered, the petitioner died. An application to make the legal personal representative of the petitioner a party to the proceedings was dismissed by the registrar, and his decision was affirmed by the President, who held that the court had no jurisdiction under the Divorce Acts, and that the Legislature intended in the Act of 1859 to limit the power of altering settlements to the personal benefit of a husband, wife, or children.

Section 5 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859, provides that "the court after a final decree of nullity of marriage or dissolution of marriage may inquire into the existence of ante-nuptial or post-nuptial settlements made on the parties whose marriage is the subject of the decree, and may make such orders with reference to the application of the whole or a portion of the property settled either for the benefit the children of the marriage or of their respective parents as to the court shall seem fit."

By section 3 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1878, the court is empowered to exercise the powers vested in it by section 5 of the Act of 1859, "notwithstanding that there are no children of the marriage."

By section 39 (1) of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, "notwithstanding that a married woman is restrained from anticipation, the court may, if it thinks fit, where it appears to the court to be for her benefit, by judgment or order, with her consent, bind her interest in any property."

The executor of the deceased husband appealed.

Bayford, Q.C., Haldane, Q.C., and Bargrave Deane, for the appellant.—An action for specific performance of the agreement would lie, and the agreement could be enforced: it is contemporaneous with the decree nisi, and the restraint on anticipation remains. At the time when the agreement was made it was for the benefit of the wife to accept the terms, and the court could have removed the restraint on anticipation by virtue of section 39 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881. The words of section 5 of the Matrimonial Causes Act, 1859, as modified by section 3 of the Act of 1878, are susceptible of a construction which would bring the husband in.

Inderwick, Q.C., and Priestley, for the respondent, were not called upon.

LINDLEY, L.J., stated the facts, and continued:—An application is now made by the legal personal representative of Mr. Thomson to vary the settlement upon the terms of the agreement from which he does not seek to depart. That can only be done in one of two ways; one way is to enforce the agreement of the 14th of June, 1895, without reference to the Matrimonial Causes Acts. If the wife had not been restrained from anticipation I do not see why that should not have been done, but unfortunately she was restrained, and the consequence is that the agreement cannot be enforced against her by her husband, or by his representative now that he is dead, unless the restraint can be dispensed with—that is, unless some means can be found of converting that agreement which is not binding upon her into an agreement which is binding on her. How can that be done? It cannot be done at all unless it be by the power given to the court by section 39 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881. But that section cannot be relied on for this purpose. [His lordship read the section, and proceeded:—] The first difficulty in the way is this: This section confers a certain power on the court to free married women from restraint upon anticipation. Here there is no married woman. Mrs. Thomson has been divorced, and her husband is dead. Even if she were married there would be a difficulty in saying that it was for her benefit to give up the life interest in the entire income of the funds, to which she is now entitled in consideration of £120 a year. But the short and the best answer is this: that she is not a married woman, that the section does not apply, and the agreement cannot be enforced. The fact that she consented to the agreement did not make it binding on her.

(a.) Reported by W. SHALLCROSS GODDARD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Therefore the parties are driven back to the sections in the Matrimonial Causes Acts, and on these the question is equally hopeless. The jurisdiction of the Divorce Court to entertain applications of this kind is conferred by section 45 of the Act of 1857, and more extensively by section 5 of the Act of 1859, but it is really the latter section which we have to consider. [His lordship read the section, and continued:—] How can we say that there is jurisdiction in this case to make any order for the benefit of the children of the marriage or of their respective parents when the husband is dead and there are no children? How can we say that there is any jurisdiction to make any order for the benefit of deceased persons? The language of the section does not fit that construction, and it is not hypercriticism to say that the Act was intended for the benefit of living persons. It is a question of substance. The court is to inquire into the existence of settlements affecting the parties, and to consult their wishes and necessities, and the reason of the thing requires that they should be alive. In my opinion the President has taken the correct view, and the court has no jurisdiction to make this order. The appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

LOPES, L.J.—I am clearly of the same opinion, and agree with what has been said.

RIGBY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. Section 39 of the Conveyancing Act, 1881, clearly does not apply, nor does section 45 of the Act of 1857, nor section 5 of the Act of 1859. No order now made can be for the benefit of any living person.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Rowcliffes, Rawle, & Co.; Seaton F. Taylor.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } Kekewich, J. } Oct. 30.

In re VICTORIA STEAMBOATS CO. (LIMITED). SMITH v. WILKINSON. (a.) Company—Debentures—Floating security—Crystallization—Protection of security—Receiver—Manager.

Where a petition had been presented to wind up a company, and a holder of debentures of the company of the nature of a floating security moved, before any winding-up order had been made, for the appointment of a receiver and manager, although no such default had been made by the company in payment of interest as to cause the principal money to become payable:

Held, that, although the debentures had not crystallized, they were in jeopardy; and the court had jurisdiction to appoint a receiver and manager.

Motion.

The plaintiff, Vere Herbert Smith, a holder of A debentures, and one of the trustees of the trust deed for such debentures, of the Victoria Steamboats (Limited), moved, on behalf of himself and the other debenture-holders, for the appointment of a receiver and manager of the business of the company, the defendant being the other trustee of the trust deed and the company.

The company in 1895 took over the undertaking of the Victoria Steamboats Association (Limited), then in liquidation, which consisted in running steamers and ferries on the Thames.

By its A debentures the company charged by way of a floating security all its property, present and future, including its uncalled capital, with payment of principal and interest; and by the tenth condition endorsed on the back of the debentures the principal moneys secured thereby became immediately payable: (a) If the company made default for six calendar months in paying interest secured thereby, and the registered holder should by notice in writing to the company before such interest was paid call in his principal moneys; (b) If an order should be made or an effective resolution be passed for winding up the company.

Interest was due upon the debentures, but such interest was not yet six months in arrear.

By clause 26 of the trust deed (made the 20th of July, 1896), to secure the A debentures the company agreed, during the continuance of the security, and before entry by the trustees, to carry on and conduct the business of the company to the greatest possible advantage, and by clause 35 covenanted with the trustees that they would duly perform and observe the obligation therein imposed upon them.

On the 27th of October, 1896, the London Graving Dock Co. (Limited) presented a petition to wind up the Victoria Steamboats (Limited), and on the same day a receiver was, upon motion by the debenture-holders, appointed over the 30th of October.

On the 28th of October judgment was signed by Messrs. J. & C. Harrison, creditors of the company.

On the 29th of October, on the application of the London Graving Dock Co. (Limited), Vaughan Williams, J., made an order appointing one of the official receivers provisional liquidator of the Victoria Steamboats (Limited) for the purpose of appearing on behalf of the petitioners on the motion to be heard on the 30th of October.

Renshaw, Q.C., and C. E. Jenkins, for the plaintiff.—A petition has been presented to wind up the company, and the debentures are in jeopardy. We want an order continuing the receiver and appointing him manager. The ferry business is profitable, and the court can, although nothing is as yet payable on the debentures, appoint a manager as well as a receiver: Edwards v. Standard Rolling Stock Syndicate, 41 W. R. 343, [1893] 1 Ch. 574. The company cannot carry out their covenant to carry on the business to the best possible advantage, as the petition has been presented, therefore the debentures have crystallized.

P. F. S. Stokes, for B. debenture-holders.

Sheldon, for a judgment creditor.

Waggett, for the company.

Upjohn, for the provisional liquidator.—I take the place of the directors, and shall preserve the assets for the benefit of all parties, therefore there is no need to appoint a receiver and manager.

KEKEWICH, J.—The essential thing to remember is that these debentures represented by the plaintiff have not—to use the newly-adopted term—crystallized. I have not forgotten the point raised by the plaintiff's counsel upon that, but I assume that does not make any difference in the conclusion that as a matter of fact the debentures have not crystallized. But for that fact the case is one of debenture-holders having a charge upon the assets of the company.

(a) Reported by C. C. HENSLEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

A winding-up petition has been presented, and it is very much a matter of course, certainly before me, to apply for the appointment of a receiver and manager. The plaintiff's counsel suggest that inasmuch as there is a covenant in the trust deed by the company to carry on the business to the best possible advantage, and inasmuch as the winding-up petition, which has been presented, prevents that being done, that therefore the covenant has been broken, and the debentures have crystallized. Possibly that would be so if any covenant had in fact been broken, but I would not decide that point without full argument.

But at any rate until a winding-up order has been made the company must be considered to be carrying on their business in the absence of evidence that they have closed their doors. I cannot assume that the business is not being carried on.

The winding-up petition has been presented to put a stop to the business of the company. Subject to that, it is common ground that the debentures have not crystallized.

The debenture-holders ask for a receiver, and it is argued on behalf of the liquidator that the assets are not in jeopardy. What has happened? A creditor, either secured or unsecured, has presented a petition for winding up the company. It is argued that the liquidator of the company is acting under the jurisdiction of the court for the benefit of the shareholders and creditors; and that their interests are not inimical to those of the debenture-holders, who would have precedence of them all.

It is desired, of course, so far as possible to squeeze out the debenture-holders; it is the duty of the representative of the shareholders and creditors to do so.

It would be giving a very narrow meaning to the word jeopardy, to hold that because nothing could be done by the liquidator that is improper, and the security of the debenture-holders will of course be preserved, that they ought not to take care of themselves.

That being so I can appoint a receiver, it is a mere protection.

Now comes the question, which I have had to consider before now, but never to decide—namely, whether I can add to the appointment of a receiver the appointment of a manager. About that I have had very great doubt. You cannot appoint a manager unless you have got the goodwill of the business, which has been mortgaged, and which is to be managed. There is no doubt about it that there would be grounds for the appointment of a manager in this case, when the debentures crystallized. But can I do it when the debentures have not crystallized? That is the question, and it seems to me that the jurisdiction to appoint a manager depends upon there being a necessity or a probability of an eventual sale. When the court sees that the security can only be realized, and the debenture-holders and mortgagees can only get their rights by means of a sale, then only will the court appoint a manager to carry on the business with the view to a sale. The object is merely for the realization of the security. When you cannot say that there is a likelihood of a sale taking place in the immediate future, can you appoint a manager? That has been my doubt, and one which has been entertained by others besides myself.

On the whole, having had an opportunity of considering the question and seeing not only North, J.'s, conclusion in the case of Edwards v. Standard Rolling Stock Syndicate but also Mr. Macnaghten's argument, which I consider to be to some extent incorporated in the judgment, I am satisfied that the court has jurisdiction and ought to exercise it, and for this reason: Here is a subsisting charge though not immediately effective. But the charge is there, everything has been done to make it a charge, and all that is wanted is something to call it into life. Of course the court would hesitate to appoint a manager where there was no reasonable probability of the charge being called into activity. I should be extremely reluctant to do so unless the property would have to be realized within a reasonable time. Here the company is about to be wound up; at any rate, there is a probability of a winding-up order being made. If it is made then we shall certainly have in the near future the necessity for a realization in some form or other of the debenture-holders' security. It seems to me that on principle I can appoint a manager, notwithstanding that the debentures have not crystallized, where I see that it is necessary, not only for the protection but for the realization of what is due to the debenture-holders.

And here the case is of that character, and I ought to appoint a manager, but only for a fortnight, on the plaintiff undertaking to be answerable for his receipts during that time.

Solicitors, Hicks, Davis, & Hunt; Hill, Son, & Richards; Keene, Marsland, Bryden, & Besant; Norman Herbert Smith; Arnold Williams & Co.

Chan. Div.
Vaughan Williams, J. } July 9, 1896.

In re HAMPSHIRE LAND CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Company—Winding up—Borrowing powers—Common officers—Irregularity—Notice—Proof in winding up.

At a general meeting of a company—which by its articles was not allowed to borrow money to an amount greater than its paid-up capital, unless the borrowing of a larger amount should have been previously authorized by a general meeting—a resolution was passed purporting to authorize the directors to borrow £30,000 when the paid-up capital was only £10,000. The articles also required that notices convening general meetings should specify the general nature of any special business to be transacted at the meeting, but the notices convening the meeting at which the above-mentioned resolution was passed did not refer to the intended loan. The money was borrowed from a building society that had its offices in the same building as the company, and the company and the society had four directors and a secretary in common. The society claimed to prove for the whole loan in the winding up of the company.

Held, that the knowledge of the officers of the company as to the irregularity in summoning the meeting could not be imputed to the society, that the society was justified in assuming that all affairs relating to internal management of the company had been properly carried out, and that the society was entitled to prove for the loan in the winding up of the company.

This was a summons by one of the liquidators in the Hampshire Land Co. (hereafter spoken of as the "company") that it might be determined whether the Portsea Island Building Society, also in liquidation (hereafter spoken of as the "society"), were entitled to rank as creditors of the company for any, and, if so, for what amount.

The company was formed in 1891 under the Companies Act, 1862, with a capital of £50,000, divided

(a) Reported by V. DE S. FOWKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

5,000 shares of £10 each, and carried on business as a land company at and near Portsmouth.

The winding-up of the company commenced on the 30th of January, 1893.

The society claimed to prove in the winding-up of the company for a sum of £30,000 in respect of money lent.

The company and the society had had their offices in the same building, they had four directors in common, and Mr. Wills was secretary to both the company and the society.

The memorandum of association of the company contained no provisions as to borrowing money. The articles provided (article 38) that seven days' notice should be given in the case of special business, and (article 82) empowered the directors to borrow such sums of money as they might think expedient, provided that the aggregate of the principal money so borrowed should not at any time exceed the amount of the paid-up capital, unless the borrowing of a larger amount should have been previously authorized by a general meeting, in which case the directors might borrow to such an extent as was authorized.

The £30,000 exceeded the paid-up capital of the company, and there was no trace of any special notice having been sent to the shareholders convening a meeting to pass a resolution authorizing the directors to borrow a sum exceeding the paid-up capital, nor was there any minute to be found of any resolution having been passed giving such authority to the directors. It appeared, however, that such a resolution had, in fact, been passed, though at a meeting convened by a notice not referring to a proposal to raise money in excess of the paid-up capital of the company.

The question was whether the society could prove for the whole loan.

Bramwell Davis, Q.C., and C. E. E. Jenkins, for the company.—Wills was the officer of both the company and the society, and his knowledge that no proper notice was given is the knowledge of both the company and the society.

They cited the following authorities: Garden Gully Co. v. McLister, 24 W. R. 744, 1 App. Cas. 39; Royal British Bank v. Turquand, 6 E. & B. 327; Buckley on The Companies Acts, 6th ed., pp. 74, 502; Irvine v. Union Bank of Australia, 25 W. R. 682, 2 App. Cas. 366; Gale v. Lewis, 9 Q. B. 730; Ex parte Waithman, 4 Deac. & Ch. 412; Alletson v. Chichester, 23 W. R. 393, L. R. 10 C. P. 319.

Haldane, Q.C., Eve, Q.C., and Macnaghten, for the society.—The society was entitled to assume that all matters of internal management were properly performed, and that every resolution was properly passed: Royal British Bank v. Turquand. It was no part of Will's duty to make further inquiries. Any knowledge that came to him in another capacity than secretary of the society cannot be said to be his knowledge as secretary of the society so as to be imputed to the society. Marseilles, &c., Co., 20 W. R. 254, L. R. 7 Ch. App. 161, is conclusive in our favour. [They were stopped.]

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, J.—The question clearly is whether the shareholders in the society or in the company ought to bear any loss that would result from the resolution authorizing the company to borrow this sum of money, both classes of shareholders being innocent. It must be taken that a resolution was, in fact, passed authorizing the borrowing of £30,000, that no mention was made of this special matter in the notice convening the meeting, and, therefore, that the authority of the directors of the company to borrow this money, was not perfected. They had no authority in the absence of a properly-passed resolution. The money having been borrowed by the company and lent by the society, the question I have stated arises. It is not disputed that the authority of Royal British Bank v. Turquand is such that the society had a right to assume in a case like this that all the essentials of internal management had been carried out by the borrowing company. And it is only if the law properly imputes to the society knowledge of the irregularities which have been committed that the society are debarred from ranking as creditors for the £30,000 in the estate of the company. Is it right to impute such knowledge in this case? It is said that it is, because Wills was the secretary of both the company and the society, and was aware of the irregularities, and that his knowledge as secretary of the company was knowledge as secretary of the society. I do not agree. Both Mr. Bramwell Davis and Mr. Jenkins shrank from saying that in all cases where one person is the secretary of two societies his knowledge is the knowledge of both bodies. It is impossible to say that, in view of the case of In re Marseilles Extension Railway Co. Both the Lords Justices in that case were of opinion that there might be cases where the knowledge of officers common to two companies would not bind both companies. What is the line to be drawn or what is the test to be applied in order to see when the knowledge is common to both companies? It seems to me, broadly, that the Lords Justices do draw the line that knowledge acquired by the officer of one company will not be imputed to the other company unless the common officer of both had some duty imposed on him to communicate that knowledge to the other company, and had some duty imposed on him by the second company to receive notice thereof. I think that view of the case is confirmed on considering the case of Gale v. Lewis. In that case the jury found that the company's agent was authorized to receive the notice given him as officer of the company. Lord Denman says (at p. 743): "It was further contended that Densem communicated to Loosemoore in his capacity of attorney, and not as agent for the insurance office. But, where the two capacities are united in one person, a notice received in one capacity for the purpose of being transmitted to the other is an effectual notice in both capacities." The test applied in both cases was, Was it within the scope of the duty of one company's officer to give notice to the other company? and, Was it within the scope of his duty as the officer of the other company to receive such notice? That is not the case here. This is more like the case which both Mr. Bramwell Davis and Mr. Jenkins had to admit to be an exception to the general rule. They admitted that if Wills was guilty of fraud his knowledge of the fraud on the company would not have been the knowledge of the society as to the facts constituting the fraud. That is the inference in a case of fraud, and the same inference applies in the case of irregularity. Whether it is fraud or irregularity, knowledge of the fraud or breach of duty is not to be imputed to the other company. Under these circumstances I must admit the proof.

Costs of all parties out of estate of the company.

Solicitors, Munns & Longden; Learoyd, James, & Mellor.

Q. B. Div.
(Grantham and Kennedy, JJ.) Oct. 29.

SHIELDS v. HOWARD. (a.)

Metropolis Management—Street Music—Refusal to go away from neighbourhood—Metropolis Street Music Act, 1864 (27 & 28 Vict. c. 55), s. 1.

It is not an offence under section 1 of 27 & 28 Vict. c. 55, for a street musician to refuse to move away from a neighbourhood when requested to do so by a householder, unless the complainant has at the same time given the man a reason why he requires him to cease playing near his house.

Semble, it makes no difference that in fact the householder had a reasonable and sufficient cause of complaint.

This was an appeal by way of special case from the decision of Mr. Plowden, metropolitan police magistrate sitting at Marylebone, who had dismissed a charge which had been preferred by Mr. Frederick Shields, an artist, against an organ-grinder named Howard.

The short point of law for the decision of the court was whether, under section 1 of 27 & 28 Vict. c. 55 (an Act for the regulation of street music within the Metropolitan Police District), it was necessary, when a street musician was required by a householder to depart, to inform him of the reason why he was required to move away.

The facts set out in the special case were, shortly, as follows: An information was preferred by Frederick Shields against Arthur Howard under section 1 of 27 & Vict. c. 55, charging that he, Arthur Howard, being a street musician, did on the 11th of April, 1896, unlawfully sound a musical instrument in a thoroughfare—to wit, in Lodge-road, St. John's Wood—near the house of the appellant after having been required by the appellant's servant to depart from the neighbourhood.

It appeared that on the day in question Mr. Shields was worried by the respondent playing a piano-organ outside his residence. He sent a servant out to turn the man away, but the latter refused to go. Mr. Shields then went out and told the respondent that he had sent his servant to require him to move away, and shortly afterwards, as he still refused to cease playing, gave him into custody. Neither the appellant nor his servant stated a reason why the respondent was required to depart.

When the case came before the magistrate on the following Monday, he asked Mr. Shields, before any evidence whatever had been offered, if he gave the respondent a reason for ordering him to go away, and on receiving a reply in the negative, he there and then dismissed the case. The magistrate stated that in doing so, he had no reason to doubt that the appellant had in fact a reasonable and sufficient cause for requiring the respondent to depart; but he held as a matter of law, that the meaning of the statute was that it was not sufficient to order a street musician to depart without at the same time informing him of the reason why he was ordered away; and as no reason of any kind had been given the respondent either by the appellant or his servant, the magistrate dismissed the information, and at the request of the appellant stated a case.

Section 1 of 27 & 28 Vict. c. 55 is as follows: Any householder within the Metropolitan Police District, personally or by his servant or by any police constable, may require any street musician or street singer to depart from the neighbourhood of the house of such householder on account of illness or on account of the interruption of the ordinary occupations or pursuits of any inmate of such house or for other reasonable and sufficient cause; and every person who shall sound or play upon any instrument or shall sing . . . near any such house after being so required to depart shall be liable to a penalty, . . . or, in the discretion of the magistrate, may be imprisoned for any time not more than three days.

Sceales, for the appellant.—The Act no doubt requires that the person who desires the organ-grinder to move on must have a reasonable and sufficient cause for requiring him to do so; but that is not the question raised in this case. The Act does not in terms direct that the householder must, before he can give the man in charge for refusing to go away, first communicate to him the reason he desires him to go away for. In a considered judgment in the case of The Northcote v. The Owners of the Henrich Bjorn, 11 App. Cas. 281, Bramwell, L.J., said: "I think that where the Legislature in its laws or parties in their agreement might have expressly stated a particular intention and have not, that intention ought not to be implied, and the law or agreement dealt with as if the intention were expressed, without the most cogent considerations amounting almost to a necessity." The learned magistrate ought not to have held that the Legislature intended that a reason must be given to the organ-grinder before the penalties imposed for refusal to move on could be enforced. [GRANTHAM, J.—But organ-grinding is a lawful calling, unless it is pursued to the annoyance of an individual. Until the man is given a reason why he ought to move on, how can he tell whether he can legally go on playing his organ or not? It is contrary to the policy of English law to punish a man for the committal of an offence which he had no means of knowing he was committing.] If the man was an Italian he might not understand even if the reason were explained to him. [GRANTHAM, J.—That would be his misfortune.] The very fact that he was ordered away showed him that the person telling him to move on had a reason for so doing. It is for the magistrate to decide whether in fact the reason assigned for asking him to go away is reasonable and sufficient. If told to go, he is bound to go, or [illegible] the consequences of his refusal if given in c[illegible] of twenty-seven metropolit[illegible] five have, at di[illegible] Act.

The respond[illegible] or in person.

GRANTHAM, [illegible] right, and the [illegible]

KENNEDY, J. [illegible]

Appeal dismi[illegible]

Solicitor, J. [illegible]

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q. B. Div.
(Pollock, B., and Bruce, J.) May 19; July 2, 1896.

THE CHICAGO RAILWAY TERMINAL ELEVATOR CO. (Appellants) v. THE COMMISSIONERS OF INLAND REVENUE (Respondents). (a.) aff. mf. 242

Inland revenue—Stamp duty—Marketable securities—

(a.) Reported by Sir SHERSTON BAKER, Bart., Barrister-at-Law.

Bond of foreign company — Security "issued," "offered for subscription," or "assigned or transferred" in United Kingdom—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 82, sub-section 1 (b).

An arrangement for reconstructing an English company and transferring its business, property, and liabilities to a new company formed in America, provided that the debenture-holders of the old English company should receive in lieu of their debentures new gold bonds issued by the new American company and payable at Chicago. The holders in London of a debenture of the old company lodged their debenture with the London agent of the new company, who sent it to the officials of the new company in America, and such officials presented it in Chicago and received in exchange a new bond which they sent to their agent in London, by whom it was given in London to the owners in exchange for their debenture.

Held, that this bond did not come within section 82 (1) (b) of the Stamp Act, 1891, as having been either "issued," or "offered for subscription," or "assigned or transferred" in the United Kingdom.

Case stated by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, pursuant to section 13 of the Stamp Act, 1891.

The facts, as stated in the judgment, were as follows:—

On the 25th of November, 1895, a bond, a copy of which was annexed to this case, was presented on behalf of the Chicago Railway Terminal Elevator Co., an American company formed under the laws of the State of New York, to the Commissioners of Inland Revenue, under the provisions of section 12 of the Stamp Act, 1891, for the opinion of the Commissioners as to the stamp duty with which the instrument was chargeable.

The main question in the case was whether the bond was issued in the United Kingdom, or whether it was offered for subscription and given or delivered to a subscriber in the United Kingdom, within the meaning of section 82 (b) (1) and (2) of the Stamp Act, 1891.

The bond was an instrument bearing date the 1st of March, 1894, under the seal of the Chicago Railway Terminal Elevator Co.—the appellant company—for [illegible], to be paid to the bearer on the 1st of [illegible], 1943, at the office of the company in [illegible], in gold coin of the United States, with inter- [illegible] the 1st day of November, 1893, at the rate of [illegible] per annum, payable half-yearly, at the [illegible] the holder either in like gold coin at its [illegible] city of Chicago or at its office in New [illegible] in sterling at its office in London, [illegible] rate of exchange of 4s. to the [illegible]

[illegible] was one of a series executed and issued [illegible] ovisions of an indenture bearing the same [illegible] bond (the 1st of March, 1894), but not [illegible] cuted until the 31st of December, 1894. [illegible] re was made in America between the [illegible] pany, referred to in the indenture as [illegible] r, of the one part, and the Illinois Trust [illegible] Bank, a company in the United States, [illegible] the indenture as the trustee of the [illegible] This indenture assigned the property of the mortgagors (the appellant company) to a trustee in trust for the debenture-holders. It was made in pursuance of an arrangement entered into for the purpose of reconstructing an English company called the City of Chicago Grain Elevators (Limited). This company, which is referred to as the old company, had issued debentures to bearer which were secured by an indenture of mortgage and trust dated the 31st of March, 1890, made between the old company and a trust company in England, hereinafter called the old debenture trustee.

As part of the scheme for reconstructing the old company an agreement in writing was entered into—dated the 29th of November, 1892—between John Aste, on behalf of the old company, and Charles Wells, on behalf of the new company (the appellant company) then about to be formed in America, by which it was provided that the old company should sell and the new company should purchase the whole of the business, goodwill, and property of the old company, part of the consideration for such sale being shares in the new company. It was provided that the new company should pay the debts and obligations of the old company, and should use their best endeavours to make arrangements whereby the debenture-holders of the old company should surrender their debentures and receive in lieu thereof mortgage bonds of the new company.

A petition was presented under the Joint-Stock Companies' Arrangement Act, 1870, s. 2, and an order was made by Vaughan Williams, J., that the scheme of arrangement be sanctioned.

The new company (the appellant company), which was an American company, was duly formed and the before-mentioned indenture, dated the 1st of March, 1894, was, as before stated, made to carry out the scheme of arrangement.

By this indenture the property of the appellant company was assigned to the trustee therein mentioned in trust for the debenture-holders, and provision was made for the issue of bonds of the new company (the appellant company) in exchange for the debentures of the old company. It was provided by the indenture that a certain number of the new mortgage bonds, equivalent in value to certain old debenture bonds which had been purchased to form a sinking fund for the redemption of the debentures of the old company at maturity, should be delivered by the trustee in the indenture mentioned to the new company, and that the remainder of the new mortgage bonds should be issued only in substitution and exchange for the old debentures, one new bond for each debenture; and it further provided that whenever any of the outstanding debentures should be delivered to the trustee for the purpose of exchange under the provisions of the indenture, the trustee should issue to the owner or holder of each debenture so deposited for exchange a first mortgage bond. It was provided that the trustee should keep a register of all the debentures so exchanged, and that he should cause each debenture deposited for exchange to be stamped "exchanged debenture."

The appellant company handed over to the trustee, party to the indenture of the 1st of March, 1894, duly executed bonds as provided for in the indenture; and, amongst others, delivered to the trustee the bond now in question.

The London and New York Investment Corporation (Limited), which was a company having its registered office in England, was the holder of a debenture of the old company. This corporation, in October, 1895, received a circular from the agent of the new company stating that the debenture bonds of the new company would shortly be ready in Chicago for exchange for the debentures of the old company. The agent stated that he should be pleased to forward the debenture of the corporation free of all cost to them if they would lodge the same, and that the debentures of the old company would have to be sent to Chicago and exchanged there for the new mortgage bonds; and generally, that he would forward the old debentures free of cost if the holders of the debentures would lodge the sum at the office of the appellants' agent in London, taking his receipt for the same. The circular further stated that if the holders of the old debentures preferred it, they could forward the debenture shares to their own correspondents at Chicago, and the secretary of the company would there give all the necessary information with regard to their lodgment for exchange with the trustee in Chicago.

The corporation accepted the offer of the agent of the new company, and lodged their debenture with him. He forwarded it to the officials of the appellant company in America, who presented it to the trustee at Chicago, who gave the bond in question to the officers of the appellant company in America, by whom it was then transmitted to the agent of the appellant company in London, and the latter delivered the bond to the corporation at their registered office in London.

The question arose whether the bond was liable to stamp duty by virtue of the provisions of the Stamp Act, 1891.

It was not disputed, and the Commissioners held that the bond was a marketable security, and they were also of opinion that under the circumstances the bond was issued in the United Kingdom, and that it was therefore chargeable with duty under section 82 (b) (1) and (2) of the Stamp Act, 1891, at the rate of 1s. for every £10, and for any fractional part of £10 of the money thereby secured, and they accordingly assessed the duty at 11s., the value of the bond in English currency being £102 1s. 8d.

The questions for the opinion of the court were (1) whether the instrument was chargeable with the duty of 11s. in accordance with the assessment of the Commissioners; (2) if not, with what duty the instrument was chargeable.

Section 82 of the Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), provides: "Marketable securities for the purpose of the charge of duty thereon include (b) a marketable security by or on behalf of any foreign corporation or company (hereinafter called a foreign security), bearing date or signed after the 3rd day of June, 1862; (1) which is made or issued in the United Kingdom; or (2) which, though originally issued out of the United Kingdom, has been, after the 6th day of August, 1885, or is offered for subscription, and given or delivered to a subscriber in the United Kingdom; or (3) which, the interest thereon being payable in the United Kingdom, is assigned, transferred, or in any manner negotiated in the United Kingdom."

Arthur Cohen, Q.C. (T. T. Paine with him), for the appellants.—The bond in question was not "made" in the United Kingdom; that is not disputed. It was not "issued" in the United Kingdom. It was "issued" in Chicago when it was given over in exchange for the old debenture, and at that time the title of the owner in England to the new bond was complete. Although it was delivered in Chicago to the agents of the new company, yet such agents held it from that moment for the holder in London, in whom the property then vested. The bond, therefore, was not "issued" in England, but in America. So, it was not "offered for subscription and given or delivered to a subscriber" in the United Kingdom; neither can it be said to have been "assigned, transferred, or negotiated" in the United Kingdom. It does not therefore come within any of the classes in section 82 (1) (b), and is not liable to stamp duty under that section. [He then referred to sections of previous Acts dealing with the subject, which are referred to in the judgment.]

Sir Robert Finlay, S.G., and Danckwerts, for the respondents.—The commissioners were right, and the Crown is entitled to succeed. The case falls within all the divisions in sub-head (b) of sub-section 1. The bond was "issued" in England, as it was then for the first time in the hands of a person entitled to sue upon it; and to constitute an "issue" of the bond, the bond must be in the hands of a person entitled to sue upon it: Downes v. Richardson, 5 B. & Ald. 674; section 2 of the Bills of Exchange Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 61), where "issue" is defined as "the first delivery of a bill or note, complete in form to a person who takes it as a holder." The cases, also, of Grenfell v. The Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 24 W. R. 582, 1 Ex. D. 242; In re The Imperial Rubber Co., 22 W. R. 699, L. R. 9 Ch. App. 554; and Mowatt v. The Castle Steel and Iron Works Co., 34 Ch. D. 58, 35 W. R. Dig. 82, illustrate the same principle and show that the "issue" here was in the United Kingdom. The bond was also "offered for subscription and given or delivered to a subscriber" in the United Kingdom, within sub-head (2), and it was also "assigned, or transferred," in the United Kingdom, within sub-head (3). It therefore falls within all three categories and is liable to the duty as a foreign marketable security.

Cohen, Q.C., in reply.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 2.—The judgment of the COURT was read by BRUCE, J.—[His lordship stated the facts as above set out and read section 82, and continued:—] In the course of a very full and elaborate argument Mr. Cohen, who argued the case on behalf of the appellants, called our attention to the various provisions made from time to time by the Legislature with regard to the duties to be paid in respect of foreign marketable securities. In the year 1862, by the 25 & 26 Vict. c. 22, Schedule C, provision was made imposing duties upon a bond made on behalf of a foreign company, issued, delivered, assigned, transferred, or negotiated within the United Kingdom. These provisions were altered, or modified, or extended in the year 1870, by the 33 & 34 Vict. c. 97, s. 113; in the year 1871, by the 34 Vict. c. 4, s. 2; in the year 1885, by the 48 & 49 Vict. c. 51, s. 21; and in the year 1888, by the 51 Vict. c. 8, s. 12. None of these provisions are now in force, and they were only referred to by Mr. Cohen as showing that at various periods the attention of the Legislature has been directed to the consideration of the stamp duties to be levied on the class of documents now in question; and that at various periods various definitions have been attempted which from time to time have been modified or repealed, and that after many attempts to define the circumstances in which stamp duty becomes payable on marketable securities, the words in the Act of 1891, as altered or modified by the Act of 1893 (56 Vict. c. 7, s. 4), have become the governing words regulating the duty. So that after giving full consideration to the various provisions of the repealed statutes, to which our attention has been directed, the question comes back to this, What is the meaning of the words "made or issued in the United Kingdom," as used in section 82 of the Act of 1891? The instrument in question was certainly not "made" in the United Kingdom, and we do not think that it can be said to have been "issued" there. It seems to us that it was issued in Chicago. If the London and New York Investment Corporation (Limited) had sent the old debenture by an agent of their own to be exchanged for the new mortgage bond at Chicago we cannot entertain a doubt that the delivery of the bond to him at Chicago would have been an issue of the bond, and we think it makes no difference that the persons who acted as the agents of the London and New York Investment Corporation (Limited) were the officers of the appellant company

The right of the London and New York Investment Corporation to the old debenture had gone as soon as it was delivered up to the trustee, or exchanged for the new bond. The whole object of the arrangement made by the documents we have referred to, was to prevent the appellant company obtaining bonds from the trustee except in exchange for the old debentures, and except in the character of agents for the holders of the old debentures. The officers of the appellant company in Chicago, when they received the bond from the trustee, received it on behalf of the London and New York Investment Corporation, and were bound to hold it on behalf of and for the benefit of that company. The title of that company to the bond was, we think, complete the moment it was delivered by the trustee to the appellant company in Chicago on behalf of the London and New York Investment Corporation.

Although the appellant company had the possession of the bond they had not the control of it; they had no property in it. They held the bond simply as agents for the London and New York Investment Corporation, and the delivery of the bond to the corporation in England did not confer any fresh title on them. It only operated as the delivery to them of the bond by one who had acted as their own agent to manage the exchange for them would have operated. Our attention was called by the Solicitor-General to the case of Downes v. Richardson, where there were three persons joined as drawer, acceptor, and joint indorser of an accommodation bill, and the date of the bill was altered before it was handed over to a holder for valuable consideration. It was held that the document did not require a fresh stamp, because it could not be said to have been issued until it was delivered to a holder for value. But we think the whole point of that case depends upon the fact that the bill was an accommodation bill, and because of that fact the original parties had no right of action inter se. That case does not seem to us to be in point. We think the decision in Grenfell v. The Commissioners of Inland Revenue is much more like the present case. The case of In re The Imperial Rubber Co., which was cited by the Solicitor-General, is, we think, clearly distinguished from the present case, because the law with respect to the issue of shares in a company registered under the Companies Acts bears little analogy to the transfer or exchange of bonds. The decision in the case of Mowatt v. The Castle Steel and Iron Works Co. turns simply upon the fact that the company had given no authority to anyone to issue the debentures in question in that case, and affords us little assistance in determining the questions raised in the present case. For the reasons we have given we are of opinion that the bond was not "issued" in the United Kingdom. We were then asked to say that the bond, although issued out of the United Kingdom, was "offered for subscription, and given or delivered to a subscriber" in the United Kingdom within clause (b) (2) of the section before-mentioned. In our opinion the bond was not offered for subscription in the United Kingdom. It seems to us that the bond was not offered for subscription at all. The words "offered for subscription" are not, we think, apt words to describe the transaction in this case. We think, for the reasons we have given, that there are no words in the section to which we have been referred that render this bond liable to stamp duty, and our judgment must be for the appellants.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Paines, Blyth, & Hartable.

Solicitor for the respondents, The Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. Admiralty. } June 29, 1896.

"THE MARECHAL SUCHET." (a.)

Admiralty — Practice — Salvage — Right of owners, masters, and crews of salving vessels to institute one action of salvage in rem against salved property — Judicature Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 77), s. 21 — Rules of the Supreme Court, ord. 72, r. 2.

The procedure and practice in force in the High Court of Admiralty at the time of the passing of the Judicature Act entitled the owners, masters, and crews of different vessels who had rendered salvage services to a vessel, freight, or cargo in need of salvage services to institute one suit of salvage in rem against the salved property; and all such salvors have now, under the procedure and practice in force in the Admiralty Division, a similar right to join in an action in rem to recover the salvage remuneration due to them, and are not bound to sue out in it more than one writ of summons.

Smurthwaite v. Hannay, 43 W. R. 113, [1894] A. C. 494 distinguished.

This was an action of salvage instituted on behalf of the owners, masters, and crews of the steam tugs British King, Andrew Joliffe, Sea King, and Great Emperor against the vessel Marechal Suchet, her cargo and freight, to recover salvage remuneration for services rendered to that vessel when on fire in the River Mersey on the 11th and 12th of June last.

An appearance under protest was entered on behalf of the owners of The Marechal Suchet, and their solicitors gave notice that the judge in court would be moved to set aside the writ of summons in the action whenever the owners, masters, and crews of the above-named four steam tugs were entered as the plaintiffs in the action, or to strike out all the plaintiffs' names in such writ other than one, on the ground that the owners, masters, and crews of the four tugs in question were wrongly proceeding in one and the same action.

Carver, on behalf of the defendants under protest, now moved the judge in court in accordance with the above notice of motion.—The owner, master, and crew of each steam tug named in the writ sought to be set aside by the motion have a separate and distinct cause of action against The Marechal Suchet to recover salvage reward, and these several causes of action cannot now, since the decision of the House of Lords in Smurthwaite v. Hannay, 43 W. R. 113, [1894] A. C. 494, be joined in one action, as was formerly supposed might be done under R. S. C., 1883, ord. 18, r. 1; and, having regard to the same case, cannot properly be made parties to one action under R. S. C., 1883, ord. 16. Separate claims, in fact, ought to have been made in separate actions by each set of plaintiffs, and if this had been done the suits would in due course have come on for trial in the county court at Liverpool having admiralty jurisdiction; the amount of salvage claimed by each separate set of salvors being within the amount to which the jurisdiction of the county court in salvage is limited.

He also referred to Carter v. Rigby & Co., 44 W. R. 566, [1896] 2 Q. B. 118, and The Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Co. v. Tsune Kijima, [1895] A. C. 661, as showing the application of the principle laid down in Smurthwaite v. Hannay.

Butler Aspinall, for the plaintiffs, contrà.—It has been the constant practice both before and after the coming into operation of the Judicature Acts for single actions in admiralty to be brought to recover the salvage reward due for separate services rendered, as in the present case, by several vessels to the same salved property, just as it has been the invariable practice for the owners of several consignments of cargo, however numerous, to join in admiralty as plaintiffs in one action of collision; for seamen proceeding for their private effects to join in such last-named action, and for all the members of the crew to join in one wages suit: The Charles Adolphe, Swa. 153; The Bartley, Swa. 198; The Coromandel, Swa. 205. Indeed, in Hook v. Moreton, 1 Lord Raym. 397, the power of the seamen to join in one action in admiralty for their wages is given as a reason why such suits were not prohibited by the courts of common law. The practice of joining several claims in salvage and other admiralty actions does not depend at all upon the provisions contained in orders 16 and 18 of the Rules of the Supreme Court, or the interpretation placed on those rules by Smurthwaite v. Hannay, but is the inherent practice of the High Court of Admiralty still in force in the Admiralty Division by virtue of the Judicature Act, 1875, s. 21, and R. S. C., 1883, ord. 72, r. 2. [He referred to The Mona, 43 W. R. 173, [1894] P. 265.] The motion, therefore, ought to be dismissed with costs, and the defendants under protest assigned to appear absolutely.

(a.) Reported by C. F. JEMMETT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

BARNES, J.—This is a motion on behalf of the defendants in a salvage suit instituted by the owners, masters, and crews of the steam tugs British King, Andrew Joliffe, Sea King, and Great Emperor against the owners of the ship or vessel Marechal Suchet and the cargo now or lately laden therein, and the freight for the transportation thereof, that the writ of summons in the action be set aside, or, in the alternative, that all the plaintiffs with the exception of one may be struck out, on the ground that the respective plaintiffs cannot properly sue in one action. The only matter necessary to state in considering the point, besides the fact of the nature of the suit and the motion, is that the action is brought by these four tugs and those who are interested in them—the owners and masters and crews of the tugs—for salvage services rendered to The Marechal Suchet, which was on fire in the Mersey recently, and which, by the assistance of the tugs, was beached, and also by their assistance the fire was, as I understand, put out. The motion is made with the object of preventing these four sets of plaintiffs from suing together and obtaining their trial in this court by an action in which they all remain as plaintiffs against the defendants. The real object of the motion is to force the plaintiffs to sue in the Liverpool County Court; because it is said that if each plaintiff sues separately his claim will come within the county court rate, while collectively the claims will exceed that rate. But even if the defendants could succeed in their motion they could not compel the plaintiffs to go to the county court, and the only effect would be that four writs or more would be issued against them in this court, and they would have the pleasure of paying extra costs by reason of the motion they make. But the point which it is important to consider is, whether or not the plaintiffs have the power to issue this writ collectively.

Now, it is said on the defendants' part that, according to the decision in Smurthwaite v. Hannay, the plaintiffs have no right whatever to issue their writ against the defendants as they have done, and that, having regard to the construction put upon ord. 16, r. 1, by that decision, this writ is a bad one. I do not think it necessary really to say anything about the case of Smurthwaite v. Hannay, because, in my judgment, it has no application to this particular case and to the form of suit of which this particular suit is an instance. I do not think that ord. 16, r. 1, excludes the power of the plaintiffs to issue this writ. It is an enabling rule. In the old days parties could not join together. The rule allows certain parties to be joined together in a suit. But the Act of 1875, s. 21, and also ord. 72, r. 2, leave untouched the practice of this court in those respects, in which it is not inconsistent with the rules made under the Judicature Act.

Now, what was the practice of this court? There is no doubt that the practice of this court was that all the persons interested in a salvage service might be joined together in one suit for the purpose of obtaining the reward for those services; and also in all collision cases all those persons who had interest in the ship which was damaged could do the same thing. In seamens' suits for wages the same thing applies; and it is all based on convenience. It would be a dreadful thing, in my judgment, if Mr. Carver's contention should prove correct, because I see nothing for it but that every person interested in goods on board a ship damaged in collision would have to bring a separate action, and so on in all suits in this court. That would have a most disastrous effect upon the work of the court and would be most disastrous for the defendant, because he would have to pay the whole amount of the necessary costs. Take this particular case which we are considering. It is admitted that if the plaintiffs started several separate suits the defendants would be entitled to apply to consolidate, and that this would be a proper suit for a consolidation order to be made. If, when that is admitted, it is shown that the convenience of the case is met by allowing everybody to sue together, then that, in my judgment, is in accordance with the whole practice of the court. The practice is not, I think, in any way shaken by the rule referred to and the decision upon it, and in this case, in my judgment, the motion fails.

I am very glad that that is the conclusion I have come to; because otherwise I think I should be upsetting the practice of this court and the great convenience which has resulted.

In my opinion this motion should be dismissed with costs.

Solicitor for the plaintiffs, H. J. Holme.

Solicitors for the defendants under protest, Hill & Dickenson.

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. } Divorce (Divisional Court). } Dec. 1.

BRADSHAW (Appellant) v. BRADSHAW AND JUSTICES FOR THE BOROUGH OF RICHMOND, SURREY (Respondents). (a.)

Married woman—Maintenance—Desertion — Cohabitation—Parties not living under same roof—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 39), s. 4.

There may be cohabitation without the parties necessarily living under the same roof.

A husband from time to time visited his wife, who was in service, and she had a child by him. She left service and he refused to receive her, and said if she sent her boxes to the house where he was living they would be returned.

Held, that there had been cohabitation giving justices jurisdiction to hear a summons by the wife for desertion under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act 1895.

(a.) Reported by J. GERARD LAING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald, 17 W. R. 264, L. R. 1 P. & D. 697, and Reg. v. Leresche, 40 W. R. 2, [1891] 2 Q. B. 418, considered and explained.

Appeal from the decision of justices for the borough of Richmond, Surrey, dismissing a wife's summons against her husband under section 4 of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, on the ground that under the circumstances they had no jurisdiction.

The wife, Ellen Bradshaw, complained that her husband, Richard Landale Bradshaw, had neglected to provide reasonable maintenance for her, ". . . and by such neglect caused her to live separately and apart from him" (section 4), and asked for an order for maintenance.

The following evidence was given before the justices. Ellen Bradshaw said: I am the wife of the defendant. I produce certificate of the marriage. I was married to him at the Registry Office, Brentford, on the 19th of December, 1893. He was then living where he is now at 103, Kew-road. At that time I was in a certain condition. I went to reside with my sister at Lewisham. He knew of my condition. I was confined at Queen Charlotte's Lying-in Hospital of a girl. I wrote to defendant. He made no reply. A child was born. It was in a delicate condition. He was employed at an election and said he would not come or give me anything. It died. I acquainted him of its death. I had to sell and pledge my goods to bury it. He visited me after the child was born, and on the 19th of July, 1895, I had to go back to hospital. I applied to him for help. That child also died. He refused to come and see it. I paid funeral. I have been to the house where he resides. He said if my boxes were sent to the house they would be returned.—Cross-examined: I have never lived with him, and was in service when I was married. I have been in service since and left two weeks ago. My sister is not doing my work there for me.

Richard Landale Bradshaw, defendant.—I live with my father, a bootmaker, at 103, Kew-road, Richmond. I am a sort of an artist. I only disposed of one picture. I have heard my wife give evidence. I am willing to maintain my wife, but have no means.

The solicitor for the defendant submitted that the evidence disclosed that there never was any existing cohabitation, and therefore there could be no desertion and no remedy under the Act, and he relied on Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald and Reg. v. Leresche. A question arose also as to whether an adjournment should be granted for further proof of means, but the justices, having considered the point, held on the point of no cohabitation that they had no jurisdiction, and dismissed the summons. The wife appealed.

Powles, for the appellant, was stopped by the court.

S. Lynch, for the respondent, relied on the cases cited before the justices, and submitted that in this case there had never been an existing cohabitation.

JEUNE, P.—The only question we have to decide is one of jurisdiction. The magistrates who heard this case in the first instance held on the authority of two cases, Fitzgerald v. Fitzgerald and Reg. v. Leresche, that they had no jurisdiction. Very often there appears to be some misunderstanding as to the meaning and effect of the decisions in these two cases. It is true that there can be no desertion without cohabitation, but cohabitation does not necessarily mean persons living under the same roof; there are many cases where this is not the case, as where the wife is in domestic service. The two cases cited have this in common, that at the time of the alleged desertion the parties were living separate and apart, and were not cohabiting, and what those two cases decide is that a person cannot complain of desertion after voluntarily leaving his or her consort, and also that when parties are living apart by mutual consent—as under a separation deed—there cannot be desertion. In this case there had been cohabitation, and we find the husband refusing to allow his wife anything, and that he refused to receive her boxes. The magistrates decided the case on the point that they had no jurisdiction because there had been no cohabitation. I think there had, and that the magistrates had jurisdiction; the case must go back to them for decision on the merits.

BARNES, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think the magistrates misunderstood the two cases already cited.

Case remitted to magistrates.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitor for the appellant, Geo. M. Lay, Twickenham.

Solicitor for the respondent, Charles Robinson, Hounslow.

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. Probate (Barnes, J.) } July 27; Aug. 5, 1896.

In the Goods of ROBERT PEARSON (DECEASED). (a.

Probate—Lost will—Proof of will—Motion—Consent next of kin—Next of kin minors.

The court will not allow the contents of a lost will to be proved on motion without the consent of the next of kin, unless the estate be small.

Where the next of kin were minors, and therefore could not consent, the court refused to allow proof of a lost will on motion, and ordered the will to be propounded.

Motion on behalf of Mary Elizabeth Pearson, widow of Robert Pearson deceased, for leave to prove the contents of his last will.

The testator left three children surviving him, all of whom were then and now minors.

July 27.—Bargrave Deane, for the applicant.

Cur. adv. vult.

Aug. 5.—BARNES, J.—In this case I am asked to allow the applicant to prove on motion the contents of a lost will.

The applicant is the widow of the testator, and there are three children of the testator who are minors, and consequently there arises the difficulty of obtaining their consent as next of kin to the granting of this application on motion. I was desirous of assisting the parties, and adjourned the case in order to see what was the value of the property, whether it was reasonably substantial or of such a small amount as to justify my making the grant in order to save expense. I am told the value of the property is between £1,100 and £1,200, and must therefore deal with the question on the principles which ought to be applied in dealing with lost wills in all cases. I have made inquiry in the registry and am unable to find a single case in which a lost will has been allowed to be proved on motion without the consent of the next of kin, and am also informed that it is always the practice to require such consent, and therefore where such consent cannot be or is not given it is the practice to require the will to be propounded in the usual way, and I am therefore compelled to refuse this motion as I cannot grant it without departing from a rule of this court which to my mind is one which it is desirable to maintain—viz., that where the property is substantial and no will is produced the court should not take the case on motion on affidavits only without full investigation, but it is desirable that the will should be propounded unless the estate is small or the consent of all parties is obtained. I must therefore require this will to be propounded.

(a.) Reported by J. GERARD LAING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Motion refused.

Solicitors, Rowcliffes, Rawle, & Co.

Prob. Div. and Adm. Div. } June 2; July 7, 1896.
Divorce (Divisional Court). }

ELLIS v. ELLIS. (a.)

Married woman—Justices—Summary jurisdiction—Persistent cruelty causing wife to live apart—Continuing offence—Limit of time—Six months—Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895 (58 & 59 Vict. c. 30), ss. 4, 8—Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43), s. 11.

The offence of persistent cruelty or wilful neglect, causing a wife to leave and live separately and apart from her husband within the meaning of section 4 of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, is not a continuing offence, but is complete when the wife leaves the husband, and complaint must be made or information laid within six calendar months from that time, as required by section 11 of the Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848, which is incorporated by section 8 of the first-named Act.

Appeal by the husband from the order of the stipendiary magistrate sitting at Greenwich Police Court, from an order made under the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, that his wife be no longer bound to cohabit with him, &c., on the ground that he had been guilty of persistent cruelty to her and wilful neglect to provide her reasonable maintenance, and by such cruelty and neglect had caused her to leave and live separately and apart from him.

In 1889 the wife left her husband in consequence of his cruelty, and did not return to cohabitation. The husband did not after the separation maintain his wife. The summons was heard and order made in 1896.

June 2.—Gover, for the appellant.—The Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, by section 8, requires that "all applications under this Act shall be made in accordance with the Summary Jurisdiction Acts." The Summary Jurisdiction Act, 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 43), s. 11, imposes a limit of time, six months, for making the complaint or laying the information from the time when the matter arises. Here the matter arose in 1889, the offence was complete then, it was not a continuing offence, and the complaint not being made till 1896 is out of time: Reg. v. Slade, [1895] 2 Q. B. 247, 43 W. R. Dig. 86.

Lewis Thomas, for the wife, the respondent, referred to Wilkinson v. Wilkinson, 58 J. P. 415; Reg. v. Evans, 44 W. R. 271, [1896] 1 Q. B. 228; Lane v. Lane, [1896] P. 133, 44 W. R. Dig. 54; Reg. v. Birtwhistle, 58 L. J. M. C. 158, 38 W. R. Dig. 86.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 7.—JEUNE, P.—The order made by the learned magistrate in this case states that the complaint that the appellant has been guilty of persistent cruelty to the respondent, and wilfully neglected to provide reasonable maintenance for her, and has by such cruelty and neglect caused her to leave and live separately and apart from him, is true. The respondent finally left the appellant in August, 1889. It was suggested before us, and the evidence appears to show, that the appellant has neglected to maintain the respondent since she left him. This, however, seems to me to be immaterial. The "neglect to maintain" referred to in the 4th section of the Summary Jurisdiction (Married Women) Act, 1895, is neglect antecedent to its effect of the wife leaving her husband; and it is such neglect, and such neglect only, that the magistrate has found to be proved.

The only question, therefore, raised in this case is whether the offences proved are continuing offences, so that the limit of time imposed by the reference to the Summary Jurisdiction Acts contained in section 8 does not apply. I am of opinion that they are not continuing offences. It appears to me clear that when the course of conduct consisting either of persistent cruelty or neglect to maintain produces the result of causing the wife to leave her husband and live apart from him the offence contemplated by the Act is complete.

The test whether an offence is to be treated in law as continuous is, I think, whether its gravamen is to be found in something which the offender can at will discontinue. The gravamen of desertion is placed by the matrimonial law, not so much in one spouse leaving the other, as in his or her persisting in separation. But the gravamen of the offences of such cruelty or neglect on the part of a husband as drive a wife from her home consist in the cruelty or neglect carried to that point of aggravation. A husband whose misconduct has been so serious as to produce such a result is, I think, deemed by this Act to be guilty of a complete offence as soon as the result ensues. There is not, so far as I know, any authority on the point. The case of Reeve v. Yeates, 10 W. R. 779, 1 H. & C. 435, referred to in argument, presents some, but not a close, analogy. That case was decided on the words of 5 Geo. 4, c. 83, s. 4, which makes it an offence in "every person running away and leaving his wife or his or her child or children chargeable to the parish." It was held by Pollock, C.B., and Martin, B., Bramwell, B., dissenting, that the limit of six months ran, not from the time of leaving, but from the time of the chargeability arising. But it was not doubted that this period of limitation did then begin. So here I think that it begins when the husband's conduct causes his wife to leave him. In allowing the summary remedy provided for by this Act the Legislature in such cases as the present has thought right to prescribe that complaint shall be made within six months. But if that time be exceeded there remains the right to come to this court, which can give relief unless there has been undue or unreasonable delay. This appeal must therefore be allowed; but I think that the wife's costs here and in the court below should be paid by the husband.

BARNES, J.—According to the evidence the husband had been convicted of "persistent cruelty," causing his wife to leave and live apart from him, but the acts complained of took place in the year 1889. The question this court has, therefore, to consider is whether the acts complained of, having occurred more than six months before complaint made, come within the Act of 1895. It appears from section 8 of that Act that all applications thereunder must be made in accordance with the Summary Jurisdiction

(a.) Reported by J. GERARD LAING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Acts, and therefore, as in this case not only the cruelty, but also the consequences of it, occurred more than six months before the complaint was made, in my opinion the Act does not apply to this case. The offence complained of in the present case is not on the same footing as "desertion," which could at once be put an end to by the parties. The appeal must therefore be allowed.

The COURT, while doubting if leave were required, refused leave to appeal.

Appeal allowed, costs of wife to be paid by husband.

Solicitors for the appellant, Frederick Kent & Co.

Solicitors for the respondent, Busk & Mellor.

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div. (Lindley and A. L. Smith, L.JJ.) — Nov. 7.

POTTER & CO. v. BURRELL & SON. (a.)

Ship—Charter-party—Construction—Salvage services—Limits of deviation.

By a charter-party the shipowners agreed to supply the charterers with five steamers, to load between August and December inclusive, as nearly as possible a steamer a month, at an agreed foreign port, the charterers undertaking to supply cargo within twenty-four hours of notice of each ship's arrival. The charter-party expressly excepted perils of the sea, and allowed towage services.

The S. 1 should have arrived at the agreed port on or about the 23rd of September, but did not as a fact arrive until the 8th or 9th of October, owing to heavy weather. The S. 2 arrived at her agreed time, on the 12th of October, and gave notice the same day that she was ready to receive cargo. None was tendered to her until the 24th of October, there not being sufficient labour at the port to load more than one steamer at a time. In an action for damages by the owners for the detention of The S. 2, Held (affirming the award of the arbitrator and the decision of the Divisional Court), that the owners were entitled to damages.

The S. 3, on her voyage out, fell in with a disabled steamer and towed her to Mauritius on a salvage service. Such towage was out of the course of the voyage, and delayed the arrival of the vessel for three weeks. The arbitrator found that the towage service was not such as to frustrate the object of the adventure as between the charterers and the owners, and awarded damages.

Held, by the Court of Appeal, that such a salvage service was an allowable deviation within the meaning of the charter-party, and that the charterers were bound to present cargo on the arrival of The S. 3.

Appeal by the plaintiffs from a decision of the Divisional Court (Day, and Lawrance, JJ.) who upheld the award of an arbitrator on the construction of a charter-party.

By the charter-party dated the 5th of May, 1894, the shipowners, the defendants, agreed to supply the plaintiffs, the charterers, with five steamers at a certain rate of freight to proceed to a port in New Caledonia, there to load from charterers' agent a part cargo of nickel ore, and then go direct in a certain order to any three Australian or New Zealand ports as ordered by charterers, and there load in docks to complete their full cargo, and ultimately return to Havre or Glasgow.

The five steamers were to be provided to load between August and early December inclusive "at times to be in good time mutually arranged," but as nearly as possible a steamer a month.

The steamers were, with all convenient speed, to proceed direct in ballast to the port in New Caledonia to which they should be respectively ordered. Perils of the sea were (inter alia) mutually excepted.

The cargo was to be presented upon lighters, which were to commence to come alongside the steamer within twenty-four hours after receipt of notice by charterers' agent that the vessel was ready to receive cargo. The steamers were to have liberty to tow and be towed, and to assist vessels in all situations, salvages procured being for the benefit of the owners.

The steamers were to load as nearly as possible one steamer a month. Five new steamers were provided by the owners, and Noumea was agreed upon as the port of arrival in New Caledonia. The Strathairly, which should have arrived on or about the 23rd of September, did not arrive until the 8th or 9th of October owing to heavy weather. The Strathnairn arrived on the 12th of October, and gave notice the same day that she was ready to receive cargo, but no cargo was tendered to her until the 24th of October, there being not sufficient labour at Noumea to load more than one steamer at a time. Damages were claimed by the shipowners for the detention of The Strathnairn at Noumea. The arbitrator decided in their favour.

The Strathord on her voyage out, between the Cape and Australia on the 2nd of October, fell in with a disabled vessel, The Buteshire, on a voyage from London to Adelaide and towed her to Mauritius as a salvage service. This towage delayed the voyage of The Strathord for about three weeks. As a result of the delay an agreement between the plaintiffs and an Australian firm for loading the vessel in Australia was cancelled, and the vessel proceeded to a New Zealand port for loading, where she arrived on the 15th of December. Due notice of her arrival having been given to the charterers' agents, no cargo was tendered until the 3rd of January. The charterers therefore claimed that they were not bound to load in accordance with the terms of the charter, but only within a reasonable time. The arbitrator found as a fact that the towage services were not such as to frustrate the object of the adventure as between the charterers and the owners, and decided that the charter continued in force, and that charterers were bound to load in New Zealand in accordance with it; he accordingly awarded damages to the owners for the detention of the ship in New Zealand.

The plaintiffs appealed.

Cohen, Q.C., and T. E. Scrutton, for the appellants.

Bigham, Q.C., and J. E. Bankes, for the respondents.

LINDLEY, L.J.—The questions raised in this appeal turn entirely upon the construction of the charter-party. The charter-party provides that certain ships shall proceed in ballast to a port in New Caledonia, as ordered by the charterers, and they are to float and load part cargo of nickel ore. Having done that, they are to proceed direct "to any three Australian or New Zealand ports, in their geographical order, beginning at most northern port, as ordered by charterers or their agents, and there load at such usual docks, wharves, piers, or places therein, where the vessel can safely lie afloat, any sort of lawful merchandize, including wool," and so on. It also appears from the charter-party that besides Noumea, there is another port in New Caledonia, or at least one, Kuana, which is named in clause 16, and it was uncertain at the date of this charter to which port these ships were to go; but it was arranged afterwards they should go to Noumea. Clause 35 of the charter-party says this: "Under this charter it is agreed that Burrell & Son are to provide John Potter & Co. with five steamers of 2,000 to 3,200 tons net register, size at Burrell & Son's option, to load between August and early December inclusive, at times to be in good time mutually arranged, but as nearly as possible a steamer a month." Now that is unquestionably an important clause; but what is meant by the expression "in good time to be mutually arranged, but as nearly as possible a steamer a month"? That expression "as nearly as possible," shows that the actual date which may be mutually arranged is not to be taken as a fixed date which cannot be departed from, because the expression "as nearly as possible a steamer a month" throws you back on clause 6 and clause 26. Clause 6 is the perils of the sea clause. It is not a fixed date, but it is a flexible date. Clause 26 is the towage clause: "Steamer to have liberty to tow and be towed, and assist vessels in all situations, and salvages procured to be for benefit of owners." Therefore towing is contemplated. Of course an unreasonable towage service is not contemplated, and I take it no towing service which would defeat the objects of the parties to the contract is contemplated, but any towage which is consistent with the attainment of the objects is contemplated. All towage, of course, involves delay. The ships were not to take a full cargo, but a partial cargo of nickel, and they were to fill up with wool, or anything else they liked, coming home. Clause 19 says: "As regards cargo to be shipped in New Caledonia"—that is, nickel—"the same shall be presented upon lighters, barges, and other vessels, which shall commence to come alongside the steamship within twenty-four hours after receipt of notice by charterer's agents that vessel is ready to receive cargo." That means that if a vessel arrives at a time which is consistent with this charter-party, the charterers are to send the nickel ore in lighters, barges, and other vessels alongside the steamship within twenty-four hours after notice. That is what they undertake to do. That means that unless they can show they are discharged from the obligation imposed upon them by this charter, by the non-performance of some condition or by some breach of contract on the part of the owners, they must carry out that undertaking. They take the risk of that. What happens?

(a.) Reported by W. SHALLCROSS GODDARD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Let us take the first point raised by this appeal, with reference to the ship named The Strathnairn. It was arranged the ship should arrive at certain dates. The Strathnairn was to arrive on the 10th of October; she arrived on the 12th. Why was not she loaded by the charterers pursuant to their obligation (which I have read) imposed upon them by clause 19? Because the preceding ship, The Strathairly, had arrived late, and because there was not labour enough at Noumea to load both ships at once. It was late, not by reason of any fault of the owners, but by reason of perils of the sea. The truth is she was not late according to to the true meaning of this contract—she had arrived in time. As I have pointed out the 23rd of September, the time named for her arrival, was not a fixed date, but was an approximate date—as nearly as possible consistent with the clause—consistent with perils of the sea. There was no breach of the contract in her being late; there was no breach or non-performance of any condition in her being late. She was there as contemplated by the parties to this charter. There was nothing wrong, nothing unperformed, and therefore no reason which could justify the charterers in saying they ought not to pay for the delay in loading The Strathnairn. According to the true construction of this charter-party, I have not the slightest doubt the risk of finding labour for loading two ships, if they should happen to overlap, was on the charterers, and I cannot read clause 19 as exonerating them in any way from finding lighters and labour to ship the ore. That is made a little plainer, to my mind, by looking at a clause which has not been referred to—clause 16, which provides that if the charterers name Noumea and cannot get ore there (this has nothing to do with the time) they can order the ship to another port in New Caledonia, upon certain terms there mentioned. To my mind that is a further reason for holding that the risk of finding labour is on the charterers. Clause 19, in my opinion, makes their appeal upon that point untenable. That is the first point, and my answer is: There is no breach of contract nor the non-fulfilment of a condition precedent.

Now I will take the next, which is the case of The Strathord. In order to make the case plain, one must read the clause in the charter which relates to loading in Australia. What happened was this. The Strathord was going out to New Caledonia, viâ Sydney. Before she got to Sydney she fell in with a ship in distress, The Buteshire, and she towed her back, as I understand it, to Mauritius. That caused delay, and a good deal of delay; but the arbitrator has found the delay so caused was not greater than would have been caused if The Strathord had towed The Buteshire on to Australia, which was in the course of her voyage. He has found that as a fact. There was a delay of three weeks, and we are asked to say that that towage caused such a delay as to be inconsistent with the attainment of the object of this charter. I cannot say anything of the sort. If The Strathord had towed The Buteshire up to the North Pole it probably would have been, but she towed her back to Mauritius. It was a deviation, of course, but a deviation, unless it is so great as to be inconsistent with the contract, is an allowable deviation, and having regard to the facts found in this case, it seems to me that we cannot possibly hold that the deviation which did take place in consequence of this towage was an inadmissible one. The delay was not so great—and the arbitrator finds that—as to defeat the object of the parties. If so, it was admissible; there was no breach of contract by that towage, and there was no non-performance of any condition precedent within the meaning of this contract. In my opinion both these grounds of appeal fail.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—The questions arise upon a charter-party dated the 5th of May, 1894, between the shipowners and charterers. Now, although the charterers are the plaintiffs, I shall treat this case as if in reality it was an action by shipowner against charterer for damages for not loading the ship in pursuance of the charter. The clause upon which the shipowner relies and has apparently founded his claim is clause 19 of the charter, by which the charterer has bound himself in these terms. [His lordship read the clause, and continued:—] The vessel arrived there in due course. There is no complaint made of the time when she arrived at this berth in Noumea; but the charterer presented no cargo within twenty-four hours after notice of the readiness of the vessel to receive her cargo, and it is for the delay which there occurred that the first claim is made by the shipowner against the charterer. The arbitrator has awarded damages—or you may call it demurrage—for this delay in breach of the contract, and against that the charterer appeals.

It was said that clause 19 was not an absolute contract by the charterer to provide freight within twenty-four hours after receipt of notice that a vessel was ready to receive cargo, but no argument was directed to that point. The point taken was this, If you look at the whole charter-party there was a condition precedent that no demurrage was to be paid by the charterer for not loading the ship unless the five ships arrived at certain stipulated periods, and if it happened by reason of perils of the sea, or what not, that two ships arrived at the same time and one was already in process of loading, it was a condition precedent that no obligation was imposed upon the charterer to load the second ship. As a matter of fact, I cannot read this charter as saying any such thing as an exception in this way to the absolute contract contained in clause 19. The appellants say: "First of all there is a contract clause which does not apply to this case." If there is no contract within that clause then it appears to me the absolute obligation in clause 19 would be done away with, and also the clause as to perils of the sea. Mr. Cohen says: "If you read clause 35 there is a condition precedent that if any two of the vessels happened to arrive so as to overlap each other, then the obligation so far as regards paying demurrage, which would otherwise apply, would be done away with." What is this clause? Did anyone ever read a clause like this as constituting a condition precedent to the performance of the other parts of a contract, one clause of which, as I have already pointed out, is absolute in its terms? "Under this charter it is agreed that Burrell & Son are to provide John Potter & Co. with five steamers . . . to load between August and early December inclusive"—that, so far, is conclusive; in that part there is no express stipulation to be there one a month. I will read on: "At times, to be in good time mutually arranged, but as nearly as possible a steamer a month." That is said to be a condition precedent that there shall be a steamer once a month, and, if they overlap, it does away with the right of the shipowner against the charterer. That was the contract made on the 5th of May, 1894. Then, pursuant to that term of the contract made in May, 1894, long after—namely, on the 31st of July, 1894—they came to a mutual arrangement as to how the ships were to go out. The letter written is this—it is from the shipowner to the charterer: "Dear Sirs,—We have your favour of yesterday"—and so on—"the fourth and fifth boats and dates are as Mr. Burrell named to you, but we repeat them here—viz., Strathtay due Noumea 18th August; Strathairly, 23rd September; Strathnairn,"—that is the ship in question—"10th October; Strathord, 23rd October; Strathness, 7th November." Now where do you find the condition precedent that if these ships overlap the contract with regard to demurrage shall be at an end? I cannot find it, and I say it does not exist. That was the point Mr. Cohen took—this was a condition precedent that no two ships should arrive at the same time. As a matter of fact that is not to be found in the contract.

Then Mr. Scrutton has a point as to The Strathairly, but I should point out before I deal with The Strathairly that The Strathnairn went there all right according to the contract, by which she was to be there about the 10th of October. She got there shortly after, on the 12th of October, and no complaint is made of the time she arrived. She was ready in due course, and was ready to take her cargo on board, and notice was given that she was ready for the charterers' agents to load. They did not load because, as it is said, they could not load two ships at the same time. Take it that it was so. How did that abrogate the express contract, which I read first in clause 19—that they will load within twenty-four hours? The shipowner was guilty of no breach at all by reason of the The Strathairly getting there late. He had done nothing by himself which would hinder and prevent the charterer from carrying out his contract, and I cannot see myself how the mere fact of The Strathairly getting there late abrogates that express contract in the charter. If the ship gets there in time, which The Strathnairn did, and notice is given within twenty-four hours, the charterer is to provide cargo for the ship. It seems to me, upon these grounds, the arbitrator's finding that the shipowner was entitled to damages for delay in loading The Strathnairn at Noumea, is well founded, and I think the appeal fails.

I now come to The Strathord. This is how I think this case really stands. [His lordship stated the facts, and continued:—] Then Mr. Cohen says: "There is a clause in the charter-party which allows you to render salvage service, but some limit must be put upon that. The charterer says you could not render such salvage services as would cause you to come to the port of loading six, twelve, or fifteen months after the stipulated period." With that I agree. Mr. Cohen cited the judgment of Bramwell, B., in Stuart v. The British and African Steam Navigation Co., 32 L. T. N. S. 260, 23 W. R. Dig. 214. In that case Bramwell, B., said to Mr. Benjamin, who was arguing the case, "I wish you could tell us what that limit must be." Mr. Benjamin did not; and as he did not try, I am not going to try. But what Bramwell, B., did say was that that case was well within the line and not over the line. What the arbitrator has found as a fact is that the time which was occupied by this salvage service did not frustrate the object of the adventure between the shipowner or the charterer. By the contract, as I read it, the shipowner had the right to perform these services. Then may not the limit be—I do not say it is—if he performs this service in such a way as not to prevent the object of the adventure between charterer and shipowner, that would be said to be within the limit. It might, on the other hand, be said, If the salvage service occupied such a time as to frustrate the object of the adventure, it was outside the limit spoken of by Bramwell, B. I cannot find in this case that these salvage services have exceeded the limit which was mentioned. It seems to me that on both these points the appeal ought to be dismissed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Parker, Garrett, & Holman; Botterell & Roche.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley and Lopes, L.JJ.) } Aug. 5, 10, 1896.

In re LUMLEY.
Ex parte HOOD BARRS. (a.)

Married woman—Restraint on anticipation—Limitation not containing words "separate use"—Estate "without impeachment of waste"—Married Women's Property Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 75).

Income accrued due after judgment in respect of property subject to a restraint on anticipation cannot be taken in execution or by the appointment of a receiver.

Hood Barrs v. Heriot, 44 W. R. 481, [1896] A. C. 174, distinguished.

Hood Barrs v. Cathcart, 42 W. R. 628, [1894] 2 Q. B. 559, and Whiteley v. Edwards, 44 W. R. 530, [1896] 2 Q. B. 559, followed.

(a.) Reported by R. C. MACKENZIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

A restraint on anticipation may be validly annexed to the separate estate created by the Married Women's Property Act, 1882, though the words "for her separate use" do not occur in the limitation; and even to an estate expressed to be granted "without impeachment of waste."

Appeal by H. H. Hood Barrs, a solicitor, from North, J.

In 1893 and 1894 the appellant had obtained several orders directing payment of costs to him by Mrs. Mary Cathcart, a married woman. The orders were in the form adopted in Scott v. Morley, 36 W. R. 67, 20 Q. B. D. 120, limiting execution to separate property of the debtor not subject to any restraint on anticipation. Hood Barrs now sought to enforce his claim against certain rents of Mrs. Cathcart's property which had accrued due after judgment. The property from which the rents arose had, by Mrs. Cathcart's marriage settlement, been conveyed to trustees to hold the same (after the solemnization of her then intended marriage) to her use "during her life without impeachment of waste and without power of anticipation," the deed containing no mention of "separate use." In June, 1896, Hood Barrs moved for a receiver of the rents and profits due and in arrear of certain real estates comprised in Mrs. Cathcart's marriage settlement. North, J., refused the motion, and Hood Barrs appealed.

H. H. Hood Barrs, in person, for the appeal.—Hood Barrs v. Heriot, 44 W. R. 481, [1896] A. C. 174, is an authority that the judgments can be enforced against rents accrued due. The attempted restraint on anticipation is invalid for want of the words "for her separate use": Stogdon v. Lee, 39 W. R. 467, [1891] 1 Q. B. 661; Tullett v. Armstrong, 1 Beav. 1; the judgment of the Divisional Court in In re Armstrong, Ex parte Gilchrist, 34 W. R. 709, 17 Q. B. D. 167, 521; In re Armstrong, Ex parte Boyd, 36 W. R. 772, 21 Q. B. D. 264. [He also referred to Wolstenholme on the Conveyancing Acts, &c., 4th ed., note on section 1 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882; sections 2, 19 of that Act; Symonds v. Wilkes, 13 W. R. 1026; and Hood Barrs v. Cathcart, C. A., 23rd of July, 1894, reported only in a pamphlet.] The words "without impeachment of waste" are inconsistent with the existence of a restraint on anticipation: Clive v. Clive, 20 W. R. 477, L. R. 7 Ch. App. 433; Cope v. Cope, 15 Sim. 118; and Sheppard's Touchstone, 8th ed., p. 88.

Willoughby Williams, for Mrs. Cathcart.—Whiteley v. Edwards, 44 W. R. 530, [1896] 2 Q. B. 48, decides that rents accrued due after judgment cannot be taken in execution. The point on the omission of the words "separate use" was decided against the appellant in Hood Barrs v. Cathcart, 23rd of July, 1894.

He also referred to Davidson's Conveyancing, vol. 3 (3rd ed.), p. 309; Key and Elphinstone's Precedents (4th ed.), vol. 2, p. 613. If the words "without impeachment of waste" are inconsistent with the restraint, the former, as the smaller, must yield to the latter, the larger and more important. But there is no inconsistency.

Hood Barrs replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

Aug. 10.—LINDLEY, L.J., read the following judgment: Mr. Hood Barrs seeks to enforce an order for costs against rents which became due to Mrs. Cathcart since the order was made. North, J., has decided that he is not entitled to do this, because the property from which the rents are due was settled on Mrs. Cathcart without power of anticipation. Mr. Hood Barrs has appealed—first, on the ground that the restraint against anticipation is invalid; and secondly, on the ground that, even if it is valid, he can reach the rents now that they are in arrear. That he cannot reach them if Mrs. Cathcart is effectually restrained from anticipation is now settled by the decisions of the Court of Appeal in Hood Barrs v. Cathcart, 42 W. R. 628, [1894] 2 Q. B. 559, and Whiteley v. Edwards. These decisions are in no way opposed to Hood Barrs v. Heriot, but are quite consistent with it. They are, I admit, opposed to some remarks of my own in Cox v. Bennett, 39 W. R. 401, [1891] 1 Ch. 617, but they are not opposed to the decision in that case, which was approved by the House of Lords in Hood Barrs v. Heriot. Whiteley v. Edwards, which was decided after Hood Barrs v. Heriot, is conclusive on this point.

The question whether the restraint against anticipation in Mrs. Cathcart's marriage settlement is valid or not is, in my opinion, also settled by the Court of Appeal in Hood Barrs v. Cathcart, on the 23rd of July, 1894, a report of which has been furnished to us by Mr. Hood Barrs. In that case he urged the argument which he has addressed to us on the present occasion, and the court decided against him. The Master of the Rolls and A. L. Smith, L.J., considered the point not open after the previous decision in Hood Barrs v. Cathcart, but Kay, L.J., showed that the argument was inconsistent with section 19 of the Married Women's Property Act, 1882. It may be that the validity of the restraint against anticipation had previously been assumed, and not decided; but it was distinctly raised and decided on the 23rd of July, 1894. Having, however, looked into the matter myself, before I had satisfied myself that the point had been already actually decided, I will state that, in my opinion Mr. Hood Barrs' argument is quite untenable. The omission of the words "for her separate use," which would have been fatal if the case did not fall within the Act of 1882—see Stogdon v. Lee—is not so if that Act applies, as it clearly does. By sections 1 and 2 of the Act the property settled became Mrs. Cathcart's separate property, although the words "for her separate use" were not inserted in the settlement, and, as the settlement did restrain her from anticipation, that restraint became operative by section 19. The attempt to draw a distinction between the separate property of a married woman and property settled on her for her separate use has been made before, and made in vain: see In re Armstrong, Ex parte Boyd. That case also shows that "affect" in section 19 means "invalidate" or "render inoperative."

As to the introduction of the words "without impeachment of waste," they might perhaps create a difficulty if we were dealing with a case of waste, although I doubt whether they would even then, but we are not dealing with such a case. The appeal must be dismissed, with costs.

LOPES, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. As to the words "for her separate use," whatever may have been the state of the authorities before the Act of 1882, that Act, in my judgment, now supplies them, and therefore the restraint on anticipation at once attaches.

As to the rents in arrear, I add nothing to what has been said by Lindley, L.J. I think the question is already settled by the decision of the House of Lords.

It was argued that a gift "without impeachment of waste" is inconsistent with a restraint on anticipation. I do not think that contention can be maintained. It might be right if waste were actually committed, but only in that case. I have read the judgment of Lindley, L.J., and I agree with it.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, H. H. Hood Barrs; E. H. Quicke.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley and Lopes, L.JJ.) July 1, 1896.

EHRMANN v. EHRMANN. (a.)

Practice—Evidence—Letters of request to take evidence before foreign tribunal—Discretionary power of court.

In order to justify the court, in the exercise of its discretion, ordering the issue of letters of request to a foreign tribunal to take evidence, there must be clear proof that the evidence abroad which is sought to be obtained is material to the case in issue, and is not merely such as incidentally might be useful on a collateral matter.

Appeal from an order of Stirling, J.

The plaintiffs and defendant had carried on in partnership the business of wine merchants.

In June, 1894, the plaintiffs commenced this action for the dissolution of the partnership.

In their statement of claim the plaintiffs alleged (inter alia) that the defendant had bribed a person in the employ of a firm of carriers to inform him of the names and addresses of persons to whom such carriers forwarded wines on behalf of Continental wine merchants, and had sent to the plaintiffs lists of the names and addresses of such persons and of the merchants by whom the wines were supplied to them for the purpose of their being made use of by the plaintiffs in their journeys on behalf of the firm.

The plaintiffs alleged that when they received such lists they did not know by what means they had been obtained by the defendant, but that it had afterwards come to their knowledge, and had also come to the knowledge of other persons, and had injuriously affected the reputation of the firm.

The defendant denied these allegations, and in May, 1895, the court directed the action to be tried only upon certain matters, and expressed an opinion that particulars ought to be given of the allegations above set out.

The action had been set down for trial, and the plaintiffs on the 13th of May, 1896, gave notice of motion for the issue of letters of request to the tribunals in Germany to examine as witnesses for the plaintiffs some of the Continental merchants referred to by the plaintiffs in their statement of claim; their evidence was required by the plaintiffs to prove that certain wines were forwarded on their behalf to certain persons by the carriers.

When the motion first came before Stirling, J., he required the plaintiffs to give further particulars, not being satisfied that they were in a position to go to trial upon the particular issue in question.

Particulars having been supplied of the names of persons to whom the wine had been sent, the merchants who sent it, and the quantities of wine sent, on the 19th of June, 1896, when the motion again came on, Stirling, J., without expressing any opinion as to whether the particulars were sufficiently full, said that they satisfied him that the plaintiffs meant to go to trial upon the particular issue, and ordered the letters of request to issue, but not before the 8th of July, so that in the meantime the defendant might make certain inquiries, and if the answers would justify him in making admissions, he could apply to the court on the 7th of July to stay the issue of the letters.

The defendant appealed.

Buckley, Q.C., and H. Terrell, for the appellant.—If the plaintiffs prove that the merchants in question did send wine through the carriers, it does not prove that the defendant obtained the names of the persons to whom it was sent by bribery. On that ground the letters of request ought not to be issued. Further, the defendant ought not to be required to make the admissions which the judge thought he should make. It would injure him if he had to go or write to foreign firms and tell them of the charge made against him, and ask them to help him to defend himself against it.

Jelf, Q.C., and Solomon, for the respondents.—It is difficult to prove the bribery directly, but it would assist the plaintiffs if they could prove that Continental merchants sent through the carriers wine to the persons whose names are on the lists supplied to them by the defendant; and if it could be found that the defendant acquired the information, and that a present was given by him to the agent of the carriers, the inference of bribery would be strong. The issue of the letters is a matter of discreton, and Stirling, J., who is well acquainted with the case, has exercised his discretion by ordering it.

LINDLEY, L.J.—I do not think it is possible to support this order. Although it is quite true that an order for a commission depends very much upon the discretion of the judge, and the circumstances must be very peculiar to induce the Court of Appeal to take a different view from that which the learned judge has taken about such a matter as that; still we all know that a commission abroad to take evidence, or, in this form, letters of request to a foreign Government to allow evidence to be taken, is a very serious matter; it involves great expense and involves great delay, and recourse should not be had to it unless it is really wanted for the purposes of the trial. You must look and see whether the evidence which it is desired to obtain abroad is really necessary for the purposes of justice. It is not enough to say that possibly it may be of some use on some collateral matter to bolster up a witness or something of that kind. It must have a closer bearing on the issue. Now, what is the issue here? This is an unfortunate partnership quarrel. The plaintiffs are in partnership with the defendant under articles which say that the partnership is to last forty years. The plaintiffs say that the defendant has so misconducted himself as to entitle them to a dissolution before the expiration of the forty years, and they allege amongst other matters misconduct as a ground to induce the court to dissolve the partnership before the expiration of the forty years. They say that he has been guilty of conduct which is discreditable on the part of a wine merchant. They say in paragraph 8 of the statement of claim: "The defendant bribed a person in the employ of Messrs. Pickford & Co., carriers, to inform him of the names and addresses of persons to whom such carriers forwarded wines on behalf of Continental wine merchants, and sent to the plaintiffs lists of the names and addresses of such persons, and of the merchants by whom such wines were supplied to them, for the purpose of their being made use of by the plaintiffs in the course of their journeys on behalf of the firm." The plaintiffs when they received such lists did not know by what means they had been obtained by the defendant. The fact of the said bribery afterwards came to the knowledge of the plaintiffs, and also came to the knowledge of other persons, and injuriously affected the reputation of the firm. They allege that he has been guilty of discreditable conduct as a wine merchant, in having bribed a person in Messrs. Pickford's employ here in England. The plaintiffs ask for a commission to prove that certain Continental wine merchants did make consignments to people in this country through Messrs. Pickford somewhere between 1883 and 1887. Now, suppose they did prove that. I do not say that it may not possibly be corroborated by the person bribed, or something of that kind; but the evidence does not prove the charge a bit, and it has nothing to do with it except possibly to throw discredit on a witness. It is quite new to me to grant a commission for such a purpose as that. Stirling, J., says this: "I think you ought to have a commission for that purpose unless the defendant will make admissions." Now, what sort of admissions is he to make? Admissions that rival Continental merchants had consigned wine through Messrs. Pickford to some people in this country. How can the defendant be in a position to make any admissions if he does not know anything about it? It is a good ground for asking a person to make admissions if those admissions are with regard to something that he knows, or can ascertain; but to ask a person in trade to make admissions as to what rivals in trade have done years ago appears to me to be a mistake. The learned judge took a view with regard to that which I cannot share at all, and I do not think it was a reasonable term to impose upon the defendant, who knows no more about the matter than I do. The defendant cannot make the admissions in reason, and yet unless he does the commission is to go. It appears to me to be far short of what is necessary for the purposes of justice, and I do not believe it is necessary for the purposes of justice. I think the order must be discharged with costs here and below, and the defendant's costs in any event.

(a.) Reported by W. SHALLCROSS GODDARD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

LOPES, L.J.—I am entirely of the same opinion. The analogy that Mr. Jelf sought to draw between evidence obtainable in this country and evidence that is only obtainable by the issue of a commission is altogether fallacious. There is a great deal of evidence, I can quite imagine, that can be easily obtainable, and within reach of this country, that a learned counsel advising on evidence might be of opinion had better be given. To obtain evidence on commission is an entirely different thing. In my opinion a commission to examine witnesses ought not to be permitted to issue very lightly. I think in order to justify the issue of a commission there ought to be a very clear proof that the evidence abroad which is sought to be obtained is material, and material directly to the case in hand; not merely evidence which incidentally might be useful, such as I think the evidence sought to be obtained here. That is not the kind of evidence that ought to be permitted to be obtained on commission. In point of fact the evidence here sought is very much, as was said by my learned brother Lindley in the course of the case, "for the purpose of bolstering up other evidence by incidental evidence." That is not the kind of evidence that ought to be permitted to be obtained on commission. Now the learned judge, in fact, has exercised his discretion with regard to this matter, and we ought not lightly to interfere with it. On the other hand, if we think the discretion has been wrongly exercised, it is our duty to interpose. After thinking the case carefully over, it occurs to me in this way. I firmly believe the learned judge would not have permitted these letters of request to go unless he had thought that the defendant might and ought to make certain admissions which he indicated. If there were certain admissions that the defendant could and ought to have made, I am inclined to think that the judge would be right, and that if the defendant refused to make such admissions the commission ought to go; but to my mind the admissions proposed were admissions that the defendant could not be reasonably asked to make; they were admissions in respect of matters about which, in my opinion, he would know nothing, and if he had known anything about them think what a difficulty he would be placed in. The admissions required him to write to rival tradesmen—wine merchants abroad—asking them what consignments they made to customers in certain years long past. The answer he would receive would be something of this kind: "What business is it of yours?" Whether that was so or not, I am clearly of opinion that these admissions the defendant could not be reasonably asked to make, for the reasons which I have given. I think, therefore, that the learned judge was wrong in permitting these letters of request to go, and that the appeal ought to be allowed, with costs.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Wild & Wild; Goldberg, Langdon, Barrett, & Newall.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, Lopes, and Rigby, L.JJ.) June 11, 12, 1896.

In re TRADE-MARK, "BOVRIL" (a.)

Trade-mark—"Fancy word not in common use"—Removing from register—Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 57), s. 64.

The word "Bovril" is a "fancy word not in common use" within the meaning of section 64 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883, and is properly registered as a trade-mark under that Act; though possibly, as applied to meat extract, &c., it has "reference to the character or quality of the goods" within the meaning of section 10, sub-section 1 (e), of the Act of 1888, and therefore could not now be registered.

Appeal from Kekewich, J.

The word "Bovril" had been registered in 1886 as a new trade-mark for foods and ingredients of food, and a very large business was now being done in a form of meat extract known as "Bovril." One John Rosetree, who was carrying on a trade in similar articles, desired to apply the name "Bovril," as a well-known name for that class of goods, to fluid beef and meat extracts manufactured by him. Rosetree accordingly applied to Kekewich, J., to remove the word "Bovril" from the register of trade-marks.

Kekewich, J., refused the application, and the applicant appealed.

G. S. Bower and W. F. Drew, for the appeal.—"Bovril" is simply a diminutive from "bos, bovis," an ox, and is not "a fancy word not in common use."

They cited In re Van Duzer's Trade-Mark and In re Leaf, Sons, & Co.'s Trade-Mark ("Melrose" and "Electric" cases), 35 W. R. 294, 34 Ch. D. 623; Waterman v. Ayres, 37 W. R. 110, 39 Ch. D. 29; In re Farbenfabriken's Trade-Mark ("Somatose" case), 42 W. R. 488, [1894] 1 Ch. 645; Edwards v. Dennis, 30 Ch. D. 454, 34 W. R. Dig. 197; and In re Holt's Trade-Mark, 44 W. R. 369, [1896] 1 Ch. 711.

Moulton, Q.C., and John Cutler (with them Warmington, Q.C.), for the respondents.—At the date of its registration, "Bovril" had no meaning in the English language; it was a fancy word, and had never been used before at all.

They cited Powell v. Birmingham Vinegar Brewery Co., [1894] A. C. 8, and In re Densham's Trade-Mark, 43 W. R. 515, [1895] 2 Ch. 176.

G. S. Bower, in reply.—The argument that a descriptive word, if it is also a fancy word, is entitled to be on the register, cannot succeed in this court after the Van Duzer and "Somatose" cases.

(a.) Reported by R. C. MACKENZIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

LINDLEY, L.J.—I do not think we need take any time for consideration in this case. The argument for the appellant is a very ingenious one, and extremely creditable to Mr. Bower. He seeks to force us to do that which I think is quite wrong, and to substitute some expressions used by judges in certain cases for the language used in the Act of Parliament; and, having got that far, he seeks to drive us to do that which, I think, would be a gross injustice. When we are asked to do that, of course we are very cautious; we do not do that, if we can help it. What we have got to do here is to consider whether, on the 2nd of November, 1886, Mr. Johnston was entitled to register as a trade-mark for articles of food, in Class 42, the word "Bovril." We have to consider that with reference to the Act of Parliament which was then in force—that is, the Patents, Designs, and Trade-Marks Act, 1883; and, with reference to this point, we have to look at section 64, which says this: [The Lord Justice read the section, and continued:—] This is what we have got to ask ourselves: Was the word "Bovril" on the 2nd of November, 1886, a distinctive fancy word not in common use?

Passing there, and not referring to any of the decisions, can anybody say with truth that "Bovril" was not then a fancy word? I confess I find myself quite unequal to the task; I cannot do it. It is admitted that the word was new, and had never been heard of before. If such a word as that is not to be deemed a fancy word not in common use, it is very difficult to say what is. Mr. Bower says that that view might have prevailed in 1886 or 1887, but that since then the Appeal Court has said what is a fancy word, and nothing can now be held to be a fancy word unless it is obviously non-descriptive of the article to which it is applied. "Bovril," he says, is not obviously non-descriptive; on the contrary it describes or means "ox." Let us, then, look at what this court has said. It has said with reference to the use of common English words—that is, in dealing with the Van Duzer case—in which a newly-coined word was not under consideration, but a common English word was: That won't do; you must have a word obviously non-descriptive. A step further was taken in the "Somatose" case. But that case was on a different Act of Parliament altogether; an Act which substituted the expression "an invented word" for "a fancy word not in common use." I think the substitution is important. So you have the decision in the "Somatose" case, from which I dissented, that "Somatose" is not an "invented word." We did not differ, about more than this; I thought it was an invented word, and the other members of the Court of Appeal thought it was not. But I disregard that case, except for this purpose, to show that that was the ground of the decision. It would be altogether wrong for us to take the Act of 1883 and substitute for "a fancy word not in common use" the phrase, "a non-descriptive word." That is not the language of the Legislature. I agree we must ask whether the word is non-descriptive. To my mind it is, notwithstanding Mr. Bower's very ingenious argument. He makes out, or tries to make out, that "Bovril" is descriptive by taking a bit of the word, the syllable "bov," and then saying that because "bos" means an ox, therefore "bovril" means something about an ox, and is not a fancy word. I do not see the sequitur at all. Does it cease to be a fancy word not in common use because part of it is derived from the Latin word for an ox? Its descriptive character can be got at only by a very ingenious argument, by taking the first syllable by itself. When the appellant's counsel is asked to say what the whole word means, he can give no answer. Of course it is applied to extracted meat, but at the time this word was first formed could anyone say more than that it had some relation or other, or might have some relation or other to the word for an ox? Is that, then, a descriptive word, so as to destroy the real truth of the case, and oblige us to remove it from the register?

I think the test suggested by Mr. Moulton is the right one: whether the word is descriptive or not is eminently and peculiarly a question of fact. I ask myself: Suppose a jury were asked to say whether, on the 2nd of November, 1886, "Bovril" was a fancy word not in common use; and suppose they received a direction from the judge—which, I think, it would be the duty of the judge to give—that what they had to consider was whether the word had been known to ordinary Englishmen before that date, could they, with that direction, reasonably say that it was not a fancy word not in common use? I do not think they could. In my judgment, therefrom, the appeal fails.

LOPES, L.J.—In this case the words we have to deal with are the words "fancy word not in common use," and those words are to be found in the 64th section of the Act of 1883. These are the words of the statute. In determining whether any particular word is a "fancy word" we must look at the statute, and also, of course, at any decisions of the courts with regard to it. But it is the statute we must first look at, and I cannot agree with Mr. Bower when he suggests that if any interpretation has been put by decision upon "fancy word" we must look at that, substituting for those words the interpretation put on them, without reference, or with very little reference, to the statute. The statute is the dominant matter to be considered in determining such a question.

It is material to consider the time when the particular word was placed on the register. This word "Bovril" was placed on the register in 1886. We must consider that time, and not criticize the word by what has happened, or has become known, subsequently. In 1886 the word "Bovril" was clearly a new word coined for the occasion. It can be found in no dictionary; it was not known in any language; and in my opinion it is therefore a word distinguishable from the word "Melrose" in the Van Duzer case, and "Electric" in Leaf, Sons, & Co.'s case, because these were old words, of a well-ascertained and established meaning. But I hold entirely to the definition of a fancy word laid down in the "Melrose" and "Electric" cases—namely, that to be a good fancy word it must be obviously meaningless as applied to the article in question, and fanciful in that application. It is said that "Bovril" indicates a substance made from beef, because the first syllable of that word is "bov," which, it is said, relates to an ox. In my judgment you must look at the whole word, and not at part of it. You must look at the rest of the word in its combination, and that combination may qualify the first syllable so as to make it meaningless and non-descriptive. That is the view which I take of "Bovril," and I cannot think that in 1886 it would have conveyed to the mind of an ordinary Englishman any idea involving any connection with "bos" or "bovis."

Mr. Bower has argued this case with exceptional ability. His strongest case was, I think, the "Somatose" case. But I think this observation is to be made with regard to that case, that every case must be determined according to its particular circumstances; and, moreover, that a word may strike some people as a fancy word, and not other people. The "Somatose" case was under another Act of Parliament, where different words were used. I am bound by that case, of course, though I think if I had been a member of the court which decided it, I should have placed myself beside the learned judge who was in a minority. On the whole, therefore, I come to the conclusion that the appeal ought to be dismissed.

RIGBY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. Shortly, my judgment is founded on this: We have to determine what is a "fancy word not in common use." Now, the word "Bovril" was not in use at all, and therefore we have to deal only with the words "a fancy word." I can only say that I do not know what would be a fancy word if this is not one. Mr. Bower tries to place us in a dilemma by telling us that there are cases which drive us to the conclusion that "Bovril" is not a fancy word, and that this court has committed itself so far that only the House of Lords can set the matter straight. When we look at the Van Duzer case, and I think the same may be said of all the cases, it does not, as Mr. Moulton said, go nearly far enough for the appellant's purpose. In that case there was an attempt to create a secondary meaning of the word "fancy." "Melrose" is obviously not a fancy word; "Electric" is not a fancy word; and I can only read that judgment as saying: "If you show that you have taken an ordinary word and applied it in such a manner that the application is really fanciful, it may for that particular case be a fancy word; but in extending the Act in that way great care must be taken, and therefore if you ask us to extend the Act we must be careful that we do not transgress it." In short, the ordinary word taken must be of such a nature that it is obviously unmeaning, obviously non-descriptive, as applied to the particular goods. I will only say as regards "Bovril," that to an ordinary Englishman—even if the evidence is sufficient to show that the word is, when interpreted, a descriptive word—I cannot imagine that such an idea would ever occur. I cannot better express my meaning that by referring to the "Somatose" case and seeing what the test there was. To bring "Somatose" within section 10, subsection 1 (e), of the Act of 1888, which was the thing attempted there, it had to be shown to be a word having no reference to the character or quality of the goods. I am by no means prepared to say that "Bovril" has any reference to the character or quality. When we know what it means, it appears to me, on the authority of the one decided case which bears on that point, to be at any rate a very plausible argument to say that it has such a reference, though the reference is so wrapped up that an ordinary man might not see it. But in this case we have not to deal with those words. The Act of 1888 was passed because the criterion of "fancy words not in common use" had not turned out satisfactory. Whether the substituted words are satisfactory is another question; but we have now to deal with the words of the earlier Act of 1883, and I think that by no stretch can we hold that this is not "a fancy word not in common use."

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Joseph Davis; C. Urquhart Fisher.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, Lopes, and Rigby, L.JJ.) June 5, 6, 1896.

McKEOWN v. BOUDARD PEVERIL GEAR CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Company—Prospectus—Contract to take shares—Rescission—Non-disclosure of material facts.

A person who has contracted to take shares in a company cannot avoid his contract on the ground that the prospectus did not set forth all the facts which were known to the directors, and which might induce a person to apply or not apply for shares. In order to avoid the contract, a mis-statement or concealment of facts must be of such a character as to make the prospectus as it stands misleading.

Decision of Romer, J. (44 W. R. 664), affirmed.

Appeal from Romer, J. (reported 44 W. R. 664).

The plaintiff in the action claimed rescission of a contract to take shares in the defendant company on the ground of misrepresentation and suppression of material facts in the prospectus issued by the directors of the company.

Romer, J., dismissed the action.

The plaintiff in person appealed.

Neville, Q.C., and Percy Wheeler, for the company, were not called upon.

LINDLEY, L.J.—Having read the prospectus with some care, and having heard the plaintiff's comments, and he has argued his case with great ability, the conclusion at which I have arrived is that if you look at it, not with a view to pick holes in it, but with a view to understand it, it is distinctly not a fraudulent or misleading prospectus. The obvious object of those who issued this prospectus was to induce people to suppose that the Boudard gear was better than others, and faster. The Boudard gear is so described and so alluded to in this prospectus as to lead people to suppose that it is the fastest-going gear known up to the date of the final prospectus, which was sent to this gentleman, and on the faith of which he took his shares on the 15th of October, 1894, and he is quite right in basing his case upon the prospectus which he received, and which is now before us, and on which he has commented. On p. 1 it sets out certain statements in the shape of extracts from papers and so on praising this machine. It afterwards puts before the public the merits, or supposed merits, of this gear, and a great deal that is to be found in this prospectus is mere puffing, and to do the plaintiff justice he does not rest his case on that which everybody can see is only mere puffing. I will now read the passages which are important, or which he asks us to consider important. [His lordship then read those parts of the prospectus referring to record performances on cycles set out in the report in the court below.] If there were nothing else in this prospectus, though it does not contain any direct statement to the effect that these are the best performances known up to date, I think it probably would be inferred by an ordinary reader that, so far as the directors knew, at all events, these were the best performances up to date. The object, of course, was to induce people to believe that this Boudard gear applied to machines made them faster than any others, and in order to do that they set out these performances. But then there is a clause which, as I read it, negatives that entirely. I do not say it was put in for that purpose; but being put in it has the effect of displacing that possible construction of the prospectus. This clause is, to my mind, all important, and says: "Of course the records quoted are by no means final. Such velocity has been, and will be, increased on both old and new gear, and the true merits of the new Boudard system are therefore all the more likely to be clearly seen and appreciated." Now, that gives anybody who reads it attentively sufficient warning not to be misled by the first part, a warning or caution that these records are not the best up to date. I cannot read "such velocity" as a mere statement of a record velocity in general. I do not think that is the object the phrase at all. "Such velocity" refers back to the records quoted, and I cannot understand "such velocity" to mean anything more or less than this, that the speed attained by the Boudard gear cycle had been beaten. Of course it had. They say: "Of course the records quoted are by no means final." It not only says that they will be beaten, but such velocity has been beaten. To say after that that this prospectus is misleading, and that the inference which might be drawn in the absence of that passage to which I have referred can fairly be drawn when that passage is attended to, seems to me to be a hopeless contention. That was the view taken by Romer, J., and I think that is the fair view. Then, if that is the fair view apart from the criticisms to which I have alluded, and to which I will again refer, there is no fault to be found with this prospectus.

(a.) Reported by W. SHALLCROSS GODDARD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Now I pass to the two statements of fact which are said to be false. To my mind, even if they are proved to be so up to the hilt, they do not make this a false or a fraudulent prospectus. Supposing that there are two errors in this list of records, to say that the plaintiff was induced to take shares upon the faith of the truth of those particular records, when all the rest is true, is to ask the court to believe that which no jury would listen to for one moment. One of the two mis-statements of fact is that the fifty miles Polytechnic race by Leitch was a record at that time. It does not say so; but I think that is the fair inference, and now it turns out that somebody had done that course in a less time. That is an instance. As to the other mis-statement of fact, that the Humber gear of 1891, or the Humber cycle of 1891, and the Humber cycle of 1894 were precisely the same, is, to my mind, far too trivial to take notice of it. Now, what is the function or duty of the court in dealing with this prospectus? I do not think it can be better put than it was by Turner, L.J., in a passage in his judgment in Jennings v. Broughton, 5 De G. M. & G. 126, 140, 3 W. R. Dig. 45, which passage was adopted and approved by Sir George Jessel, M.R., in Smith v. Chadwick, 30 W. R. 661, 20 Ch. D. 27, 67. Sir George Jessel said: "I cannot, I think, do better than conclude my judgment with a quotation from a well-known judgment of Turner, L.J., in Jennings v. Broughton, which I think emphatically applies to this case: 'And, finally, I think that although it is the undoubted duty of this court to relieve persons who have been deceived by false representations, it is equally the duty of this court to be careful that, in its anxiety to correct frauds, it does not enable persons who have joined with others in speculations to convert their speculations into certainties at the expense of those with whom they have joined. That, in my opinion, would be the effect of giving the plaintiff the relief which he asks, and I think, therefore, that this bill has been properly dismissed.' That is the result I have come to," said Sir George Jessel; and that is the result to which I have come. I do not consider, and do not think that it can be fairly suggested, that this is a fraudulent or misleading prospectus. There may be one or two trifling errors in it, but to say that those trifling errors are material, and induced this gentleman to take shares, is to say that which to my mind is utterly impossible.

I think it is an honest prospectus, and that this appeal must be dismissed with costs.

LOPES, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I cannot add anything to what has been already said.

RIGBY, L.J.—In this case the plaintiff seeks rescission of a contract to take shares, and consequential relief, on the ground, which would be a good ground if it could be established, that he was misled by the prospectus; in other words, that the prospectus, taken as a whole, misrepresented the true state of facts. I say that not forgetting, of course, that he relies on non-statement and the non-disclosure; because I think the law is this, that if you rely as a ground for the rescission of a contract on the omission of a statement, you must show that the omission of that statement makes what is stated misleading. It is not that the omission of material facts is an independent ground for rescission, but the omission must be of such a nature as to make the statement actually made misleading. In other words, as has often been said before, suppression of the truth may contain a suggestion of falsity—may make what is actually stated reasonably untrue. I think in a case of this kind it is important to consider the impression produced by a prospectus generally, and I do not think that I can better express my view of the case than by saying that on reading through this prospectus it never occurred to me that they were stating that the records made were records up to the date of the issue of the prospectus. The very ingenious argument on which the plaintiff has founded, with great ability, a suggestion of a different construction certainly had not presented itself to my mind; and, reading the prospectus without that minute criticism to which it has now been subjected, I should have come to the conclusion that the framers of the prospectus did intend to say such and such performances were the best known at the time, but they did not mean to say that they have not since been beaten. What was the effect produced upon the mind of the plaintiff? He most candidly says that he had not made an analysis of the prospectus at this time—he had not so dealt with these sentences as to arrive at the conclusion, which after very careful consideration of the prospectus he thinks might have been arrived at; but these conclusions really are conclusions founded to a certain extent upon that minute analysis which he submitted to the learned judge in the course of the evidence he gave, and with regard to which the learned judge was not satisfied that he entertained that belief at the time he first read the prospectus. I could not overrule a learned judge who said with regard to the evidence of the witness what he says. I do not feel disposed in any way to differ from him, and I say that such a reading of this prospectus as an ordinary reasonable man would have given to it, not a man looking into minute points, would not lead him to suppose that there was a representation that the different performances remained unsurpassed. That, I think, is a clear answer, because I take the same view that the Lord Justice has taken with regard to the inaccuracies, as to the records of the five performances referred to in the prospectus, that it would be unreasonable to suppose, and no jury would believe, that those inaccuracies induced the plaintiff to enter into this contract.

I am of opinion that the learned judge's decision was right, and that the appeal ought to be dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Woodcock, Ryland, & Parker, for Gaunt & Lingard, Manchester.

Solicitor for the defendants, John B. Purchase.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, Lopes, and Rigby, L.JJ.) June 4, 5, 1896.

In re MACDUFF.
MACDUFF v. MACDUFF. (a.)

Will—Construction — Charity—"Philanthropic" purpose—Bequest for "purposes charitable, philanthropic, or . . ."—Validity.

A testator having bequeathed a sum of money for "some one or more purposes charitable, philanthropic, or . . ."

Held, that the gift was to be read as for "purposes charitable or philanthropic"; but that the word "philanthropic" was wide enough to include purposes not "charitable" in the technical sense; and that, therefore, the gift failed, as being too indefinite.

Decision of Stirling, J., 44 W. R. 344, affirmed.

Appeal by the Attorney-General from a decision of Stirling, J. (reported 44 W. R. 344, where the facts are sufficiently stated).

Sir R. E. Webster, A.G., and Ingle Joyce, for the appeal, used the same arguments as in the court below, and also relied upon the following authorities: In re White, White v. White, 41 W. R. 683, [1893] 2 Ch. 41; Cocks v. Manners, 19 W. R. 1055, L. R. 12 Eq. 574; Dolan v. Macdermot, 17 W. R. 3, L. R. 3 Ch. App. 676; Commissioners of Income Tax v. Pemsel, [1891] A. C. 531, 583; Whicker v. Hume, 6 W. R. 813, 7 H. L. Cas. 124; Browne v. Yeall, 7 Ves. 50*n*, cited 10 Ves. 539; Jones v. Williams, Ambl. 651; Trustees of the British Museum v. White, 2 Sim. & St. 594; and Nightingale v. Goulburn, 5 Ha. 484, 2 Ph. 594. [RIGBY, L.J., referred to Kendall v. Granger, 5 Beav. 300, and LOPES, L.J., to In re Foveaux, Cross v. London Anti-Vivisection Society, 43 W. R. 661, [1895] 2 Ch. 501.]

Hadley, for the plaintiff, Miss Annie S. Macduff, cited the following additional authorities: In re Nottage, Jones v. Palmer, 44 W. R. 22, [1895] 2 Ch. 649; Nash v. Morley, 5 Beav. 177; In re Jarman's Estate, Leavers v. Clayton, 26 W. R. 907, 8 Ch. D. 584; Goodman v. Mayor of Saltash, 31 W. R. 293, 7 App. Cas. 633; and In re Wall, Pomeroy v. Willway, 37 W. R. 779, 42 Ch. D. 510.

Sir R. E. Webster, A.G., in reply, referred to In re Douglas, Obert v. Barrow, 35 W. R. 740, 35 Ch. D. 472; Mayor of Wrexham v. Tamplin, 21 W. R. 768; and Tudor on Charitable Trusts, 3rd ed., pp. 159, 160.

LINDLEY, L.J.—I do not think we shall be any the better off by considering our judgment in this case. All of us have thought over it since the case was first opened, and the conclusion we have arrived at is that the judgment of Stirling, J., is right. The case is a difficult one, and turns on the construction of the testator's will. [The lord justice read the material parts of the documents admitted to probate, and continued:—] Now, the question we have to consider is, What is the effect of those clauses in a will? On the one hand it is said that, notwithstanding the generality of this language, the sum of £10,000 is appropriated for general charitable purposes, and if so of course a scheme must be directed. On the other hand it is said—and the learned judge has taken that view—that the language is too general, too uncertain, too vague to amount to a charitable bequest and disposition of the sum of £10,000, and that the gift therefore fails. Now, without going through the cases which have been decided on this subject, it appears to me that the first point to consider is this, What is the effect of the language used by the testator? We have here a will which contains the expression, "for some one or more purposes, charitable, philanthropic, or . . ." At first I was inclined to think that that blank made the gift too indefinite, but on reconsidering that question, and on observing a similar blank in the will in In re White, White v. White, I have come to the conclusion that the learned judge was right on that point, and that the true construction is that the £10,000 is to be appropriated and allocated for some purposes, charitable or philanthropic. That gets over the first difficulty. I am not inclined to dissent from the view taken by the learned judge; on the contrary, I think it is right, having regard to the authorities and especially to the blank in the will in White v. White.

That difficulty being got over, the question is, What is the meaning of this gift? The first point to observe is that there is nothing definite here at all. It is all indefinite; not a gift to some specific institution—there is not a context of that kind. There is no context except this, that the £10,000 is to be appropriated or allocated to some one or more purposes, charitable or philanthropic, within the additional clause that the testator is unable to tie himself down to any specific scheme. Now, in order to hold such a gift to be valid you must get at something sufficiently definite to guide the court as to the kind of trust it is to execute, and the kind of trust the court will in such a case execute must be of the kind technically called a charitable trust. I am bound to say that having looked at the authorities and attended to the argument, I cannot form any definite idea of what the testator meant. To show that that is the right principle I may refer to the case of Morice v. The Bishop of Durham, 10 Ves. 522, which came first before Sir William Grant, and came again before Lord Eldon, whose judgment is most important in all questions of charity. Lord Eldon incidentally remarks, what is unquestionably true, that this court has taken strong liberties upon the subject of charity. But, notwithstanding that, there are certain principles which have to be observed. At p. 539 of that case we shall find Lord Eldon saying this: "As it is a maxim that the execution of a trust shall be under the control of the court, it must be of such a nature that it can be under that control; so that the administration of it can be reviewed by the court, . . . a trust, therefore, which in case of maladministration could be reformed, and due administration directed; and then, unless the subject and the objects can be ascertained, upon principles familiar in other cases it must be decided that the court can neither reform maladministration nor direct a due administration." I may also refer to the cases of James v. Allen, 3 Mer. 17, and Ellis v. Selby, 1 My. & Cr. 286. Therefore, when we are dealing with general words, we must look at the will and inquire whether there is such a general indication of trusts which the court is called upon to execute, that the court can see what it is to execute.

That brings us to this question about the meaning of the words "charitable or philanthropic." "Charitable," I suppose, is used in the popular sense. I do not suppose for a moment that the testator intended to use the word in the very wide and indefinite sense in which it is used in the courts of equity. What, then, is the meaning of "philanthropic"? Obviously, I think it means something distinct from "charitable." What exactly he does mean by philanthropic is not clear at all. I cannot put any definite meaning on that word. All that I can say is that a "philanthropic purpose" must be a purpose which indicates goodwill to mankind in general.

(a.) Reported by R. C. MACKENZIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Here arises a difficulty which the Attorney-General availed himself of with great skill. He says, What philanthiopic purpose is there which is not charitable? The word "philanthropic" is of such a vague character that it is extremely difficult to say. But I think I can suggest indications of goodwill to rich men, as distinguished from poor men—not wide, loose indications of goodwill towards mankind at large—which would not be charitable. I am aware that a trust may be charitable, though it benefits the rich as well as the poor, but I doubt very much whether, if it excluded the poor, it could be held to be charitable, though even in that case it might be philanthropic. I do not know with anything like certainty what is meant by the word "charitable" in this will, and I do not know at all what is meant by "philanthropic." It follows that the trustees might apply this £10,000 to purposes which might or might not be charitable in the technical sense. If that be so, this gift cannot be treated as a charitable bequest. Reliance is placed upon the judgment of Lord Macnaghten in Commissioners of Income Tax v. Pemsel. When we look at that judgment it is plain what Lord Macnaghten meant. He took the classification of charities from the argument of Sir Samuel Romilly in Morice v. The Bishop of Durham. The passage in Lord Macnaghten's judgment runs thus: "Charity in its legal sense comprises four principal divisions: trusts for the relief of poverty; trusts for the advancement of education; trusts for the advancement of religion; and trusts for other purposes beneficial to the community, not falling under any of the preceding heads." Now, Sir S. Romilly did not mean to say, and I am quite certain Lord Macnaghten did not mean to say, that everything which was an object of public utility must necessarily be a charity. Some may be, and some may not. That is the true explanation of Kendall v. Granger, where the language of the gift was that the property was to be "applied for the relief of domestic distress, assisting indigent but deserving individuals, or encouraging undertakings of general utility," and that was held not to be a valid charitable bequest. Lord Langdale, a great authority on such questions, came to the conclusion that that was not necessarily a charity, and I am not aware that that decision has ever been overruled. Now, what Lord Macnaghten said was simply this: he said that charity in its legal sense comprises four principal divisions. No doubt in dealing with the fourth head he leaves out those somewhat significant words "which is the most difficult"; words which show that Sir S. Romilly saw, as I have no doubt Lord Macnaghten also saw, that there might be cases of trusts for purposes beneficial to the community which yet were not charitable trusts. After all, we must fall back on the statute of Elizabeth (43 Eliz., c. 4), and must have regard, as Lord Eldon says, to the spirit of that Act. This court has, as I have said, taken great liberties with charities, but the number of such liberties is always restricted by falling back, or professing to fall back, on the statute of Elizabeth. Can we find in this will any direction that the £10,000 is to be applied only to uses which this court considers charitable? My answer is, No. I think the learned judge was perfectly right, and that the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

LOPES, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. [His lordship read the gift, and proceeded:—] I read those words in this way: "I will from my estate the sum of £10,000 to be appropriated and allocated for some one or more purposes charitable or philanthropic or . . ."; and I think in all probability the words contemplated would be "or some other purpose to be indicated by me hereafter in any codicil to this will." I think that was the view taken by Stirling, J., and with that view I entirely agree. Now, no doubt very great liberties have been taken with the statute, as has been said by Lindley, L.J., and a sense was attributed to charity very much larger than was probably ever intended. There are numberless decisions on that point. But the special difficulty in this case arises from the use of the word "philanthropic"; a word the meaning of which is not dealt with in any of the previous decisions. The Attorney-General contends that "philanthropic" is synonymous with "charitable." I cannot adopt that view. The language is disjunctive; there is a word "or" between "philanthropic" and "charitable." I cannot help thinking that the testator intended to draw a distinction between "charitable" and "philanthropic." If it had stopped with the word "charitable," I presume it would have been a good gift. I suppose the principle applicable to this case is not and cannot be in dispute. I adopt the words of Sir Wm. Grant, M.R., in James v. Allen: "If the property might, consistently with the will, be applied to other than strictly charitable purposes, the trust is too indefinite for the court to execute." Now, looking at those words, I ask myself whether or not the property might consistently with the will, having regard to the word "philanthropic," be applied to purposes other than strictly charitable purposes; and I feel compelled to answer that question in the affirmative. It has been said that no object can be suggested which would come within the word "philanthropic" and which is not charitable. If that were so the argument for the Attorney-General would be maintained; but that is not the view I am inclined to adopt. I think I can suggest many objects which would come within the word "philanthropic" and yet would not be charitable, and therefore the trustees would be entitled to apply the money to purposes which might not be charitable. I will not again allude to the instances which I mentioned during the argument — recreation grounds and grounds devoted to sport, not for the benefit of the poorer classes only, but generally for rich and poor alike; or a gift, for instance, to landowners of agricultural land who have suffered from agricultural depression and whose incomes have been reduced below £300 a year. It appears to me that that is an object which would be "philanthropic," but which would not be charitable.

I come, therefore, to the conclusion that the words are too wide and too indefinite to support the gift. I agree with the judgment delivered by Stirling, J.

RIGBY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. With reference to the blank in the will I only say that I am inclined to think the proper way of looking at it is this: "Purposes charitable, philanthropic, or . . . " means "charitable or philanthropic purposes." It must be taken that the testator has deliberately determined not to fill up that blank, and left the court to deal with the construction of the instrument as it is found. I think, then, that this is a gift for charitable or philanthropic purposes. The cases with regard to charities are innumerable, but in the cases on charities, as in all other cases, precedents are useful only so far as they enable you to educe a principle. No previous will can properly be treated as a precedent for construing another will expressed in different language; and no decisions on the precise terms of a former will can, as a general rule, be of the least service in guiding the court as to the construction of other words. Unless you can get a principle from the cases which is applicable generally to other cases, it is useless to cite earlier decisions. Now, what principle do you find really applicable to the whole class of cases? First of all, a bequest must be sufficiently certain to enable the old Court of Chancery, or the High Court of Justice, and this court, which have succeeded to its powers, to superintend the trusts created according to its terms. So far we have nothing specially to do with charity, for the same rule applies to all trusts. All trusts must be sufficiently definite to enable the court to draw a a line and say: "This is within and that is outside the line." Charitable trusts differ in this respect only from other trusts, that when you get the idea of charity properly expressed in a will you have a standard to go by—one adopted for centuries—that is to say, the standard established by the preamble to the statute of Elizabeth which deals with certain things specifically as instances of existing charities, from which by analogy you can deduce for yourself what other things are charities. But before you can apply that standard at all you must find, sufficiently expressed in the will you are construing, the idea of charity, and it will not do if there is any alternative allowed to the trustees as to whether or not they shall apply the property devised to them to charitable purposes. Directly there is an alternative a reference to the statute is of no service, and the rule comes in that this is a gift too indefinite for the court to give effect to it.

Now then, what is the present case? A gift for "charitable or philanthropic purposes." I am bound to say I do not think it is very different from a gift for philanthropic purposes simply. There may be an argument that, being joined with "charitable," "philanthropic purposes" must mean purposes which are charitable also. But there is another way of looking at it—that, as it is distinguished from "charitable," "philanthropic" should be construed to mean those purposes which are not charitable. I think the one argument may be set off against the other; and very little assistance can be got from the fact that there is here the word "charitable" along with the word "philanthropic." I am quite sure that no court has yet defined that word, because it has never come before any court. Suppose we try now to define it. I am unable to do so; at any rate, in any sense which would show that the definition meant the same thing as "charitable." I do not wish to admit any further process of illustration, but I am inclined to think that a very general illustration may be, that of services to the community, and I can suppose a case of a person saying in his will, "I know that the ordinary objects of charity are such and such; but I regard the position of the well-to-do classes of the metropolis as one also requiring consideration, and I leave my residue to trustees for their benefit," that would be a gift which aimed at advancing the happiness and the position in life of those who are not objects of charity, but who may be made happier and in some sense better than they now are, and might be the outcome of a very weighty desire to improve the position of a large class of persons. It would no doubt be "philanthropic"; but I am pretty certain it would not be "charitable." So we get to the conclusion that "philanthropic" may include not only cases of a totally exceptional character, but cases of a very wide class, which in numerous instances would be within the real popular meaning of the word "philanthropic," and yet would have nothing to do with charity.

I do not propose to enter into any general examination of the authorities; but I would refer to one or two of them, showing that the matter has come under the consideration of learned judges, and that the decisions have been in accordance with what I conceive is the principle applicable to such cases. In Kendall v. Granger the gift was for purposes of general utility, and Lord Langdale, a great authority on cases of this kind, thought that was not sufficiently definite to be enforced. His view was that there were or might be purposes of general utility which were not charitable purposes. I see no reason to doubt that, and I do not know that any case has ever occurred in which that was doubted. Take the case of Brown v. Yeall, which Mr. Hadley very properly referred us to. Notwithstanding the doubts which have been thrown on the construction of that particular will, that appears to be a case in which the question, as considered by Lord Thurlow, is this: Whether a gift for publishing books for promoting the happiness of mankind was sufficiently definite? and I consider that Lord Thurlow, as explained by Lord Eldon in Morice v. The Bishop of Durham, came to the conclusion that a gift of this kind for the promotion of the happiness of mankind was not sufficiently definite to be capable of being administered by the court as a charitable gift. That is what I understand to be the view taken by Lord Eldon. He said that he doubted, not whether the principle laid down by Lord Thurlow was correct, but whether Lord Thurlow was right in deciding the case on the principle he did. But there are grounds for saying that the bequest Lord Thurlow was dealing with was a more limited one than he supposed it to be. I am inclined to think that Lord Eldon's view is preferable to Lord Thurlow's. But what does that matter? It was upon the question whether "the happiness of mankind" was sufficiently definite, that Lord Thurlow decided the case, and I do not understand that, if that had been the only question, either Lord Eldon or Sir William Grant would have differed.

I think Mr. Hadley is right in so far as the cases brought before us are concerned. A gift to promote the happiness of mankind more nearly resembles a gift for philanthropic purposes than does the gift in any of the other cases cited. I may also refer to the case of Whicker v. Hume. I say nothing about the wide extent of the gift in that case, which was for the advancement of education and learning. The objection taken by the counsel who were impeaching the validity of the gift, was that though education is no doubt a charitable purpose within the statute, "learning" is not; that is to say, it was argued that a gift for the promotion of abstract learning would not be a charitable gift. That argument was dealt with by Lord Chelmsford and Lord Cranworth, who came to the conclusion that, reading learning as you found it in that will in connection with "education," you must understand it to mean the advancement of learning as equivalent to teaching, and therefore as a certain branch of education, and I rather gather from the judgments, and especially from the pains they took to draw out and elucidate the meaning of the word "learning," that if they could not have put that meaning on the word, they would have doubted whether a gift for the advancement of learning could have been a charitable bequest. That case appears to me to be in favour of the view taken by Lord Langdale, that a gift for purposes of general utility is not sufficiently definite. Then we come to the argument arising from the judgment of Lord Macnaghten in Commissioners of Income Tax v. Pemsel. What Lord Macnaghten says seems to me altogether logical. He says that cases of charity may be divided into four classes, and one class is gifts for the benefit of the community. But it does not follow that all gifts for the benefit of the community are charitable. You at least come to this. There is one miscellaneous set of charities which can be classed on that principle. But to deduce from that all gifts for the benefit of the community are charitable gifts is just about as logical as the supposition that, because an insurance society divides persons insured with it into men, women, and children, every man, every woman, and every child is insured with that society.

In In re White the court understood the other authorities to say that "religious" is equivalent to "charitable"; at least, that if it was not a synonym in the sense that there could be no charities that are not religious, it would come to this: that a religious society is a charity, and that a gift to a particular religious society must be held to be a gift to a charity. That creates no difficulty at all, because when you say—and so far as I know, and for the purposes of this case I think it is true—that gifts to the poor, and gifts for education, are charitable because they are for the benefit of the community, that does not mean that every conceivable gift which you can prove to be for the general benefit under these general words is necessarily a charity. It means that gifts for the general benefit of the community is one of the heads or categories under which charities may be divided. No one would suggest that "education" includes the education of a pickpocket to fit him for his calling. The gift, if it is to be supported as charitable, must be for the promotion of education of a particular kind, and the same remark applies to a gift to a religious society. You may say that "religious" cannot be said to be included under "charitable," because there may be a religious society which does not attempt to promote religion. The particular convent to which a gift was made in Cocks v. Manners was a society of religious people who abstained even from good works as regards the outside public. It was held that that might have been a charity so far as the object of the gift to a religious society was concerned, but that under the peculiar circumstances of the case it was only a gift to the particular men and women who happened at the moment to be members of that society. In view of the law as established by the earlier cases, I do not think Lord Macnaghten in his classification of charities lays down any rule of law whatsoever; and, that being so, I think the cases which have been referred to show that you must have words sufficiently definite to enable the court to administer the trust, and that, when the definition does not sufficiently show that what is meant is a charitable trust, according to the standard supplied by the statute of Elizabeth, the gift must fail. To my mind the word "philanthropic" is too wide altogether, and the judgment of Stirling, J., must be affirmed.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, Hare & Co.; Thomas Webster.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. North, J. } Nov. 3.

PROUT v. COCK. (a.)

Mortgage—Right to redeem—Remainderman.

A widow to whom a testator devised the equity of redemption in certain hereditaments durante minore ætate of her two sons, mortgaged her interest under the will to the person to whom the testator had previously mortgaged the hereditaments.

Held, that, after the death of the widow, the sons were not entitled to redeem the mortgage effected by the testator until they both attained the age of twenty-one, unless they obtained the mortgagee's consent as owner of the widow's limited interest.

Action for redemption.

By an indenture dated the 6th of July, 1878, Abraham Prout mortgaged to the defendant certain houses and land at Perramporth, Cornwall, to secure the repayment of £550 together with interest at the rate of 5 per cent.

Abraham Prout made his will, dated the 30th of May, 1882, in the following terms: "I desire that all my property in Perramporth, Cornwall, consisting of four houses and an acre and three quarters of land, be made over to my wife, Elizabeth Prout, and two children, Abraham and Samuel John Prout. The property is on no account to be sold. A mortgage of £550 is on the said property. I desire that during my children's minority my wife should receive all income that may accrue from the property, and that when they are all of age the property should be equally divided between my wife and children, whichever of them may be living at that time. I desire that my wife's sister should live with my wife, and in the event of my wife's death before my children become of age, that she shall have the care of them."

The testator died on the 30th of May, 1882.

By an indenture dated the 1st of May, 1889, Elizabeth Prout mortgaged all her interest under the will to the defendant to secure the repayment of a sum of £250 and interest.

In December, 1893, the defendant entered into possession, and on the 28th of February, 1895, Elizabeth Prout died intestate.

This action was commenced on the 27th of May, 1895, by the testator's infant children by a next friend.

Letters of administration to Elizabeth Prout's estate had not been taken out, and North, J., said it was clear that he could not make any order in the absence of the legal personal representative of the wife. The income was given to her during the children's minority. On the construction of the will, the direction was that she should receive the whole income. Laxton v. Eldle, 19 Beav. 2 W. R. 584, 321, was a very similar case. The action was directed to stand over generally, with liberty to amend.

Letters of administration to the estate of Elizabeth Prout were taken out, and the administrator was joined as a defendant. The statement of claim as amended, asked for redemption of the mortgage of the 6th of July, 1878, or in the alternative, for the redemption of the two mortgages.

Ryland, for the plaintiffs.

Dauney, for the defendant mortgagee.—The children have no right to redeem. The tenant for life of an equity of redemption has the first right to redeem, and during the continuance of his estate the remaindermen can only redeem with his consent. Ravald v. Russell, Younge 9, Fisher on Mortgages, 4th ed., p. 708; Raffety v. King, 1 Keen 601; Riley v. Croydon, 13 W. R. 223, 2 Dr. & Sm. 293; Hyde v. Dallaway, 2 Hare 528. As the mortgagee has acquired the estate of the widow durante minore ætate, while that mortgage subsists the remaindermen cannot redeem the first mortgage.

Ryland replied.

NORTH, J., was of opinion that Ravald v. Russell applied, and held that the plaintiffs were not entitled during the minority of either of them to redeem the testator's mortgage without the consent of the mortgagee as owner of the widow's limited interest.

(a.) Reported by G. B. HAMILTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Solicitors, G. K. Wright, for E. L. Carlyon, Truro; Street, Poynder, & Whatley, for Hearle, Cock, & Parkin, Truro.

Q. B. Div. (Collins, J.) June 15, 26, 1896.

ELGOOD v. HARRIS AND ANOTHER. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Set-off—Marine insurance—Bankruptcy of underwriter—Insurance brokers—Claim by trustee against brokers for salvage—Right of brokers to set off unpaid losses.

An underwriter carried on an underwriting business with insurance brokers, who effected policies of marine insurance with the underwriter in their own names and for principals, to whom they guaranted the solvency of the underwriter. The underwriter became bankrupt, and at the date of his bankruptcy he owed a balance to the brokers in respect of losses upon policies. After the bankruptcy the brokers received various sums by way of salvage upon losses which had been settled with the brokers by the underwriter before his bankruptcy. The trustee in the bankruptcy claimed from the brokers the sums so received as salvage, but the brokers claimed to set off against the salvage the larger sum due to them from the bankrupt for the unpaid losses.

Held, that the brokers were not entitled to set off their unpaid losses against the sums received by them as salvage after the bankruptcy.

Action tried before Collins, J., in the Commercial Court.

The plaintiff was the assignee of the trustee in the bankruptcy of an underwriter, and the defendants were insurance brokers, who carried on an underwriting business in the usual manner with the underwriter before his bankruptcy. The defendants effected from time to time policies of marine insurance with the underwriter as well in their own names as for their principals, to whom they guaranteed the solvency of the underwriter, and there had been mutual credits, mutual debits, or other mutual dealings between the parties on these underwriting transactions, the underwriter debiting the brokers with the premiums and crediting them with the losses as they occurred under the policies.

At the date of the bankruptcy there was a balance due from the underwriter to the defendants for unpaid losses on policies, and after the bankruptcy the defendants received various sums by way of salvage upon losses which had been settled and paid by the underwriter in account before the bankruptcy.

The plaintiff claimed the sum of £90 4s. 9d. as being due to the trustee in the bankruptcy of the underwriter in respect of additional premiums due from the defendants after the bankruptcy on policies effected by them with the bankrupt before the bankruptcy and in respect of sums received by the defendants after the bankruptcy by way of salvage upon losses which had been settled before the bankruptcy.

The defendants claimed to set off against this claim of the trustee the unpaid losses due to them from the bankrupt. It was not disputed for the plaintiff that the brokers were entitled to this set-off as against the additional premiums, but it was contended that the brokers were not entitled to set off their unpaid losses against the sums so received by way of salvage.

Joseph Walton, Q.C., and Manisty, for the plaintiff.

Herbert Reed, Q.C., and Reginald Brown, for the defendants.

(a) Reported by Sir SHERSTON BAKER, Bart., Barrister-at-Law.

The following cases were referred to: Ex parte Rhodes, 15 Ves. 539; Ex parte Young, 27 W. R. 942; Young v. Bank of Bengal, 1 Moo. P. C. 150; Parker v. Smith, 16 East 382; Naoroji v. Chartered Bank of India, 16 W. R. 791, L. R. 3 C. P. 444; In re Asphaltic Wood Pavement Co., 33 W. R. 513, 30 Ch. D. 216; Booth v. Hutchinson, 21 W. R. 116, L. R. 15 Eq. 30.

The arguments are sufficiently indicated in the judgment.

Cur. adv. vult.

June 26.—COLLINS, J., read the following judgment:—This is a claim by a person who has taken an assignment from the trustee of a bankrupt underwriter for additional premiums due from the defendants, who are insurance brokers, upon policies effected by them with the bankrupt, and for moneys received by them by way of salvage upon losses settled with the underwriter before the bankruptcy. The bankrupt was a member of Lloyd's, and business was done between him and the defendants in the ordinary manner, which is described in Arnould on Marine Insurance, Part I., chap. 4. The defendants seek to set off against this claim a much larger sum due to them for losses on other policies effected by them as well in their own names as for their principals, to whom they guaranteed the solvency of the underwriter. It was admitted by the plaintiff that the defendants, having effected the policies in their own names, and having guaranteed the solvency of the underwriter, were entitled to set off unpaid losses against any claim upon them based on a credit given by the bankrupt to them at the date of the bankruptcy; and they did not dispute that the claim for additional premiums, which became payable after the bankruptcy under policies effected before the bankruptcy, was based on such credit, and was therefore met by the set-off. The plaintiff contended, however, that the claim for salvage stood upon a different footing, and was, in effect, a mere demand by the trustee to get in the property of the bankrupt which had come to the hands of the defendants after the bankruptcy, a right which arose for the trustee as soon as, and not before, such property came into the hands of the defendants, and was therefore in no sense based upon a credit given by the bankrupt, and consequently could not be met by a set-off of sums due from the bankrupt in respect of losses underwritten by him, whether they accrued before or after the bankruptcy. Such losses, if occurring before the bankruptcy, would, at the date of the bankruptcy, be a debt presently payable by the underwriter to the defendants; if occurring after the bankruptcy, would found a credit given by the defendants to the bankrupt; that the debt or credits, therefore, were not mutual, the claim of the plaintiff being one that first accrued to the trustee as assignee of the bankrupt's estate, the claim of the defendant being based on a credit given to the bankrupt himself.

The point is one of some nicety, and involves an analysis of the exact position of the parties towards each other at the date of the bankruptcy. At that date the losses on all the policies in respect of which salvage is claimed had been paid in account as between the underwriter and the defendants. On the other hand, there were several policies underwritten by the bankrupt, upon which he was liable to make good losses. The effect of payment by the underwriter to the defendants, who as between them and the underwriter are claiming rights to set off, as being themselves the persons insured, was as against them to vest in the underwriter an equitable right to all property or interest which they might have in the thing insured. Therefore, at the date of the bankruptcy the underwriter was the owner in equity, subject perhaps to disclaimer by him of whatever existed of the thing insured, and the defendants became trustees for him of anything which they might receive in respect thereof in diminution of the loss. See per Lord Blackburn in Burnand v. Rodocanachi, 31 W. R., at pp. 66-7, 7 App. Cas., at p. 339; Phillips on Insurance, ss. 1723 et seq.

I think it is immaterial for this purpose whether his right was legal or equitable. He had by payment become the true owner of the subject matter insured, and of anything that might be received by the assurred in respect of it, as soon as it came into existence. When, therefore, sums were received by the defendants by way of salvage, those sums became part of the bankrupt's estate which his trustee was entitled to get in; but the defendants were under no contract to enforce payment of such sums for the benefit of the bankrupt. They had simply divested themselves of all interest in or rights in respect of the subject-matter, except as trustees for the bankrupt. As such trustees they could be called upon to hand over anything which came to their hands in diminution of the loss; but at the date of the bankruptcy no debt existed, and no credit was given to them by the bankrupt in respect thereof, nor could their obligation as trustees be said, I think, to be a money claim arising out of a mutual dealing, as described by Lord Esher, M.R., in Eberle's Hotels and Restaurant Co. v. Jonas, 35 W. R., at p. 468, 18 Q. B. D., at p. 465. Suppose the defendants had executed a deed transferring the wreck to the underwriter, and that after his bankruptcy some part of the wreck had come into the possession of the defendants, would not this have been the subject of a claim arising for the trustee when, and not before, the defendants got possession. Would it make any difference that the thing saved and held by them was money, so that it could be sued for as money had and received? Clearly not. It would still be part of the bankrupt's estate which had found its way into the hands of the defendants after the bankruptcy, and in respect of which no debt or credit had ever existed between the defendants and the bankrupt. Is there, then, any difference in the position of the parties, because the right of the trustee in bankruptcy is not based upon a legal assignment, but upon an equity arising out of the contract of indemnity, based on the fact that a complete indemnity had been paid? I cannot think that the obligation to admit this equity, which arose by operation of law when the defendants received such payment, could be deemed in any sense a credit given by the bankrupt to them, or a money claim existing for him in respect of mutual dealings with them. In analyzing the relation of the underwriter to the defendants at the date of the bankruptcy for the purpose of determining the question of set-off, I carefully exclude considerations based on the fact that the defendants were also agents for the underwriter, who, had he not have become bankrupt, might in ordinary course have received on his behalf salvage in the form of money compensation. Such agency, so far as it existed, was revoked by the bankruptcy: See Parker v. Smith, 16 East 382; Minett v. Forrester, 4 Taunt. 541; and no claim of mutual credit or mutual dealing based on its expected continuance can be supported. I have also excluded all consideration of the rights of the defendants as between them and their clients for whom the insurances were in fact effected. These latter may or may not have been bound by the custom of Lloyd's: See Batt v. Irving, 1 B. & Ad. 605, and Stewart v. Aberdein, 4 M. & W. 211; but this case is to be considered entirely apart from them, upon the basis upon which the defendants have placed it, namely, that of persons insured who have a claim as such to be paid losses, but who, in respect of other losses, have received indemnity. Such being my view of the law, my judgment must be for the plaintiff for £37 6s. 10d., which was the figure agreed between the parties if the plaintiff was entitled to succeed.

Judgment for plaintiff, with costs on High Court scale.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Elgood & Moyle.

Solicitors for the defendants, Turner, Son, & Foley.

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. } Nov. 9, 26.
Probate (Jeune, P.) }

In the Goods of JAMES SPRATT. (a.)

Probate—Will—Condition.

A soldier, whilst on active military service in New Zealand in 1864, made a will in the form of a holograph letter addressed from the camp to his sister, in the following terms: "This is the most important part of my letter. If we remain here taking Pahs for some time, the chances are in favour of more of us being killed, and, as I may not have another opportunity of saying what I wish to be done with any little money I may possess in case of an accident, I wish to make everything I possess over to you. In the first place, there is money at Cox's, over £100 in New South Wales Bank, New Zealand. Keep this till I ask you for it.—Your affectionate brother, J. S.

The testator died in 1896.

The court held the will not conditional, and admitted it to probate.

Where there is an ambiguity as to whether a will is contingent or not, the whole language and the surrounding circumstances must be considered. There are two criteria specially useful for determining the problem—first, whether the nature of the disposition made appears to have relation to the time or circumstances of the contingency; and, secondly, whether the period of danger which is apprehended is or is not coincident with the period of contingency.

Motion for a grant of letters of administration, with the will annexed, of the goods of James Spratt, who died on the 10th day of July, 1896, to a sister of the deceased.

The will was a holograph letter written by the deceased on the 4th of May, 1864, he then being an officer in her Majesty's army on active service in New Zealand, and was addressed by endorsement to "Miss Robina Spratt, from her brother James Spratt, captain 68th Light Infantry." The letter was in the following terms: "Camp Te Pa Pa, Tarranga, 4th May, 1864. My dear Robe,—This is the most important part of my letter. If we remain here taking Pahs for some time to come the chances are in favour of more of us being killed, and as I may not have another opportunity of saying what I wish to be done with any little money I may possess in case of an accident, I wish to make everything I possess over to you. In the first place there is money at Cox's, over £100 in New South Wales Bank, New Zealand. Keep this until I ask you for it.—Your affectionate brother, J. SPRATT."

The deceased left three brothers and one sister (the appellant), and a nephew and niece, children of a deceased sister.

(a.) Reported by J. GERARD LAING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Inderwick, Q.C., and Bargrave Deane, in support of the motion.

Sir Walter Phillimore and Barnard, for all the other next of kin, agreed that the only question was whether the will was conditional. They submitted that it was, referring, in addition to the cases cited in the judgment, to Williams on Executors, 9th ed., at pp. 157, 158.

Cur. adv. vult.

Nov. 26.—JEUNE, P., delivered the following written judgment: The testamentary paper in this case consists of a holograph letter written by an officer in her Majesty's army on the 4th of May, 1864, while on active service in New Zealand. It is clearly, therefore, a valid will under the 11th section of the Wills Act. The only question is whether it is, on the true construction of its provisions, to be regarded as conditional. [His lordship read the will, and continued:]

The testator died on the 10th of July, 1896; of course long after the termination of the New Zealand War. In cases of the character of the present, the difficulty which arises in determining the intention of the testator as expressed in his will is that an ambiguity in some cases is caused by the use of language which renders it doubtful whether the testator meant to refer to a possible event as his reason for making a will, or as limiting the operation of the will made. If the will is clearly expressed to take effect only on the happening, or not happening, of a certain event, whatever its nature, cadit quæstio it is conditional. If the testator says in effect—that he is led to make his will by reason of the uncertainty of life in general, or for some special reason cadit quæstio, it is not conditional. But if it be not clear whether the words used import a reason for making a will or impress a contingent character on it, the whole language of the document, and also the surrounding circumstances, must be considered. In such case there are two criteria which are especially useful for determining the problem: First, whether the nature of the disposition made appears to have relation to the time, or circumstances, of the contingency; and secondly, whether the period of danger which is apprehended is, or is not, coincident with the period of contingency. The best illustrations of what I wish to convey are, I think, to be found in the various decided cases; and as they have not in any instance been considered as a whole, it may be worth while to review them.

The authority which heads the series is a decision of Lord Hardwick's in 1748, Parsons v. Lanoe, 1 Ves. Sen. 189. There a testator intending to go to Ireland, and probably to be there, as in fact he was; for some time, made a paper writing declaring it to be his last will in manner following: "If I die before my return from my journey to Ireland, that my house and land at Farly-hill . . . be sold as soon as possible after my death," and then follow directions as to the disposition of the proceeds. The instrument as a whole was held to be conditional. I doubt if there is any ambiguity in the language in this case; but if there be, I think that the second of the tests which I have mentioned applies, because the period of contingency—that is, the whole stay in Ireland—can hardly have been considered by the testator to be a period of special danger. The case of Strauss v. Schmidt, decided by Sir John Nicholl in 1820 (3 Phill. 209), is complicated by reference to documents subsequent to the will which the learned judge held should be considered as explaining its character, and showing that the testator adhered to it. The words constituting the devise were written before the testator proceeded on a voyage, and were, "therefore as I may easily die, I think it my duty to inform you what you have to do with my property in case I should die." The will was held not to be contingent, this being, I think, an instance of the period of danger being the same as the period of the contingency. The case of Burton v. Collingwood, 4 Hagg. 176, decided in 1832, is a typical instance of a contingency being referred to only as a reason for making a will. The words were, "All men are mortal, and no one knows how soon his life may be required of him. Lest I should die before the next sun, I make this my last will and testament." The first of the more recent cases is that of In the Goods of Winn, 9 W. R. 852, 2 Swa. & T. 147, decided in 1861. The material words were, "Being on the eve of embarking for San Francisco, South America, or Mexico, do hereby, in the case of my decease during my absence being fully ascertained and approved." Sir Cresswell Cresswell, while saying that the court was unwilling to set aside such testamentary papers, held that the words clearly made the will contingent. The case, indeed, seems on all fours with Parsons v. Lanoe, which was relied on in argument. The case also of Roberts v. Roberts, 2 Swa. & T. 337, was considered by Sir Cresswell Cresswell to be governed by Parsons v. Lanoe. The testator wrote, "I leave in possession two bank-books to my wife . . . should anything happen to me on my passage to Wales or during my stay," then follows the dispositions. Here, the leaving of the bank-books pointed to a conditional disposition, and the period was one defined, and in part at least independent of special danger. In the case of In the Goods of William Cawthron, 3 Sw. & T. 417, the material words were: "In the prospect of a long journey, should God not permit me to return to my home, I make this my last will and testament"; but the will was not, in fact, validly executed till after the testator's return from his journey. The case is therefore not a direct authority, but it seems clear that Lord Penzance did not consider the language used showed that the will was intended to be conditional. This would, if so, be consistent with the view that the period of danger apprehended by the testator and the apparent period within which the will was to operate were the same; and by executing it after the journey the testator showed that he did not in fact intend it to be conditional. In the case of In the Goods of Thorne, 4 Swa. & T. 36, 13 W. R. Prob. Dig. 7, the testamentary document, which was a letter, contained the following expressions: "I request that in the event of my death while serving in this horrid climate or any accident happening to me, I leave and bequeath . . . I consider that every person should be prepared for the worst, and particularly in such a treacherous climate as this which is considered one of the worst in the world which has compelled me to write this letter." This letter was written on the 2nd of November, 1863; testator left Africa in July, 1864, invalided, and died on the 16th of September, 1864, in London. Lord Penzance held that it "was not necessary to limit the operation of the will to the event of death while on the Gold Coast," or, as his lordship is reported in 34 L. J. P. & M. 131, 132, to have said, "the testator did not intend to limit its operation to the event of his death happening in Africa." I agree with Sir Walter Phillimore's suggestion that this means that the contingency contemplated by the testator was that of death from the effects of the climate of Africa, and that such contingency must be considered to have occurred in fact. I think also that the whole language of the document points rather to the testator feeling the necessity for making a will than desiring to limit the operation of it. In the case of In the Goods of Dobson, 14 W. R. 40

L. R. 1 P. & D. 88, the words were, "In case of any fatal accident happening to me, being about to travel by railway, I hereby leave . . . ." Lord Penzance, after expressing unwillingness to refuse probate of a testamentary paper on the ground that it was contingent, unless it was clear that the testator intended it should operate only in a given event, or during a certain period, held that as the operation of the will was not limited to a certain time, the case was not governed by Parsons v. Lanoe. The testator's meaning, the learned judge said, was this: "My mind is drawn to the consideration that all railway travelling is attended with danger, and therefore I think I had better make my will." The same learned judge went further in the case of In the Goods of Martin, L. R. 1 P. & D. 380. The words used by the testator appear in terms to limit the operation of his will to the event of his death occurring during his stay on the floating hospital ship to which he was about to be removed for convalescence. The will was held not to be conditional, though it may be with some hesitation, as it was directed that before the grant issued the Queen's Proctor and persons interested should be cited. Here, certainly, there is a defined period. But I think this case may be regarded as an instance of the second test I have above suggested. The defined period is just the time that would elapse, if it did elapse, before the testator's recovery—in other words, was identical with the period of the danger which constituted the reason for his disposing of his property. There is a further statement in the will that he had no kindred or family, and therefore left his money to an asylum, which may, perhaps, have been considered by the court to point to the will being intended to operate unconditionally. In the case of In the Goods of Porter, 18 W. R. 231, L. R. 2 P. & D. 22, Lord Penzance, though reluctantly, and suggesting that the will might be propounded, held that the provision as to the disposition of the property showed that the will was intended to be conditional. The testator, who was about to join his regiment in China, used the following language in his will: "Being obliged to leave England to join my regiment in China, and not having time to make a will, I leave this paper containing my wishes and desires. Should anything unfortunately happen to me while abroad, I wish"—but he proceeded to add, "anything that I may be in possession of at that time or anything appertaining to me hereafter to be equally divided." Lord Penzance held that the earlier words quoted would have left the case within Dobson's case and Martin's case, but that the later words "at that time" made the will conditional, notwithstanding the further words, "or anything appertaining to me hereafter," which his lordship appears to have thought referred to property coming to the testator after his death—that is, a reversionary interest. It is not necessary to criticize this decision. I would only remark that this case illustrates both the criteria I have indicated above. The nature of the disposition was held to point to the will being conditional, although the period during which it was expressed to operate, being the period of the testator's danger, would not have made it so. It is not, I think, easy to reconcile the decision of In the Goods of Robinson, 19 W. R. 135, L. R. 2 P. & D. 171, with those in Martin's case and Porter's case, though by the same learned judge, nor with the case to be mentioned presently of In the Goods of Mayd. The words were: "This is the last will and testament of me, George Twizell Robinson, that in case anything should happen to me during the remainder of the voyage from hence to Sicily and back to London." It was held that this will was conditional. I presume because it was considered that there was no ambiguity. It was suggested by Sir Walter Phillimore that the fact that the will in the case last mentioned, and that to be next mentioned were (as in the present instance) wills not executed under the provisions of the Wills Act, but were valid under the 11th section, at least aided the conclusion that they were conditional. But no such principle appears in the arguments or decisions, and I confess I do not see that the form of execution, or the reason for adopting that form, point one way rather than the other. In Lindsay v. Lindsay, L. R. 2 P. & D. 459, 21 W. R. Dig. 290, Lord Penzance held that a mariner's will commencing, "Instructions to be followed if I die at sea or abroad," was conditional. Probably these words were considered unambiguous, and it is also to be observed that a period beyond that of sea voyage is contemplated. In the Goods of Hugo, 25 W. R. 396, 2 P. D. 73, decided by Lord Hannen in 1877, the will was clearly unambiguous. It was to operate in the event and only in the event of the testator and his wife dying at one and the same time, by one and the same accident, and from its terms clearly contemplated provisions intended to come into effect on such a contingency. In the last case to be mentioned—that of In the Goods of Mayd, 29 W. R. 214, 6 P. D. 17—Lord Hannen supported the authority of the decision in Porter's case, and I think gave his sanction to the principle that the period limited as conditional must not be merely that of the danger apprehended. The words were: "On leaving this station for Thargomindah and Melbourne, in case of my death on the way, know all men this is a memorandum of my last will and testament." This was held not to be conditional. It was suggested before me that only Dobson's and Porter's cases were referred to in argument, and that the decision was, as many of such decisions are, ex parte. But the consideration of such cases in the Probate Registry before they come into court deprives such observations to some extent of their weight.

Applying the tests which I have above indicated to the present case, I think that the words "in case of an accident" point only to the reason why the testator desired to make a will. There is no expression of any period to be found in the document within which alone it was to be operative; on the contrary, the request that the will should be kept by his sister till he asked for it appears to me to show that the testator had not in his mind any defined period of time at the expiration of which he intended that his will should cease to be effective. Nor is there anything in the disposition of the property which indicates that it was temporary, or that it did not apply to whatever property the testator might at any time be possessed.

I am of opinion, therefore, that probate should be granted of the document in question.

Motion allowed, costs of all parties to be paid out of the estate.

Solicitors for the applicant, Moon, Gilks, & Moon.

Solicitors for the respondents, Robins, Billing, & Co.

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div. (Lord Esher, M.R., and Lopes and Rigby, L.JJ.) — Dec. 9.

BOWLER v. BARBERTON DEVELOPMENT SYNDICATE. (a.)

Mayor's Court—Jurisdiction—Part of cause of action arising outside the City—Prohibition.

The defendants contracted with the plaintiffs that on the incorporation of a company which it was proposed to form they would transfer to him shares in the company of the value of £6,000. The proposed company was formed and incorporated. The plaintiff brought an action in the Mayor's Court for specific performance of the contract.

Held, that the Mayor's Court had no jurisdiction, on the ground that the incorporation of the company, which was a part of the cause of action, took place outside the City—viz., at Somerset House.

Appeal from an order of Bruce, J., at chambers, directing that a writ of prohibition should issue to the Mayor's Court of London to restrain further proceedings in an action.

The action was brought on the equity side of the Mayor's Court for the specific performance of a contract, or in the alternative for damages.

By the contract in question, which was under seal and dated the 23rd of October, 1895, the defendants agreed with the plaintiff that, in consideration of services to be rendered by the plaintiff in the formation of a company, which was intended to be formed for the purpose of acquiring certain mining claims situate in the South African Republic and to be called the Sheba Alliance (Limited), the defendants would, on the incorporation of the company, transfer to the plaintiff fully-paid shares in the company of the nominal value of £6,000. The Sheba Alliance (Limited) was subsequently formed and incorporated.

The defendants applied for a writ of prohibition on the ground that the Mayor's Court had no jurisdiction to entertain the action. They contended, inter alia, that, as this was not an action in which the debt or damage did not exceed £50, within section 12 of the Mayor's Court of London Procedure Act, 1857 (20 & 21 Vict. c. clvii.), it was necessary that every part of the cause of action should have arisen within the City of London; and that it would be essential for the plaintiff to prove, as part of his cause of action, that the Sheba Alliance (Limited) had been incorporated as a company, which incorporation had in fact taken place outside the City of London—viz., at Somerset House.

Bruce, J., having granted a writ of prohibition, the plaintiff appealed.

Scarlett, for the plaintiff.

H. Reed, Q.C., and Arthur May, for the defendants.

The following cases were cited: Mayor, &c., of London v. Cox, 16 W. R. 44, L. R. 2 E. & I. 239; Cooke v. Gill, 21 W. R. 334, L. R. 8 C. P. 107.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec 9.—The judgment of the court was read by RIGBY, L.J.—This is an appeal from an order of Bruce, J., ordering a writ of prohibition to issue to the Mayor and Aldermen of the City of London to prohibit them from proceeding further in an action pending in the Mayor's Court. The action is brought by the plaintiff, Bowler, by bill of complaint on the equity side of the Mayor's Court for the specific performance of a contract under seal, or in the alternative for damages. Damages could only be granted on its being shown that the court had jurisdiction to grant specific performance. The action is not one for damages for breach of contract. It is clearly not within section 12 of the Act of 20 & 21 Vict. c. clvii., whereby the jurisdiction was extended to cases where the debt or damage claimed in any action does not exceed £50, and the cause of action, either wholly or in part, arises within the jurisdiction. The agreement sued upon is sufficiently stated in the bill of complaint as an agreement to transfer to the plaintiff fully-paid shares of the nominal value of £6,000 in a company to be formed to acquire certain mining claims situate in the South African Republic. No court of equity could grant specific performance of such an agreement unless it were shown that the company had in fact been formed. As damages are only claimed, and could only be given by a court of equity acting as such, in lieu of specific performance, it follows that proof of the formation of the company must be a material and essential part of the claim both for specific performance and damages. Accordingly, the plaintiff alleges in paragraph 4 of his bill of complaint that a company called the Sheba Alliance (Limited) has been formed to acquire the claims. There can be no doubt that the meaning of this allegation is that a company has been formed by registration with limited liability under the Companies Acts. If the formation of the company were traversed, the material and essential fact of its formation could not be proved to have taken place within the jurisdiction. In other words, the whole cause of action did not arise within the City. On this ground of itself the writ ought to be granted. It is unnecessary to consider any other grounds which may exist for granting the writ, and as the case was not fully argued on either side, all such grounds may be left for decision in some case in which it may be necessary to decide them. The appeal ought to be dismissed with costs.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Roberts & Wrightson.

Solicitors for the defendants, Thomson & Co.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

From Chan. Div. (Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J., and Lindley and A. L. Smith, L.JJ.) — Nov. 26.

In re STEPHENSON.

DONALDSON v. BAMBER. (a.)

Will—Construction—Latent ambiguity.

A testator by his will devised and bequeathed his residuary estate "unto the children of the deceased son (named Bamber) of my father's sister, share and share alike." The sister had three sons who predeceased the testator, all of whom left children.

Held (reversing Kekewich, J.), that the gift was void for uncertainty.

Hare v Cartridge, 13 Sim. 165, commented on and distinguished.

Appeal of the defendant, F. Freshney, representing the next-of-kin of the testator, from Kekewich, J.

By his will dated the 23rd of March, 1896, the testator, Robert Stephenson, appointed the plaintiff

(a.) Reported by W. SHALLCROSS GODDARD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Henry Donaldson, his sole executor, and, after certain pecuniary and specific bequests, he proceeded as follows: "And as to all the rest, residue, and remainder of my real and personal estate I give, devise, and bequeath the same unto the children of the deceased son (named Bamber) of my father's sister, share and share alike."

The testator's paternal aunt, Rebecca Stephenson, married William Bamber, and had issue four sons, one of whom died young, and the other three had all married and had families. They all predeceased the testator, and the question arose whether the children of any one or of all of them were entitled to the residuary estate, or whether there was an intestacy.

Kekewich, J., held that the children of the three deceased sons named Bamber of the testator's father's sister living at the date of the testator's will and at his death were entitled in equal shares per capita as tenants in common.

The next-of-kin (who were entitled in the event of an intestacy) appealed.

Warrington, Q.C., and George Cave, for the appellants.—Where there are two descriptions, and one is essential and the other descriptive, the court has rejected the stated numeral. Here it is impossible to distinguish between the sons, and the court cannot read the plural for the singular number. It follows that the testator died intestate as to his residuary estate.

Bramwell Davis, Q.C., and W. F. Webster, for the legatees.—Where there is an obvious mistake in the number on the face of the will the court will rectify it: Lee v. Pain, 4 Hare 249; Hare v. Cartridge, 13 Sim. 165. [LINDLEY, L.J.—The decision in Hare v. Cartridge seems opposed to all the other authorities on the subject.] Here there are three persons who accurately answer the description. There is an equivocation, and evidence of intention is admissible: Garvey v. Hibbert, 19 Ves. 125; Newman v. Piercey, 25 W. R. 37, 4 Ch. D. 41; Daniell v. Daniell, 3 De G. & Sm. 337; McKechnie v. Vaughan, 21 W. R. 399, L. R. 15 Eq. 289; Harrison v. Harrison, 1 Russ. & My. 71.

They also referred to Mellor v. Daintree, 33 Ch. D. 198, 35 W. R. Dig. 223, and Jarman on Wills, 5th ed., II., p. 1048.

Warrington, Q.C., in reply.—The true principle is, if from the will an indication can be got of the intention of the testator to benefit a particular class, but a mistake has been made in the number of the class, then the number may be disregarded and the gift will go to the class; but that is not this case. There is no case where son has been altered to sons. There is no obvious mistake here, and the court will not interfere.

Lord RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN, C.J.—The question in this case is whether the residuary gift in the will of the testator, Robert Stephenson, dated the 23rd of March, 1896, is effective or void for uncertainty. If effective according to the construction sought to be placed upon it by the respondent it goes to the children of each of the deceased sons of the testator's father's sister, Rebecca Bamber, and if void for uncertainty it goes for distribution according to the statute amongst the testator's next-of-kin. We have to determine what the testator's intention was; but we are to gather that intention from what he has said in his will, giving effect as far as possible to each word he has used; we are not to make a will for him but to express his intention gathered from what he has said. There may be cases in which the court will supplement the evidence to be derived from the terms of the will itself by extrinsic evidence to throw light upon the testator's intention; and these cases may be described as belonging to two classes. First, there may be evidence of surrounding circumstances which will help the court in view of these extrinsic facts to come at what the testator meant; for instance, the illustration I have already suggested, if in this case extrinsic evidence had been forthcoming to show that he knew that only one son was dead, that might be a circumstance to be taken into consideration in construing the language of the will. But that is not the case here. Another case is that in which evidence of intention may be given; but that is limited as I gather in the way pointed out by Wigram, V.C., in the seventh proposition in his book on "Extrinsic Evidence in the Interpretation of Wills."

Proposition 6 is: "Where the words of a will, aided by evidence of the material facts of the case, are insufficient to determine the testator's meaning, no evidence will be admissible to prove what the testator intended, and the will (except in certain special cases) will be void for uncertainty." And proposition 7 is: "Notwithstanding the rule of law, which makes a will void for uncertainty, where the words, aided by evidence of the material facts of the case, are insufficient to determine the testator's meaning—courts of law, in certain special cases, admit extrinsic evidence of intention to make certain the person or thing intended, where the description in the will is insufficient for the purpose."

In my judgment the facts in this case do not bring it within the principle enunciated in that proposition. These are the facts. After some other dispositions the testator proceeds: "And as to all the rest, residue, and remainder of my real and personal estate I give, devise, and bequeath the same unto the children of the deceased son (named Bamber) of my father's sister, share and share alike." That is to say, he bequeaths his residue to the children of a deceased cousin of his own. What does that mean? As a matter of fact at the time when the will was made there were three deceased sons of his father's sister, and the evidence establishes the fact that he was aware that there were three. How is it to be construed? Kekewich, J., has construed it in a very singular way. He has first of all transposed the words "named Bamber," the qualification of the "deceased son," and made them the qualification of the "children" so as to make it "children named Bamber"; and then he has proceeded to change the word "son" into "sons" so that it will read "the children named Bamber of the deceased sons."

In my judgment that is making a new will. On the face of it there is no apparent ambiguity at all. The ambiguity arises when it is sought to apply the language to the facts.

There were three deceased sons, each of whom had children, and the question is whether this can be supported as a gift to the children of all the sons. I think it cannot. The cases have gone a very long way, and have been so long established that they cannot be now disturbed; but I think they have gone as far as is desirable, and I am not disposed to extend them any further. It is said that this case is within the principle of a number of cases, which establish the proposition that wherever there is an enumeration of persons who are to be benefited, and that enumeration is wrong in fact, the court can eliminate the number. In my opinion that is stating the rule much too widely. It must be limited to cases where the court as a matter of construction arrives at the conclusion that the testator intended a certain class to be benefited. If there has been an incorrect enumeration of the persons composing that class, the court can reject it. The proposition goes no further than that. That is not this case. If this had been a devise and bequest to the "son of my father's sister," if there had been three sons living at the time of the will so made, and in the absence of extrinsic evidence—although I do not suggest that evidence would cure the defect—could the court hold that he meant the sister's "sons"? The court would be bound to say that it was uncertain and void. Further, it is said that there is one case which is in point here: Hare v. Cartridge. I do not stop to point out that text-book writers in referring to this case have appended to it the observation that the current of authority is against it. It is true that it cannot be treated as overruled. Therefore I will proceed to an examination of that case. The testator in that case bequeathed his residue to his first cousins, the children of his father's brother of the name of Cartridge. It turned out in fact that there were two brothers, and not only one brother. The court came to the conclusion that, seeing there was a manifest intention in the first part of the will to leave the property to his first cousins, it would be right to read it as a gift to his first cousins bearing the name of Cartridge. I think that was a strong thing to do. I do not think I should have concurred in that decision, but there was a clear intention to benefit a class, and that is enough to show that it was essentially a different case from the present one. This is a case in which the court cannot say there is no uncertainty. There is uncertainty which cannot be removed by any legal evidence; the result is that the bequest is void for uncertainty, and must go to the next-of-kin.

LINDLEY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. When we look at the will and the facts we see the difficulty of arriving at any conclusion as to what the testator really meant. [His lordship read the residuary bequest, and continued:—] There were three deceased sons by name Bamber, and we are asked to say that the bequest ought to be read as a bequest of the residue to the children of all three sons. That would be an uncommonly strong thing to do. The evidence does not warrant us to say he meant one son more than another. Parol evidence would be admissible for that. We are asked to say that the deceased son means all the deceased sons. How can that result be arrived at? It cannot be by any process of common-sense. If it can be arrived at at all it is only by compulsion of the authorities. Let us see how far they drive us to that conclusion. They only hold that under such circumstances as I am about to suppose the court may eliminate an inaccurate enumeration if there is otherwise a clear gift to a class. That is, that if the court comes to the conclusion upon the true construction of the will that the testator intends the gift for the benefit of the whole of the class, you are not to defeat that intention because he has made a mistake in the number; you may reject the inaccurate enumeration. If you reject the inaccurate enumeration here, there is nothing left. We are asked to put in something, and to say that—there being no inaccurate enumeration—to say that the bequest of the children of "the" son means a bequest to the children of three sons. There is no manifest gift to a whole class, and we cannot do it. In Hare v. Cartridge there was language which assisted the court in coming to the conclusion at which it arrived, but we have no such words here. If we had here the words "to my cousins," Hare v. Cartridge might be in point, though I do not say whether it is right or wrong, but as it is we do not come within its authority. Kekewich, J., has fallen into the error of attaching the words "named Bamber" to the wrong antecedent.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—The only question before us is whether this bequest is void for uncertainty. [His lordship read it, and proceeded:—] To whom did the residuary estate go? If there had been one son it would go to his children; but there were three sons. I answer the question by saying that it is impossible to say to whom it is to go. The testator has not said to whom it is to go, and why should the court say so for him? It is said that where there is a gift to a class, and the class is wrongly numbered—for instance, if five is put for six or eight for nine—that, inasmuch as it is the intention of the testator to benefit the class as a whole, the court will reject the number and allow the whole class to share the bequest. I think, on the cases, that there is such a rule, and it appears to me that in Newman v. Piercey Sir G. Jessel, M.R., pointed out that the rule that the court strikes out an inaccurate number is limited to cases where the testator makes the bequest to all the class. All these cases are in reality cases of striking out something from a will, but here we are not asked to strike out anything, but to say that when he devised and bequeathed his residue to the children of the deceased son he meant to say the children of the deceased sons, who happen to be three. I cannot find anything to authorize us to add anything to the will. There are cases which authorize striking out. I think that this bequest is void for uncertainty, and that Kekewich, J., was wrong in holding that he could make a will and say what the testator meant.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Bridges, Sawtell, Heywood, & Co.; Purkis & Co.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, Lopes, and Rigby, L.JJ.) July 24, 25; Nov. 6.

PITT PITTS v. GEORGE & CO. (a.)

Copyright—Work first published abroad—Copies lawfully printed in country where work first published—Importation into United Kingdom for sale or hire—Copyright Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 45), ss. 2, 15, 17—International Copyright Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 12), ss. 2, 3, 10.

Section 10 of the International Copyright Act, 1844, does not prohibit the importation into the United Kingdom for sale or hire of copies of a copyright work lawfully printed in the country where the work was first published. That section, however, is not a complete code on the subject; and sections 15 and 17 of the Copyright Act, 1842, read together with section 3 of the Act of 1844, do prohibit such importation, unless it take place with the authority of the owner of the copyright. The owner of the English copyright in a German piece of music is therefore entitled to an injunction to restrain the importation into this country, for sale or hire, of copies lawfully printed in Germany.

Decision of Kekewich, J., reversed (Lopes, L.J., dissenting).

Appeal from Kekewich, J.

The English copyright in La Fileuse, a piece of music by the well-known composer, Joachim Raff, had been assigned to the plaintiff. La Fileuse was first printed and published at Leipzig in 1870, and was then offered for sale at Leipzig and other places on the Continent. In October, 1875, the defendant imported into England, for sale here, fourteen copies, lawfully printed at Leipzig, which he had bought at Brussels. The plaintiff thereupon commenced an action against the defendant, claiming damages and an injunction. Kekewich, J., dismissed the action, and the plaintiff appealed.

(a.) Reported by R. C. MACKENZIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., and Ingpen, for the appeal, referred to the International Copyright Act, 1844, ss. 2, 3, 10, and to the Copyright Act, 1842, ss. 15, 17. "Unlawfully printing" means printing without the consent in writing of the proprietor. [They were stopped.]

Scrutton, for the defendant.—Section 10 of the Act of 1844 is a complete code on the subject of the importation of books, &c., first published abroad. If section 15 of the Act of 1842 is to be construed as is argued on the other side, section 17 is superfluous. Section 15 applies to books printed in the British dominions, section 17 to those printed elsewhere.

He also referred to 49 & 50 Vict. c. 33, s. 2, subsection 3; section 4; Hanfstaengl v. American Tobacco Co., 43 W. R. 261, [1895] 1 Q. B. 347.

Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

Nov. 6.—LINDLEY, L.J., read the following judgment: The plaintiff is the assignee of the English copyright in a German piece of music, published at Leipzig; and he seeks to restrain the defendant from importing into this country for sale here copies of the piece of music lawfully printed in Leipzig, and sold to the defendant in Brussels. The title of the plaintiff is admitted; and it is conceded that although he has not registered his assignment that circumstance is immaterial, having regard to the International Copyright Act, 1886, and to the decision in Hanfstaengl v. American Tobacco Co., 43 W. R. 261, [1895] 1 Q. B. 347. It is further conceded that the question turns on the statutes relating to copyright in books, and not on the statutes relating to the performance of musical compositions or dramatic pieces. Kekewich, J., decided that the defendant was not infringing the plaintiffs' rights; and from that decision the plaintiff has appealed.

The case turns on the true construction of sections 2, 11, 13, 15, and 17 of the Copyright Act, 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 45), and of sections 2, 3, and 10 of the International Copyright Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 12). The Copyright Act, 1842, has no reference to copyright in foreign works under any International Copyright Act. It contains, however, two sections for the protection of copyright in other books—viz., sections 15 and 17. Section 15 gives a remedy by action on the case for (1) Printing in any part of the British dominions for sale or exportation any book in which there is copyright, without the consent in writing of the proprietor of the copyright; (2) importing for sale or hire any such book so unlawfully printed; (3) selling, publishing, or exposing for sale or hire any such book known to have been so unlawfully printed or imported; (4) possessing for sale or hire any such book known to have been so unlawfully printed or imported. The section is so worded as apparently not to hit the importation of copies printed in foreign countries. This result is due to the use of the expressions "such book" and "so having been unlawfully printed," which occur after the clause which prohibits printing. I understand these expressions to mean as follows: "Such book" means any book in which there is copyright under the Act. "So having been unlawfully printed" means printed in any part of the British dominions without the written consent of the proprietor of the copyright. Section 17, however, goes further as regards the importation of printed books first composed or written or printed and published in the United Kingdom. If there is copyright in such books, the importation of copies into any part of the British dominions for sale or hire, except by the proprietor of the copyright, or by someone authorized by him, is absolutely prohibited wherever such copies may be printed, and all such copies may be seized and destroyed by the officers of Customs or Excise. Penalties, moreover, are inflicted on the importers, on persons who sell, publish, expose for sale, or let for hire copies known by them to have been unlawfully imported. This section, however, is confined entirely to printed books first composed or written, or printed and published, in the United Kingdom. It does not apply to other books. Neither of these sections prohibits importation for private use, but only importation for sale or hire; neither of them, moreover, is framed with a view to protect copyright in books first published in foreign countries, nor would the language of these sections be applicable to such books unless made so by some other statute. Neither of these sections, moreover, alludes to any remedy by way of injunction. But, having regard to well-settled principles of courts of equity, there can be no doubt that an injunction would be granted to protect the owner of copyright conferred by the Act, and to restrain an infringement of either section.

I pass now to the International Copyright Act, 1844 (7 & 8 Vict. c. 12). The statute replaced an earlier International Copyright Act of 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 59), which was found insufficient for the purpose of enabling the Crown to confer on the authors of works first published in foreign countries copyright to the same extent, and with the same remedies for infringements, as the authors of works first published in this country enjoyed under our own Copyright Acts. The preamble of the Act of 1844 alludes to the defect, and its main object is to remedy it. Accordingly section 2 enables the Crown to confer on the authors of books first published in foreign countries the privilege of copyright therein; and section 3 enacts that persons on whom such privilege is conferred shall be entitled to the benefit of the Act of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, in the same manner as if such books had been first published in the United Kingdom. The language of this section is very important. It enacts "that, in case any such order"—i.e., Order in Council—"shall apply to books, all and singular, the enactment of the said Copyright Amendment Act, and of any other Act for the time being in force with relation to the copyright in books first published in this country shall, from and after the time so to be specified in that behalf in such order, and subject to such limitation as to the duration of the copyright as shall be therein contained, apply and be in force in respect to the books to which such order shall extend and which shall have been registered as hereinafter is provided, in such and the same manner as if such books were first published in the United Kingdom"; subject to certain exceptions, which are not material. This section, unless controlled by section 10, requires the court, in effect, and so far as possible, to apply sections 15 and 17 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45 to books first published in foreign countries. But before attempting to do this it is necessary to consider section 10 of the Act of 1844, and to ascertain to what extent, if at all, it modifies section 3 or excludes the application of section 15 and 17 of the Act of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45. Section 10 enacts "that all copies of books wherein there shall be any subsisting copyright under or by virtue of this Act, or of any Order in Council made in pursuance thereof, printed or reprinted in any foreign country, except that in which such books were first published, shall be and the same are hereby absolutely prohibited to be imported into any part of the British dominions, except by or with the consent of the registered proprietor of the copyright thereof, or his agent authorized in writing, and if imported contrary to this prohibition the same and the importers thereof shall be subject to the enactments in force relating to goods prohibited to be imported by any Act relating to the Customs, and as respects any such copies so prohibited to be imported, and also as respects any copies unlawfully printed in any place whatsoever, of any books wherein there shall be any subsisting copyright as aforesaid, any person who shall in any part of the British dominions import such prohibited or unlawfully printed copies, or who, knowing such copies to be so unlawfully imported or unlawfully printed, shall sell, publish, or expose for sale or hire, or shall cause to be sold, published, or exposed for sale or hire, or have in his possession for sale or hire, any such copies so unlawfully imported or unlawfully printed, such offender shall be liable to a special action on the case at the suit of the proprietor of such copyright, to be brought and prosecuted in the same courts and in the same manner and with the like restrictions upon the proceedings of the defendant as are respectively prescribed in the said Copyright Amendment Act with relation to actions thereby authorized to be brought by proprietors of copyright against persons importing or selling books unlawfully printed in the British dominions."

It will be observed that the section expressly excepts from its operation the importation of copies made in the country in which the copyright book was first published. This exception is quite new, and the reason for it is not stated. Moreover, the express prohibition against importation does not extend to copies printed in any part of the British dominions. Such copies are, however, included in the second part of the section, which gives a remedy by action in respect of the importation of books unlawfully printed anywhere. The consequence appears to be that the Custom House officers cannot, under section 10, seize any copies of a foreign book in which there is copyright under the Act of 1844, unless such copies have been printed in some foreign country other than that in which the book was first printed. Copies printed in that country or in any part of the British dominions cannot be so seized under the section in question. The reason for this is difficult to discover. The power of seizing copies wrongfully imported for sale or hire, under section 17 of 5 and 6 Vict. c. 45, extends to copies printed anywhere abroad. Again, in framing section 10, the Legislature in prohibiting importation has drawn no distinction between importation for sale or hire and importation for other purposes. The distinction drawn is between importation with the consent of the proprietor of the copyright and importation without such consent. This was, no doubt, deemed an improvement. But why section 10 was framed as it is, and why, if intended to qualify and cut down the effect of section 3, those two sections should be left as they are, I confess I am unable to discover. But, however difficult it may be to account for the language in which section 10 is expressed, it is not difficult to interpret that language as it stands. Reading it in its plain, literal sense, the present case is expressly excepted from the operation of the section, for the importation complained of is of copies not only printed, but also lawfully printed, in the country in which the copyright work was first published. So that the present case is not covered either by the first part of the section, which prohibits importation, or by the second part, which gives a remedy by action. We are thus thrown back on sections 15 and 17 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, with a direction (see section 3 of the Act of 1844) to apply them to a case to which their language is apparently inapplicable, and with a statement (see the preamble) that the object is to confer on the owners of copyright in foreign works greater rights than could have been conferred upon them under the earlier International Copyright Act, and similar in all respects to those enjoyed by British authors. The work here in question must be deemed to have been first published in this country, and the plaintiff must be treated as if he were the owner of the copyright in this country in such work. Section 3 of the Act of 1844 clearly requires these assumptions to be made. Section 3 does not say "first printed and published"; but I do not attach any importance to this verbal criticism. To attribute importance to it would nullify section 3. I take "published" in section 3 to include printing for publication. These assumptions appear to me necessarily to involve as consequences that the expressions "such book" and "so having been unlawfully printed," which occur in sections 15 and 17 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, must be applied to the work, the copyright in which belongs to the plaintiff.

I have already pointed out that this could not be their meaning in the statute 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45. Even if section 15 cannot be held to apply, owing to its language being restricted to printing in the British dominions, section 17 can, for, as already pointed out, its scope is wider. To hold that neither section applies is to hold that section 3 of the Act of 1844 is absolutely nugatory, and in obedience to this section the difficulties in applying sections 15 and 17 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45 to this case must be got over. The alternative is to hold that the plaintiff has no remedy for a manifest injury, and that Parliament failed in 1844 to give effect to its declared intention.

Mr. Scrutton, in his very able argument, almost persuaded me that this was so. His contention was that section 10 was intended to be a code containing a complete enumeration of the remedies available for an infringement of copyright in foreign works, and that it was inconsistent with sections 15 and 17 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45, if applied to such copyright. I confess I was much struck with this contention; but I cannot adopt it. Section 10 is certainly not a complete code, for in the face of section 3 it cannot be regarded as impliedly depriving the proprietors of copyright under the Act of 1844 of any of the rights which that section and the statute there referred to confer upon them. The truth is that, when closely examined, section 10 will be found not to cover the whole ground covered by section 3 and the incorporated sections 15 and 17 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45. What, then, is the true inference from the express exception in section 10? Is it to be inferred that the foreigner entitled to copyright in this country is liable to have that copyright infringed by an importer of books printed in his own country; or is the inference to be that, as regards such books, he is entitled to the same protection as a British author would have under the Act of 1842? The latter inference is most in accordance with legal principles and good sense, and is the only inference which is consistent with the preamble and section 3 of the Act of 1844. If the defendant's contention were correct, it would follow that a foreign author could assign his English copyright and import and sell copies of his work here in competition with his own assignee, unless prevented from so doing by express agreement. Such a state of our law would not be very creditable, and I am glad to find that the court is not driven to hold the law to be so unsatisfactory, nor to hold that, owing to a blunder in drafting, the Legislature has conspicuously failed to attain its declared and manifest object. One other point was urged which requires notice. The defendant is the purchaser of the books he has imported, and it is contended that he has a right to dispose of those books as he likes, without any interference from the owner of the foreign copyright or from the plaintiff, who claim under him. The right, however, of the defendant to use in this country the books which he has bought abroad depends on the law of this country, and not on the law of the place of sale. The copyright in this country confers upon the plaintiff rights here which no contract of sale abroad by other persons can deprive him of. Even if the defendant had bought his copies direct from the proprietor of the foreign copyright, the defendant would be in no better position as against the plaintiff than such proprietor himself; and for reasons already given he could not justify what the defendant claims the right to do.

The appeal must be allowed, with costs here and below. An injunction must be granted to restrain further importations for sale or hire without the consent of the proprietor, and there must be an inquiry as to the damages sustained by the proprietor by reason of the importation for sale or hire of such copies before the date of this judgment.

LOPES, L.J., read the following judgment: It is with great diffidence that I differ from my brothers in this case, who are much more familiar than I am with these Copyright Acts; but after careful consideration I have arrived at the same conclusion as Kekewich, J., in the court below. The piece of music in question was first published in Leipzig, and the plaintiff is the assignee of the English copyright in this German piece of music. Copies of the piece of music printed in Leipzig, and sold to the defendant in Brussels, have been imported into this country for sale here. The plaintiff seeks to restrain the defendant from such importation. Whether he can do so depends upon certain provisions in the Copyright Acts, which are by no means clear. Sections 15 and 17 of 5 & 6 Vict. c. 45 have been relied on. I cannot discover how the prohibition contained in section 15 can apply to the importation of books printed in foreign countries in which an English author has no copyright. This section applies to the British dominions only. Nor can I see how section 17 applies to a case like the present. It is directed against the importation of foreign copies of copyright works first composed or written or printed in the United Kingdom. This piece of music was first published in a foreign country—viz., in Germany. We must now look at the 7 & 8 Vict. c. 12, and the important section is section 10. This section deals with copies of books ("book" by the interpretation section including sheets of music), wherein there shall be any copyright subsisting under this Act or any Order in Council made in pursuance thereof, but printed or reprinted in any foreign country. If there was nothing more, this section would cover the present case; but there occur in this section these important words, "except that in which such books were first published." I am unable to disregard this exception, which, in my judgment, was inserted to meet a case like the present. It is said that this exception is to be disregarded, because of the provisions of section 3 of the same Act. The question is whether anything in this section is so repugnant as to the exception contained in section 10 as to render it inoperative. I think they may be read together, section 3 dealing with foreign countries not being countries where such books were first published, and section 10 excepting countries where the books were first published. It is said that this imposes a great hardship on the plaintiff and assignees circumstanced in the same way as the plaintiff. That may be so, but we have to construe the Acts of Parliament, and the plaintiff might have protected himself by an express covenant.

I think the appeal ought to be dismissed.

RIGBY, L.J., read the following judgment: This case was argued only on the construction of the two Acts of 1842 and 1844, as modified, with reference to registration, by section 4 of the Act of 1886. It seems necessary, however, to refer to other Acts for the purpose of arriving at a clear view of the whole scheme of copyright law at any given time. The material sections of the Acts are singularly involved in their provisions owing, no doubt, partly to the difficulty of getting through Parliament any Bill extending the rights of authors, and partly to the fact that provisions for the protection of copyright were confused with provisions for the protection of revenue, as will hereafter appear.

The Copyright Amendment Act of 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 45), whether by section 15 or by section 17, provides only against importation for sale or hire. A book lawfully printed abroad might, so far as this Act is concerned, be lawfully imported by the owner of it for his own private use, though not for sale or hire.

The statute of 1709 (8 Anne c. 19) gave copyright only in Great Britain, and made no distinction between copies imported for sale and other copies imported. Section 7 of the Act, however, provided that nothing in the Act should prevent the importation of books in any foreign language printed beyond the seas.

The distinction between importation for sale and other importations was in 1735 introduced, as I think for the first time, into an Act for the protection of copyright in engravings (8 Geo. 2, c. 13); but the Act which seems to have afforded the basis for section 17 of the Act of 1842 is the Act of 1739 (12 Geo. 2, c. 36). This was not a copyright statute at all, but a revenue Act founded on the consideration that the duty on paper imported for printing books exceeded the duty on printed books. The statute was not required for the protection of copyright in books which was fully effectuated as to importations by the statute of 1709. The prohibition extended to books in which there was no copyright, if only there had been a printing of them within twenty years. The printing was in that Act the very thing aimed at, whilst in Copyright Acts the protection of the owner of the copyright is the important point. The title to copyright depends generally, not upon first composition or first printing, but after first publication in the United Kingdom.

The International Copyright Act of 1838 (1 & 2 Vict. c. 59), repealed by the Act of 1844, by section 1 empowered her Majesty by Order in Council to direct that the authors of books to be published in any foreign country, or their executors, administrators, and assigns, should have the sole liberty of printing and reprinting such books within the United Kingdom and every other part of the British dominions. Section 8 enacted that if any person in the United Kingdom or any other part of the British dominions should print, reprint, or import for sale—there is no doubt the word means imported from a foreign country for sale—any book to which the Order in Council should extend without the consent of the author or other proprietor of the copyright first had and obtained in writing, every offender should be liable to a special action on the case at the suit of the author or other proprietor of the copyright.

It is manifest that the copyright here spoken of is the British International Copyright, and it is to be observed that importations from foreign countries may be prohibited, and that no exception is made of books imported from the foreign country where they were first published. On the other hand the importation of books otherwise than for sale, as, for instance, for hire or for the private use of the importer, was not struck at. The Copyright Amendment Act of 1842 (5 & 6 Vict. c. 12), like the Act of 1838, extended the copyright to the whole of the British dominions. Section 15 of this Act is in pari materiâ with section 8 of the Act of 1838. Its operation is extended as to imports by adding to the words "for sale" the words "or hire"; but as to the importations which it is aimed against we should expect to find them to be the same in both sections, and I have been unable to see any reason why there should be any difference in this respect between the two sections. Section 17 of the Act, as before suggested and as a comparison of the wording shows, is evidently based on section 1 of the Act of 1739, adding to the words "for sale" the words "or hire." Probably in both sections the words "or hire" are introduced because of the development of the circulating library system.

Comparing, therefore, the Act of 1838 with that of 1842, the first-named Act authorized at least the same amount of protection from imported books to be given to copyright under that Act which was given to copyright for books first published in the United Kingdom by the later Act, except that importation for hire was not prohibited by it.

Neither Act prevented the importation from foreign countries of books for the private use of the importer. It is, however, material to note that by an Act to amend the laws relating to the Customs (5 & 6 Vict. c. 47), which came into operation a few days after the Copyright Amendment Act, and must have been before Parliament whilst the last-mentioned Act was under consideration, on a recital in section 23 great abuse had prevailed with respect to the introduction into this country for private use of works reprinted abroad to the great injury to the authors thereof and of others, it was by section 24 enacted that from and after the 1st of April, 1843, all books wherein the copyright should be subsisting first composed or written or printed in the United Kingdom, and printed or reprinted in any other country, should be and the same were thereby absolutely prohibited to be, imported into the United Kingdom. It seems, therefore, that there was no substantial departure as to importations from the policy of the Act of 1709. We have then to approach the consideration of the International Copyright Act of 1844 with the knowledge that provision was made against importation for sale or hire in the Copyright Amendment Act of 1842, and for absolute prohibition of importations, even for private use in the later Act of the same session, whilst the International Copyright Act of 1838 was clearly imperfect in both respects. We should expect, therefore, that adequate though not necessarily identical provision would be contained in the Act of 1844 with reference to both subjects; and in my judgment such provision is made accordingly as to books imported for sale or hire by section 3, and as to books absolutely prohibited by section 10.

I proceed to deal with the suggested interpretation of the Act of 1844 which would make section 10 a complete code as to importations, and exclude altogether the operation of sections 15 and 17 of the Act of 1842. If section 10 contains the whole law on the subject, it is obvious that the proprietor of copyright under this later Act (supposing him for the moment to be a different person from the owner of the copyright in the country where the book was first published) would be in so much worse a position than the owner of copyright in a book first published in the United Kingdom that the two rights would be essentially different, though the object of the Acts was to make them as far as possible the same.

Take, for instance, the case before us of a book first published in Germany. The proprietor of copyright in the British dominions would indeed have, as to all countries but Germany, the right of preventing importation for private use in more sweeping terms than those contained in section 24 of the Act 5 & 6 Vict. c. 47.

But, in exchange for this comparatively unimportant advantage, he would have to submit to an unlimited importation of books lawfully printed in any part of Germany itself, the country in which it would be most likely that the book would be printed on a large scale.

The very person through whom he derived title might, so far as the copyright law is concerned, import and sell of many of the books as he could find a market for, or set up circulating libraries like Mudie's for the diffusion throughout her Majesty's dominions of the very book as to which he had parted with copyright in those dominions, and what he could do any other person could do who got hold of books lawfully printed in Germany.

Under conditions of trade favourable to books made in Germany the copyright in the British dominions under the Act would be absolutely worthless, and the beneficial object of the Act of 1844 entirely frustrated. This consideration affords, in my opinion, a very strong presumption against the suggested construction which would make section 10 of the Act of 1844 an entire code with reference to importations from abroad. It is, however, said that by appropriate covenants with the owner of the original copyright the assignee may be protected. The suggestion, of course, involves the assumption that the copyright law itself has altogether failed to afford adequate protection. But the possibility of actual protection being given by covenants is by no means clear. The British Legislature is supposed to say to every person everywhere, "You may import for any purpose the books to which our British International Copyright extends if only you go to Germany for them and see that they are lawfully printed there.

The proprietor of the original copyright might indeed covenant not himself to introduce into the British dominions any of the books, but how can he effectually provide against the acts of other persons. He might enter into a warranty that no other person should import books from Germany, so as to render himself liable to any damages that might be proved to arise; but the actual importation he would be for the most part unable to prevent. It is by no means certain that in every country to which an Order in Council may extend there must be any law preventing printing for exportation of copyright books. There is no evidence of any such law in Germany: it never existed here until 1842.

It is unnecessary, however, in my judgment, further to consider the construction of the Act, on the assumption that it is left open to us to construe it in this manner if we please. The preamble of the Act makes it plain that the repeal of the Act of 1838 was intended, not for the purpose of limiting, but for the purpose of increasing the powers of her Majesty as to remedies for infringement of copyright under the Act, and to make them as effectual as those given by the existing law for the protection of home copyright. This, in my judgment, is sufficient to make it incumbent on the courts to construe the Act, if it can reasonably be done, so as to avoid the great injury to proprietors of copyright above pointed out. Now, section 3 of the Act, in what seems to me quite clear and unambiguous language, provides that all and singular the enactments of the Act of 1842 (including, of course, section 15 and 17, unless their language is clearly inapplicable), shall apply to the books to which the Order in Council shall extend, and which have been registered as thereinafter mentioned, in such and the same manner as if such books were first published in the United Kingdom.

Registration is now rendered unnecessary by the Act of 1886, and the exceptions in section 3 are for the present purpose irrelevant, though it may be observed that the power reserved to her Majesty by Order in Council to make exceptions would, if it were found necessary, suffice to obviate any inconvenience arising from the very sweeping terms in which the enactments of the Copyright Act of 1842 are applied to, and in effect made part of, the Act of 1844.

Assuming them to be so applied, the only question remaining is whether they, or one of them, govern the present case.

I wish to do full justice to Mr. Scrutton's able argument, which for a time went far toward convincing me that section 15 of the Act of 1842 deals only with books unlawfully printed within the British dominions.

One point relied upon by him was that if section 15 applied to books printed outside the British dominions there would be no need for section 17. But section 17 gives remedies altogether different from the action by the proprietor of the copyright given by section 15. It may well be that the remedies were to be cumulative in the cases where the two sections overlap; and if so the argument that they should be construed so as not to overlap fails.

Then Mr. Scrutton said that the literal interpretation of section 15 is in favour of the construction which would confine its operation to books printed within the British dominions. The result would be that the Act gives no action for damages to the proprietor of copyright in case of books imported from foreign countries, and this is a conclusion not to be arrived at without something approaching necessity. There may be some foundation for saying that as a matter of strict grammar and on a rigidly literal interpretation of the words of the section which precede the phrase "so having been unlawfully printed," the unlawfulness is made to depend upon the place of printing as well as on the want of consent of the proprietor, with the result that, so far as that part of the section is concerned the phrase would not be satisfied without reading into it both elements of unlawfulness.

But the section is to be read and interpreted as one entire section, and as we proceed we find reasons for declining to limit the section in the way proposed. First, we may ask what is the meaning of speaking of importation into any place in her Majesty's dominions from points beyond the sea. In the Act of 1709 the expression beyond the seas clearly refers to all places, foreign waters included, not within the United Kingdom, and I think the natural meaning of the words "parts beyond the sea" in section 15 of the Act of 1842 includes foreign waters generally. The phrase may not be strictly accurate, but in the sense which I attribute to it it is very intelligible. It would be strange indeed if the phrase were to be construed literally as not referring to importation by land, and still stranger if that literal interpretation were further limited by confining the words to transfer from one part of her Majesty's dominions to another. For what conceivable reason can we suppose the Legislature to have had for distinguishing a transfer between New Zealand and Australia from a transfer between one Australian colony and another, or, what may be a more striking case, a transfer between England and Ireland from a transfer between England and Scotland or Wales?

Secondly, as we go on in the section, an offence is made to depend on "knowing such book"—i.e., a book in which there shall be subsisting copyright, "to have been so unlawfully printed or imported," and lower down we find the words "so unlawfully printed or imported without such consent as aforesaid"; twice over, therefore, in the section, we have the word "imported," separated by the disjunctive "or" from the words "so unlawfully printed," and it seems to me almost impossible to treat the word "imported," in those phrases as involving unlawful printing within her Majesty's dominions. If they cannot be so treated neither ought the word "import" in the earlier part of the section to be so treated.

Thirdly, another concession seems to my mind very important—viz., that on the limited construction of the section contended for the words as to importation constitute in themselves no offence unless the offence of unlawfully printing within the Queen's dominions is also committed to the knowledge of the importer, which is equivalent to saying that they have no effect whatever as to the substantive rights of the proprietor of the copyright, and might be struck out of the section altogether without affecting those substantive rights. It is, to say the least, very doubtful whether there could be any case in which they would be necessary for the purpose even of enabling the action given by the section to be tried in the place of importation, but, however that may be, I think it impossible that they should have been introduced as they stand for such a limited purpose only. I have considered at great, and it may be at undue, length the construction of section 15 on account of the grave consequences which the limited construction contended for might have upon the rights of all owners of British copyrights, whether in respect of books first published in the United Kingdom or under the International Copyright Acts. The result, in my judgment, is that it applies to books imported for sale or hire from foreign countries, including those imported from what may be called the country of origin, though the latter are expressly excepted from the absolute prohibition of section 10 of the Act of 1844. Having arrived at this conclusion with reference to section 15, I do not think it necessary to endeavour to construe section 17. The extraordinary language of that section, derived as it is from a statute having a totally different object, and clumsily adapted to a case of copyright, renders it exceedingly difficult to ascertain precisely the meaning and policy of the enactment.

I will only say that I am not satisfied that the plaintiff's right to prevent the importations complained of might not be derived from section 17 in connection with section 3 of the Act of 1844, if it were necessary to fall back upon those sections.

It will follow, of course, that the appeal should be allowed, with the consequences indicated by Lindley, L.J.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, W. M. Tilson; Mann & Taylor.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } Stirling, J. } Nov. 25, 26; Dec. 16.

STILL v. WEBB. (a.)

Solicitor—Remuneration—Sale carried out by underlease—Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 44)—General Order under Solicitors' Remuneration Act, Schedule 1, part 1, part 2.

In the case of a sale carried out by means of an underlease the solicitor cannot claim to be remunerated according to the scale under Schedule 1, part 2, of the General Order made under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act. If any scale applies it must be the scale under Schedule 1, part 1.

But, quære, whether the scale applies at all to such a case.

Summons.

This case gave rise to the question whether a sale of leasehold property which had been effected by means of an underlease could properly be charged with costs under Schedule 1, part 2, of the Solicitors' Remuneration Act.

The facts were as follow:

The testator in the action, Wm. Webb, left his estate among his four children, giving each child a life interest, with remainder to the children of that child.

In 1894 certain questions arose as to the construction of the will. An originating summons was taken out, the questions in dispute were decided, and certain costs were allowed which the plaintiffs were authorized to raise by sale or mortgage of certain leasehold property of the testator, and it was declared that these costs were payable out of corpus.

The plaintiffs, who were solicitors, in order to raise these costs caused certain leasehold property in Rotherhithe to be put up for sale by auction in two lots.

Lot 2 was described as being held upon lease with other property for ninety years from the 29th of September, 1860, and it was stated that an underlease would be granted for the whole of the unexpired term, less the last three days, at an apportioned ground-rent of £2 per annum.

The property was sold subject to conditions which provided (clause 4) as follows: "The title to lot 1 shall commence with an indenture of lease, dated the 3rd day of June, 1862, under which the property is held. The title to lot 2 shall commence with an indenture of lease, dated the 12th day of May, 1864, under which this and other property is held, and on the completion of the purchase the vendors will grant, and the purchaser shall accept, an underlease of the property so purchased by him for the whole of the unexpired term under the said lease, less the last three days thereof, at an apportioned ground-rent of £2."

The sale took place, and as regards lot 2 was carried into effect by means of an underlease as mentioned in the conditions.

In October, 1895, two accounts were sent by the plaintiffs to Mr. Chapman, the solicitor who acted for the persons interested in the property, the subject-matter of the originating summons to the extent of one moiety. One of these accounts was an account of income payable to the tenants for life of two-fourths of the estate, the other was an account of the proceeds of sale.

Objections were raised by Mr. Chapman to two items in the second account.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The first was an item of £4 4s., being a fee paid to certain estate agents for the valuation of the property with a view to the sale. This was objected to as being excessive.

The second was an item of £15 15s., being the remuneration claimed by the plaintiffs for the sale of the property, and was arrived at thus:

"Costs of sale of lot 1 according to the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, for which the consideration money amounted to £250, £5.

"Costs of sale of lot 2, which was by way of underlease at a ground-rent of £2, and the consideration money amounted to £200, being £5 in respect of the said rent and £5 in respect of the consideration according to said Act, £10.

Then there were 5s. for stamps and 10s. for the plan.

The objection to this item was that the costs of sale of lot 2 ought to have been the same as those of lot 1—namely, £5.

The plaintiffs not seeing their way to yield to the objection, Mr. Chapman commenced two proceedings in the Lord Mayor's Court, claiming payment by the plaintiffs of the sums due to his clients, the tenants for life of two-fourths of the estate, for income, and over and above that a proportionate part of these excessive demands. Then the plaintiffs took out the present summons, asking that the objections raised by Mr. Chapman might be adjudicated on. The actions in the Lord Mayor's Court were by agreement stayed till the decision of the present summons.

Howard Wright, for the summons.—The sum of £10 is arrived at by treating this as a lease at a premium. The remuneration, therefore, is governed by rule 5 on p. 354 of the Annual Practice, vol. 2. In re Hellard & Bewes, 44 W. R. 475, [1896] 2 Ch. 229, is an authority in my favour.

He also referred to the Annual Practice, vol. 2, pp. 347, 353, and rule 8 at p. 350.

Upjohn, contrâ.—This contention is in fact that you can charge a larger sum on a sale for £200 than you can on a sale for £250. According to this reasoning a mortgage by demise would be paid for twice over, as being a lease for a long term at less than a rack-rent. [STIRLING, J.—If you look at part 2 of Schedule 1 to the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, you find that only applies to lessor and lessee.] You have a lessor and lessee in the case of a mortgage by demise. I submit that the words sales and purchases mean sales and purchases however carried out. If this is a lease they ought to come against the lessee for their costs.

He referred to the Annual Practice, vol. 2, pp. 333, 334, 344, 347, 353, 354; In re Horn & Francis, ante, p. 72.

Howard Wright replied.

Dec. 14.—STIRLING, J., stated the facts, and continued: It is to be observed that the plaintiffs claim to be remunerated according to the scale under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act. The contention on behalf of the respondents, who are tenants for life of two-fourths of the property in question, and the children, who are interested in the corpus is that according to the scale the plaintiffs are not entitled to £10 but only to £5. The plaintiffs rely on Schedule 1, part 2, to the Solicitors' Remuneration Act which begins thus: "First Scale.—Scale of charges as to leases, or agreements for leases, at rack-rent (otherwise than a mining lease, or a lease for building purposes, or agreement for the same)." I may pass over that scale and come to the second scale, which is as follows: "Scale of charges as to conveyances in fee or for any other freehold estate reserving rent or building leases reserving rent, or other long leases not at rack-rent (except mining leases), or agreements for the same respectively." Then there are certain rules applicable to part 2 of Schedule 1, of which rule 5 is as follows [His lordship read the rule, and continued:—] Now, if that rule governs this case, then according to the decision of North, J., in In re Hellard & Bewes, the plaintiffs' have claimed the correct sum, but it is disputed by the respondents that that rule applies at all, and in my judgment the respondents are right. It is true that the rule is headed: "Rules applicable to part 2 of Schedule 1 as to all leases or conveyances at a rent, or agreements for the same, other than mining leases or agreement therefor." But, in my opinion, that heading does not extend the application of part 2 of Schedule 1, but only applies to leases and conveyances in fee or for any other freehold estate reserving rent. Can this transaction be treated as a conveyance within the meaning of that rule? It is not a case of a conveyance in fee or for any freehold interest, but it is said that it is a lease. Now, in fact, it is an underlease, but the transaction was not a lease. It was a sale carried out by a well-known conveyancing expedient to avoid an apportionment of rent, about which there might be a difficulty with the superior landlord. In my judgment, therefore, the rule relied on by the plaintiffs does not apply. Then what rule does apply? If there is anything in the rules which entitles the plaintiffs to the scale-charge, it must be part 1 of Schedule 1, which applies to sales and purchases as well as mortgages and extends to leaseholds. But there remains in my mind a doubt whether the scale is applicable at all, and whether the transaction does not fall within rule 2 (c) of the General Order, as being "business, the remuneration for which is not hereinbefore or in Schedule 1 heretofore provided for," in which case the method of remuneration would be by bill of costs under the old system as altered by Schedule 2. But that would be a departure from the bill of costs tendered here by the plaintiffs, and in my judgment this litigation has not been attended with such benefit to the estate that it ought to be continued any longer. If I have to decide, therefore, whether under the scale the sum of £10 is rightly charged, I must say I think not. [His lordship then dealt with the question whether the surveyor's fee was excessive and, after stating that he had come to the conclusion that it was not, continued:] The result is that on one item the respondents succeed, on the other they fail. I now come to the question of costs. Each party succeeds and each party fails to a certain extent. The whole benefit to the respondent from this litigation is the sum of 50s. I think it deplorable that these two small items should have been litigated to this extent, and I am not disposed to make any order beyond what I am compelled to. The only order which I make as to costs is that the plaintiffs are to have their costs as between solicitor and client of so much of the summons as relates to the valuers' fee out of the moiety of the estate in which the respondents are interested.

Judgment according.

Solicitor, Trower, Freeling, & Parkin; R. Chapman.

Chan. Div. Stirling, J. } Nov. 28.

NELSON v. THE ANGLO-AMERICAN LAND CO. (a.)

Company—Register of mortgages—Right of creditor to inspect and take copies—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), s. 43.

A creditor of a company registered under the Companies Act, 1862, is entitled not only to inspect, but also to take copies of, the register of mortgages of the company kept in pursuance of section 43 of that Act.

Semble, should the addresses of the mortgagees have been also registered, these too can be copied.

Mutter v. Eastern, &c., Railway Co., 36 W. R. 401, 38 Ch. D. 92, considered.

This was a motion by the plaintiff in the action asking that the defendant company might be restrained from preventing him from inspecting the register of mortgages kept by the company in pursuance of section 43 of the Companies Act, 1862.

The facts, which are fully stated in the judgment of Stirling, J., were not disputed, the question in dispute between the parties being whether the plaintiff was or was not entitled to take copies of such register.

Buckley, Q.C., and Younger, for the plaintiffs.—Section 32 of the Act of 1862 gives to shareholders a right not only to inspect but also to require copies of the register of shareholders. Section 43 does not in terms mention copies, but we submit that the right to take copies is impliedly conferred where a right to inspect is given, and Chitty, J., and the Court of Appeal so held in Mutter v. Eastern and Midlands Railway Co., 36 W. R. 401, 38 Ch. D. 92, a decision upon similar sections of the Companies Clauses Acts, 1845 and 1863.

Hastings, Q.C., and A. James, for the defendants.—Mutter's case is clearly distinguishable, for the section there considered requires that the register shall set forth the names and address of the mortgagees. The difference in the language of sections 25 and 43 of the Act of 1862 shows that the Legislature did not intend mortgagees to have the right to take copies. The section being a penal one must be construed strictly.

STIRLING, J.—The short question which is at issue between the plaintiff and defendant company in this case is whether the plaintiff—who admittedly is entitled to inspect the register kept by the company under section 43 of the Companies Act, 1862—is also entitled to take copies of such portions as he may desire of such register. Now, the circumstances which give rise to the question are very short and simple.

It appears that the plaintiff was a holder of a debenture the principal money of which fell due in 1894. The defendant company were unable to pay off the debenture and in February, 1895, they made a scheme under the Joint Stock Companies Acts by virtue of which the plaintiff's money became payable by instalments. During the course of the present year, 1896, the plaintiff appears to have become dissatisfied with the position of the company and he was desirous of obtaining information as to the holders of the other debentures of the company, and with that object he sought inspection of the register kept under section 43 and he also proceeded to take copies of portions thereof. This was objected to and this action was brought. The only sections of the Act of 1862 that are material are sections 43 and 25. [His lordship read the sections.] Now, it is no doubt matter of observation that the register of mortgagees and incumbrances, which is directed to be kept under section 43, provides that the company shall enter the names and does not provide for the entry of the addresses or occupations, whereas the register of shareholders is required to contain the addresses and occupations as well as the names.

(a.) Reported by W. SCOTT THOMPSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Then I have to consider what is the law applicable to the subject. That has been considered in a case which arose under the Companies Clauses Acts, 1845 and 1863, and there it has been held that the right of inspection and perusal includes the right to take copies. That was so decided both by Chitty, J., and the Court of Appeal in the case of Mutter v. Eastern and Midlands Railway Co. I don't propose to go through the whole of the judgment. The general effect of the judgment of the Court of Appeal is that a right of inspection primâ facie carries with it a right to take copies, unless you can see that the right to take copies was not intended to be given.

It is obvious that a right to inspect without any right to take copies would be of very small assistance to the person inspecting the register. These registers are not short and the person inspecting would have to rely on his memory. The decision in Mutter v. Eastern and Midlands Railway Co. is no doubt upon a different statute, but it shows the general way in which the court regards rights of inspection. But it may be that in the present case there is something which would exclude the right to take copies. Now, what is it that is relied on here as excluding the right? It is said that section 43 does not require the addresses to be inserted. The same point was raised in Mutter v. Eastern and Midlands Railway Co. and there Lindley, L.J., pointed out that section 36 of the Act of 1845, which enables judgment creditors to inspect the register of shareholders, would be practically useless if it were construed strictly, and so as not to include a right to take copies. What the reason may be for the difference in the language of the two sections I cannot say. But is this enough to prevent me from saying that a copy is not to be taken by the person inspecting the register? I think not.

I assume that the company have confined themselves to keeping the register in strict compliance with section 43, and that the register contains "in respect of each mortgage or charge a short description of the property mortgaged or charged, the amount of charge created, and the names of the mortgagees or persons entitled to such charge." The object of that, it is said, is to enable the person inspecting to make himself acquainted with the property charged. It seems to me that primâ facie the person inspecting would be entitled to take a copy of that information, and whatever his object in taking a copy, I don't see that that is to preclude him from exercising his legal right, whether or not the register contains the addresses as well as the names of the mortgagees; but if it does, and the company have thought fit to keep the register in that way, I certainly do not hold that they can prevent him from taking a copy of anything that may be registered there.

Another argument was also used. It was said that the decision of the Court of Appeal proceeded on the ground that there was no penalty imposed by section 28 of the Act of 1863. [His lordship read the passage on p. 106, 38 C. D., beginning, "Bearing in mind," &c., down to "intended to be excluded."] What the lord justice seems to me to be dealing with, there is the true construction of the Act of Parliament, and he is considering this question—does the circumstance that in section 119 of the Act of 1845 a right to take copies is expressly conferred, and a penalty imposed if copies are not allowed to be taken negative the right, under section 28 of the Act of 1863, to take copies? And his lordship came to the conclusion that it did not.

Here it is made penal to refuse inspection, though nothing is said about taking copies. But it seems to me that here again the existence of a penalty does not negative the right to take copies as incident to inspection. On the whole I come to the conclusion that there is nothing to negative the right of the plaintiff to take copies of this register. There must be an injunction to restrain the company from preventing the plaintiff from inspecting the register in accordance with the provisions of the Act of 1862.

Solicitors, Henry Smith; Dale, Newman, & Hood.

Chan. Div. } Nov. 26.
Stirling, J. }

In re LEVER.
CORDWELL v. LEVER. (a.)

Local government—Public health—Tenant for life—Remainderman—Expense of sanitary repairs—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), ss. 11, 117, 121.

The expenses of sanitary repairs ordered by the local authority under the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, are payable out of corpus, and are not borne by the tenant for life.

Summons.

This summons dealt with certain questions arising under the will of George Lever, but the only one which requires reporting was whether the costs of certain sanitary repairs of some leasehold houses forming part of the testator's estate were to be paid by the tenant for life or out of capital. The repairs in question had been ordered by the local authorities under the Public Health (London) Act, 1891.

Notice requiring them to be executed had been sent to the occupiers of the houses, to the trustees, and to the trustees' agent.

The work had been carried out, and the cost thereof paid by the trustees.

Stokes, for one of the trustees, and D. Cowan, for the other trustee, took no part in the argument.

Grosvenor Woods, Q.C. and Metcalfe, for the tenant for life.—We submit that the costs of these repairs should be raised out of the general estate. R. Baring, 41 W. R. 87, [1893] 1 Ch. 61. This is a liability which falls upon the trustees under the covenants in the lease, and should be borne by them.

Graham Hastings, Q.C., and Dunham, for the remaindermen.—We call attention to the formal order under which these repairs have been done. If the work is not executed by the owner, the authorities can do it and charge the cost on the house under section 116 of the Public Health (London) Act, 1891. In all the cases cited there was payment by the trustees, and it was held that there was no obligation on the tenant for life to repay. Re Tucker, 43 W. R. 581, [1895] 2 Ch. 408, shows that the liability is between the tenant for life and the remaindermen thrown on the tenant for life.

Grosvenor Woods, Q.C., in reply.—[STIRLING, J. referred to section 121 of the Public Health Act.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

This is the same as an obligation existing at the time of the testator's death.

He referred to sections 11 and 162 of the Public Health Act.

STIRLING, J., after referring to the first question raised by the summons, continued: The second question is of a different kind. It appears that under the Public Health Act, 1891, the local authorities gave notice to the owner or occupier of certain leasehold houses forming part of the testator's estate, and in particular to the agent who received the rents of these houses on behalf of the trustees calling on them to do certain works. The work has been done, and the question now is, how the trustees are to be repaid the sums expended on this work. So far as I have been able to ascertain from the clauses of the Public Health Act, 1891, to which my attention has been called in the course of the argument, the position is this: The Act throws the obligation to effect these works on the owner of the property, and if he does not perform this obligation, then the local authorities may execute the works themselves, and the costs may be recovered from the occupier, but the occupier is to be at liberty to deduct them from the rent to be paid by him to the owner, so that ultimately the incidence of these costs falls on the owner.

Now, in this case who is the owner? The owner, as defined by the Act, is the person in receipt of the rack-rents. That person in the present instance is the trustees, and therefore the trustees are bound by virtue of being the person in receipt of the rack-rent, and payment of these costs falls on them as trustees under this will. Of course they are entitled to an indemnity; and the question is whether that indemnity is to fall on the tenant for life, or to be paid out of corpus? I can see nothing either in the frame of this will or in the general law which throws the costs of this indemnity on the tenant for life. The case that has been referred to as proving that sanitary expenses do not fall on corpus seems to me to be of a different description altogether. That was the law as to improvements under the Settled Land Acts, but as regards ordinary repairs the costs must be borne in the ordinary way.

The result therefore is that the costs and expenses are to be paid in the first instance by the trustees, and are to be repaid to the trustees out of corpus.

Declaration accordingly.

Solicitors, George Cordwell; R. K. Metcalfe; Gasquet & Metcalfe; F. G. Cordwell.

Q. B. Div. (Hawkins, J.) — Oct. 31; Nov. 28.

APPLEYARD v. LAMBETH VESTRY. (a.)

Metropolis management—Drain or sewer—Combined drain constructed before 1848—Liability of vestry to repair—Metropolis Management Act, 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 120), ss. 68, 69, 250—Metropolis Management Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 102), s. 112.

The plaintiff was the owner of a group or block of houses which were drained by a combined operation into a public sewer. This drainage was constructed prior to 1848, and was therefore not constructed by the order or with the sanction of the Metropolitan Commissioners of Sewers or of the vestry. The drainage becoming defective, the plaintiff sought to compel the vestry to repair it, on the ground that it was a sewer vested in them.

Held, that the sewage conduct pipe was not a "drain" within the meaning of section 250 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, nor within the meaning of section 112 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1862, but was a "sewer" within the meaning of the said section 250 of the Act of 1855, and that it was therefore repairable by the vestry under the provisions contained in sections 68 and 69 of that Act.

This action was tried by Hawkins, J., without a jury. The plaintiff claimed against the defendants a mandamus commanding them, pursuant to sections 69, 71, and 72 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, and other Acts to repair, cleanse, and maintain certain pipes or sewers, and also a declaration that such pipes or sewers are "sewers" within the meaning of the said Acts and vested in the defendants.

McCall, Q.C., and Morton Smith, for the plaintiff.

Tindal Atkinson, Q.C., and Muir Mackenzie, for the defendants.

Cur. adv. vult.

The facts of the case and the arguments of counsel sufficiently appear in the following written judgment.

Nov. 28.—HAWKINS, J., read the following judgment: This action was tried by me without a jury on the 31st of October, 1896. The endorsement on the writ, which was issued on the 9th of May in the same year, claimed against the defendants a mandamus commanding them pursuant to sections 69, 71, and 72 of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, and other Acts hereafter referred to, to repair, cleanse, and maintain the pipes or sewers which carry the drainage of Nos. 85, 87, 89, and 91, York-road, Lambeth, in the county of Surrey, "from the point at which the drainage of more than one house is received into such sewers up to the point of discharge into the main sewer in York-road." The endorsement also claims a declaration that such pipes or sewers are "sewers" within the meaning of the said Acts and vested in the defendants. There were no other pleadings.

I find the facts to be as follows: On the 20th of December, 1838, one Saunders, the freeholder, granted a building lease to Messrs. Grissell & Peto of a piece of land in the York-road, Lambeth. On this piece of land Messrs. Grissell & Peto erected the four houses adjoining each other, Nos. 85, 87, 89, and 91, York-road, which were finished and occupied in the year 1839 or 1840, each being let to and occupied by a different person as a separate tenement. Each of these houses and at least two others, Nos. 8 and 9, Addington-crescent, the property of a different owner, were, and still are, drained by pipes laid for draining the whole six houses by a combined operation, Nos. 85 and 87, York-road, and 8 and 9, Addington-crescent draining into a branch pipe about 9in. internal diameter. This pipe discharges its contents into another brick-barrel drain, about 12in. internal diameter, into which the drainage of Nos. 89 and 91 is first drained. The whole drainage of the six houses is then conveyed for a distance of 48ft. to 50ft. through the barrel drain down to and into and is carried away by the main sewer which runs along York-road at right angles with the barrel drain. The whole of this drainage system, with the exception of so much as is contiguous to Nos. 8 and 9, Addington-crescent, was constructed on the land of the owner of the four houses in York-road until the barrel drain reaches the York-road, and it was so constructed at the same time as the houses were built; indeed, it was formally admitted by the defendants that "the present system of combined drainage of the said houses has existed from the date of the erection of the said houses." The land so leased to Grissell & Peto, with the said houses built thereon, is now vested in the plaintiff for a term which will not expire until Christmas, 1923.

(a) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

On the 28th of November, 1895, the sanitary inspector of the vestry served on the plaintiff a notice that the drainage was defective, and on the 13th of January, 1896, a further notice to reconstruct it in accordance with the bye-laws of the vestry. The drainage was, in fact, defective, and required to be remade. The plaintiff denied his liability, contending that the vestry were themselves liable, and on the 20th of March, by notice in writing, he required the vestry (the defendants) to do the necessary work. They declined to do so. Thereupon this action was commenced. There is no reason to doubt that the drainage as it was constructed in 1838 is the same as exists at the present time. Whether it was then legally so constructed or not does not seem to me to be material; there was really no evidence upon the subject; but, if I am at liberty to presume anything, I should say it was legally so, for in October, 1838, the then drainage authority sanctioned the drainage of the barrel drain into the main sewer, and no objection has ever been made to it since—now fifty-eight years. It was common ground that the liability to repair or reconstruct depends upon the solution of the question whether the sewage conduit (to give it a neutral term) is at the present day a "drain" repairable by the private owner, or a "sewer" repairable by the vestry, under the provisions of the Metropolis Management Acts, 1855 and 1862. I need not discuss the sections of those Acts relating to the repair of "drains" by private owners; for it is agreed that, if the conduit in question is shown to be a "sewer" within the meaning of section 250 of the Act of 1855, the vestry is responsible for its repair, their liability to repair it having been imposed on them by sections 68 and 69 of the same Act.

By section 68 it is enacted that all sewers vested in the Metropolitan Commissioners of Sewers shall become vested in the vestry in the parish, and by section 69 the vestry are to repair and maintain the sewers so vested in them. That this (if a sewer) was vested in the Metropolitan Commissioners of Sewers under section 7 of the Metropolitan Commissioners of Sewers Act, 1848, was unquestioned. The 250th section of the Act of 1855 very clearly defines what shall be deemed to be "sewers" and what "drains" for the purposes of that Act. It enacts that the word "sewer" shall mean and include sewers and drains of every description, except drains to which the word "drain," interpreted as it is in that section, applies. Now, the interpretation given to the word "drain" is as follows: The word "drain" shall mean and include any drain of, and used for the drainage of, one building only, "or premises within the same curtilage, and made merely for the purpose of communicating with a cesspool, or other like receptacle for drainage, or with a sewer into which the drainage of two or more buildings or premises occupied by different persons is conveyed; and shall also include any drain for draining any group or block of houses by a combined operation under the order of any vestry or district board." The Act of 1862 (which by section 110 is to be read with the Act of 1855 as one Act) by section 112 extends this interpretation to "any drain for draining a group or block of houses by a combined operation laid or constructed before the 1st of January, 1856, pursuant to the order or direction, or with the sanction or approval of the Metropolitan Commissioners of Sewers." There is no pretence for saying that the conduit in question is a drain used for the drainage of one building only, but it is a drain for draining a group or block of houses by a combined operation, and it would have fallen within the interpretation given to the word "drain" if, having been laid and constructed before the 1st of January, 1856, it had been so by the order or direction, or with the sanction or approval of the Metropolitan Commissioners of Sewers, or since that time of the vestry. I find, however, no trace or evidence of any such order, sanction, or approval of either of these bodies, and I find as a fact that none ever existed.

It was suggested, but not much pressed, that I might presume it had the sanction of the local sewer authorities for Surrey and Kent, who certainly did not object; but this is immaterial, for the definitive clause of the Metropolis Management Act, 1855, requires the order or approval of either the Metropolitan Commissioners of Sewers, who had no existence until 1848 (11 & 12 Vict. c. 112), or the vestry, who took over the powers and jurisdiction of those commissioners in 1855. The local commissioners of sewers for Surrey and Kent, who had jurisdiction in those counties when the houses were built, were a totally distinct body whose existence terminated when the Metropolitan Commissioners were constituted by the Act of 1848. I find, for the reasons above mentioned, that the conduit in question is a "sewer" repairable by the vestry. I do not think it necessary to discuss the cases cited to me—Kershaw v. Taylor, 44 W. R. 28, [1895] 2 Q. B. 208 and 471; Vestry of St. Leonards v. Phelan, 44 W. R. 427, [1896] 1 Q. B. 533; and Reg. v. St. Matthew, Bethnal Green, 44 W. R. 559, 697 [1896] 2 Q. B. 95, 319—for they confirm the view I have taken, and there is not a word to be found in either of them militating against that view.

My judgment is for the plaintiff for the mandamus and declaration as prayed for, with costs.

Judgment for plaintiff.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Venn & Woodcock.

Solicitors for the defendant, Miller, Smith, & Bell.

Q. B. Div.
(Hawkins, Cave, and Wright, JJ.)

Nov. 14.

FRANCIS (Appellant) v. METCALFE (Respondent). (a.)

Election law—Registration—Parliament—Franchise—Old lodger claim—Omission of part of declaration—Mistake—Power of amendment—Parliamentary and Municipal Registration Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 26), s. 28, sub-section 2.

Where an old lodger, whose name was on the existing register, sends in within the proper time for old lodger claims a claim in respect of the same lodgings, but by mistake omits to state in the declaration of the claim, that he is on the register of electors in respect of the same lodgings, and that he desires to have his name inserted on the old lodger list, the revising barrister has power to correct the mistake by inserting in the declaration the omitted statement.

Case stated by the revising barrister for the borough of the Tower Hamlets.

At a court held for the revision of the lists of voters for the St. George Division of the borough of the Tower Hamlets, on the 18th and 23rd days of September, 1896, it appeared that James Avery and James Beavers and eighty-six other persons had been placed by the overseers on the old lodger list for the St. George Division of the borough.

(a.) Reported by Sir SHERSTON BAKER, Bart., Barrister-at-Law.

At the hearing of the objections hereinafter mentioned it was proved that James Avery and James Beavers were old lodgers, and were on the register then in force as lodgers in respect of the same qualifications as were stated in their claims; that they desired to be entered on the list in respect of the same lodgings, and that they accordingly sent notices of their claims to the overseers on the 25th day of July, 1896, and the overseers accepted such claims, and inserted their names on the old lodger list, which was duly published by the overseers.

It was also proved that the claims were made on printed forms supplied to the claimants by one of the local political agents. Each such claim was in the following form:

"To the overseers of the parish of St. George-in-the-East.—I claim to have my name inserted in the list of electors in your parish for the borough of the Tower Hamlets, St. George Division, in respect of the qualification named below"; then, after the description of the qualification, came the following declaration: "I hereby declare that I have during the twelve calendar months immediately preceding the 15th day of July in this year occupied as sole tenant and resided in the above-mentioned lodgings, and that those lodgings are of a yearly value, if let unfurnished, of ten pounds and upwards." Such claim was duly signed, dated, and attested, but the declaration omitted to state that the claimant was on the register of electors for the parliamentary borough in respect of the same lodgings, and desired to have his name inserted in the old lodger list. The statutory form prescribed for claims by lodgers, whether old or new lodgers, is Form H, No. 2, in the Registration Order, 1895. According to that form, in the case of an old lodger claim, the declaration should contain the following statement: "And I hereby declare that I am on the register of electors for the said division (or county) in respect of the same lodgings as above mentioned, and I desire to have my name inserted on the old lodger list." In the case of a new lodger claim that part of the declaration is to be omitted. Form H, No. 2, has further a note appended to it, as follows: "If the claimant is on the register and desires to have his name inserted in the old lodgers list . . . he must send in his claim on or before the 25th day of July. In any other case he must send it in (to the overseers) after the last day of July and on or before the 20th August.

It was further proved that the local agent applied to his office for forms of lodger claims for the purpose of supplying them to James Avery and the other claimants; but that as his application did not specify whether old or new lodger forms were required, the forms sent to him were those used for new lodgers, from which the said final declaration is omitted; and it was also proved that the local agent supplied the forms so sent to him to the claimants without noticing the omission of such declaration, and under the impression that they were in the correct form for old lodger claims.

At the sitting of the court on the 18th of September the appellant who was on the list of voters, gave notice in writing that he objected to the claims on the ground that they were bad as old lodger claims by reason of the omission of the aforesaid final declaration, and were bad as new lodger claims by reason of their having been delivered to the overseers before the last day of July, 1896.

These objections were overruled by the revising barrister, who was of opinion that if the claims were to be treated as old lodger claims he had power to amend them by inserting the final declaration on the authority of Ainsley v. Nicholson, 24 Q. B. D. 144, 38 W. R. Dig. 74, and Reg. v. McKellar, 41 W. R. 142, [1893] 1 Q. B. 121, as he was satisfied on the evidence that the claimants were on the existing register of electors in respect of the same lodgings as they claimed for, and that they were desirous of having their names inserted in the old lodger list, and intended to claim to be on that list; and, in his opinion, the omission of that part of the declaration was caused solely by a mistake on the part of the political agents; and he accordingly treated the claims as if they had been so amended, and refused to remove the claimants' names from the list. He also held that if he had not power so to amend them the claims would be good as new lodger claims, as he considered they were not invalidated as such by reason of the instructions contained in the note to Form H, No. 2, in the Registration Order, 1895, to the effect that new lodger claims are to be sent in after the last day in July, having been disregarded, and he thought the present case distinguishable from Whitwell v. Clerk of the Peace for the North Riding of Yorkshire, Fox's Registration Cases, vol. 1, p. 152 (1889), as in that case an old lodger claim was not forwarded to the overseers in time for publication and was not published by them; and further, it seemed to him that there was no express provision by Act of Parliament as to the time for sending in new lodger claims, as is the case with old lodgers under section 22 of 41 & 42 Vict. c. 26.

He therefore held that the claimants were entitled to be on the lodger list, and he refused to remove them therefrom. If the revising barrister was wrong in this respect, the names are to be erased from the list.

S. H. Day, for the appellant.—There is no authority for making the amendment in such a case as this. The lodger franchise was first conferred by section 4 of 30 & 31 Vict. c. 102, and that section makes the claiming to be registered a part of the qualification. The claim to be registered is an essential part of the qualification for the lodger franchise: Hersant v. Halse, 35 W. R. 503, 18 Q. B. D. 412. All the statutory forms previous to 1895, contained this final declaration, and the form now in use contains the same declaration to be made by an old lodger claiming in respect of the same lodgings. The attestation and declaration are essential parts of the claim, and if the declaration be omitted the revising barrister has no power to amend, as we see by the cases of Jones v. Kent, 37 W. R. 303, 22 Q. B. D. 204, and Smith v. Chandler, 37 W. R. 351, 22 Q. B. D. 208. [HAWKINS, J.—The claimant signed this claim believing, by mistake, that it was a proper old lodger claim, and the revising barrister has held that it was a mistake. According to the decision in Reg. v. McKellar, and the judgment of Lord Coleridge, C.J., in Ainsley v. Nicholson, there was power to correct the mistake.] The power to amend a claim is given by section 28, sub-section 2, of the Parliamentary and Municipal Registration Act, 1878; but that does not give power to make such an amendment as this.

Raven, for the respondent, was not called upon.

HAWKINS, J.—I think the two cases referred to by the revising barrister are conclusive as authorities on the question; but apart from those cases, I should have come to the same conclusion. The claim and declaration form one thing, and the revising barrister therefore had power to correct the mistake in the declaration as being a mistake in the claim. As to the mistake itself, I have no shadow of doubt but that it was a mistake which the revising barrister had power to amend.

CAVE, J.—I am of the same opinion. The case is quite unarguable.

WRIGHT, J.—I am of the same opinion.

Appeal dismissed. Leave to appeal refused.

Solicitors for the appellant, Lewis & Lewis.

Solicitors for the respondent, Gasquet & Metcalfe.

Q. B. Div.)
(Day and Lawrance, JJ.) } Aug. 10, 11, 1896.

In re AN ARBITRATION BETWEEN MORGAN AND ANOTHER (Claimants) AND THE LONDON AND NORTH-WESTERN RAILWAY CO. (Respondents). (a.)

Compensation—Land let at low rent for public park—Proviso for re-entry if land compulsorily taken—Land taken by company—Principle of compensation.

The claimants, who were lessees of a piece of land, demised the land for the remainder of their term less one day, to a corporation at a low rent upon condition that the land should be laid out and kept as a public park. The lease contained a proviso that if the land were taken compulsorily under the powers of an Act of Parliament it should be lawful for the lessor to re-enter and re-possess the land as of his former estate. Part of the land was taken by a railway company under statutory powers, but the lessor did not re-enter upon the land taken.

Held, that the claimants were entitled to receive as compensation the full commercial value of their interest in the land considered as freed from the lease, and not merely the capitalized value of the nominal rent paid to them by the corporation under the lease.

Award in the form of a special case stated by an arbitrator.

The claim was under the Lands Clauses Consolidation Act to recover compensation for land taken and damages for severance. The sole question now was as to the principle upon which the compensation was to be computed in respect of the land taken.

In 1822 the Corporation of Swansea demised thirty-eight acres of land for ninety-nine years to the claimants' predecessor in title, from the 29th of September, 1821, at a yearly rental of £9 2s. This land was, and still is, "burrows"—that is, sand by the seashore just above high-watermark. Part of it has been used for building purposes and upwards of 2,000 houses, part of the town of Swansea, have been built upon a part of the burrows. A part of the thirty-eight acres, consisting of one acre and thirty-two perches, is the land taken, and the apportioned rent payable by the claimants to their lessors for it is 5s. 10d. per annum.

By underleases in 1877 and 1889 the claimants re-let eleven acres and sixteen perches—part of the thirty-eight acres—to the corporation for the whole of their term less one day upon an improved rental amounting to nearly £5 per acre. These underleases contained, amongst other covenants, a proviso that the corporation would lay out the demised premises as an esplanade and public promenade for the use of the people of Swansea, and would keep the same so laid out in good and sufficient repair and order for the term granted, and also a proviso that "in case the demised premises or any part thereof should be required or taken by a railway or other public company under the power or authority of an Act of Parliament, then and in such case it should be lawful for the lessors into and upon so much of the said premises thereby demised as was so required to re-enter, and the said premises to have again and re-possess as of their former estate, the rents therein before reserved being reduced in proportion to the quantity of land taken."

In 1891 the London and North-Western Railway Co., acting under powers conferred on them by an Act of Parliament, gave notice to treat for, and in 1892 they entered into possession of the land taken, by consent of the corporation and of the claimants, and constructed sidings, yards, &c., upon the same.

The claimants did not actually re-enter or re-possess themselves of any part of the land so demised by them, and the corporation continues in possession of all the land demised under the underleases (except the one acre and thirty-two perches taken from them by the company), and still uses the same as a public esplanade in accordance with the provisions of the underleases.

On behalf of the company it was contended that as the claimants had parted with their term except for one day, the value of the claimants' leasehold interest in the land taken was the amount of reserved rent which would be lost to them during the residue of the term—that is to say, the sum of about £5 per annum capitalized for the residue of the term (about twenty-eight and three-quarter years), together with the value of one day's reversion, and that the taking of the land by the company under the Act did not enable the claimants to treat it for the purposes of compensation as available to them for general purposes of profit during the twenty-eight and three-quarter year stills to run, as though the underleases had ceased to exist so far as the land taken was concerned.

On behalf of the claimants it was contended that as the railway company had taken part of the land under the authority of there Act of Parliament, the claimants were entitled to treat the land so taken as in hand free from the underleases, and to receive as compensation the sum for which such land might be expected to let for commercial purposes during the remainder of the term.

The question for the court was whether the compensation for the land taken should be determined upon the principle contended for by the company, in which case the arbitrator fixed the amount of the compensation at £182 10s.; or upon the principle contended for by the claimants, in which case the arbitrator fixed the compensation at £735.

Channell, Q.C., and Glascodine, for the claimants, were stopped by the court.

J. G. Pease (H. D. Greene, Q.C., and C. A. Russell with him), for the company, in support of the above contentions, cited Stebbing v. The Metropolitan Board of Works, 19 W. R. 73, L. R. 6 Q. B. 37; and Penny v. Penny, 16 W. R. 671, L. R. 5 Eq. 227.

Channell, Q.C., in reply.

DAY, J.—This case has given me a considerable amount of trouble, probably from the conciseness with which the case is stated by the arbitrator, and from the difficulty I have had in ascertaining what the facts really were. The £5 per acre under the underleases may or may not have been the rack-rent of these eleven acres at that time. No information was given to us in the special case as to whether it was rack-rent or not, but it seems not improbable that it was not the true rack-rent for the period for which the underleases were granted. But in these underleases very peculiar stipulations were introduced, one of which certainly would not have been applicable to the circumstances existing at the date of the original lease of 1822. First of all, there was a stipulation as to the laying out of the park by the corporation, and to this stipulation I attach a great deal of importance. The corporation were to take these eleven acres of land and pay £5 per acre, and keep it as a public promenade and park. The land was let to the corporation, not for the purpose of their making any profit, but for the purpose of their holding it for the benefit of the inhabitants, who were to have the use of it. The corporation were to be benefited by having a large space of land unoccupied and not built upon, but the land would be unprofitable in their hands in any sense except as being a benefit to the public. These eleven acres were a part only of the land which the claimants' predecessor took from the corporation in 1822, and the corporation were to hold this part for the whole term (less one day) during which the claimants were interested in the other land which they held under the lease of 1822. Laying out this land as an esplanade and park would no doubt be beneficial to the other land of the claimants, and if by letting it to the corporation at £5 per acre, which possibly at that time was considerably under the rack-rent, the claimants could benefit their other land, they were acting wisely in so letting it to the corporation, and that may have been the reason for entering into the stipulation as to re-entry. The result of this stipulation was, that if any portion of the eleven acres was required and taken by a railway company, then the claimants were to be at liberty to re-enter upon that portion, and the rental of the residue of the land, all of which had been laid out as a park and was still held by the corporation, was to be diminished in proportion.

(a.) Reported by Sir SHERSTON BAKER, Bart., Barrister-at-Law.

As to the question of the re-entry, I am inclined to adopt the view put forward by Mr. Channell that it does not mean a formal re-entry, but simply that the interest of the corporation in the land was to cease, and that the claimants were to be considered as the persons entitled to the land and to all profits of the land. The claimants gave up their land to the corporation in consideration not only of £5 a year per acre, but also of the corporation constructing a park on the land, thereby improving the claimants' other property, and it is not unreasonable that the claimants should say to the corporation: "I let you this land for a park; you will not be able to get compensation from anyone who takes the land for a railway company, but it is only fair and reasonable that I, who have made a sacrifice in so letting it, should be able to say to any person who comes in to take the land, that the land is mine, and that I can sell for the fair market price of the land." That substantially is the claimants' contention, and I think that it is right. The company gave this notice to treat, and this notice at once put an end to the right of the parties to interfere with the land or to add to its value. The land is to be sold as of the value it was at the time the notice to treat was given, and the question we have to determine is, What was its value at that time? The notice put an end to the underlease so far as the land was concerned which was comprised in the notice. The right of the claimants, however, who were the only persons who could sell, remained. They were the only persons who could sell and who had a title to sell, and they have been dealt with by the company as the persons who had a right to sell. The land was not taken as land belonging to the corporation, but it is rightly dealt with as land belonging to the claimants, and the company have recognized their title to sell the land by giving them notice to treat. What are they entitled to sell? Are they entitled to sell the land as "land taken as in hand and free from the underleases," to use the expression in the special case? The very object of the provision in the underleases was to enable the claimants to sell the land as in hand and free from the underleases. The land is to be in hand from the underleases, and therefore, in point of terms, the condition is fulfilled. The land has become in hand and free from the underleases, and the claimants are the persons who alone can sell the land and who alone can make title to the company. We have now to deal with the interest they have in the land. The commercial value of the land is found by the arbitrator to be £735. The land has evidently increased in value to a very considerable amount. Who is entitled to that increase? The persons who succeeded in getting clear of the underleases, the persons owning and selling the land and who alone can make a title to the land—namely, the claimants. They have the land free and are entitled to sell the land as free land, and they sell it accordingly.

The case was very properly distinguished by Mr. Channell from the case of Stebbing v. The Metropolitan Board of Works, which had reference to land taken for a burial ground, which land, therefore, was permanently taken out of the market. Here the stipulation was that the letting of the land for public purposes for £5 an acre should not prejudice the lessors, and that they should not be bound to take merely the capitalized value of the £5 a year, but that they should be entitled to get the fair commercial value of the land. It seems to me that the contention of the claimants is right, and that they are entitled to recover under the award the sum of £735. I have not arrived at this conclusion without difficulty and hesitation, but upon the whole my opinion is that the claimants are entitled to sell the land and to be paid for it the full commercial value—namely, the £735, which has been assessed by the arbitrator. I think, therefore, our judgment should be for the claimants.

Lawrance, J.—I am entirely of the same opinion.

Judgment for the claimants, with costs.

Solicitors for the claimants, Beor & Plant, Swansea.

Solicitor for the respondents, C. H. Mason.

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div. (Lord Esher, M.R., and Lopes and Rigby, L.JJ.) — Dec. 9.

Darlow v. Bland. (a.)

Bill of sale—Consideration—True statement—Consideration under £30—Bills of Sale Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43), ss. 8, 12.

A bill of sale was expressed to be given in consideration of the sum of £13 12*s. then owing by the grantors under a promissory note, and of* £16 8*s. then paid to the grantors, making together the sum of* £30, the receipt of which the grantors acknowledged.

The promissory note, which was given in consideration of an advance of £10, was for £14 3*s.* 4*d. payable by weekly instalments of* 11*s.* 4*d. each, the whole balance to become payable on default in payment of any instalment. At the date when the bill of sale was given the first instalment of* 11*s.* 4*d. had been paid, and the second instalment was not yet due. The sum of* £16 8*s. was in fact paid on the execution of the bill of sale.*

Held, that the bill of sale was void, on the grounds— (1) that it did not truly set forth the consideration for which it was given within the meaning of section 8 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1882; (2) that it was given in consideration of a sum under £30 within the meaning of section 12.

(a.) Reported by F. G. Rucker, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Application for judgment or a new trial in an action tried in the Court of Passage, Liverpool.

On the 31st of December, 1895, the plaintiff, Elizabeth Darlow, advanced the sum of £10 to George Topham and Priscilla Topham, two of the defendants, and received a promissory note signed by the three defendants, Annie Amelia Bland, George Topham, and Priscilla Topham, for £14 3s. 4d., payable by weekly instalments of 11s. 4d. each. On default in payment of any instalment the whole balance was to become payable.

The first instalment was duly paid, but on the 13th of January, 1896, before the second instalment became due, the Tophams, not being in a position to pay the second instalment, applied to the plaintiff for a further advance.

The plaintiff made a further advance of £16 8s. on the security of a bill of sale given to her by the Tophams on the same day.

The bill of sale was expressed to be given "in consideration of the sum of £13 12s. now owing by George Topham and Priscilla Topham under a promissory note dated the 31st of December, 1895, and of £16 8s. now paid to George Topham and Priscilla Topham, making together the sum of £30, the receipt of which the said George Topham and Priscilla Topham hereby acknowledge."

The plaintiff having brought this action on the promissory note, a counter-claim was set up to recover damages from the plaintiff for having wrongfully broken and entered on the Tophams' premises, which the plaintiff justified under the bill of sale.

Judgment was given at the trial for the plaintiff.

The defendants appealed, and contended, inter alia, that they were entitled to judgment on the counter-claim, on the ground that the bill of sale was bad—(1) because it did not truly set forth the consideration for which it was given within the meaning of section 8 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1882; and (2) because it was given in consideration of a sum under £30 within the meaning of section 12 of that Act.

F. Dodd, for the defendants.

Loehnis, for the plaintiff.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 9.—LOPES, L.J., read the following judgment: Several points were raised in this case, but it is only necessary to consider the point arising on the validity of the bill of sale.

The Bills of Sale Act, 1882, requires by section 8 that every bill of sale like the present "shall truly set forth the consideration for which it is given." It is said that this bill of sale does not comply with that requirement. I am clearly of opinion that it does not. This bill of sale purports to be given "in consideration of the sum of £13 12s. now owing by George Topham and Priscilla Topham under a promissory note dated the 31st of December, 1895, and of £16 8s. now paid to George Topham and Priscilla Topham, making together the sum of £30, the receipt of which the said George Topham and Priscilla Topham hereby acknowledge." All that was actually paid was £26 8s., being £16 8s. on the execution of the bill of sale, and £10, the consideration for the promissory note, but the receipt of the full sum of £30 is acknowledged. This is not in accordance with the facts, and is untrue, because £26 8s. was all that was really received. Section 9 of the Act of 1882 provides that a bill of sale like the present is to be void unless made in accordance with the form in the schedule. The form says, "in consideration of the sum of £—— now paid to A. B. by C. D., the receipt of which the said A. B. hereby acknowledges," contemplating a then existing debt then payable. But the consideration here is not truly stated. £30 was not received. The £13 12s. was not then payable, and only a portion of it—namely, £10—was received. If a bill of sale like this was held to be good, it would be rendering nugatory the provision contained in section 12 of the Act, which says: "Every bill of sale made or given in consideration of any sum under £30 shall be void." How can it be said that this bill of sale was not given for a sum under £30? It was given for £26 8s., and when the grantors acknowledged the receipt of £30 (which I can only understand as £30 in cash) they said that which was untrue. On the ground that the consideration was not truly stated, and also on the ground that the bill of sale was given for a sum under £30, I think it is bad.

RIGBY, L.J., read the following judgment: The only question on this appeal which was left for decision by the court was the validity of the counter-claim of the defendants, Topham and wife, for damages occasioned by the plaintiff's taking and converting goods and chattels of the same defendants. The plaintiff justified the taking and conversion of the goods as done under the authority of a bill of sale dated the 13th of January, 1896; and the point to be determined is whether that was a valid bill of sale. If it was, the judgment entered for the plaintiff on the counter-claim will stand; if it was not, judgment on the counter-claim must be given for Topham and wife for £40, the amount of damage ascertained by the jury. The bill of sale is said to be void—(1) because it did not truly set forth the consideration for which it was given within the meaning of section 8 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, Amendment Act, 1882; and (2) because it was made or given in consideration of a sum under £30 within the meaning of section 12 of the same Act. As, however, the consideration appearing on the face of the bill of sale is £30, the second objection cannot arise unless the first is determined in favour of the defendants; but the smallest excess in the statement of the consideration will make section 12 applicable.

The bill of sale purports to be given "in consideration of the sum of £13 12s. now owing by George Topham and Priscilla Topham under a promissory note dated the 31st of December, 1895, and of £16 8s. now paid to George Topham and Priscilla Topham, making together the sum of £30, the receipt of which the said George Topham and Priscilla Topham hereby acknowledge." It is not disputed that the £16 8s. was actually paid over on the execution of the bill of sale, and the truth of the statement as to the £13 12s. forming part of the consideration is alone in dispute, and depends upon the facts in respect to that sum, which are as follows.

On the 31st of December, 1895, the counter-claiming defendants and the other defendant, Mrs. Bland, gave to the plaintiff a promissory note, of which the following is a copy:—

"Liverpool. December 31, 1895. £14 3s. 4d. For value received we jointly and severally and each respectively as principals promise to pay to Elizabeth Darlow or order the sum of fourteen pounds three shillings and fourpence by instalments of eleven shillings and fourpence on Monday, the 6th day of January, 1896, and the like sum of 11s. 4d. on each and every succeeding Monday for twenty-four further weeks, and, in case default be made in payment of any one or part of the said instalments we jointly and severally promise to pay on demand the whole balance then remaining unpaid of the first-named sum, together with interest thereon at and after the rate of one halfpenny per shilling per week from the date of such default, until payment thereof.—ANNIE AMELIA BLAND, GEORGE TOPHAM, PRISCILLA TOPHAM."

The actual consideration paid for the promissory note was £10 only. Notwithstanding the fact that the defendant Bland expressly contracts as principal, it is said that as between her and the other defendants she was a surety only, and that the whole sum af £10 was in fact received by the counter-claiming defendants; but no question depending upon that allegation is now before the court. The first instalment of 11s. 4d. payable under the promissory note was duly paid. As the makers of the note were entitled to the usual days of grace in respect of each instalment, the second instalment did not become in fact due and payable until January 16, 1896. Therefore, on January 13, the only liability of the counter-claiming defendants to the plaintiff was to pay the future instalments as they fell due. The sum of £13 12s. not being actually due, the acknowledgment of the receipt of the full sum of £30 appearing in the bill of sale was not in accordance with the facts. From no point of view could it be said that more than £10 had been received prior to the date of the bill of sale, and, taking into account the £16 8s. paid at the time of execution, the whole amount actually received was £26 8s. only, a sum not sufficient to avoid the operation of section 12 of the Act. Again, there was no intention to release the counter-claiming defendants, or the other defendant Bland, from their liability under the promissory note. In fact, in this action the plaintiff has recovered on the promissory note the sum of £13 12s. against all three defendants. There could therefore have been no agreement to treat the £13 12s. as a present advance in lieu of the sum or sums payable on the note, if the existence of such an agreement in fact would have been sufficient without being mentioned in the bill of sale. The cases under the Act of 1878 established the principle that if the consideration is stated in a manner which may be considered to amount substantially to an accurate representation of the real facts, it is stated with sufficient truth to satisfy the requirements of the Act: per Fry, L.J., in Ex parte Johnson, 32 W. R. 693, 26 Ch. D. 338, a case relied upon by the learned judge in the court below; or in the words of the Master of the Rolls in Credit Co. v. Pott, 29 W. R. 326, 6 Q. B. D. 295, cited by Bowen, L.J., in the same case of Ex parte Johnson, it is sufficient if the facts are accurately stated either as to their legal effect or as to their mercantile and business effect, though they may not be stated with strict accuracy. But here the consideration is not stated accurately either as to its legal effect or as to its mercantile and business effect, for there is a substantial difference from each point of view between a present advance of a sum of money and a liability to pay the same sum by instalments at future dates. It was suggested that the payments to be made in future under the promissory note were present debts, though payable in future, and that there was no substantial inaccuracy in saying that the whole amount of the instalments was "now owing," whatever might have been the effect of saying that they were due as well as owing. But when, as here, the question is as to the present value in money of the obligation to pay, it is both in a legal and in a business point of view altogether misleading to take the debt at its full amount as now owing, the present value being obviously less than the whole sum payable in futuro. This point appears to be covered, if authority is required, by the decision of Lopes, L.J., affirmed by the Court of Appeal, in Cochrane v. Moore, 38 W. R. 588, 25 Q. B. D. 57. There the consideration for a bill of sale dated the 26th of July, 1888, purported to be a sum of £7,575, then owing by Benzon to Cochrane, and a further sum of £2,425, then paid by Cochrane to Benzon, making together £10,000. In fact, at the date of the bill of sale, Benzon was only indebted to Cochrane on two promissory notes then current and payable respectively in August and September for sums amounting together to £8,300. It was said that by an agreement arrived at at the time this £8,300 due in future was to be taken between the parties as represented by the sum of £7,575. But it was held that, if the agreement existed, it ought to have been stated in the bill of sale, and, that not having been done, the document was void as not truly stating the consideration for which it was given. There was in that case a present liability for £8,300, payable in future, and, independently of any agreement, it would, according to the argument, have been right to say £8,300 and a fortiori £7,575 was now owing.

Lord ESHER, M.R., concurred.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Bell, Brodrick, & Sons, for Cecil B. Taylor, Liverpool.

Solicitors for the defendants, Ridsdale & Sons, for H. Davies, Liverpool.

From Q. B. Div. (Lord Esher, M.R., and Lopes and Rigby, L.JJ.) — Dec. 2.

ENGELHART v. FARRANT & CO. AND LIPTON. (a.)

Master and servant—Negligence of servant—Effective cause of injury—Intervention of wrongful act by third party.

The defendant, who was a grocer, kept a van which he sent out with a man to drive and a boy to deliver goods at the customers' houses. The boy was expressly forbidden to drive. The driver negligently left the van for a short time in charge of the boy, who drove the van for a few yards in order to turn it round, and while so doing injured the plaintiff's trap.

Held, that the driver's negligence in leaving the van in charge of the boy was an effective cause of the injury, and that the defendant was liable for that negligence.

Appeal from the judgment of a Divisional Court on an appeal from a county court.

This was an action to recover damages for injuries caused to the plaintiff's trap by the negligence of the defendant's servants. The defendant Lipton, who was a grocer, kept a van which he used for the purpose of delivering goods to his customers. The defendants Farrant & Co. supplied him with a horse and a driver, named Mears. Lipton himself provided a boy, named Tucker, to deliver the parcels at the customers' houses. Tucker was expressly forbidden to drive, and Mears was expressly directed never to leave the van. In the course of one of their rounds Mears stopped the van outside his house, and went in to get some oil for a lamp which Tucker used inside the van, and during his absence he left Tucker in charge of the van. Tucker, thinking he would save time if he turned the van round, drove about fifty yards along the road to a point where there was more room for turning, and there turned, and while he was coming back he ran into the plaintiff's trap and caused the injuries complained of.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The county court judge held that there was negligence on the part of both Mears and Tucker, but he thought that the negligence of Tucker, and not that of Mears, was the proximate cause of the injury. He gave judgment for the plaintiff against Lipton, and judgment for the defendants Farrant & Co.

The defendant Lipton appealed to the Queen's Bench Division. Grantham and Wright, JJ., affirmed the decision of the county court judge.

Lipton appealed to the Court of Appeal. On the hearing of the appeal the case was treated on the footing that both Mears and Tucker were in the service of Lipton.

J. A. Foote, for the defendant Lipton.—Lipton is not liable for the negligence of Mears, for Mears's negligence was not the proximate cause of the injury. It was not the natural result of his leaving Tucker with the van that Tucker should attempt to drive the van: Mann v. Ward, 8 Times L. R. 699. Neither is Lipton liable for the negligence of Tucker, for it was not within the scope of Tucker's authority to drive the van, and he was expressly forbidden to do so.

W. Howland Roberts, for the plaintiff.—First, the defendant is liable for the negligence of Mears, notwithstanding the intervention of a wrongful act by Tucker: Clark v. Chambers, 26 W. R. 613, 3 Q. B. D. 327; The Bernina, 35 W. R. 314, 12 P. D. 58. Secondly, he is liable for the act of Tucker alone; for the driving of the van by Tucker was an act done by him in the course of his employment and for his master's benefit: Burns v. Poulsom, 22 W. R. 20, L. R. 8 C. P. 563.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 2.—Lord ESHER, M.R.—I am of opinion that the decision of the county court judge and of the Divisional Court is right. The case depends on the doctrines which have been established as to the liability of an employer for the negligent acts of his servant. There is no doubt about the law; the difficulty always lies in applying the law to the particular facts of each case. The defendant, who was a tradesman, had a cart which he used for delivering goods at his customers' houses. The cart was sent out with a man named Mears to drive it and a boy named Tucker to deliver the parcels out of the cart. It was Tucker's duty to tell Mears to what address to drive, and Mears was then to drive to that address. Mears was intrusted with the duty of driving; Tucker was not intrusted with that duty, it was no part of his duty to drive at all. But they both went out to take part in the same object—viz., the delivery of the parcels to the customers, which was thus the joint work of both. The fact that Tucker was expressly forbidden to drive is immaterial; it is sufficient that it was no part of his duty to drive. In my opinion it is also immaterial that Mears was expressly told not to leave the cart. Now, on the day of the accident it became necessary to get some fresh oil for a lamp which Tucker used inside the cart. Mears thereupon drove to his own house, but instead of letting Tucker go in to fetch the oil, as he ought to have done, he went in himself, and he left the cart in charge of the boy, who, it must be taken, he knew could not drive. The county court judge found as a fact that Mears was negligent in so doing. The boy then, not for his own pleasure, but with intent to carry on his master's business, and so as to save time, turned the cart round. I am of opinion that the defendant is liable for the negligence of Mears, if the negligence of Mears was an effective cause of the injury to the plaintiff which followed. It said that the mere fact of the boy driving the cart in disobedience to his orders relieved the defendant from liability, even although Mears was negligent. That argument cannot be supported. If a stranger interferes and by a wrongful act contributes to the accident, it does not follow that the defendant is not liable, if the negligence of his servant is an effective cause of the accident. As there was no jury in this case, we have no power, as the Divisional Court had, to draw inferences of fact, and I think that when Mears left the cart in charge of the boy he did a dangerous thing, which was an effective cause of what subsequently happened. As to the case of Mann v. Ward, I have some doubt whether it can have been correctly reported. In my opinion the defendant here must be held to be liable, not for the negligence of the boy, but for the negligence of Mears.

LOPES, L.J., read the following judgment: The interposition of the negligence of another person between what I will call the primary negligence and the accident makes this case difficult. There must be negligence and negligence causing the injury. Mears was the driver of Lipton, and for any negligence of his causing injury Lipton would be liable. Mears left the cart and horse in the street unattended. For this, if nothing more had taken place, Lipton would be liable, provided it caused the mischief; for it was negligence on the part of Mears, who was the servant of Lipton. Mears had been cautioned not to leave the cart and horse unattended, and on a previous occasion has been censured for so doing. But there was a boy aged seventeen also in the cart, who was also in the employ of Lipton. This boy, called Tucker, had nothing to do with the driving. Whilst Mears was away, the reins, which had been placed in a hook, intended to hold them when the driver was not using them, were taken from the hook by Tucker, and he proceeded to drive the cart some little way along the street for the purpose of turning it, and in so doing came into collision with another carriage and caused the injury complained of. The negligence of Mears was not disputed, but it was said that his negligence did not cause, but the negligent driving of Tucker did cause, the mischief. The boy Tucker had been prohibited from driving, and his driving was a direct act of disobedience on his part. In these circumstances the question is, was it the negligence of Mears or of Tucker which caused the accident? It was contended that nothing done in the way of driving by Tucker could make the master, Lipton, liable, because Tucker was not acting within the scope of his authority, had nothing to do with the driving, and in fact was acting in disobedience to the prohibition he had received. I think this is right. With regard to Mears, it was said he did not cause the mischief, and could not make Lipton liable, and that the mischief was caused by the intervention of another person—viz., Tucker, for whom Lipton, so far as driving was concerned, was not responsible. After careful consideration I have come to the conclusion that Mears's negligence was the effective cause of the mischief, and that Lipton is liable. Tindal, C.J., in Illidge v. Goodwin, 5 C. & P. 190, said: "If a man chooses to leave a cart standing in the street, he must take the risk of any mischief that may be done." It was Mears's blameable carelessness which induced the boy Tucker to do what he did; it was that carelessness which was the real moving and effective cause of the mischief, and I believe that is the inference which any jury would draw from the facts of this case. If Tucker had not been in the cart, and Mears had left the cart unattended, and the horse had moved on, and an injury had been caused to a passer-by, or if a passerby had jumped into the cart and driven it and injured some person by negligent driving, Lipton would have been liable. Again, if Mears had asked a passer-by to stand at the head of the horse while was absent, and the passer-by had left the horse, and the horse had gone on, and injury had been caused to any person, Lipton would be liable. His carelessness in not anticipating what might not unreasonably happen would have been the real and effective cause of the mischief. In this case Mears practically was leaving the horse and cart unattended. He knew Tucker was ordered not to interfere with the driving; he ought therefore to have anticipated that some casualty might happen, and it was his imprudence in this respect which caused the mischief. Mann v. Ward is a very peculiar case, and is only reported in 8 Times L. R. 699. I doubt if it is fully reported. It must be regarded as a decision on the very peculiar facts of the case, and is one, if correctly reported, at which I should not myself have arrived. It is impossible to reconcile the various decisions with regard to negligence, and the reason is that fact and law are so mixed up in them that they are frequently decisions rather on the facts than the law, and the variety of facts involved is infinite. The appeal must be dismissed.

RIGBY, L.J., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Wood, Bigg, & Nash, for Kitsons, Mackenzie, & Hext, Torquay.

Solicitors for the defendant, Prior, Church, & Adams, for T. C. Lindop, Torquay.

From Chan. Div.
(Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J., and Lindley and A. L. Smith, L.JJ.) } Nov. 20, 28.

In re ROBINSON.
WRIGHT v. TUGWELL. (a.)

Ecclesiastical law—Use of black gown in pulpit—Conditional bequest of money—Legality.

It is not illegal for a clergyman of the Church of England to wear the black gown while preaching; and a condition requiring him to do so attached to a bequest of property for his benefit is not an illegal or impossible condition.

Appeal by the Rev. S. A. Selwyn from North, J.

Mrs. Frances Rebecca Robinson, by her will dated the 31st of January, 1889, bequeathed a sum of £1,500 to endow a proposed church at Bournemouth. It was expressed to be "an abiding condition that the black gown shall be worn in the pulpit, unless there shall be any alteration in the law rendering it illegal"; and any incumbent appointed to the church was required to sign this condition. On compliance, but only on compliance, with these requirements the income was to be paid to the incumbent. The testatrix died shortly after the date of her will.

In November, 1891, when the proposed church had been completed, the question of the legal validity of the condition was brought before North, J., who decided (40 W. R. 137, [1892] 1 Ch. 95) that the condition was valid, and directed that the fund should remain in court in order that the income might be paid to the incumbent of the church only so long as he complied with the condition.

Liberty was reserved to the incumbent for the time being to apply for payment. The Rev. Sydney Augustus Selwyn, having been appointed incumbent, applied by summons for an order that the income should be paid out to him so long as he should remain incumbent. He admitted that he had not worn, and did not intend to wear, the black gown when preaching, and that he had not signed the condition in that behalf; but he contended that the condition was contrary to the rules of the ecclesiastical law, and invalid.

North, J., was of opinion that his previous order, already mentioned, precluded the applicant from disputing the legality of the condition, and refused to make any order on the summons.

Mr. Selwyn appealed.

Dibdin, for the appeal.—The condition is impossible, and therefore the gift is absolute: Jarman on Wills, (5th ed.) vol. 2, pp. 850, 852. Secondly, the black gown is now an illegal vestment: Ridsdale v. Clifton, 2 P. D. 276, 310, 316, 321, 25 W. R. Dig. 104. Preaching is a public ministration. In Cripps on the Church and Clergy the passage at p. 706 of the 5th ed., stating that the surplice is not "a proper habit for the preacher," is omitted in the 6th ed.

He also referred to the Act of Uniformity, 1662 (1 Eliz. c. 2), s. 25; the Thirty-nine Articles, Art. 23; Elphinstone v. Purchas, L. R. 3 A. & E. 66, 91, 18 W. R. Ecc. Dig. 26; Prideaux's Churchwardens' Guide, 15th ed., p. 447 (16th ed., p. 393); and Dale's Legal Ritual (1871), Introd., p. 12.

B. Fossett Lock, for the respondents.—North, J.'s, decision in 1891 makes the present question res judicata: see Serrao v. Noel, 15 Q. B. D. 549, 559, 34 W. R. Dig. 70. The passage relied on in the judgment in Ridsdale v. Clifton does not deal with the law as it was after the Act of Uniformity of 1662. Preaching is not a "ministration."

He referred to the Thirty-nine Articles, Arts. 23 and 26; the 36th Injunction of Elizabeth; section 2 of the Brawling Act, 1860 (23 & 24 Vict. c. 32); the judgment of Willes, J., in Cope v. Barber, 20 W. R. 885, L. R. 7 C. P. 393; Cardwell's Documentary Annals of the Church of England, vol. 1, pp. 329, 336; the 30th Injunction of 1559 (in Sparrow's Collection of the Articles, &c.); the 45th-57th, 58th, and 74th Canons of 1603 (in Sparrow); the Canons of 1571 (in Cardwell's Synodalia, vol. 1, p. 126); the case of Bishop Wren, who was impeached and sent to the Tower for (inter alia) trying to enforce the use of the surplice in the pulpit (4 State Trials, 27, 32); and Elphinstone v. Purchas.

Dibdin replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

Nov. 28.—A. L. SMITH, L.J., stated the facts, and continued: I do not doubt that North, J., arrived at a right conclusion when he held that the condition about wearing the black gown in the pulpit was not an impossible condition, and that it was a continuing condition. I have nothing more to say as to this. It is now argued on behalf of Mr. Selwyn that the condition is illegal; that it is illegal for a clergyman of the Church of England to wear a black gown in the pulpit when preaching. I think North, J., held that it was not, but we gave Mr. Dibdin, although out of time, leave to argue this point for Mr. Selwyn. The point when taken struck me as novel, for it is impossible to shut out from one's recollection the time when to preach in a black gown was the rule, and not the exception, in the Church of England, and also the many bitter strifes which have taken place, not as to whether the use of the black gown in the pulpit was illegal, but whether the use of what have been called ritualistic vestments, which it was said trenched upon the ordained simplicity of the vesture of the clergy when officiating in the Church of England, could be lawfully used. Mr. Dibdin insisted that the use of the black gown in the pulpit was illegal; but he had to admit that until the present application no case could be found in the books in which any objection to the use of the black gown in the pulpit as being illegal had been made. No statute, no rubric, no advertisement, no injunction, and no canon could he point to which enacted or prescribed that to preach in the black gown was prohibited, and therefore illegal; and he had also to admit that for a period of three centuries, from 5 Edw. VI., A.D. 1551-2, down to a comparatively recent date, there had been a contemporaneous and continual user of the black gown in the pulpit by clergymen of the Church of England when preaching. He, however, asserted that the judgment of the Privy Council, delivered by Lord Cairns in 1877 in the case of Ridsdale v. Clifton, had held the black gown to be illegal, which assertion, remembering the history of the time, struck me as remarkable. Now, what was it that the Privy Council were adjudicating upon in Ridsdale v. Clifton? It was, so far as regards the question of vestments, whether the wearing during the service of the Holy Communion of vestments known as an alb and a chasuble was lawful. Throughout the whole of the case, which was most elaborately argued, and equally elaborately adjudicated upon, there is not even an allusion to the black gown, nor to what a clergyman was or was not to wear in the pulpit when preaching.

(a.) Reported by R. C. MACKENZIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Mr. Dibdin has seized upon a passage in the judgment (at p. 321 of the report) in which it is said: "Reading, then, as their lordships consider they are bound to do, the order as to vestures in the Book of Advertisements into the 25th section of 1 Eliz. c. 2, and omitting (for the sake of brevity) all reference to hoods, it will appear that the section, from the year 1566 to 1662, had the same operation in law as if it had been expressed in these words: Provided always that such ornaments of the Church and of the ministers thereof shall be retained and be in use as were in the Church of England by authority of Parliament in the second year of King Edward VI., except that the surplice shall be used by the ministers of the Church at all times of their public ministrations, and the alb, vestment, or tunicle shall not be used, nor shall a cope be used except at the administration of the Holy Communion in cathedral or collegiate churches." The Advertisement which I understand Lord Cairns was alluding to was: "Every minister saying any public prayers, or ministering the sacraments or other rites of the Church shall wear a comely surplice with sleeves, to be provided at the charge of the parish": see p. 316 of the judgment. It is obvious that the Advertisement does not embrace the time of preaching, but only the saying of public prayers and ministering the sacraments or other rites. The passage in the judgment relied upon was not aimed at preaching in the pulpit. It had reference to the saying of public prayers and ministering the sacraments and other rites, and to those alone. It is wholly incorrect to say that either the judgment in Ridsdale v. Clifton or the passage relied upon has decided that the use of the black gown in the pulpit was illegal. It was not even discussed, much less adjudicated upon.

It was then argued that although the Privy Council in Ridsdale v. Clifton might have been dealing, not with preaching in the pulpit, but only with the saying of public prayers and the ministration of the sacraments and other rites, yet, as preaching a sermon from the pulpit was part of the order in the Prayer Book of the administration of the Lord's Supper or Holy Communion, consequently it was part of the ministration of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, and thus came within the decision of Ridsdale v. Clifton. It was said that in the order of the administration of the Lord's Supper or Holy Communion in the Prayer Book there would be found after the Nicene Creed this rubric: "Then shall follow the sermon or one of the homilies already set forth, or hereafter to be set forth by authority," and that as during that part of the Communion Service ending with the Nicene Creed a surplice was to be worn, and nothing was said as to changing it for the black gown when the clergyman went into the pulpit to preach, to do so was illegal, as also to take off the black gown and resume the surplice, if and when the sacrament of the Lord's Supper happened to be afterwards administered.

It is erroneous to describe preaching a sermon as part of ministering the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. If it is, then everyone of the congregation, confirmed or unconfirmed, who attends evening service or any other service in which no part of the Communion Service is read, if he remains for the sermon, takes part in the ministration of the sacrament of the Lord's Supper; which, with all respect to Mr. Dibdin's argument, appears to me to be absurd. It was then said that the 23rd Article of Religion, under the heading of "Ministering to the Congregation," joins the office of public preaching and ministering the sacraments together, but I fail to see that this article shows that public preaching forms any part of the ministering of the sacraments. This article only deals with who may preach and who may minister the sacraments—i.e., that the clergyman who does the one or the other must be lawfully called and sent to execute the same. No authority has been cited, nor do I believe any can be, to show that preaching is part of ministering the sacrament of the Lord's Supper, and in my judgment it is not.

Neither can preaching be regarded as one of the "other rites of the Church," which are the words in the Advertisements of Queen Elizabeth, and in Canon 58 of 1603-4. What the exact meaning of the word "rite" is has not been decided; but the usage of three hundred years is enough to show that, whatever the word means, preaching in a black gown, which seems to have been the ordinary clerical dress, cannot be an infringement of the regulations requiring the use of a surplice in "ministering the sacraments and other rites of the Church."

The passage in the judgment of the Privy Council in Hebbert v. Purchas, 19 W. R. 898, L. R. 3 P. C. 605, to the effect that a minister's proper vestment is a surplice, has no reference to preaching, but only to sacraments and other solemn religious services, with which alone the court was concerned. The absence in the rubric of any words directing a change of vestment between the ante-communion service and the administration of the Lord's Supper merely shows that to preach in a surplice is not unlawful, not that to preach in a black gown is unlawful. Moreover, how does this argument apply to sermons after evening service when there is no Communion?

There is a passage in the judgment of Sir Robert Phillimore in Elphinstone v. Purchas [1870], in which the learned judge, when dealing with what effect an admitted disuse of certain ornaments for many centuries should have, when considering whether the ornament is lawful or not, says: "In truth, however, the argument is bad from the vice of proving a great deal too much. The same argument would make the copes in cathedrals unlawful, which it is admitted they are not; the use of the surplice in preaching unlawful, which is the proper dress; and, è converso, would establish the legality of the black gown, which has no warrant in law." This is the only passage which Mr. Dibdin, with all his research, has been able to produce relative to the alleged illegality of the black gown.

In the first place it is but the dictum of the learned judge; he had no point as to the legality or illegality of the black gown in the pulpit before him. Secondly, the view taken by the learned judge in Elphinstone v. Purchas, both as regards usage and the effect of the advertisements, was dissented from by the Privy Council, both on appeal from his decision in Hebbert v. Purchas, and afterwards in Ridsdale v. Clifton. In both of these cases great importance was attached to long usage. In the third place, where is the illegality of wearing the black gown to be found? The learned judge says that it has no warrant in law; for the dictum was delivered seven years before the judgment in Ridsdale v. Clifton, now relied upon for the establishment of its illegality.

The "warrant in law" for the black gown is constant user for centuries. Inasmuch as no positive law exists, and no objection against the legality of the use of the black gown in the pulpit, which has ranged over three hundred years, can be found, and there is no decision that its use is illegal, I agree with what I understand North, J., to have held, that its use is not illegal. Consequently the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

The application before us does not raise the question whether a scheme can properly be sanctioned by the court, dispensing with the performance of the condition of preaching in a black gown, or of any other of the conditions imposed by the testatrix. The court therefore expresses no opinion upon the point.

THE LORD CHIEF JUSTICE OF ENGLAND and LINDLEY, L.J., agree in this judgment.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors, West, King, Adams, & Co., for Preston & Francis, Bournemouth; Bridgman & Willcocks.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } Chitty, J. } Dec. 5, 8, 16.

WYNNE v. TEMPEST. (a.)

Practice—Parties—Third party procedure—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 16, r. 48—Breach of trust—Claim to follow trust money—Indemnity.

In an action to make the defendant liable for breach of trust by him and his deceased co-trustee, T. G. T., who was a solicitor, the defendant alleged that the trust money sought to be recovered was paid to the deceased as a member of the firm of solicitors acting for the trustees, and obtained an order for leave to serve a third party notice under ord. 16, r. 48, on the surviving members of the firm.

The notice claimed indemnity from them against the plaintiff's claim on the ground that the firm became liable for the misapplication of the money by T. G. T. On an application to discharge the order,

Held, that the defendant's right (if any) to recover from the applicants a sum equal to the lost trust fund was not a right depending on his liability in the action, but an independent right, and therefore that the notice was not a claim for indemnity within ord. 16, r. 48, and must be discharged.

(a.) Reported by J. F. WALEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Motion.

The above action was for a declaration that the defendant was liable to pay, and for payment by him to the plaintiff of a certain sum directed to be raised by a deed poll dated the 30th of August, 1883, out of certain funds, subject to the trusts of the will of one Thomas Mason and of a certain indenture of settlement, together with interest thereon at the rate of 5 per cent. per annum, and the defendant was sued as surviving trustee of the said will and settlement. The defendant claimed to be indemnified by the applicants against liability in the said action, and they had been served with a third party notice pursuant to an order of court obtained upon the application of the defendant under ord. 16, r. 48.

It appeared that the proceeds of sale of certain stock appropriated to meet the sum to be raised under the deed poll were paid to Thomas Greenwood Teale, one of the trustees of the said will and settlement, who was then carrying on business as a solicitor in partnership with the applicants, but had since died, and it was alleged that Teale received the money as the solicitor acting for the trustees, and paid it into the firm's account, with the result that all the partners in the firm became liable for it.

This account would seem to have been kept in Teale's name. After his death the bank was, as the result of an action between the applicants and the bank, allowed to set off a credit balance on this account against an over-draft of larger amount upon another account in Teale's name in their books.

This was a motion on behalf of the persons brought in as third parties to discharge the order pursuant to which they had been brought in.

Byrne, Q.C., and Danckwerts, for the applicants.—The order is wrong. The defendant has no right to indemnity from the applicants within the meaning of order 16. There is no express contract to indemnify, and nothing in the circumstances or the position of the parties from which such a contract can be implied. They referred to Mara v. Browne, 44 W. R. 330, [1896] 1 Ch. 199; Birmingham and District Land Co. v. London and North-Western Railway Co., 35 W. R. 173, 34 Ch. D. 261, p. 271; Baxter v. France, 43 W. R. 341, [1895] 1 Q. B. 591; The "Jacob Christensen," [1895] P. 281, 43 W. R. Dig. 143; Constantine v. Warden, 44 W. R. 162; and Robertson v. Armstrong, 28 Beav. 123, 9 W. R. Ch. Dig. 88.

Levett, Q.C., and Stewart Smith, for the defendant.—The applicants are liable to make good to the defendant the loss caused by their late partner's misappropriating trust money: Dundonald v. Masterman, 17 W. R. 548, L. R. 7 Eq. 504, p. 516, Partnership Act, 1890, ss. 11, 12, and that is the loss that will be incurred by the defendant if the plaintiff succeeds in this action. The defendant, therefore, has a right to be indemnified by the applicants against such loss, and the order is right.

MacSwinney, for the plaintiff.

Byrne, replied.

CHITTY, J.—The claim of the defendant to bring the third parties before the court in this action under ord. 16, r. 48, is founded on an alleged right of indemnity; there is no question of contribution. In the action it is sought to make the defendant liable for an alleged breach of trust by him and his deceased co-trustee.

A right to indemnity may arise under an express or implied contract, or by reason of an obligation resulting from the relation of the parties. Such an obligation arises in equity from the relation of the parties where two trustees are liable for a breach of trust, and one has applied the trust fund to his own use; in that case the trustee who has so misapplied the fund is liable to indemnify his co-trustee, so where a man has requested another to hold as trustee for him shares upon which there is a liability for calls or the like the trustee is entitled to an indemnity, not merely out of the trust property, but by the cestui que trust personally. I give these two cases merely by way of illustration.

Now, the right of indemnity claimed by the defendant does not arise from an express or implied contract, but, if it arises at all, it is founded upon some obligation of the nature above stated. The defendant's case is that the trust money was paid to the late Thomas Greenwood Teale as a member of the firm of solicitors, of whom the third parties are the survivors, and that the late Thomas Greenwood Teale was acting within the scope of his apparent authority as partner in receiving the money, and, consequently, that the firm became liable. On this head reference was made by the defendant's counsel to the 11th and 12th sections of the Partnership Act, 1890. Further, it was said that the money was traced into an account at the bank in the name of Thomas Greenwood Teale, which was, in fact, the firm's account, although (as has been decided in an action between the third parties and the bank) the bank, who had no notice of the trust, were entitled to deal with the account as the account of Thomas G. Teale only.

In substance, the claim of the defendant is to follow the trust money into the hands of the firm, who had notice of the trust; and the money having been lost or misapplied to charge the surviving partners with the amount. It is obvious that this is not a claim to indemnify the defendant against the plaintiff's claim in the action.

The right of the defendant (if it exists) to recover from the surviving partners a sum equal to the lost trust fund is not a right depending on the liability of the defendant in the action; it is an independent right. It may be tested thus: if the plaintiffs failed in the action, would the defendant's claim against the third parties be thereby defeated? It is clear that it would not. If the surviving partners are liable to the defendant, he could, whether he failed or succeeded in the action, pursue his remedy against the surviving partners; as surviving trustee, he could sue them for the purpose of getting in a sum of money which, when received by him, would form part of the trust fund in his hands. To such an action the circumstance that he was not personally liable to his cestius que trustent would constitute no defence; it would be immaterial.

For these reasons I hold that the third party notice is not within ord. 16, r. 48, and must be discharged.

Solicitors for the applicants, Vincent & Vincent; Williamson, Hill, & Co.

Solicitors for the defendant, Witham, Roskell, Munster, & Weld.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Perkins & Weston.

Chan. Div. } Stirling, J. } Nov. 24; Dec. 16.

WOOD v. MIDDLETON. (a.)

Practice—County court—Service out of the jurisdiction—Transfer of action to High Court—County Courts Act, 1888, ss. 67, 68, 164—County Court Rules, 1889, ord. 51, r. 23—Judicature Act, 1875, s. 17—Ord. 11, rr. 1 (d), 2.

Service in an action commenced in the county court having been effected out of the jurisdiction,

Held, that such service was authorized by ord. 51, r. 23, of the County Court Rules, 1889, and that though such rule was wider than the corresponding High Court rule it was, nevertheless, a rule which might lawfully be made by the proper authorities under section 164 of the County Courts Act, 1888, and that, therefore, no objection to the jurisdiction could be raised in the county court.

But the action having been transferred to the High Court,

Held, that the person served ought to have an opportunity of raising the objection that it could not have been lawfully entertained there.

This was a summons for a further and better answer to interrogatories.

Two questions were raised. First, as to the power of a county court to order service out of the jurisdiction; and secondly, whether, assuming that the county court had the power, the objection could be taken on the action being transferred to the High Court.

The circumstances which gave rise to these questions were as follow:

The present action was commenced by a summons issued from the County Court of Cumberland on the 27th of February, 1896, and by it the trial was fixed for the 15th of April.

From the claim filed it appeared that the plaintiff claimed £100 from the defendant, who was sued as the trustee by representation of R. Hartley, deceased.

The defendant was described as resident in Scotland, and consequently out of the jurisdiction.

The substance of the case was that R. Hartley, whose will was sought to be administered, bequeathed a legacy of £100 to the plaintiff, payable on his attaining twenty-one, and with directions for payment in the meantime, and appointed one Middleton his sole executor and trustee.

The testator died in 1879.

Middleton proved the will, and invested the legacy in what was alleged to be an improper investment. Middleton died in 1886, having appointed the defendant and another person his executors. Both proved the will, and the defendant was the surviving executor.

The plaintiff attained twenty-one in March, 1892, and claimed a declaration that the investment by Middleton was a breach of trust, and that the defendant was liable to make good the loss sustained, and administration of the personal estate.

On the 26th of February, 1896, an affidavit was made by the plaintiff's solicitor, from which it appeared that the defendant had formerly resided in Cumberland, but had lately removed to a residence in Scotland. Correspondence ensued between the parties, and the solicitors in Scotland of the defendant offered to accept service of any processes issued in the Scotch courts. The defendant's solicitor swore he believed that the defendant resided in Scotland. Upon this affidavit the registrar on the 27th of February, 1896, gave liberty to serve the defendant there, and she was served accordingly.

On the 19th of March another order of the county court gave leave to the plaintiff to deliver interrogatories. These were answered on the 2nd of April, but before answering the defendant's solicitor gave notice that the defendant objected to the jurisdiction. This objection raised two grounds: first, that the action was beyond the limit of the county court; second, that the processes were served in Scotland, out of the jurisdiction.

On the 11th of April notice was given by the plain tiff's solicitor of a motion that on the 15th of April, the date of the trial, the court would be moved for a further and better answer to interrogatories. That came on on the 15th of April, when the defendant raised these two objections.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The county court judge being satisfied that the estate exceeded £500 made an order transferring the action to the High Court, and decided nothing as to the second objection.

The present summons, asking for a further and better answer to the interrogatories, was taken out on the 11th of May.

H. Terrell, for the summons.—Leave to serve was properly given under ord. 51, r. 23, of the County Court Rules, 1889. Section 68 of the County Court Act, which authorizes the transfer to the High Court, does not vitiate these proceedings.

J. Sharpe, contra.—We have never acquiesced in the previous proceedings. If the county court judge had authority to deal with the summons he had no authority to send the case here.

He referred to Jackson v. Beaumont, 3 W. R. 521, 11 Exch. 300; Rein v. Stein, [1892] 1 Q. B. 753, 40 W. R. Dig. 192; Firth v. De las Rivas, 41 W. R. 493, [1893] 1 Q. B. 768.

Terrell replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 16.—STIRLING, J., stated the facts and continued: Now, the jurisdiction of the county court depends on the County Courts Acts, 1888. [His lordship read sections 67 and 68 of that Act, and continued:—] Section 164 provides for the framing of rules with regard to service out of the jurisdiction. [His lordship read the section, and continued:—] To put it shortly, that section confers on the authorities who frame rules in the county courts the same power as exists with reference to procedure and practice in the High Court. Now, the power to make rules in the High Court is governed by section 17 of the Judicature Act, 1885, and the material portion of that section is as follows. [His lordship read the section, and continued:—] Under that power rules were made with which we are all familiar, including order 11, which deals with service out of the jurisdiction. As regards the case in question, that would be regulated by rule 1 (d) of order 11. [His lordship read the rule, and continued:—] Then we have rule 2 of the same order, which deals with service in Scotland and Ireland. [His lordship read the rule, and continued:—] Such are the rules framed for the High Court, and there are therefore two matters in which that rule imposes limitations on the jurisdiction of the High Court—namely, in the first place, service is only permitted where the testator dies domiciled within the jurisdiction; and secondly, a discretion has to be exercised. Now, what rules have been made by the authorities of the county courts? The important rule is ord. 51, r. 23, of the rules of 1889. [His lordship read the rule, and continued:—] On the face of it, that is a different rule from that which prevails in the High Court, but can I say that this rule is beyond the powers of the proper authorities to make under section 164 of the County Court Acts, 1888? That power extends to "all matters of procedure or practice, or relating to or concerning the effect or operation in law of any procedure or practice in any case within the cognizance of the county courts, as to which Rules of the Supreme Court have been or might lawfully be made for cases within the cognizance of the Supreme Court." If it had been limited to cases in which rules had been made, no doubt this rule would be ultra vires, but the power extends to rules which might lawfully be mad and I cannot say that such a rule might not lawfully have been made in reference to cases within the cognizance of the High Court. I come therefore to the conclusion that the rule is within the powers of the framers of the rules for the county courts to make, and, being such, that it authorizes the service which has been effected. I conclude therefore that the objection to the jurisdiction could not have been effectually raised if the matter had remained in the county court. But now comes this peculiar state of things. The court has decided that this was an action beyond county court limits, and therefore ought not to have been brought in the county court, and there is no evidence which satisfies me that the action as originally brought would have been entertained there. It would be an extraordinary thing if a person who wrongfully commences an action in the county court could transfer it to and prosecute it in the High Court, when it could not have been entertained there originally. In my judgment, when the action has been transferred to the High Court, the defendant, having all along objected to the jurisdiction, ought to have an opportunity of raising the objection that this action is one which could not have brought in the High Court. A question has been raised whether the defendant, by submitting to answer, has not waived her objection to the jurisdiction. No case of such waiver arose while the action was in the county court, nor could it have been entertained there. There has been no such waiver here as to deprive the defendant of liberty to show that the matter ought not to be prosecuted in the High Court as being one in which the High Court has no jurisdiction. I think, therefore, that the present summons should stand over in order that such an opportunity may be given, but I desire to suggest that this next step should be as inexpensive as possible, and I also desire to warn the defendant, if she thinks the case is one which she would succeed on the merits, that on the materials before me I am very far from being satisfied that such is the case.

Solicitors, Andrew, Wood, & Co., for H. J. Whiteside, Whitehaven; Helder, Roberts, Son, & Co., for Brockbank, Helder, & Co., Whitehaven.

Chan. Div. } Nov. 24; Dec. 10.
Stirling, J. }

MURRAY v. EPSOM LOCAL BOARD. (a.)

Local government—Member having personal interest in subject-matter of proceedings—Local Government Act, 1894, s. 46.

The fact that one of the members of a public body has a personal interest in the subject-matter of the proceedings will not vitiate the acts of such body unless it be sitting in a judicial capacity.

A local board fulfilling the duties cast on them by the Local Government Act, 1894, s. 26 (1), is not sitting in a judicial capacity.

This was an application by summons on the part of the defendants to strike out certain paragraphs of the statement of claim, and incidentally raised the question whether the proceedings of a public body are vitiated by reason of one of its members having an interest in the subject-matter of the proceedings.

The action related to a footpath in the defendants' district known as Madan's-walk. The plaintiffs were the owners of property adjoining this path, on the opposite side of which was land belonging to a Mr.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law

Langlands, who was a member of the board. The path had been always used as a public footway, but recently Mr. Langlands had, with a view to developing his property as a building estate, cut a road through his land into Madan's-walk, a portion of which he had widened out so as to admit of vehicular traffic, for which it had never before been used. The plaintiffs objected to this as calculated to destroy the privacy of their property, and brought an action against Mr. Langlands, in which they obtained an injunction restraining him from using that half of the walk which abutted upon their property for carts or vehicles, or otherwise than as a public footway. The result, however, of Mr. Langlands' new road was to throw open a portion of Madan's-walk, so that the public were enabled to use it for vehicular traffic, and in order to stop this the plaintiffs erected posts upon their half of the walk, which posts Mr. Langlands proceeded to pull down. This resulted in a second action, in which Mr. Langlands was restrained by the court from interfering with any erection placed by the plaintiffs on their moiety of Madan's-walk, not being an obstruction of the public footway. The plaintiffs then sought to induce the present defendants, the Epsom Local Board, to exercise their powers for the protection of Madan's-walk as a public footpath, and on the board declining to interfere the plaintiffs erected further posts, which the board caused to be removed, and the plaintiffs brought this action against the board, claiming a declaration that they were entitled to erect the posts in question, and an injunction to restrain the board from preventing them from erecting the same. In their statement of claim the plaintiffs alleged, inter alia, that Mr. Langlands was a very active and influential member of the board; that throughout the negotiations which took place between the plaintiffs and the board with regard to the prevention of the user of Madan's-walk by the public for vehicles, and in all the board had done in reference thereto, Mr. Langlands had taken an active part, and had endeavoured to prevent the board from doing any act which would hinder Madan's-walk from being used for vehicular traffic; that in so doing he had acted with a view to his own private interest and advantage, and not with a view to the proper discharge by the board of their public duties; and that, in consequence of Mr. Langlands' influence on the board, the plaintiffs had not succeeded in inducing the board to take any steps for the protection of the footway. These were the allegations which the defendants now sought to have struck out as irrelevant to the issue of the case.

Buckley, Q.C., and W. C. Dare, for the summons.

G. Hastings, Q.C., and S. Dickinson, contra.—[STIRLING, J., referred to Corporation of Bradford v. Pickles, 44 W. R. 190, [1895] A. C. 587.] The case of a public body is different: Public Health Act, 1875, sched. 1, r. 64; Local Government Act, 1894, s. 46. These sections show that the Legislature is very careful that a local body shall not act under the influence of any one of its members, and if it does the court will interfere. [STIRLING, J.—The issue is whether the board are interfering with your private rights and not with the rights of the public.] The principle laid down in The Aberdeen Railway Co. v. Blackie Bros., 1 Macq. 461, applies here, though that was a case of a contract.

Buckley, Q.C., in reply, referred to Imperial Mercantile Credit Association v. Coleman, 19 W. R. 481, L. R. 6 Ch. App. 558. The sections of the Acts cited would only deprive the member of his seat and would not vitiate the proceedings.

Cur. adv. vult.

10th Dec.—STIRLING, J., after stating the facts, continued: It is alleged that Mr. Langlands has influence with the board, and has used it with a view to his own private interest and advantage, and not with a view to the proper discharge by the board of their public duties, and that in consequence the plaintiffs have not succeeded in inducing the board to take steps for the protection of the footway. It is not alleged that the members of the board, other than Mr. Langlands, have been guilty of malpractice, or that his influence over them has been acquired by illegitimate means, or even that they have surrendered their judgment to him or acted as his tools. It is consistent with the plaintiffs' allegations that all the members of the board, other than Mr. Langlands, do in good faith believe that their acts are entirely in accordance with the due discharge by them of their public duties. It is contended, however that the Acts of the board are vitiated by reason of Mr. Langlands being present at the meetings when the plaintiffs' applications were discussed, being allowed to speak and use his influence with the board, and succeeding in inducing the board to take his view.

It was admitted that no direct authority in support of this contention is to be found either in the statutes or general law.

Schedule 1, r. 64 of the Public Health Act, 1875, provides that a member of a local board who "in any manner is concerned in any bargain or contract entered into by such board, or participates in the profit thereof, or of any work done under the authority of this Act in or for the district shall . . . cease to be such member, and his office as such shall thereupon become vacant." A similar provision is found in section 46 of the Local Government Act, 1894. These provisions, however, do not extend to the simple case of a member having a personal interest in a matter which comes before the board; and even if it did, the effect of this rule is not to vitiate the acts of the board, but to deprive the member of his seat. It is said, however, that this is not the only effect; and it is argued that in the case provided for by those rules and enactment the validity of the contract would be affected. In support of this argument the case of Aberdeen Railway Co. v. Blackie Bros. was cited. It was there held that a concontract entered into between the company and a firm of which one of the directors was a partner could not be enforced against the company, and was voidable at the option of the company. If, however, the company, or the directors, after a full disclosure of the interest of the contracting director, chose to affirm the contract, I apprehend that it would be binding. At all events the case is no authority for the proposition that the existence of such an interest, disclosed or undisclosed, vitiates the resolution of the board.

There is, indeed, an extensive class of cases in which it has been held that the presence of a person having a pecuniary interest at a meeting of a public body vitiates its proceedings—viz., where that body is acting judicially: see, for example, Reg. v. London County Council, 40 W. R. 285, [1892] 1 Q. B. 190. In the present case the defendants in the matters complained of were acting as surveyors of highways (see section 144 of Public Health Act, 1875, and the Local Government Act, 1894, s. 26, sub-section 1), and performing the duties cast on them, and there is no authority for saying that the Acts of the board in that capacity are judicial in any sense, and, indeed, the authorities point the other way. The position of highway authorities in reference to the removal of obstructions to highways was much considered in the case of Reynolds v. Urban District Council of Presteign, 44 W. R. 479, [1896] 1 Q. B. at p. 609.

These observations show that the question at issue between the plaintiffs and the defendants must be, whether the posts erected by the plaintiffs constituted an obstruction to the public right of way which existed over Madan's-walk? If they did, then the court will not interfere in their favour; if they did not, then the court will. It seems to me that to this, the real issue, the allegations in paragraphs 16 and 17 are irrelevant, and that those paragraphs ought to be struck out.

Judgment accordingly.

Solicitors, Murray, Hutchins, Stirling, & Murray; Letts Brothers, for George White, Epsom.

Q. B. Div.
(Wills and Wright, JJ.) Dec. 11.

BILLING v. PREBBLE. (a.)

Metropolis—Public health—Unsound meat—Sale or exposure for sale—Seizure subsequent to sale—Purchase by a customer—Liability of seller to penalty—Public Health (London) Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 76), s. 47, sub-sections 2, 3.

The respondent, a meat salesman, to whom meat had been consigned to sell on commission, sold a portion of it to H. While the meat was on H.'s premises it was seized and condemned by a magistrate under the Public Health (London) Act, 1891, s. 47, as being diseased and unfit for the food of man.

The respondent was summoned under sub-section 2 of section 47 of the Act, and it was proved that the meat was unsound at the time of the sale to H. The alderman before whom the summons was heard dismissed it.

Held, that the summons was rightly dismissed, and that the summons ought to have been drawn under sub-section 3.

Case stated by an alderman of the City of London.

The Public Health (London) Act, 1891, s. 47 (2), provides for the seizure and destruction of unsound food, and enacts that "the person to whom the same belongs, or did belong, at the time of sale or exposure for sale or of preparation for sale, or in whose possession or on whose premises the same was found," shall be liable to the fine and imprisonment therein prescribed. Sub-section 3 enacts that "where it is shown that any article liable to be seized under this section and found in the possession of any person was purchased by him from another person for the food of man, and when so purchased was in such a condition as to be liable to be seized and condemned under this section, the person who so sold the same shall be liable to the fine and imprisonment above mentioned, unless he proves that at the time he sold the said article he did not know and had no reason to believe that it was in such condition.

On the 5th of August a summons was issued against the respondent under sub-section 3, charging him that he was unlawfully the person who sold to one J. Harrington, for the food of man, articles unfit for the food of man. On the case being called on, the appellant stated, through his solicitor, that he desired to proceed under sub-section 2 and not under sub-section 3, and that the summons was drawn under sub-section 3 by mistake. He accordingly offered no evidence on that summons, and it was withdrawn by permission.

On the 6th of August a second summons was obtained, which was under sub-section 2. It charged the respondent that, being the person to whom the same did belong at the time of sale or exposure for sale, he did expose for sale and sell to one J. Harrington two sides of pork unfit for the food of man.

It was proved that on the 6th of July the two sides of pork were seized by the inspector upon the premises of J. Harrington, and that they were subsequently condemned and destroyed. The meat had been purchased on the same day by Harrington from the respondent, who was a meat salesman occupying premises in the Central Meat Market. It was proved and found by the alderman who heard the summons that the meat was unsound at the time of the sale, and that the respondent knew or had reason to believe that it was unsound. The meat was consigned to the respondent by a farmer in Lincolnshire as part of a large consignment which the respondent was to sell on behalf of the farmer on the terms of receiving a commission upon the sales, and accounting to the farmer for the price obtained, less such commission.

The contention of the appellant was that the meat "belonged" to the respondent at the time of sale within the meaning of sub-section 2, the respondent on the other hand contending that it did not so belong to him. The alderman dismissed the summons on the ground that the meat did not "belong" to the respondent within sub-section 2. He further held that sub-section 3 created a distinct offence, and as the summons was under sub-section 2 and not under sub-section 3, he refused to convict on that ground also.

Lush Wilson, Q.C. (Courthope Munroe with him), for the appellant.—The alderman ought to have convicted the respondent under sub-section 2. Sub-section 3 did not create a distinct offence, it was enacted to meet the case of Vinter v. Hind, 31 W. R. 198, 10 Q. B. D. 63, a case which arose under section 117 of the Public Health Act, 1875. If the facts brought the case within sub-section 3 the alderman ought to have convicted the respondent notwithstanding the first summons was withdrawn.

Channell, Q.C. (R. D. Muir with him), for the respondent.—The meat never at any time belonged to the respondent. It did not, at any rate, belong to him at any time sufficient to satisfy the Act. The prosecution could not succeed under sub-section 2. The summons ought to have been framed under sub-section 3: Reg. v. Dennis, 42 W. R. 586, [1894] 2 Q. B. 458.

WILLS, J.—I am of opinion that the appeal must be dismissed. The matter was really before the alderman under sub-section 2. It turned out at the end of the case that the appellant might have proceeded with more advantage under sub-section 3, but he had not done so, and he had intentionally withdrawn that summons and ceased to make any complaint under sub-section 3.

I will not say that there may not be jurisdiction possibly under these circumstances still to turn the summons back to one under the other sub-section, but I do not think it is a course of procedure we ought to encourage; and I do not think it is one, except under very exceptional circumstances, to be resorted to. But there was not evidence that the complaint under sub-section 3 was ever renewed. The object of the appellant seems to have been to get a decision upon the word "belonged" in sub-section 2. I think, therefore, that there was no complaint before the alderman upon which he had jurisdiction to act under sub-section 3, and I think that it would have been quite an erroneous exercise of discretion, if he had any, to alter the summons.

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

That, therefore, calls on us to say whether there is a case under sub-section 2. Now, under sub-section 2 the only question that is proposed to us is as to the meaning of the word "belonged," and I certainly should be very sorry to say one single word which would give countenance to the view urged by the respondent that a meat salesman who has meat entrusted to him for the purpose of selling on commission is not a person to whom the meat belongs. The thing has not been argued, and therefore I do not give any decision upon it, but it strikes one at first sight that it is an unreasonable limitation to the enactment.

But supposing that question ought to be decided in favour of the appellant, can we send the case back to the magistrate to convict when we see that it is not a complaint under sub-section 2 at all, and that under sub-section 2 no offence has been committed? I think not. I think you cannot send back a case to the magistrate where it is plain upon the facts of the case that a conviction ought not to take place. I think that has been the common practice, not that the court encourages anybody to raise new points that have not been raised before, but if in the course of the discussion of the case it becomes free from doubt that no conviction ought to have taken place, it is consonant with my recollection of the practice that the case will not be sent back for conviction, which it would be if we simply sent it back answering the question raised by the appellant as to the meaning of the word "belonged."

As to the applicability of sub-section 2 and sub-section 3, I entertain no doubt myself that sub-section 2 is an enlarged edition of the enactment in section 117 of the Public Health Act, 1875, but I do not think it was intended to alter the general applicability of the limitation laid down in Vinter v. Hind, and I think that sub-section 3 was inserted for the very purpose of meeting such a case as that which has now arisen. That is the view which was taken by three members at least of the Court of Criminal Appeal in the case which has been cited, and it seems to me to be consonant with the language of the two sections.

WRIGHT, J.—I am of the same opinion. I think the second sub-section substantially points to people to whom the thing belonged or who had possession of it at the time which may be shortly described as the time of condemnation. That is not exactly right, but it is impossible to say exactly what the section does mean. And sub-section 3, I agree, was really for the purpose of dealing with other people who had previously sold the thing.

I entertain no doubt that sub-section 3 is applicable against a factor for sale. I entertain no doubt about that whatever, and I have very little doubt that sub-section 2 is applicable against a factor for sale.

Solicitor for the appellant, Matthew H. Hale.

Solicitors for the respondent, Prebble & Hall.

Q. B. Div.
(Grantham and Wright, JJ.) Nov. 10.

Ex parte KIPPINS. (a.)

Metropolis — Hackney carriage — Railway station — "Place"—Whether railway station is a "place"— London Hackney Carriage Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 33), s. 17, sub-section 2.

Section 17 of the London Hackney Carriage Act, 1853, imposes a penalty upon the driver of any hackney carriage who refuses to drive to any "place within the limits of the Act" to which he shall be required to drive any person hiring or intending to hire such carriage.

Held, that a railway station is a "place" within the meaning of this section, and that the driver of a hackney carriage who refuses to drive the person hiring such carriage into a railway station, within the limits of the Act, is liable to the penalty.

Application for a mandamus to Mr. Curtis Bennett, metropolitan police magistrate, commanding him to state a case for the opinion of the High Court.

An information was preferred against Joseph Kippins, the driver of a hackney carriage, charging him with having, on the 29th of October, 1896, in a thoroughfare within the metropolitan police district, unlawfully refused to drive a person hiring such carriage to a certain place within the limits of the London Hackney Carriage Act, 1853—to wit, Euston Station.

On the 29th of October the complainant engaged the defendant, who was the driver of a hackney carriage, and told him to drive to Euston Station. The defendant drove the complainant from Chalk Farm to the gates of Euston Station, and was then requested by the complainant to go inside the station. The defendant refused to go inside the station, although one of the servants of the railway company told the defendant that he was at liberty to go inside the station. The complainant then got out without the defendant having gone inside the station. The defendant had driven close up to the gates of the station and within a few feet of the premises of the company.

Before the magistrate an objection was taken for the defendant that the railway station was not a "place" within the meaning of section 17 of the London Hackney Carriage Act, 1853, and that therefore the defendant could not be convicted. The magistrate overruled the objection, and convicted the defendant, and fined him in a sum of 40s. and costs, or in default to one month's imprisonment; and he refused to state a case as to whether the railway station was a "place" within the meaning of the Act.

Section 17 of the London Hackney Carriage Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 33) provides: "The driver of any hackney carriage who shall commit any of the following offences within the limits of this Act, shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding forty shillings for each offence, or in default of payment to imprisonment for any time not exceeding one calendar month; . . . (2) Every driver of a hackney carriage who shall refuse to drive such carriage to any place within the limits of this Act, not exceeding six miles, to which he shall be required to drive any person hiring or intending to hire such carriage. . . ."

Roskill, in support of the motion.—The magistrate was wrong in convicting the defendant, and he ought to have stated a case. The railway station was not a "place" within the meaning of the section. It was the private property of the railway company the public had no right of access to the station and cabs could not ply for hire there, and it therefore does not come within the section as a "place": Case v. Storey, 17 W. R. 802, L. R. 4 Eq. 319; Skinner v. Usher, 20 W. R. 659, L. R. 7 Q. B. 423.

GRANTHAM, J.—I am of opinion that a rule ought not to be granted in this case, as the point is clear. The cases cited for the purpose of showing that railway station is not a "place" were decided on other statutes. In Case v. Storey the question was whether a hackney carriage, whilst on the premises of a railway company by their leave for the accommodation of passengers, was plying for hire in "a street or place" within section 35 of 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 22, and it was held that the words "street or place" in that section must be read in conjunction with section 4 of the Act, which deals with plying for hire in any "public street or road," and that as a railway station could not come under that description it was not a street or place within section 35. After that came the case of Clarke v. Stanford, 19 W. R. 846, L. R. 6 Q. B. 357, which is a direct authority upon the point and against this application. The court there held that a hackney carriage on the premises of a railway company for the conveyance of the passengers of the railway was plying for hire within the limits of the Act. Cockburn, C.J., said: "Where a person has a carriage ready for the conveyance of passengers in a place frequented by the public, he is plying for hire, although the place is private property. . . . The Legislature has omitted the words 'public place,' and this appears to have been done intentionally and advisedly." In the present case the word "public" is also omitted. It seems to me, therefore, that Clarke v. Stanford is an authority to show that a railway station is a "place" within the meaning of this Act, and that therefore the driver who refuses to drive into the station comes within the section and incurs the penalty. The case of Skinner v. Usher, which was cited in support of the application, was decided on section 33 of 6 & 7 Vict. c. 86, and it was decided on the ground that the two Acts, 1 & 2 Will. 4, c. 22, and 6 & 7 Vict. c. 86, were to be read together, and that therefore the same meaning was to be put on the word "place" in section 33 of the later Act as was put upon it in section 35 of the earlier Act. The cases, therefore, which have been cited have no application here; but Clarke v. Stanford does apply, and from that case it is clear that this railway station, although it was private property, was a "place" within the meaning of the Act.

(a.) Reported by Sir SHERSTON BAKER, Bart., Barrister-at-Law.

I think, therefore, the magistrate was perfectly right, and that this application must be refused.

WRIGHT, J.—I am of the same opinion. No case has been cited to show that the language of this section ought to be cut down as suggested. It would be unreasonable that a cab-driver could not be compelled to drive into a railway station. I think the meaning is that he must drive to any place, within the limits of the Act, to which he is ordered to drive, if he can get admittance to that place.

Application refused.

Solicitors for applicant, Pattinson & Brewer.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Q. B. Div. (Vaughan Williams, J.) } Nov. 16; Dec. 1.

In re SIMS.

Ex parte SHEFFIELD v. PRINCE. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Avoidance of voluntary settlement—Right of settlement trustees to surplus after payment of debts in full—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), s. 47 (1).

When a voluntary settlement is declared void as against the trustee in bankruptcy under section 47 (1), such avoidance only operates to the amount of the debts and costs of the bankruptcy, the surplus of the settled property reverts to the trustees of the settlement subject to the trusts thereof.

Motion by the trustee in the bankruptcy to set aside a voluntary settlement made by the bankrupt within two years of his bankruptcy. The trustees of the settlement opposed the motion, on the ground that the settled property exceeded the total amount of the bankrupt's debts.

Muir Mackenzie, for the trustees of the settlement.—In this case the debts amount to about £1,600, and the settled property amounts to about £16,000, mostly invested in mortgages. I submit that the settlement is good beyond the amount of the debts, and ask for an order limited to payment into court of sufficient money to pay the debts.

Ribton, for the bankrupt.—I oppose such an order, the debtor, not the trustees of the settlement, is entitled to the surplus. The settlement being void, the property reverts to the donor: Re Farnham (No. 1), [1895] 2 Ch. 799, 44 W. R. Dig. 98; Sanguinetti v. Stuckey's Bank, 43 W. R. 154, [1895] 1 Ch. 176.

Herbert Reed, Q.C. (Ashton Cross with him), for the trustee in bankruptcy.—I insist on my right to an order declaring the settlement void as against my client.

Muir Mackenzie in reply.—The settlement is only void so far as the debts go: In re Holden, Ex parte The Official Receiver, 36 W. R. 189, 20 Q. B. D. 43.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 1.—VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, J.—This is an application under section 47 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, by the trustee in the bankruptcy asking that a voluntary settlement, executed by the bankrupt upon the 10th of August, 1894, may be declared void. It is not denied that he is entitled to his order, but the question arises, What directions should be given consequential on the order?

Those asked for are, firstly, a declaration that the property comprised in the settlement, subject to the trusts thereof, is now vested in the trustee in bankruptcy; alternatively an order to the trustees of the settlement to execute a deed vesting such settled property in the trustee in bankruptcy so as to enable him to realize it; thirdly, an order to the respondents to hand over the settled property to the trustee in bankruptcy and render an account on oath of the same.

The settlement in question seems to have vested the whole of the settlor's property in trustees and to have been made with the object of protecting the settlor against his own extravagance. He gets a life interest, and an income is provided for his wife and children (if any), but at present he is unmarried.

If the effect of the avoidance of the settlement under section 47 were simply to wipe it out as if it never had been, it would be right for me to make the order asked for by the trustees of the settlement, but I doubt whether the avoidance of a settlement under section 47 has this effect, or that the surplus after payment of the debts would revert to the settlor. There are two cases which look as if they decided that this was the effect. The first is the case of Sanguinetti v. Stuckey's Bank, where Chitty, J., decided that the effect of such avoidance is to let in a mortgagee on a subsequent mortgage, as if the settlement had never existed. This looks as if the avoidance extinguished the rights of the beneficiaries under the settlement, but if the judgment of Chitty, J., is considered, it will be seen that he is careful to say that the question raised in the case before him was between the trustee in bankruptcy and the mortgagee only, the beneficiaries not being before the court.

(a.) Reported by P. M. FRANCKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The second case is In re Farnham (No. 1), where the trustee set up against a lunacy prior to the bankruptcy the rights of the bankrupt's wife as a beneficiary. In that case Lindley, L.J., says: "If the settlement is void as against the trustee, it is void altogether. The section does not mean that the property, the subject of the settlement, vests in the trustee by a title which overrides both that of the donor and the donee. The settlement being void the property reverts to the donor, and it is as the donor's property that it vests in the trustee, and must be distributed correctly." In this case again it was not suggested that there was any surplus of the settled property after the payment of the debts, and the question of the beneficiaries' interest was not raised. I do not think, therefore, that either case involves the decision that avoidance under this section goes further than the payment of the bankrupt's debts and the costs of the bankruptcy. If it were not so a settlor could always get rid of a settlement by simply making himself a bankrupt. I am aware that in this case there are no living persons other than the bankrupt having an interest under the trusts of the settlement, but I think it better to deal with the principle generally. I declare the settlement void as against the trustee in bankruptcy, and direct the settlement trustees to hand over the settled property without prejudice to their applying for the surplus. It is not a case where I should order the settlement to be cancelled, as that would give rise to unnecessary complications. I further direct the trustee in bankruptcy not to realise the settled property until the total of the debts and costs has been ascertained, and to give notice to the settlement trustees of the amount.

Solicitors for the trustee in bankruptcy, Rogers, Hartley, & Bastard.

Solicitors for the settlement trustees, Prince & Davis.

Solicitor for the debtor, H. Stanley-Jones.

Q. B. Div.
(Vaughan Williams, J.) Nov. 2.

In re PAINE.
Ex parte REED. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Fraudulent preference—Creditor—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 37, 48.

B. gave the debtor his accommodation acceptance for £20, which the debtor discounted at his bankers. Within three months of the presentation of the petition the debtor paid in £20 to his bankers to meet the bill.

Held, that the payment was a fraudulent preference of B.; for though he was not actually a creditor at the date of the receiving order, he would have been one had it not been for such payment.

Motion by the trustee in the bankruptcy for a declaration that a certain payment by the bankrupt to his bankers on or about the 17th of April, 1895, for the purpose of providing funds to meet a bill of exchange accepted by the respondent, and for which the respondent was liable to the said bankers, was a fraudulent preference of the respondent.

In the early part of 1895 the respondent Barnard gave the bankrupt his accommodation acceptance for £20, which the bankrupt discounted with his bankers. Upon the 17th of April he paid £20 into his bank to meet the acceptance. Upon the 25th of April he executed a deed of assignment for the benefit of his creditors, and upon this act of bankruptcy a receiving order was made against him upon the 8th of May, and he was adjudicated a bankrupt upon the 13th of May.

His trustee now sought to have the payment of £20 to meet the acceptance declared a fraudulent preference, it having been made within three months of the presentation of the petition.

Muir Mackenzie, for the trustee, stated the facts, and was stopped by the court.

F. C. Willis, for the respondent.—A payment made with a view of preventing a surety from being called upon to pay is not a fraudulent preference: In re Mills, Ex parte Official Receiver, 5 Morr. 55, 36 W. R. Dig. 15. There is also the question whether Barnard was really a creditor at the date of the receiving order. [VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, J.—That depends on whether, if he had not been paid, his debt would have been one provable in bankruptcy within section 37 (3) of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883, "Save as aforesaid all debts and liabilities present or future, certain or contingent, to which the debtor is subject at the date of the receiving order, or to which he may become subject before his discharge by reason of obligations incurred before the date of the receiving order shall be deemed to be debts provable in the bankruptcy.]

Muir Mackenzie.—Barnard was a creditor and could have proved for his debt: Wolmershausen v. Gullick, [1893] 2 Ch. 514, 41 W. R. Dig. 16, 193; Johnston v. Salvage Association, 36 W. R. 56, 19 Q. B. D. 458; Lacey v. Hill, 21 W. R. 239, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 441.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, J.—I have to decide this matter on the proper construction of the Act of Parliament, and I therefore need not trouble about equitable considerations. It is not now contended that at the moment the payment was made Barnard was a creditor in the sense that he would have had a right to judgment or payment of a sum of money to him, irrespective of whether bankruptcy followed.

I have only to decide what is the meaning of the word "creditor" in section 48.

"Every payment made . . . in favour of any creditor . . . with a view of giving such creditor a preference over the other creditors . . . shall be deemed fraudulent and void as against the trustee in the bankruptcy." There is no definition of creditor in section 168, and I have therefore to look at the history of section 48.

The judges decided the cases on which that section was founded in the way they did because it enabled them to deal with payments made in contemplation of bankruptcy, and to secure a rateable administration of the bankrupt's estate amongst those having claims on it. In my judgment when once I have arrived at that conclusion it seems to me that the "creditor" in section 48 must be a person who would be entitled to a share in that distribution. I think the intention of the judges when they invented the doctrine of fraudulent preference, and of the Legislature when it passed section 48, was to prevent the bankrupt giving a preference to a person who but for that preference would have had to come in an rank with the other creditors.

It is not disputed that under section 37 Barnard was a person with a right of proof.

My decision is that you may make a fraudulent preference by a payment to a surety who has not been called upon to pay.

Solicitors for the trustee, Pritchard & Englefield.

Solicitors for the respondent, W. H. Smith & Son.

(a.) Reported by P. M. FRANCKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. Admiralty. } June 24; July 9, 1896.

"THE MARIPOSA." (a.)

Quantum meruit—Contract entered into with shipmaster as agent for passengers—Non-liability of owner of passenger ship—Delay or deviation.

There is no implication of law making the master of a wrecked passenger ship the agent of his owner to enter into a contract on his behalf for the passengers to be carried on in another ship where the passengers sent on have been landed from the wreck at a spot where they are in no danger of losing their lives from exposure or want of food or water, and cannot under their passenger tickets claim any damages for delay or detention.

This was an action instituted on behalf of James and Alexander Allan and others, the owners of the steamships Sardinian and Austrian, in personam against the Ocean Transport Co. (Limited), the owners of the steamship Mariposa, to recover salvage remuneration for services rendered in assisting The Mariposa and in saving the lives of the passengers of The Mariposa, or, in the alternative, for services rendered by the plaintiffs for the defendants at the request of the defendants' agents in the circumstances specified in the statement of claim.

The statement of claim alleged in effect that The Sardinian, a steamship of about 4,400 tons gross, belonging to the Allan Line, was, on the 24th of September, 1895, proceeding through the Straits of Belle Isle on a voyage from the United Kingdom when the schooner Telegram came alongside her and those on board her informed the master of The Sardinian, as the fact was, that The Mariposa, with a valuable cargo and thirty-one passengers, and a crew of about eighty-seven in number, had gone ashore in a fog on the coast of Labrador, and the passengers were ashore, but exposed to considerable hardships; that The Sardinian then proceeded towards the spot where The Mariposa was reported to be ashore, and was met by a boat from The Mariposa with a message from the master of The Mariposa requesting The Sardinian to proceed to a fishing village about five miles off to embark the passengers and crew; that on proceeding along the coast, and on arriving at a place called Forteau Bay, The Sardinian anchored, and boats from the shore put on board The Sardinian forty-nine persons who had been brought ashore from The Mariposa, being twenty-eight of her cabin passengers, two steerage passengers, and nineteen of her crew, and ultimately The Sardinian, with these forty-nine persons on board, proceeded on her course and arrived safely at Liverpool; that on the 25th of September last those on board The Austrian, another steamship belonging to the Allan Line, of 2,682 tons gross, on a voyage from London to Montreal, perceived The Mariposa as she lay stranded and flying signals of distress, and on approaching the wreck was requested by letter from the master of The Mariposa to take the remainder of that vessel's crew to Quebec and to communicate with the nearest point requesting salvage assistance to be sent; that accordingly The Austrian took on board forty-three persons, of whom two were stowaways and one a passenger, from on board The Mariposa, the rest being members of the crew, and conveyed them to Quebec; and that by reason of these services the passengers and crew of The Mariposa were saved from considerable hardship and exposure on a desolate coast with very scanty accommodation and were conveyed to their destination in safety and comfort, and the defendants were saved the cost of maintaining their passengers and crew for a long period and of carrying them to their destination, whilst the plaintiffs also expended, at the request of the defendants, in feeding the passengers and crew, money not then nor yet repaid to them.

The Ocean Transport Co. (Limited) appeared as defendants and delivered a defence, alleging, inter alia, denials (1) that they were saved the costs either of maintaining the passengers and crew or of carrying them to their destination; (2) that they requested the plaintiffs to expend money as alleged in the statement of claim at all; and (3) that no agreement, express or implied, was made between the plaintiffs and the defendants; and further pleading that if any agreement was made it was an agreement for salvage and salvage remuneration, and not otherwise; that property of the value of £335, and no more, was salved to the plaintiffs, and that a payment of £200 had been made into court in satisfaction of the claim of the plaintiffs in respect of the matters alleged in the statement of claim.

June 24.—The suit was heard before Barnes, J.

It appeared in evidence that the passage tickets of the passengers of The Mariposa contained the following clause: "The company is not liable for loss or delay from the act of God, the Queen's enemies, fire, robbers, thieves (whether on board the steamer or not), perils of the seas, rivers, or navigation, accident to any machinery or boilers, default of the company's servants (whether on board the steamer or not), restraints of princes, rulers, or people."

The result of the remainder of the evidence appears from the judgment.

Sir W. Phillimore and Scrutton, for the plaintiffs.—The lives of the passengers were saved from some peril and inconvenience by the services of the plaintiffs. Indeed, the case is, in principle, on all fours with that of The Medina, 24 W. R. 928, 25 Ib. 156, 1 P. D. 272, 2 Ib. 5. In that case 550 pilgrims were taken off by a passing steamer from a rock in the Red Sea, where they were safe at the time the services were rendered, but would have been in danger of being drowned if bad weather had set in, and the Court of Appeal held that £1,800 was a proper salvage remuneration to be given to the owners, master, and crew of the salving steamer. But even if life salvage is not strictly due, the master, in making the arrangement he did for the comfort of the passengers, was acting as agent for his owners and for their benefit. The master had a duty cast upon him to forward his owners' interest, quite apart from the legal terms of the passengers' contract with his owners, and acted within the scope of his authority in requesting the assistance of the plaintiffs to prevent the stigma which would have attached to his owners if he had not done his best for the passengers entrusted to his charge.

They referred to The Alfred, 5 Asp. Mar. Law Cas. 214, 32 W. R. Dig. 194; Notara v. Henderson, 20 W. R. 443, L. R. 7 Q. B. 225.

Joseph Walton, Q.C., and Bateson, for the defendants.—The defendants submit that the sum tendered is sufficient to recompense the plaintiffs for the salvage service performed in reference to reporting the wreck of The Mariposa and for the money actually expended by them, but they contend that no life salvage can be due, the lives of the passengers not having been, in fact, in danger: Cargo ex Woosung, No. 2, 3 Asp. L. C. 50, 44 L. J. Ad. 45; and that as the defendants were under no liability to the passengers for the consequences of the wreck, the master of The Mariposa, in making the agreement under which the passengers of The Mariposa were carried on, acted as their agent ex necessitate, and not as agent for his owners, who, in accordance with what was said by the Master of the Rolls in The Renpor, 31 W. R. 640, 8 P. D. 115, the contract with the passengers being what it was, were under no legal liability to carry them on. In The Medina the owners of that vessel were enabled by the action of the plaintiffs to fulfil the contract they had made for the conveyance of the pilgrims and to earn their freight*: Kennedy on Salvage, p. 61. The master of The Medina, therefore, did no more than his legal duty in engaging The Timor to carry on the pilgrims in that case.

(a.) Reported by C. F. JEMMETT, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 9.—BARNES, J.—The plaintiffs in this case are the owners of the steamships Sardinian and Austrian, of the Allan Line of steamers running between England and Canada. The defendants were the owners of the steamship Mariposa, a vessel of 5,305 tons gross register, which was running between Montreal and Liverpool as one of the Dominion Line of steamers under an agreement between the defendants and the Mississippi and Dominion Steamship Co. (Limited) for the summer of 1895, under which the defendants received the freights and passage moneys and allowed certain commissions to the other company. On the 24th of September, 1895, The Mariposa, on her voyage from Montreal to Liverpool with cargo, twenty-eight cabin passengers, and a crew of eighty-seven hands all told, and two stowaways, ran ashore in a fog on the coast of Labrador, about five miles west of Forteau Bay, in the Straits of Belle Isle, in consequence whereof she became a total loss, materials belonging to the vessel to the value of £335 and some cargo being only saved. Immediately after the accident the passengers and crew were landed, and the passengers went on to and were accommodated at Forteau village. Another vessel of the Dominion Line was expected to pass by in a short time, but the master of The Mariposa, being anxious to enable the passengers to get back to Quebec or on to Liverpool as early as possible, sent out a schooner to intercept the plaintiffs' steamer Sardinian, which was proceeding through the Straits of Belle Isle on a voyage from Montreal to Liverpool with 190 passengers, cargo, and mails, and a crew of 106 hands all told. At the request of the master of The Mariposa The Sardinian proceeded to Forteau Bay and took on board twenty-eight cabin passengers, the two stowaways, and nineteen of the crew of The Mariposa. The cabin passengers were provided with first-class, and the others taken on board The Sardinian with good, accommodation. They were then safely conveyed by The Sardinian to Liverpool, and the costs of their maintenance amounted to £63 14s.

On the 25th of September, 1895, the plaintiffs' steamer Austrian, a vessel of 2,682 tons, which was proceeding through the same straits on a voyage from London to Montreal with cargo and a crew of forty-seven hands, passed the wreck, and at the request of the master of The Mariposa one passenger and forty-two of the crew of The Mariposa were taken by The Austrian to Quebec, and also, at the request of the master of The Mariposa, a telegram was sent from the telegraph station at Cape Madeline by the master of The Austrian to the agent of The Mariposa at Quebec to send assistance. I understand that assistance was sent in consequence of this telegram, but that it produced no result. The cost of the maintenance of the said forty-three persons on The Austrian was £12 18s. On the same or following day one of the Dominion Line steamers took away the rest of the crew of The Mariposa.

The plaintiffs claim for the services rendered to the passengers and crew, either as life salvage or as being rendered by the plaintiffs for the defendants at the request of the defendants' master. They also claim salvage remuneration for taking the message to the telegraph station.

The defendants have paid into court the sum of £200 to meet any claims of the plaintiffs, and it is clear that this sum is sufficient to cover any claim for sending the telegram and for the expenses incurred, even if the latter can be recovered from the defendants, which they deny. It is therefore enough to satisfy all claims of the plaintiffs, unless the plaintiffs are entitled to recover some reward or remuneration for the conveyance of the passengers to Liverpool and Quebec.

First, with regard to the claim for alleged life salvage, ship's materials to the value of £335 were saved, but the passengers and crew were in safety at Forteau Bay, and could get away without difficulty by passing steamers. They were in no danger of starvation, and were merely inconvenienced by the accident. The case of Cargo ex Woosung is an authority for holding that no claim for life salvage can be maintained in such circumstances. The plaintiffs, however, contend that the passengers were carried by The Sardinian and Austrian for the defendants at their request made by their agent, and that therefore the plaintiffs are entitled to reasonable remuneration for this carriage. The defendants contend that the master of The Mariposa had no authority from them to make any arrangements on their behalf for the carriage of the passengers. These opposing contentions raise a question of some difficulty which I am forced to decide, as the defendants stand upon their strict rights, although the assistance rendered by the plaintiffs to The Mariposa's passengers was generously given in circumstances in which one shipowner may reasonably be expected to assist another and be rewarded for doing so.

The question turns upon the contract under which the passengers were being carried. As to the non-liability of the defendants [the learned judge read the clause in the passengers' contract as set out above, and continued:—] It follows from this that the position in which the passengers were placed by the accident was not a matter for which the defendants could be made liable, and therefore they were not under any obligation to forward the passengers to their destination.

The master gives the reason for sending the passengers on in the following passage from his evidence: "Q.—Except to the passengers and crew and to the two stowaways was there any value in the services of The Sardinian and The Austrian so far as you were concerned? A.—No. I do not think there was anything extra done more than any man should do taking people away from a shore like that. It was no use leaving them there. Q.—What any shipmaster would do? A.—Yes; that is what I say. Q.—No benefit to your owners? A.—No; not a bit to my owners—not the slightest benefit at all. Q.—Why did you make these arrangements for the passengers? A.—To ease my own mind in the trouble I was in at the time and the comfort of the passengers instead of letting them stop on this barren shore there in a fishing village. Q.—You considered your first duty——? A.—Was to look after the passengers and crew and get them away. Q.—And it was for them you were acting and making these arrangements? A.—Yes. Q.—Did you think your owners would pay for these passengers? A.—No. I did not think anything about it. Q.—Or did you intend that they should? A.—All I cared about: I told my chief steward to hand all the passenger tickets back to the passengers, and I calculated that the Allan Line would get the money which The Mariposa would have had for the passengers. It was a very good thing for her coming along and taking them, because she had not so many herself in the saloon. Q.—That is what you thought? A.—That is what struck me at the time. Q.—You did not expect your owners would pay? A.—No, sir."

* See the argument of Dr. Deane for the plaintiffs in the Admiralty Division: The Medina, 1 P. D. 272, at p. 274.

I am of opinion that the master, doing what he did, was acting for the benefit and on account and as the agent for the passengers, and not of the defendants. The case of The Medina was cited by the plaintiffs' counsel, but I have been unable to ascertain upon what terms the pilgrims were being carried, and whether the passage-money was at risk and saved by the services of the salvors. On referring to the pleadings in this case I find that the defendants were ready and willing to pay to the plaintiffs a reasonable amount for their services, and the point discussed before me was not raised. The observations of the Master of the Rolls in the case of The Renpor are in favour of the view of the law which I am constrained to adopt. In the passage in the judgment where he says: "But there are two circumstances necessary in order to make an agreement binding on an owner—first, the contract must be made under a necessity; and, secondly, it must be made for his benefit. I do not desire to say anything which may seem cruel, but I must express a doubt whether, if an agreement is made only for the purpose of saving a master and a crew, without regard to any saving of the property of the shipowner, though it be in a case of necessity, yet, as the subject-matter is without benefit to the property of the shipowner, the master has authority to bind the owner to a money payment."

I hold that the defendants are not liable on the agreement alleged to have been made by the master, and therefore I must uphold the tender.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Pritchard & Sons.

Solicitors for the defendants, Stokes & Stokes.

House of Lords.

From C. A. (England). Nov. 16.

SALOMON (Pauper) v. SALOMON & CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Company—Company incorporated for the benefit of one person — Debentures—Statutory requirements—Preponderance of one shareholder—Companies Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 89), ss. 6, 8.

By complying with the requirements of the Companies Act, 1862, any lawful business may be converted into a limited liability company, and it is immaterial that an overwhelming number of shares are held by one person (the vendor to the company), or that debentures were issued in part payment of the purchase-money, or that the object of incorporation was to prevent the creditors of the company from obtaining more than the statutory liability of the shareholders imposes.

Decision of the Court of Appeal (Broderip v. Salomon, 43 W. R. 612, [1895] 2 Ch. 323) reversed.

This was an appeal in formâ pauperis by Aron Salomon from an order of the Court of Appeal (Lindley, Lopes, and Kay, L.JJ.), reported 43 W. R. 612, [1895] 2 Ch. 323, under the name of Broderip v. Salomon & Co., affirming the decision of Vaughan Williams, J. There was also a cross-appeal by the respondents, Salomon & Co. The facts and the whole course of the proceedings are given in the judgments of Lords Watson and Herschell.

Cohen, Q.C., Buckley, Q.C. (McCall, Q.C., and Muir Mackenzie with them), for the appellant.—So long as the provisions of the Company Acts are complied with, any person may trade with limited liability. Vaughan Williams, J.'s, judgment involves (1) that the appellant employed the company to carry on this business; (2) that the company was the agent of the appellant. If seven subscribers to the memorandum are registerered as required by the Act, the certificate is conclusive of the incorporation of the company. [Lord DAVEY referred to In re National Debenture Corporation, 39 W. R. 707, [1891] 2 Ch. 505.] The legal persona so constituted is very different from the founder: see In re George Newman & Co., 43 W. R. 483, [1895] 1 Ch. 674, at p. 685; Farrar v. Farrars, 37 W. R. 196, 40 Ch. D. 395. The corporation a different thing from the corporators: In re Ambrose Lake Tin, &c., Co., 28 W. R. 783, 14 Ch. D. 190; British Seamless Paper Co., 29 W. R. 690, 17 Ch. D. 467. In Reg. v. Arnaud, 9 Q. B. 806, some of the holders of the British steamship were foreigners, still it was an English corporation; see judgment of Denman, C.J. Section 23 of the Companies Act, 1862, defines who are members, and section 48 is a prohibition against carrying on business with less than seven members. The creditors gave credit to the corporation, whose position and circumstances could be ascertained. [The question of fraud is dealt with in their lordships' judgments.]

Farwell, Q.C., and Theobald, for the respondents, the limited company known as Salomon & Co.—The corporation had no separate existence. The agreement of the 2nd of August ought to be set aside. The price paid was exorbitant—the vendor, who was in a fiduciary position, did not disclose that he was going to make a profit.

They cited or referred to North-West Transportation Co. v. Beatty, 36 W. R. 647, 12 App. Cas. 589; Erlanger v. New Sombrero Phosphate Co., 27 W. R. 65, 3 App. Cas. 1218; Farrar v. Farrars; Newbiggin v. Adams, 37 W. R. 97, 13 App. Cas. 308.

The House took time for consideration.

Lord HALSBURY, C.—The important question in this case, I am not certain whether it is not the only question, is whether the respondent company was a company at all; whether, in truth, that artificial creation of the Legislature had been validly constituted in this instance; and, in order to determine that question, it is necessary to look at what the statute itself has required in that respect (see section 6 of the Companies Act, 1862). I have no right to add to the requirements of the statute, nor to take from the requirements thus enacted. The sole guide must be the statute itself. Now, that there were seven actual living persons who held shares in the company has not been doubted. As to the proportionate amounts held by each I will deal presently; but it is important to observe that this first condition of the statute is satisfied, and it follows as a consequence that it would not be competent to any one, and certainly not to these persons themselves, to deny that they were shareholders. I must pause here to point out that the statute enacts nothing as to the extent or degree of interest which may be held by each of the seven, or as to the proportion of interest or influence possessed by one or the majority of the shareholders over the others. One share is a sufficient qualification for each of the signatories. Still less is it possible to contend that the motive of becoming shareholders or of making others become shareholders is a field of inquiry which the statute itself recognizes as legitimate. If they are shareholders they are shareholders for all purposes, and, even if the statute was silent as to the recognition of trusts, I should be prepared to hold that if six of them were the cestui que trusts of the seventh, whatever might be their rights inter se, the statute would have made them shareholders to all intents and purposes with their respective rights and liabilities; and dealing with them in their relation to the company, the only relations which I believe the law would sanction would be that they were corporators of the corporate body. I am simply here dealing with the provisions of the statute, and it seems to me to be essential to the artificial creation of a company that the law should recognize only that artificial existence, quite apart from the motives or conduct of individual corporators. In saying this I do not at all mean to suggest that if it could be established that this provision of the statute to which I am adverting had not been complied with, you could not go behind the certificate of incorporation to show that a fraud had been committed upon the officer intrusted with the duty of giving the certificate, and that by some proceeding in the nature of scire facias you could not prove the fact that the company had no real legal existence. But short of such proof, it seems to me impossible to dispute that once the company is legally incorporated, it must be treated like any other independent person with its rights and liabilities appropriate to itself, and that the motives of those who took part in the promotion of the company are absolutely irrelevant in discussing what those rights and liabilities are.

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

I will, for the sake of argument, assume the proposition that the Court of Appeal lays down, that the formation of the company was a mere scheme to enable Salomon to carry on business in the name of the company. I am wholly unable to follow the proposition that this was contrary to the true intent and meaning of the Companies Act. I can only find the true intent and meaning of the Act from the Act itself, and the Act appears to me to give a company a legal existence with, as I have said, rights and liabilities of its own, whatever may have been the ideas or schemes of those who brought it into existence. I observe that Vaughan Williams, J., held that the business was that of Salomon and of no one else, and that he chose to employ as agent a limited company; and that learned judge proceeded to argue that Salomon was employing that limited company as agent, and that he was bound to indemnify that agent—the company. I confess it seems to me that that very learned judge becomes involved by this argument in a very singular contradiction. Either the limited company was a legal entity or it was not. If it was, the business belonged to it and not to Salomon. If it was not, there was no person and no thing to be an agent at all; and it is impossible to say at the same time that there is and there is not, a company. Lindley, L.J., on the other hand, affirms that there were seven members of the company, but, he says, it is manifest that six of them were members simply in order to enable the seventh himself to carry on business with limited liability, and that the object of the whole arrangement was to do the very thing which the Legislature intended not to be done. It is obviously necessary to inquire where is that intention of the Legislature manifested in the statute? Even if we were at liberty to insert words to manifest that intention I should have great difficulty in ascertaining what the exact intention thus imputed to the Legislature is or was. In this particular case it is the members of one family that represent all the shares; but if the supposed intention is not limited to so narrow a proposition as this, that the seven members must not be members of one family, to what extent may influence or authority or intentional purchase of a majority among the shareholders be carried so as to bring it within the supposed prohibition? It is, of course, easy to say that it was contrary to the intention of the Legislature—a proposition which, by reason of its generality, it is difficult to bring to the test; but when one seeks to put as an affirmative proposition what the thing is which the Legislature has prohibited, there is, as it appears to me, an insuperable difficulty in the way of those who seek to insert by construction such a prohibition into the statute. As one mode of testing the proposition it would be pertinent to ask whether two or three, or, indeed, all seven, may constitute the whole of the shareholders. Whether they must be all independent of each other in the sense of each having an independent beneficial interest—and this is a question that cannot be answered by the reply that it is a matter of degree. If the Legislature intended to prohibit something, it ought to specify what that something is. All it has said is that one share is sufficient to constitute a shareholder, though the shares may be 100,000 in number. I am unable to get from the statute itself the limitation that that shareholder must be an independent and beneficially interested person. I find all through the judgment of the Court of Appeal a repetition of the same proposition to which I have already adverted—that the business was the business of Salomon, and that the company is variously described as a myth and a fiction. Lopes, L.J., says: "The Act contemplated the incorporation of seven independent bonâ fide members, who had a mind and a will of their own, and were not the mere puppets of an individual who, adopting the machinery of the Act, carried on his old business in the same way as before, when he was a sole trader." The words "seven independent bonâ fide members with a mind and will of their own and not the puppets of an individual" are by construction to be read into the Act. Lopes, L.J., also said that the company was a mere nominis umbra. Kay, L.J., says: "The statutes were intended to allow seven or more persons bonâ fide associated for the purpose of trade to limit their liability under certain conditions and to become a corporation. But they were not intended to legalize a pretended association for the purpose of enabling an individual to carry on his own business with limited liability in the name of a joint-stock company." The learned judges appear to me not to have been absolutely certain in their own minds whether to treat the company as a real thing or not. If it was a real thing, if it had a legal existence, and if, consequently, the law attributed to it certain rights and liabilities in its constitution as a company, it appears to me to follow as a consequence, that it is impossible to deny the validity of the transactions into which it has entered. Vaughan Williams, J., appears to me to have disposed of the argument that the company, which for this purpose he assumed to be a legal entity, was defrauded into the purchase of Aron Salomon's business, because, assuming that the price paid for the business was an exorbitant one, as to which I am myself not satisfied, but, assuming that it was, the learned judge most cogently observes that when all the shareholders are perfectly cognizant of the conditions under which the company is formed and the conditions of the purchase, it is impossible to contend that the company is being defrauded.

The proposition laid down in Erlanger v. New Sombrero Phosphate Co.—I quote the head-note in the "Law Reports" (3 App. Cas. 1218)—is that, "Persons who purchase property and then create a company to purchase from them the property they possess, stand in a fiduciary position towards that company, and must faithfully state to the company the facts which apply to the property, and would influence the company in deciding on the reasonableness of acquiring it." But if every member of the company, every shareholder, knows exactly what is the true state of the facts, which for this purpose must be assumed to be the case here, Vaughan Williams, J.'s, conclusion seems to me to be inevitable—that no case of fraud upon the company could here be established. If there was no fraud and no agency, and if the company was a real one and not a fiction or a myth, every one of the grounds upon which it is sought to support the judgment is disposed of. The truth is that the learned judges have never allowed in their own minds the proposition that the company has a real existence. They have been struck by what they have considered the inexpediency of permitting one man to be, in influence and authority, the whole company, and assuming that such a thing could not have been intended by the Legislature, they have sought various grounds upon which they might insert into the Act some prohibition of such a result. I say, with the utmost deference to the learned judges, that we have nothing to do with the question, whether such a result be right or wrong, politic or impolitic, if this company has been duly constituted by law. Whatever may be the motives of those who constitute it, I must decline to insert into the Act of Parliament, limitations which are not to be found there.

I have dealt with this matter upon the narrow hypothesis propounded by the learned judges below, but it is, I think, only justice to the appellant to say that I see nothing whatever to justify the imputations which are implied in some of the observations made by more than one of the learned judges. The appellant, in my opinion, is not shown to have done, or to have intended to do, anything dishonest or unworthy; but to have suffered a great misfortune without any fault of his own.

The result is that I move your lordships that the judgment appealed from be reversed, but as this is a pauper case I regret to say it can only be with such costs in this House as are appropriate to that condition of things, and that this appeal be dismissed with costs to the same extent.

Lord WATSON.—This appeal raises some questions of practical importance, depending upon the construction of the Companies Acts, which do not appear to have been settled by previous decisions. As I am not prepared to accept without reservation all the conclusions of fact which found favour with the courts below, I shall, before adverting to the law, state what I conceive to be the material facts established by the evidence before us.

The appellant, Aron Salomon, for many years carried on business, on his own account, as a leather merchant and wholesale boot manufacturer. With the design of transferring his business to a joint-stock company, which was to consist exclusively of himself and members of his own family, he, on the 20th of July, 1892, entered into a preliminary agreement with one Adolph Anholt, as trustee for the future company, settling the terms upon which the transfer was to be made by him, one of its conditions being that, in part payment, he was to receive £10,000 in debentures of the company. A memorandum of association was then executed by the appellant, his wife, a daughter, and four sons, each of them subscribing for one share, in which the leading object for which the company was formed was stated to be the adoption and carrying into effect, with such modifications (if any) as might be agreed on, of the provisional agreement of the 20th of July. The memorandum was registered on the 28th of July, 1892; and the effect of registration, if otherwise valid, was to incorporate the company, under the name of "Aron Salomon & Co. (Limited)," with liability limited by shares, and having a nominal capital of £40,000 divided into 40,000 shares of £1 each. The company adopted the agreement of the 20th of July, subject to certain modifications which are not material; and an agreement to that effect was executed between them and the appellant on the 2nd of August, 1892. Within a month or two after that date the whole stipulations of the agreement were fulfilled by both parties. In the terms thereof, 100 debentures, for £100 each, were issued to the appellant, who, upon the security of these documents, obtained an advance of £5,000 from Edmund Broderip. In February, 1893, the original debentures were returned to the company and cancelled; and in lieu thereof, with the consent of the appellant as beneficial owner, fresh debentures to the same amount were issued to Mr. Broderip, in order to secure the repayment of his loan, with interest at 8 per cent. In September, 1892, the appellant applied for and obtained an allotment of 20,000 shares; and from that date until an order was made for its compulsory liquidation, the share register of the company remained unaltered, 20,001 shares being held by the appellant, and six shares by his wife and family. It was all along the intention of these persons to retain the business in their own hands, and not to permit any outsider to acquire an interest in it. Default having been made in the payment of interest upon his debentures, Mr. Broderip, in September, 1893, instituted an action in order to enforce his security against the assets of the company. Thereafter a liquidation order was made, and a liquidator appointed, at the instance of unsecured creditors of the company. It has now been ascertained that, if the amount realized from the assets of the company were, in the first place, applied in extinction of Mr. Broderip's debt and interest, there would remain a balance of about £1,055, which is claimed by the appellant as beneficial owner of the debentures. In the event of his claim being sustained there will be no funds left for payment of the unsecured creditors, whose debts amount to £7,733 8s. 6d.

The liquidator lodged a defence, in name of the company, to the debenture suit, in which he counterclaimed against the appellant (1) to have the agreements of the 20th of July and the 2nd of August, 1892, rescinded; (2) to have the debentures already mentioned delivered up and cancelled; (3) restitution of all sums paid by the company to the appellant under the agreements; and (4) a lien for these sums upon the business and assets. The averments made in support of these claims were to the effect that the price paid by the company exceeded the real value of the business and assets by upwards of £8,200; that the arrangements made by the appellant for the formation of the company were a fraud upon the creditors of the company; that no board of directors of the company were ever appointed; and that, in any case, such board consisted entirely of the appellant, and there never was an independent board.

The case was tried before Vaughan Williams, J., when the liquidator was examined as a witness on behalf of the company, whilst evidence was given for the appellant by himself and by his son, Emanuel Salomon, one of the members of the company, who had been employed in the business for nearly twenty years. The evidence shows that before its transfer to the new company the business had been prosperous, and had yielded to the appellant annual profits sufficient to maintain himself and family and to add to his capital. It also shows that at the date of transfer the business was perfectly solvent. The liquidator, whose testimony was chiefly directed toward proving that the price paid by the company was excessive, admitted on cross-examination that the business when transferred to the company was in a sound condition, and that there was a substantial surplus. No evidence was led tending to support the allegation that no board of directors was ever appointed or that the board consisted entirely of the appellant. The non-success and ultimate insolvency of the business, after it came into the hands of the company, was attributed by the witness Emanuel Salomon to a succession of strikes in the boot trade, and there is not a tittle of evidence tending to modify or contradict his statement. I think it also appears from the evidence that all the members of the company were fully cognizant of the terms of the agreements of the 20th of July and the 2nd of August, 1892, and that they were willing to accept and did accept these terms. At the close of the argument Vaughan Williams, J., announced that he was not prepared to grant the relief craved by the company. He at the same time suggested that a different remedy might be open to the company, and, on the motion of their counsel, he allowed the counter-claim to be amended. In conformity with the suggestion thus made by the bench, a new and alternative claim was added for (1) a declaration that the appellant is liable to indemnify the company against the whole of their unsecured debts; (2) judgment against him for £7,733 8s. 3d., being the amount of these debts; and (3) a lien for that amount upon all sums which might be payable to the appellant by the company, in respect of his debentures or otherwise, until the judgment was satisfied. There was also added averments to the effect that the company was formed by the appellant and that the debentures for £10,000 were issued in order that he might carry on the business and take all the profits without risk to himself, and also that the company was the "mere nominee and agent" of the appellant. The allegations of the company, in so far as they have any relation to the amended claim, their pith consisting in the averments made on amendment, were meant to convey a charge of fraud, and it is unfortunate that they are framed in such loose and general terms. A relevant charge of fraud ought to disclose the specific facts necessitating the inference that a fraud was perpetrated upon some person specified. Whether it was a fraud upon the company and its members or upon persons who had dealings with the company is not indicated, although there may be very different considerations applicable to those two cases. The res gestæ which might imply that it was the appellant and not the company who actually carried on its business are not set forth. Any person who holds a preponderating share in the stock of a limited company has necessarily the intention of taking the lion's share of its profits, without any risk beyond loss of the money which he has paid for or is liable to pay upon his shares, and the fact of his acquiring and holding debentures secured upon the assets of the company does not diminish the risk of that loss. What is meant by the assertion that the company "was the mere nominee or agent" of the appellant I cannot gather from the record, and I am not sure that I understand precisely in what sense it was interpreted by the learned judges whose decisions we have to consider. No additional proof was led after the amendment of the counter-claim. The oral testimony has very little, if any, bearing upon the second claim; and any material facts relating to the fraudulent objects which the appellant is said to have had in view, and the position of the company as his nominee or agent, must be a mere matter of inference derived from the agreements of the 20th of July and the 2nd of August, 1892, the memorandum and articles of association, and the minute-book of the company.

On re-hearing the case Vaughan Williams, J., without disposing of the original claim, gave the company a decree of indemnity in terms of their amended claim. I do not profess my ability to follow accurately the whole chain of reasoning by which the learned judge arrived at that conclusion, but he appears to have proceeded mainly upon the ground that the appellant was in truth the company, the other members being either his trustees or mere "dummies," and consequently that the appellant carried on what was truly his own business under cover of the name of the company, which was nothing more than an alias for Aron Salomon.

On appeal from his decision, the Court of Appeal made an order finding it unnecessary to deal with the original claim, and dismissing the appeal in so far as it related to the amended claim. The ratio upon which that proceeded was embodied in the order. The opinions delivered by the lords justices are strictly in keeping with the reasons assigned in their order. Lindley, L.J., after observing "that the incorporation of the company cannot be disputed," refers to the scheme for the formation of the company, and says ([1895] 2 Ch. 337), "the object of the whole arrangement is to do the very thing which the Legislature intended not to be done"; and he adds that "Mr. Salomon's scheme is a device to defraud creditors." Assuming that the company was well incorporated in terms of the Act of 1862, an assumption upon which the decisions appealed from appear to me to throw considerable doubt, I think it expedient, before considering the amended claim, to deal with the original claim for rescission, which was strongly pressed upon us by counsel for the company, under their cross-appeal. Upon that branch of the case there does not appear to me to be much room for doubt. With this exception, that the word "exorbitant" appears to me to be too strong an epithet, I entirely agree with Vaughan Williams, J., when he says, "I do not think that when you have a private company, and all the shareholders in the company are perfectly cognizant of the conditions under which the company is formed, and the conditions of the purchase by the company, you can possibly say that purchasing at an exorbitant price (and I have no doubt whatever that the purchase here was at an exorbitant price) is a fraud upon those shareholders or upon the company." The learned judge goes on to say that the circumstances might have amounted to fraud if there had been an intention on the part of the original shareholders "to allot further shares at a later period to future allottees." Upon that point I do not find it necessary to express any opinion; because it is not raised by the facts of the case, and, in any view, these considerations are of no relevancy in a question as to rescission between the company and the appellant. Counsel for the respondents argued that the agreement of the 2nd of August ought to be set aside, upon the principle followed by this House in Erlanger v. New Sombrero Phosphate Co. (Limited). In that case the vendor, who got up the company, with the view of selling his adventure to it, attracted shareholders by a prospectus which was essentially false,

The directors, who were virtually his nominees, purchased from him without being aware of the real facts; and on their assurance that, in so far as they knew, all was right, the shareholders sanctioned the transaction. The fraud by which the company and its shareholders had been misled was directly traceable to the vendor; and the transaction was set aside at the instance of the liquidator, the Lord Chancellor (Earl Cairns) expressing a doubt whether, even in those circumstances, the remedy was not too late, after a liquidation order. But in the present case the agreement of the 20th of July was, in the full knowledge of the facts, approved and adopted by the company itself, if there was a company, and by all the shareholders who ever were or were likely to be members of the company. In my opinion, therefore, Erlanger v. New Sombrero Phosphate Co. has no application, and the original claim of the liquidator is not maintainable.

The Court of Appeal, in disposing of the amended claim, have expressly found that the formation of the company, with limited liability, and the issue of £10,000 worth of its debentures to the appellant, were "contrary to the true intent and meaning of the Companies Act, 1862." I have had great difficulty in endeavouring to interpret that finding. I am unable to comprehend how a company, which has been formed contrary to the true intent and meaning of a statute, and (in the language of Lindley, L.J.) does the very thing which the Legislature intended not to be done, can yet be held to have been legally incorporated in terms of the statute. "Intention of the Legislature" is a common, but very slippery phrase, which, popularly understood, may signify anything from intention embodied in positive enactment to speculative opinion as to what the Legislature probably would have meant, although there has been an omission to enact it. In a court of law or equity, what the Legislature intended to be done or not to be done can only be legitimately ascertained from that which it has chosen to enact, either in express words or by reasonable and necessary implication. Accordingly, if the words "intent and meaning," as they occur in the finding of the Appeal Court, are used in their proper legal sense, it follows, in my opinion, that the company has not been well incorporated; that, there being no legal corporation, there can be no liquidation under the Companies Acts, and that the counter-claim preferred by its liquidator must fail.

In that case its creditors would not be left without a remedy, because its members, as joint traders without limitation of their liability, would be jointly and severally responsible for the debts incurred by them in the name of the company. The provisions of the Act of 1862 which seem to me to have any bearing on this point lie within a very narrow compass. Section 6 provides that "any seven or more persons, associated for a lawful purpose"—such as the manufacture and sale of boots—"may, by subscribing their names to a memorandum of association and otherwise complying with the provisions of the Act in respect of registration, form a company with or without limited liability"; and section 8, which prescribes the essentials of the memorandum in the case of a company limited by shares, inter alia, enacts that "no subscriber shall take less than one share." The first of these enactments does not require that the persons subscribing shall not be related to each other, and the second plainly imports that the holding of a single share affords a sufficient qualification for membership; and I can find no other rule laid down or even suggested in the Act. Nor does the statute, either expressly or by implication, impose any limit upon the number of shares which a single member may subscribe for or take by allotment. At the date of registration all the requirements of the Act had been complied with; and, as matters then stood, there does not appear to have been any room for the pleas now advanced by the liquidator. The company was still free to modify or reject the agreement of the 20th of July; and the fraud of which the appellant has been held guilty by the Court of Appeal, though it may have existed in animo, had not been carried into execution by the acceptance of the agreement, the issue of debentures to the appellant in terms of it, and by his receiving an allotment of 20,000 shares in the company.

I have already intimated my opinion that the acceptance of the agreement is binding on the company; and neither that acceptance, nor the preponderating share of the appellant, nor his payment in debentures, being forbidden by the Act, I do not think that any one of these things could subsequently render the registration of the company invalid. But I am willing to assume that proceedings which are permitted by the Act may be so used by the members of a limited company as to constitute a fraud upon others, to whom they in consequence incur personal liability. In this case the fraud is found to have been committed by the appellant against the creditors of the company, but it is clear that if so, though he may have been its originator and the only person who took benefit from it, he could not have done any one of those things which, taken together, are said to constitute his fraud without the consent and privity of the other shareholders. It seems doubtful whether a liquidator, as representing and in the name of the company, can sue its members for redress against a fraud which was committed by the company itself and by all its shareholders. However, I do not think it necessary to dwell upon that point, because I am not satisfied that the charge of fraud against creditors has any foundation in fact. The memorandum of association gave notice that the main object for which the company was formed was to adopt, and carry into effect, with or without modifications, the agreement of the 20th of July, 1892, in terms of which the debentures for £10,000 were subsequently given to the appellant in part payment of the price.

By the articles of association—article 62 (e)—the directors were empowered to issue mortgage or other debentures or bonds for any debts due, or to become due, to the company; and it is not alleged or proved that there was any failure to comply with section 43 or the other clauses of Part III. of the Act, which relate to the protection of creditors. The unpaid creditors of the company, whose unfortunate position has been attributed to the fraud of the appellant, if they had thought fit to avail themselves of the means of protecting their interests which the Act provides, could have informed themselves of the terms of purchase by the company, of the issue of debentures to the appellant, and of the amount of shares held by each member. In my opinion the statute casts upon them the duty of making inquiry in regard to these matters. Whatever may be the moral duty of a limited company and its shareholders, when the trade of the company is not thriving, the law does not lay any obligation upon them to warn those members of the public who deal with them on credit that they run the risk of not being paid. One of the learned judges asserts, and I see no reason to question the accuracy of his statement, that creditors never think of examining the register of debentures. But the apathy of a creditor cannot justify an imputation of fraud against a limited company or its members, who have provided all the means of information which the Act of 1862 requires, and, in my opinion, a creditor who will not take the trouble to use the means which this statute provides for enabling him to protect himself must bear the consequences of his own negligence.

For these reasons I have come to the conclusion that the orders appealed from ought to be reversed, with costs to the appellant here and in both courts below. His costs in this House must, of course, be taxed in accordance with the rule applicable to pauper litigants.

Lord Herschell.—By an order of the High Court which was affirmed by the Court of Appeal, it was declared that the respondent company, or the liquidator of that company, was entitled to be indemnified by the appellant against the sum of £7,733 8s. 3d., and it was ordered that the respondent company should recover that sum against the appellant.

On the 28th of July, 1892, the respondent company was incorporated with a capital of £40,000, divided into 40,000 shares of £1 each. One of the objects for which the company was incorporated was to carry out an agreement, with such modifications therein as might be agreed to, of the 20th of July, 1892, which had been entered into between the appellant and a trustee for a company intended to be formed for the acquisition by the company of the business then carried on by the appellant. The company was, in fact, formed for the purpose of taking over the appellant's business of leather merchant and boot manufacturer, which he had carried on for many years. The business had been a prosperous one, and, as the learned judge who tried the action found, was solvent at the time when the company was incorporated. The memorandum of association of the company was subscribed by the appellant, his wife and daughter, and his four sons, each subscribing for one share. The appellant afterwards had 20,000 shares allotted to him. For these he paid £1 per share out of the purchase money which, by agreement, he was to receive for the transfer of his business to the company. The company afterwards became insolvent, and went into liquidation.

In an action brought by a debenture-holder on behalf of himself and all the other debenture-holders, including the appellant, the respondent company set up by way of counter-claim that the company was formed by Aron Salomon, and the debentures were issued in order that he might carry on the said business and take all the profits without risk to himself, and that the company was the mere nominee and agent of Aron Salomon, and that the company or the liquidator thereof was entitled to be indemnified by Aron Salomon against all the debts owing by the company to creditors other than Aron Salomon. This counter-claim was not in the pleading as originally delivered; it was inserted by way of amendment at the suggestion of Vaughan Williams, J., before whom the action came on for trial. The learned judge thought the liquidator entitled to the relief asked for and made the order complained of. He was of opinion that the company was only an alias for Salomon; that the intention being that he should take the profits without running the risk of the debts, the company was merely an agent for him, and having incurred liabilities at his instance, was, like any other agent under such circumstances, entitled to be indemnified by him against them.

On appeal the judgment of Vaughan Williams, J., was affirmed by the Court of Appeal, that court "being of opinion that the formation of the company, the agreement of August, 1892, and the issue of debentures to Aron Salomon pursuant to such agreement were a mere scheme to enable him to carry on business in the name of the company with limited liability and contrary to the true intent and meaning of the Companies Act, 1862, and further, to enable him to obtain a preference over other creditors of the company by procuring a first charge on the assets of the company by means of such debentures." The learned judges in the Court of Appeal dissented from the view taken by Vaughan Williams, J., that the company was to be regarded as the agent of the appellant. They considered the relation between them to be that of trustee and cestui que trust, but this difference of view, of course, did not affect the conclusion that the right to the indemnity claimed had been established. It is to be observed that both courts treated the company as a legal entity distinct from Salomon and the then members who composed it, and therefore as a validly-constituted corporation. This is, indeed, necessarily involved in the judgment which declared that the company was entitled to certain rights as against Salomon. Under these circumstances I am at a loss to understand what is meant by saying that A. Salomon & Co. (Limited) is but an alias for A. Salomon. It is not another name for the same person; the company is ex hypothesi a distinct legal persona. As little am I able to adopt the view that the company was the agent of Salomon to carry on his business for him. In a popular sense a company may in every case be said to carry on business for and on behalf of its shareholders, but this certainly does not in point of law constitute the relation of principal and agent between them or render the shareholders liable to indemnify the company against the debts which it incurs. Here, it is true, Salomon owned all the shares except six, so that if the business were profitable he would be entitled, substantially, to the whole of the profits.

The other shareholders, too, are said to have been "dummies," the nominees of Salomon. But when once it is conceded that they were individual members of the company distinct from Salomon, and sufficiently so to bring into existence in conjunction with him a validly-constituted corporation, I am unable to see how the facts to which I have just referred can affect the legal position of the company, or give it rights as against its members which it would not otherwise possess. The Court of Appeal based their judgment on the proposition that the formation of the company, and all that followed it, was a mere scheme to enable the appellant to carry on business in the name of the company, with limited liability, contrary to the true intent and meaning of the Companies Act, 1862. The conclusion which they drew from this premiss was, that the company was a trustee and Salomon their cestui que trust. I cannot think that the conclusion follows even if the premiss be sound. It seems to me that the logical result would be that the company had not been validly constituted, and therefore had no legal existence. But, apart from this, it is necessary to examine the proposition on which the court have rested their judgment, as its effect would be far reaching. Many industrial and banking concerns of the highest standing and credit have, in recent years been, to use a common expression, converted into joint-stock companies, and often into what are called "private" companies, where the whole of the shares are held by the former partners. It appears to me that all these might be pronounced "schemes to enable" them "to carry on business in the name of the company, with limited liability," in the very sense in which those words are used in the judgment of the Court of Appeal. The profits of the concern carried on by the company will go to the persons who business it was before the transfer, and in the same proportions as before, the only difference being that the liability of those who take the profits will no longer be unlimited. The very object of the creation of the company, and the transfer to it of business, is that, whereas the liability of the partners for debts incurred was without limit, the liability of the members for the debts incurred by the company shall be limited. In no other respect is it intended that there shall be any difference; the conduct of the business and the division of the profits are intended to be the same as before. If the judgment of the Court of Appeal be pushed to its logical conclusion all these companies must, I think, be held to be trustees for the partners who transferred the business to them, and those partners must be declared liable, without limit, to discharge the debts of the company. For this is the effect of the judgment as regards the respondent company. The position of the members of a company is just the same whether they are declared liable to pay the debts incurred by the company, or by way of indemnity to furnish the company with the means of paying them. I do not think the learned judges in the court below have contemplated the application of their judgment to such cases as I have been considering, but I can see no solid distinction between those cases and the present one. It is said that the respondent company is a "one-man" company, and that in this respect it differs from such companies as those to which I have alluded. But it has often happened that a business transferred to a joint stock company has been the property of three or four persons only, and that the other subscribers of the memorandum have been only clerks or other persons who possess little or no interest in the concern. I am unable to see how it can be lawful for three or four or six persons to form a company for the purpose of employing their capital in trading, with the benefit of limited liability, and not for one person to do so, provided, in each case, the requirements of the statute have been complied with, and the company has been validly constituted. How does it concern the creditor whether the capital of the company is owned by seven persons in equal shares, with the right to an equal share of the profits, or whether it is almost entirely owned by one person who practically takes the whole of the profits? The creditor has notice that he is dealing with a company the liability of the members of which is limited, and the register of shareholders informs him how the shares are held, and that they are substantially in the hands of one person, if this be the fact. The creditors in the present case gave credit to and contracted with the limited company; but the effect of the decision is to give them the benefit, as regards one of the shareholders, of unlimited liability.

I have said that the liability of persons carrying on business can only be limited provided the requirements of the statute be complied with, and this leads naturally to the inquiry, What are those requirements? The Court of Appeal has declared that the formation of the respondent company, and the agreement to take over the business of the appellant, was a scheme "contrary to the true intent and meaning of the Companies Act." I know of no means of ascertaining what is the intent and meaning of the Companies Act except by examining its provisions and finding what regulations it has imposed as a condition of trading with limited liability. The memorandum must state the amount of the capital of the company and the number of shares into which it is divided, and no subscriber is to take less than one share. The shares may, however, be of as small a nominal value as those who form the company please; the statute prescribes no minimum, and though there must be seven shareholders, it is enough if each of them holds one share, however small its denomination. The Legislature therefore clearly sanctions a scheme by which all the shares, except six, are owned by a single individual, and these six are of a value little more than nominal. It was said that in the present case the six shareholders other than the appellant were mere dummies, his nominees, and held their shares in trust for him. I will assume that this was so. In my opinion it makes no difference. The statute forbids the entry in the register of any trust, and it certainly contains no enactment that each of the seven persons subscribing the memorandum must be beneficially entitled to the share or shares for which he subscribes. The persons who subscribe the memorandum or who have agreed to become members of the company, and whose names are on the register, are alone regarded as, and in fact are, the shareholders. They are subject to all the liability which attaches to the holding of the share. They can be compelled to make any payment which the ownership of a share involves. Whether they are beneficial owners or bare trustees is a matter with which neither the company nor creditors have anything to do; it concerns only them and their cestuis que trustent if they have any. If, then, in the present case all the requirements of the statute were complied with, and a company was effectually constituted, and this is the hypothesis of the judgment appealed from, what warrant is there for saying that what was done was contrary to the true intent and meaning of the Companies Act? It may be that a company constituted like that under consideration was not in the contemplation of the Legislature at the time when the Act authorizing limited liability was passed; that, if what is possible under the enactments as they stand had been foreseen, a minimum sum would have been fixed as the least denomination of share permissible, and it would have been made a condition that each of the seven persons should have a substantial interest in the company. But we have to interpret the law, not to make it; and it must be remembered that no one need trust a limited liability company unless he so please, and that before he does so he can ascertain, if he so please, what is the capital of the company, and how it is held.

I have hitherto made no reference to the debentures which the appellant received in part payment of the purchase-money of the business which he transferred to the company. These are referred to in the judgment as part of the scheme which is pronounced contrary to the true intent and meaning of the Companies Act. But if apart from this, the conclusion that the appellant is bound to indemnify the company against its debts cannot be sustained, I do not see how the circumstances that he received these debentures can avail the respondent company. The issue of debentures to the vendor of a business as part of the price is certainly open to great abuse, and has often worked great mischief. It may well be that some check should be placed upon the practice, and that, at all events, ample notice to all who may have dealings with the company should be secured. But as the law at present stands, there is certainly nothing unlawful in the creation of such debentures. For these reasons I have come to the conclusion that the appeal should be allowed.

It was contended on behalf of the company that the agreement between them and the appellant ought, at all events, to be set aside on the ground of fraud. In my opinion no such case has been made out, and I do not think the respondent company are entitled to any such relief.

Lord MACNAGHTEN.—I cannot help thinking the appellant, Aron Salomon, has been dealt with somewhat hardly in this case.

Mr. Salomon, who is now suing as a pauper, was a wealthy man in July, 1892. He was a boot and shoe manufacturer trading on his own sole account under the firm of "A. Salomon & Co.," in High-street, Whitechapel, where he had extensive warehouses and a large establishment. He had been in the trade over thirty years. He had lived in the same neighbourhood all along, and for many years past he had occupied the same premises. So far things had gone very well with him. Beginning with little or no capital he had gradually built up a thriving business, and he was undoubtedly in good credit and repute. It is impossible to say exactly what the value of the business was. But there was a substantial surplus of assets over liabilities. And it seems to me to be pretty clear that if Mr. Salomon had been minded to dispose of his business in the market as a going concern, he might fairly have counted upon retiring with at least £10,000 in his pocket.

Mr. Salomon, however, did not want to part with the business. He had a wife and a family consisting of five sons and a daughter. Four of the sons were working with their father. The eldest, who was about thirty years of age, was practically the manager. But the sons were not partners. They were only servants. Not unnaturally, perhaps, they were dissatisfied with their position. They kept pressing their father to give them a share in the concern. "They troubled me," says Mr. Salomon, "all the while." So at length Mr. Salomon did what hundreds of others have done under similar circumstances. He turned his business into a limited company. He wanted, he says, to extend the business and make provision for his family. In those words, I think, he fairly describes the principal motives which influenced his action. All the usual formalities were gone through. All the requirements of the Companies Act, 1862, were duly observed. There was a contract with a trustee in the usual form for the sale of the business to a company about to be formed. There was a memorandum of association duly signed and registered, stating that the company was formed to carry that contract into effect, and fixing the capital at £40,000 in 40,000 shares of £1 each. There were articles of association providing the usual machinery for conducting the business. The first directors were to be nominated by the majority of the subscribers to the memorandum of association. The directors, when appointed, were authorized to exercise all such powers of the company as were not by statute or by the articles required to be exercised in general meeting. And there was express power to borrow on debentures, with the limitation that the borrowing was not to exceed £10,000 without the sanction of a general meeting.

The company was intended from the first to be a private company; it remained a private company to the end. No prospectus was issued; no invitation to take shares was ever addressed to the public.

The subscribers to the memorandum were Mr. Salomon, his wife, and five of his children who were grown up. The subscribers met and appointed Mr. Salomon and his two elder sons directors. The directors then proceeded to carry out the proposed transfer. By an agreement dated the 2nd of August, 1892, the company adopted the preliminary contract, and in accordance with it the business was taken over by the company as from the 1st of June, 1892. The price fixed by the contract was duly paid. The price on paper was extravagant. It amounted to over £39,000, a sum which represented the sanguine expectations of a fond owner rather than anything that can be called a businesslike or reasonable estimate of value. That, no doubt, is a circumstance which at first sight calls for observation, but when the facts of the case and the position of the parties are considered, it is difficult to see what bearing it has on the question before your lordships. The purchase-money was paid in this way: as money came in, sums amounting in all to £20,000 were paid to Mr. Salomon, and then immediately returned to the company in exchange for fully-paid shares. The sum of £10,000 was paid in debentures for the like amount. The balance, with the exception of about £1,000, which Mr. Salomon seems to have received and retained, went in the discharge of the debts and liabilities of the business at the time of the transfer, which were thus entirely wiped off. In the result, therefore, Mr. Salomon received for his business about £1,000 in cash, £10,000 in debentures, and half the nominal capital of the company in fully-paid shares for what they were worth. No other shares were issued except the seven shares taken by the subscribers to the memorandum, who, of course, knew all the circumstances, and had therefore no ground for complaint on the score of over-valuation.

The company had a brief career; it fell upon evil days. Shortly after it was started there seems to have come a period of great depression in the boot and shoe trade. There were strikes of workmen too, and in view of that danger, contracts with public bodies, which were the principal source of Mr. Salomon's profit, were split up and divided between different firms. The attempts made to push the business on behalf of the new company crammed its warehouses with unsaleable stock. Mr. Salomon seems to have done what he could; both he and his wife lent the company money, and then he got his debentures cancelled and reissued to a Mr. Broderip, who advanced him £5,000, which he immediately handed over to the company on loan. The temporary relief only hastened ruin. Mr. Broderip's interest was not paid when it became due. He took proceedings at once and got a receiver appointed. Then, of course, came liquidation and a forced sale of the company's assets. They realized enough to pay Mr. Broderip, but not enough to pay the debentures in full, and the unsecured creditors were consequently left out in the cold.

The order of Vaughan Williams, J., appears to me to be founded on a misconception of the scope and effect of the Companies Act, 1862. In order to form a company limited by shares, the Act requires (section 6) that a memorandum of association should be signed by seven persons, who are each to take one share at least. If those conditions are complied with, what can it matter whether the signatories are relations or strangers? There is nothing in the Act requiring that the subscribers to the memorandum should be independent or unconnected, or that they should take a substantial interest in the undertaking, or that they should have a mind and will of their own, as one of the learned lords justices seems to think, or that there should be anything like a balance of power in the constitution of the company. In almost every company that is formed the statutory number is eked out by clerks or friends who sign their names at the request of the promoter or promoters without intending to take any further part or interest in the matter. When the memorandum is duly signed and registered, though there is only seven shares taken, the subscribers are a body corporate, "capable forthwith," to use the words of the enactment, "of exercising all the functions of an incorporated company." Those are strong words. The company attains maturity on birth. There is no period of minority; no intervening incapacity. I cannot understand how a body corporate, thus made "capable" by statute, can lose its individuality by issuing the bulk of its capital to person, whether he be a subscriber to the memorandum or not. The company is at law a different person altogether from the subscribers to the memorandum; and, though it may be that after incorporation the business is precisely the same as it was before, and the same persons are managers, and the same hands receive the profits, the company is not in law the agent of the subscribers or trustee for them. Nor are the subscribers as members liable, in any shape or form, except to the extent and in the manner provided by the Act. That is, I think, the declared intention of the enactment. If the view of the learned judge were sound, it would follow that no common law partnership could register as a company limited by shares without remaining subject to unlimited liability.

Mr. Salomon appealed. But his appeal was dismissed with costs, though the appellate court did not entirely accept the view of the court below. The decision of the Court of Appeal proceeds on a declaration of opinion embodied in their order.

I must say I have great difficulty in understanding this declaration. If it only means that Mr. Salomon availed himself to the full of the advantages offered by the Act of 1862, what is there wrong in that? Leave out the words "contrary to the true intent and meaning of the Companies Act, 1862," and bear in mind that "the creditors of the company" are not the creditors of Mr. Salomon, and the declaration is perfectly innocent: it has no sting in it. In an early case which, in some of its aspects, is not unlike the present, the owner of a colliery (to quote the language of Gifford, L.J., in the Court of Appeal) went on working the colliery, not very successfully, and then determined to form a limited company in order to avoid incurring further personal liability. "It was," adds the L.J., "the policy of the Companies Acts to enable this to be done." And so he reversed the decision of Malins, V.C., who—after expressing an opinion that if the laws of the country sanctioned such a proceeding they were "in a most lamentable state"—had fixed the former owners with liability for the amount of the fully paid-up shares they took in exchange for their property (Baglan Hall Colliery Co., 18 W. R. 499, L. R. 5 Ch. 346).

Among the principal reasons which induce persons to form private companies, as is stated very clearly by Mr. Palmer in his treatise on the subject, are the desire to avoid the risk of bankruptcy, and the increased facility afforded for borrowing money. By means of a private company, as Mr. Palmer observes, a trade can be carried on with limited liability, and without exposing the persons interested in it, in the event of failure, to the harsh provisions of the bankruptcy law. A company, too, can raise money on debentures, which an ordinary trader cannot do; any member of a company acting in good faith is as much entitled to take and hold the company's debentures as any outside creditor. Every creditor is entitled to get and to hold the best security the law allows him to take.

If, however, the declaration of the Court of Appeal means that Mr. Salomon acted fraudulently or dishonestly, I must say I can find nothing in the evidence to support such an imputation. The purpose for which Mr. Salomon and the other subscribers to the memorandum were associated was "lawful." The fact that Mr. Salomon raised £5,000 debentures for the company that belonged to him seems to me strong evidence of his good faith and of his confidence in the company. The unsecured creditors of A. Salomon & Co. (Limited), may be entitled to sympathy, but they have only themselves to blame for their misfortunes. They trusted the company, I suppose, because they had long dealt with Mr. Salomon, and he had always paid his way; but they had full notice that they were no longer dealing with an individual, and they must be taken to have been cognizant of the memorandum and of the articles of association. For such a catastrophe as has occurred in this case some would blame the law that allows such a thing as a floating charge. But a floating charge is too convenient a form of security to be lightly abolished. I have long thought, and I believe some of your lordships also think, that the ordinary trade creditors of a trading company ought to have a preferential claim on the assets in liquidation in respect of debts incurred within a certain limited time before the winding-up. But that is not the law at present. Everybody knows that when there is a winding-up debenture holders generally step in and sweep off everything. And a great scandal it is.

It has become the fashion to call companies of this class "one-man companies." That is a taking nickname, but it does not help one much in the way of argument. If it is intended to convey the meaning that a company which is under the absolute control of one person is not a company legally incorporated, although the requirements of the Act of 1862 may have been complied with, it is inaccurate and misleading; if it merely means that there is a predominant partner possessing an overwhelming influence and entitled practically to the whole of the profits, there is nothing in that that I can see, contrary to the true intention of the Act of 1862, or against public policy, or detrimental to the interests of creditors. If the shares are fully paid up it cannot matter whether they are in the hands of one or many. If the shares are not fully paid it is as easy to guage the solvency of an individual as to estimate the financial ability of a crowd.

One argument was addressed to your lordships which ought, perhaps, to be noticed, although it was not the ground of decision in either of the courts below. It was argued that the agreement for the transfer of the business to the company ought to be set aside, because there was no independent board of directors, and the property was transferred at an over value. There are, it seems to me, two answers to that argument. In the first place, the directors did just what they were authorized to do by the memorandum of association. There was no fraud or misrepresentation, and there was nobody deceived. In the second place, the company have put it out of their power to restore the property which was transferred to them. It was said that the assets were sold by an order made in the presence of Mr. Salomon, though not with his consent, which declared that the sale was to be without prejudice to the rights claimed by the company by their counter-claim. I cannot see what difference that makes. The reservation in the order seems to me to be simply nugatory.

I am of opinion that the appeal ought to be allowed, and the counter-claim of the company dismissed with costs, both here and below.

Lord MORRIS concurred.

Lord DAVEY.—It is possible and, I think, probable that the conclusion to which I feel constrained to come in this case may not have been contemplated by the Legislature, and may be due to some defect in the machinery of the Act. But after all, the intention of the Legislature must be collected from the language of its enactments, and I do not see my way to holding that if there are seven registered members, the association is not a company formed in compliance with the provisions of the Act, and capable of carrying on business with limited liability,—because the bulk of the shares are held by some only, or even by one of the members, and the others are what is called "dummies," holding, it may be, only one share of £1 each; or because there are less than seven persons who are beneficially entitled to the shares. I think that this result follows from the absence of any provision fixing a minimum nominal amount of a share, and from the provision in section 8, that no subscriber shall take less than one share, and from the provision in section 30, that no notice of any trust shall be entered on the register. With regard to the latter provision it would, in my opinion, be impossible to work the machinery of the Act on any other principle, and to attempt to do so would lead only to confusion and uncertainty. The learned counsel for the respondents (wisely, as I think) did not lay any stress on the members, other than the appellant, being trustees for him of their shares. Their argument was that they were dummies, and did not hold a substantial interest in the company—that is, what a jury would say is a substantial interest. In the language of some of the judges in the court below, any jury, if asked the question, would say the business was that of Aron Salomon, and of no one else.

It was not argued in this case that there was no association of seven persons to be registered, and the registration therefore effected nothing, or that the so-called company was a sham, and might be disregarded. And, indeed, it would have been difficult for the learned counsel for the respondents, appearing as they did, at your lordships' bar for the company who had been permitted to litigate in the courts below as actors (on their counter-claim), to contend that their clients were non-existent. I do not say that such an argument ought to or would prevail; I only observe that, having regard to the decisions, it is not certain that section 18, making the certificate of the registrar conclusive evidence that all the requisitions of the Act in respect of registration had been complied with, would be an answer to it.

We start, then, with the assumption that the respondents have a corporate existence with power to sue and be sued, to incur debts and be wound up, and and to act as agents or as trustees, and I suppose, therefore, to hold property. Both the courts below have, however, held that the appellant is liable to indemnify the company against all its debts and liabilities. Vaughan Williams, J., held that the company was an alias for the appellant, who carried on his business through the company as his agent; and that he was bound to indemnify his own agent, and he arrived at this conclusion on the ground that the other members of the company had no substantial interest in it, and the business in substance was the appellant's. The Court of Appeal thought the relation of the company to the appellant was that of trustee to cestui que trust. The ground on which the learned judges seemed to have chiefly relied was that it was an attempt by an individual to carry on his business with limited liability, which was forbidden by the Act and unlawful. I observe, in passing, that nothing turns upon there being only one person interested. The argument would have been just as good if there had been six members holding the bulk of the shares and one member with a very small interest, say, one share. I am at a loss to see how in either view taken in the courts below the conclusion follows from the premises, or in what way the company became an agent or trustee for the appellant, except in the sense in which every company may loosely and inaccurately be said to be an agent for earning profits for its members or a trustee of its profits for the members amongst whom they are to be divided. There was certainly no express trust for the appellant, and an implied or constructive trust can only be raised by virtue of some equity. I took the liberty of asking counsel what the equity was, but got no answer. By an alias is usually understood a second name for one individual; but here, as one of your lordships has already observed, we have, ex hypothesi, a duly formed legal persona, with corporate attributes and capable of incurring legal liabilities. Nor do I think it legitimate to inquire whether the interest of any member is substantial when the Act has declared that no member need hold more than one share, and has not prescribed any minimum amount of a share. If, as was said in the Court of Appeal, the company was formed for an unlawful purpose, or in order to achieve an object not permitted by the provisions of the Act, the appropriate remedy, if any, would seem to be to set aside the certificate of incorporation, or to treat the company as a nullity, or, if the appellant has committed a fraud or misdemeanour (which I do not think he has), he may be proceeded against civilly or criminally; but how either of those states of circumstances creates the relation of cestui que trust and trustee, or principal and agent, between the appellant and respondents, is not apparent to my understanding.

I am, therefore, of opinion that the order appealed from cannot be supported on the grounds stated by the learned judges. But counsel for the respondent company also relied on the alternative relief claimed by the pleadings, which was quite open to counsel here—namely, that the contract for purchase of the appellant's business ought to be set aside for fraud. The fraud seems to consist in the alleged exorbitance of the price and the fact that there was no independent board of directors with whom the appellant could contract. I am of opinion that the fraud was not made out. I do not think the price of the appellant's business (which seems to have been a genuine one, and for some time a prosperous business) was so excessive as to afford grounds for rescission, and as regards the cash portion of the price it must be observed than the appellant held the bulk of the shares, or (the respondents say) was the only shareholder, the extra money required for the payment of it came from himself in the form either of calls on his shares or profits which would otherwise be divisible. Nor was the absence of any independent board material in a case like the present. I think it an inevitable inference from the circumstances of the case that every member of the company assented to the purchase, and the company is bound in a matter intra vires by the unanimous agreement of its members. In fact, it is impossible to say who was defrauded. Counsel relied on some dicta in Erlanger v. New Sombrero Phosphate Co., a case which is often quoted and not infrequently misunderstood. Of course Lord Cairns' observations were directed only to a case such as he had before him, where it was attempted to bind a large body of shareholders by a contract which purported to have been made between the vendor and directors before the shares were offered for subscription, whereas it appeared that the directors were only the nominees of the vendor, who had accepted his bidding and exercised no judgment of their own. It has nothing to do with the present case. That a company may contract with the holder of the bulk of its shares and such contract will be binding though carried only by the votes of that shareholder was decided in North-West Transportation Co. v. Beatty. For these reasons I am of opinion that the appellant's appeal should be allowed, and the cross-appeal should be dismissed. I agree to the proposed order and costs.

Order of the Court of Appeal reversed.

Solicitors for the appellant, Ralph Raphael & Co.

Solicitors for the defendants, S. M. & J. Benson.

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div. (Lord Esher, M.R., and Lopes and Rigby, L.JJ.) — Dec. 14.

SLOANE v. BRITAIN STEAMSHIP CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Practice — Parties — Pauper—Leave to sue in formâ pauperis—Affidavit—Case and opinion of counsel made an exhibit—Right of defendant to inspect exhibit—Ord. 16, rr. 23, 24.

Where a plaintiff has been admitted to sue in formâ pauperis, the defendant is not entitled to inspect the case laid before counsel and his opinion thereon, which have been produced to the judge upon the application for leave to sue in formâ pauperis, even though they have been made an exhibit to the affidavit filed upon that application.

In re Hinchliffe, 43 W. R. 82, [1895] 1 Ch. 117, distinguished.

Appeal from an order made by Lawrance, J., in chambers.

The plaintiff applied for leave to sue in formâ pauperis, and filed an affidavit in support thereof as required by ord. 16, r. 24, the case laid before counsel and his opinion thereon being made an exhibit to the affidavit.

The application was granted, and the defendant, upon being served with the writ, took out a summons to inspect the exhibit to the affidavit. The master referred the summons to the judge, indorsing thereon that he had made inquires and found that the practice was to allow the affidavit to be inspected, and he drew attention to the case of In re Hinchliffe, 43 W. R. 82, [1895] 1 Ch. 117, where it was held that any person who has a right to inspect an affidavit has a right also to inspect any exhibit thereto. Lawrance, J., having made the order for inspection, the plaintiff appealed.

Gregson Ellis, for the plaintiff.—The decision in In re Hinchliffe cannot apply to a case of this kind. The case laid before counsel and his opinion thereon are really the plaintiff's brief in the action, and the defendant cannot be allowed inspection of that. The affidavit is not filed in the action, but it is filed before the action is commenced for the information of the judge, and the defendant has no right to inspect the affidavit. But even if the affidavit can be inspected, the case and opinion of counsel cannot, as they are solely for the information of the judge who has to decide whether the case is a fit one in which to allow the plaintiff to sue in formâ pauperis: Bryant v. Wagner, 7 Dowl. Prac. Cas. 676. The order, therefore, was wrong.

J. Eldon Bankes, for the defendant.—Every party is entitled, on paying the proper fee, to inspect an affidavit on the file of the court. Being entitled to see the affidavit, the defendant is entitled to see every exhibit to it. An exhibit forms part of the affidavit: In re Hinchliffe. The plaintiff need not have made the case and opinion of counsel an exhibit to the affidavit, but having done so the defendant is entitled to inspection. Inspection is necessary to enable the defendant to see whether he ought to move to discharge the order giving leave to sue in formâ pauperis. At any rate it is a matter of discretion, and the court will not interfere with the mode in which that discretion has been exercised.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—The true answer to the application for leave to inspect the exhibit is that the case is laid before counsel and his opinion taken thereon solely for the information of the judge in order that he may have the best means of deciding whether to allow the plaintiff to sue in formâ pauperis. The case and opinion of counsel are laid before the judge for his information alone, and no one else has any right to see them. It was never intended that that information should be seen by other persons for other purposes. The order must therefore be discharged.

LOPES, L.J.—In my opinion it is immaterial whether the case and opinion of counsel are made an exhibit to the affidavit or not. The case and opinion are for the information of the judge who has to decide whether to allow the plaintiff to sue in formâ pauperis, and the opposite party is not entitled to see them. In laying down that proposition I say no more than was said by Coleridge, J., in Bryant v. Wagner: "I apprehend that Mr. Channell is correct in stating that the certificate of counsel is a matter of importance. But then it is not for the benefit of the opposite party, but for the information of the court." That is the true ground upon which to put the case. As regards the case of In re Hinchliffe, the judges who decided that case had not the present case before their minds. If they had had their attention drawn to a case like the present I feel sure that they would have drawn the same distinction as we do between that case and this.

RIGBY, L.J.—In cases of this kind the rules require certain information to be laid before the judge which cannot be extracted from a litigant in other cases, and that information is for the judge alone so that he may see if a primâ facie case exists for allowing the plaintiff to sue in formâ pauperis. It is not intended for the other party, and the court will never allow it to be wrested to a wrong purpose. The mere fact that the case and opinion of counsel are made an exhibit to the affidavit makes no difference of any kind. I agree with Lopes, L.J., in what he has said as to In re Hinchliffe.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Ewer & Neave, for Woodburn & Holme, Liverpool.

Solicitors for the defendant, Botterell & Roche.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

From Q. B. Div. (Lord Esher, M.R., and Lopes and Rigby, L.JJ.) — Dec. 2.

SMELTING COMPANY OF AUSTRALIA v. COMMISSIONERS OF INLAND REVENUE. (a.)

Inland revenue—Stamp duty—Conveyance on sale—Contract for sale—Share in Colonial patent—Licence to use patent—"Property"—"Property locally situate out of the United Kingdom"—Doctrine of ejusdem generis—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 59, sub-section 1.

An agreement made in England for the sale of a share in a patent granted in New South Wales and of a licence to use the patent in a particular district of New South Wales is an agreement for the sale of an interest in property within the meaning of section 59, sub-section 1, of the Stamp Act, 1891, and is not within the exception of "property locally situate out of the United Kingdom." It is therefore chargeable with ad valorem duty.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Judgment of the Queen's Bench Division (Pollock, B., and Bruce, J.), ante, p. 61, affirmed.

Appeal from the judgment of a Divisional Court (Pollock, B., and Bruce, J.) on a special case stated by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue under section 13 of the Stamp Act, 1891, ante, p. 61.

The instrument upon which the commissioners were required to express their opinion was an agreement executed in England for the sale to the appellants of a share in a patent which had been granted in New South Wales, and of a licence to use the patent in a particular district of that colony.

The question was whether the instrument was chargeable with ad valorem duty under section 59, sub-section 1, of the Stamp Act, 1891, or was exempt under that section as being an agreement for the sale of "property locally situate out of the United Kingdom."

The nature of the instrument and the circumstances of the case are fully set out ante, p. 61.

Section 59, sub-section 1, of the Stamp Act, 1891, is as follows: "Any contract or agreement made in England or Ireland under seal, or under hand only, or made in Scotland, with or without any clause of registration, for the sale of any equitable estate or interest in any property whatsoever, or for the sale of any estate or interest in any property except lands, tenements, hereditaments, or heritages, or property locally situate out of the United Kingdom, or goods, wares or merchandise, or stock or marketable securities, or any ship or vessel, or part interest, share or property of or in any ship or vessel, shall be charged with the same ad valorem duty, to be paid by the purchaser, as if it were an actual conveyance on sale of the estate, interest, or property contracted or agreed to be sold.

The commissioners held that the instrument was chargeable with ad valorem duty, and the Divisional Court affirmed their decision.

The appellants appealed to the Court of Appeal.

A. T. Lawrence (Leslie with him), for the appellants.—This case comes within the exception of "property locally situate out of the United Kingdom." The appellants are therefore not liable to pay ad valorem duty. All property of whatsoever description is deemed to have a local situation, at least for purposes of revenue: see Attorney-General v. Bouwens, 4 M. & W. 171, which was a case of probate duty. A patent gives certain rights within a definite area; this patent operates in New South Wales only. The share in this patent and the licence to use it, which are the subject-matter of this agreement, may correctly be described as property locally situate out of the United Kingdom. The word "property" in this exception ought not to be treated as a general word following particular words. The exception of "property locally situate out of the United Kingdom" is entirely distinct from the preceding exception of "lands, tenements, hereditaments, or heritages." It is therefore not to be confined to property ejusdem generis with real property, but it is applicable to property of any description.

Sir R. B. Finlay, S.G. (Danckwerts with him) for the respondents.—First, the word "property" in this exception ought to be construed as ejusdem generis with the property described in the preceding words, and to be limited to property in the nature of real property. Secondly, property such as that in question cannot be brought within the exception of "property locally situate out of the United Kingdom." Personal property has no locality: Doe dem. Birtwhistle v. Vardill, 5 B. & C. 438, at p. 451; Commissioner of Stamps v. Hope, [1891] A. C. 476, 40 W. R. Dig. 162. At any rate an incorporeal right, like a patent, cannot be said to have a local situation. The case, therefore, is not within the exception, and the appellants are liable. [He also cited In re Wright and Commissioners of Inland Revenue, 11 Ex. 458].

Lord ESHER, M.R.—I am of opinion that this appeal must be dismissed. I cannot disagree with Pollock, B., and say that the expression "locally situate," in section 59 of the Stamp Act, 1891, applies to a thing which in truth has no locality. I am inclined to think that the doctrine as to the usual construction to be placed on general words following particular words is applicable to this section, and that the words "or property locally situate out of the United Kingdom" mean property of the same kind as lands, tenements, hereditaments, or heritages. But inasmuch as Rigby, L.J., takes the contrary view, I do not decide this case on that doctrine.

In the first place, I think that what we are now dealing with is "property" within the meaning of that word in the earlier part of the section which says that any agreement "for the sale of any estate or interest in any property" shall be charged with ad valorem duty. The section then excepts "property locally situate out of the United Kingdom." It may be that there are chattels of which it can be affirmed that they are locally situate in some particular place. I will assume that that is so; if some physical, tangible thing is being dealt with, I can quite understand that that may be locally situate. But here we are dealing with a thing which cannot be touched, or seen, or placed anywhere; it does not exist in any given spot. I agree with Pollock, B., that this cannot be described by the words "locally situate"; it is therefore not within the exception. But it is within the words at the beginning of the section, and it therefore follows that the appellants are liable to the duty which the Crown claims. I think the judgment of the Divisional Court was right, and the appeal must be dismissed.

LOPES, L.J.—Two questions arise in this case under section 59 of the Stamp Act. The first question is, whether this thing, which is the subject matter of the agreement for sale, is "property" within the early part of the section. It is a share in a patent granted in New South Wales and a licence to use the invention protected by the patent. I am of opinion that the Divisional Court were right in saying that this was "property" within the meaning of the section. The second question is, Does it come within the exception? The exception is as follows: "Except lands, tenements, hereditaments, or heritages, or property locally situate out of the United Kingdom, or goods, wares, or merchandise, &c." It is said on the part of the appellants that "property locally situate out of the United Kingdom" includes personal property. I think that it does not. In my opinion the doctrine of ejusdem generis, or, as it is sometimes expressed, noscitur a sociis, applies to this case. The preceding words are "lands, tenements, hereditaments, or heritages." The words "lands, tenements, or hereditaments" are the most comprehensive words for describing real property in England, and I believe that "heritages" has the same comprehensive meaning in Scotland. They follow the words "or property locally situate out of the United Kingdom." I think that means property ejusdem generis with that which has been mentioned before—that is to say, property in the nature of real property. But it is further said that the property which is the subject-matter of this agreement can be said to be locally situate out of the United Kingdom. In my opinion that is so; I do not how such property as this can be said to be locally situate anywhere. I therefore think that the contention of the Crown is right on both grounds.

RIGBY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion so far as the result is concerned. But I cannot accept the view that the word "property" in this exception is necessarily confined to property of the same nature as lands, tenements, hereditaments, and heritages. The rule of ejusdem generis or noscitur a sociis ought in my opinion to be most carefully used. This section contains five exceptions. The first exception is "lands, tenements, hereditaments, or heritages," that is to say, real property. The second exception is "property locally situate out of the United Kingdom," which I understand to be an addition of something outside the United Kingdom, whether it be real or personal property. The third exception is "goods, wares, or merchandise"; the fourth is "stock or marketable securities"; the fifth is "any ship or vessel, or part interest, share, or property of or in any ship or vessel." Why should the word "property" in the second exception be associated with land rather than with wares and merchandise? I cannot think it is right to fix attention solely on what goes before the words in question, and to disregard what comes immediately after them. Then can this property be said to be property locally situate out of the United Kingdom? It may be that the expression "locally situate" is capable of being applied to chattels which have a tangible existence. But can a debt be said to be locally situate anywhere? It has been held that for the purposes of probate a debt is where the debtor is; but it does not follow that a debt has a local situation. Neither am I satisfied that any incorporeal right, such as the patent right with which we have to do in this case, can have a local situation.

I think that the judgment of the Divisional Court was right, and that the appellants are liable to ad valorem duty.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Ince, Colt, & Ince.

Solicitor for the respondents, Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. Stirling, J. } Oct. 27; Dec. 9.

PALMER v. RICH. (a.)

Joint tenancy—Freeholds—Leaseholds—Severance on marriage of female joint tenant—Leases by one joint tenant and husband of other joint tenant.

The marriage of one of two female joint tenants is not in itself a severance of the joint tenancy as regards either freeholds or leaseholds. In re Butler's Trusts, 36 W. R. 817, 38 Ch. D. 286, followed as regards the leaseholds.

The grant of a lease by one joint tenant and the husband of the other joint tenant is not such a disposition of the property by the husband as to sever the joint tenancy. The rule laid down in Robinson v. Preston, 4 K. & J. 505, 6 W. R. Ch. Dig. 87, as to the purchase of property by two or more persons, followed.

Special case.

The facts were as follows: In 1854 Thomas Palmer executed a voluntary conveyance of certain freeholds to his daughters Ellen Palmer and the plaintiff, as joint tenants. In 1856 some leaseholds were bought for £500 and also assigned to the plaintiff and Ellen Palmer as joint tenants. This £500 was provided by Thomas Palmer. Ellen Palmer, in 1859, married Augustus Greenhead. Soon after this marriage Thomas Palmer died.

In 1889 Ellen Greenhead and the plaintiff purchased certain leaseholds for £600, which was provided by them in equal shares. These leaseholds were assigned to them as joint tenants, though the purchase-money was raised out of the sale of lands of which they were tenants in common. The plaintiff, her sister, and brother-in-law all lived together in the leasehold house last purchased. Leases of the other property were granted by the plaintiff and her brother-in-law, and rents were received by the latter on behalf of the plaintiff and his own wife.

Ellen Greenhead died in August, 1895, and her husband in October of the same year. The defendants were the three co-heiresses and the sole next-of-kin of Augustus Greenhead, and one of them was also the legal personal representative of Ellen Greenhead and Augustus Greenhead.

T. A. Nash, for the plaintiff.—In re Butler's Trusts, 36 W. R. 817, 38 Ch. D. 286, is an authority that marriage does not effect a severance as regards the leaseholds, and this is much more the case as regards freeholds. The leases were only granted by the husband in right of his wife under 19 & 20 Vict. c. 120, s. 38, and 40 & 41 Vict. c. 18, s. 46. The mere fact that the husband enjoyed a benefit does not show any intention to sever: Williams v. Hensman, 1 J. & H. 546, 10 W. R. Ch. Dig. 27; In re Wilks, 40 W. R. 13, [1891] 3 Ch. 59. Here there was no agreement and no course of dealing with the property indicating an intention to sever.

Rowden, for the defendants.—The decision in In re Butler is on the ground that the husband takes no estate in chattels real. I submit that he does take an estate in the wife's freeholds on marriage, and therefore as regards the freeholds, marriage by itself is sufficient to effect a severance: Baillie v. Treharne, 29 W. R. 729, 17 Ch. D. 388. Further, the husband has here dealt with the property. [STIRLING, J.—If there were a term of 1,000 years, would a lease for one year granted by the husband effect a severance?] I submit it would. There is here just such a disposition by the husband as was required in In re Butler's Trusts. Coke states that a lease for years by one of two joint tenants puts an end to the joint tenancy. As regards the property acquired after Thomas Palmer's death, the purchase-money was derived from the sale of property of which they were tenants in common, and I submit this rebuts any presumption of joint tenancy: Robinson v. Preston, 4 K. & J. 505, 6 W. R. Ch. Dig. 87.

Nash, in reply.—As to the last point, the property was conveyed to the plaintiff and her sister as joint tenants. The lease was by both joint tenants, as the husband simply acted in right of his wife. The freeholds do not vest in the husband apart from his wife: Bright's Husband and Wife, vol. 1, p. 112.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 9. STIRLING, J.—The first point raised was whether the marriage of Ellen Greenhead effected a severance of the joint tenancy. As regards the leaseholds, it is clearly laid down in Coke on Littleton, 185*b*, 351*a*, and in the case of Bracebridge v. Cook, Plowd. Comm. 416, that marriage does not sever the joint tenancy, and this statement of the law has recently been recognized as accurate by the Court of

(a) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Appeal in In re Butler's Trusts. Consequently it was conceded in argument that there was no severance of the joint tenancy in the leaseholds by the marriage of Ellen Greenhead.

It was said, however, that there was no authoritative statement of the law and no decision that marriage did not effect a severance of a joint tenancy in fee. It certainly appears to be true that there is not to be found in Coke on Littelton any express statement of the law similar to that found at p. 351*a* as to leaseholds, but I cannot bring myself to doubt that the law was settled in the same sense in Lord Coke's time and has been so ever since. I arrive at that conclusion from a consideration of what is laid down in Coke on Littelton with reference to curtesy. In the first place it is distinctly laid down in Littelton, section 45, that a wife is not entitled to dower out of lands held by her husband jointly with another at the time of his death, but that she is, where the husband holds lands in common with another. Then, dealing with the case of curtesy, Lord Coke says at p. 30*a*: "Some have said," &c. Subsequently, commenting on section 283 of Littelton, he says at p. 183*a*: "Here Littelton hath well resolved a doubt," &c. It appears to me that Lord Coke was of opinion that a husband was not entitled to curtesy of lands held by his wife jointly with another; that there had been a doubt whether that applied to the case where lands were held under a grant to two women and the heirs of their bodies, but that this had been disposed of by Littelton. There is no suggestion of any doubt as to the case of lands held under a grant to two women and their heirs, and in all modern text-books which I have examined (it is enough to refer to three—viz., Roper on Husband and Wife, 2nd ed., pp. 11, 12; Burton's Compendium, p. 353; Williams on Real Property, 17th ed., p. 281), the law is stated to the effect that there is no right of curtesy in respect of an estate held in joint tenancy, but that the right does exist in respect of an estate held under a tenancy in common. It is obvious that such a state of the law is inconsistent with the view that marriage of itself converts a joint tenancy into a tenancy in common, and I may add that I have not found in the books any trace of such a doctrine.

The next point raised was whether the grant of the leases stated in paragraph 10 did not effect a severance of the joint tenancy. [His lordship read Coke on Littleton, section 292, and Coke's note, 188*b*, thereon.] Now the leases were granted not by Augustus Greenhead alone, but by him and the plaintiff; and the rent was reserved to them jointly. Whatever effect the grant of a lease by Augustus Greenhead alone might have had, I fail to see that the grant of such leases by him and the plaintiff created a several title or several rights in anyone. The tenants under those leases derived their title under both the lessors; their position is totally different from that of an alienee of one moiety of the lands held jointly.

It might be possible that a lease might be granted by the husband of a joint tenant and the other joint tenant in such form that a severance would be necessary to give effect to it; but this does not seem to be the result in the present case.

It was next contended that the facts stated in paragraph 9 of the special case constitute a course of dealing "sufficient to intimate that the interests of all were mutually treated as constituting a tenancy in common": Williams v. Hensman, J. & H. 557, 10 W. R. Ch. Dig. 27. I confess I cannot see this.

Finally it was urged that however the case might be as regards the two properties hitherto considered, the case was different as regards the property mentioned as purchased since the death of Thomas Palmer. The general rule is stated in Robinson v. Preston, a case cited for the defendants. [His lordship read at p. 510 in 4 K. & J., and continued:] No doubt under special circumstances such as existed there, that rule may be departed from. [His lordship read p. 515.] Here the circumstances seem to me insufficient to take the case out of the rule.

Judgment accordingly.

Solicitors, Collins & Cook, for all parties.

Chan. Div. } Romer, J. } Nov. 30.

In re BANKS.
DAWS v. BANKS. (a.)

Practice—Costs—Mortgage—Foreclosure action—Mortgagees' costs—Administration proceedings combined with foreclosure action—Executor's costs—Costs relating to the security.

So far as administration proceedings are necessary to enable mortgagees to realize their security, mortgagees will be entitled to add to their security their administration costs in the action so far as they relate to their security, and be paid the same in priority to the administration costs of the mortgagor's executor.

Motion.

This was a motion on the part of the executor of the defendant in a foreclosure and administration (so far as such administration might be necessary) action, to vary the minutes of the order made in the action, to the effect that the costs of the executor of such defendant might be paid before those of the plaintiffs.

The plaintiffs were mortgagees suing on behalf of themselves and all other creditors of the deceased defendant. The facts of the case were as follows: By an indenture of a settlement made on the marriage of John Sladen M. Banks and Mary Stace, certain trust funds were settled on Mary Stace for her life, the principal of which Banks had a right under the settlement to appoint by deed or will. Subsequent to the marriage the trustees of the settlement lent to Banks the sum of £7,200, on a mortgage of a certain real estate known as the Chilton estate. Banks, by his will dated the 7th of January, 1847, appointed the defendant Sladen (with others therein named) his executor, and appointed that the trust funds, subject to his wife's life interest, should go to Sladen's son, on the trust therein mentioned, and devised his real estate, subject to certain life interests, to the son or sons of the defendant Sladen in the manner therein mentioned.

After Banks' death interest on the mortgage fell into arrear, and the trustees of the settlement brought the action as above mentioned for foreclosure or sale of the Chilton estate, and for the administration of the real estate (other than that mortgaged by Banks) and of the personal estate of Banks. To this action the applicant was made a defendant.

At the hearing of the action judgment was given for the plaintiffs, and an order was made for the sale of the real estate. The minutes provided that the expenses of the plaintiffs should be first provided for.

Stewart Smith, for the applicant.—The applicant in this case represents the estate, and is under the circumstances entitled to his costs before the plaintiffs.

Eve, Q.C., and Sebastian, for the plaintiffs.

ROMER, J.—The only cases in which an executor

(a.) Reported by J. ARTHUR PRICE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

is entitled to his costs in priority are cases where proceedings have been commenced as administration suits. This was originally a foreclosure action, and so far as the plaintiffs' administration costs were necessary for the foreclosure action, they are entitled to add them to their security. The words "so far as they relate to this security" should be added to the words in the minutes that make provision for the plaintiffs' costs.

Solicitors, Bower, Cotton, & Bower; Kingford, Dormer, & Co.

Q. B. Div.
(Wills and Wright, JJ.) Dec. 17.

THE CONSERVATORS OF HAYES COMMON v. THE BROMLEY DISTRICT COUNCIL. (a.)

Common—Right of highway authority to take gravel—Order of justices—Discretion to make or refuse order—Commons Act, 1876 (39 & 40 Vict. c. 56), s. 20.

Under the Commons Act, 1876, s. 20, the justices to whom application is made for an order under the section have a discretion to make or refuse such order.

Case stated by justices.

Prior to 1876 the surveyor of highways for the district of Bromley had exercised the right of digging for gravel upon Hayes Common under the powers granted them by the Highways Act, 1835, s. 51.

The Commons Act, 1876, s. 20, enacts that no surveyor of highways or highway board shall dig for gravel, &c., upon any of the commons therein referred to without the consent of the conservators of such common, or in default of such consent without the order of two justices sitting in petty sessions within the districts in which such common is situated, "who may in their order prescribe such conditions as to mode of working and restitution of the surface as to them shall seem expedient."

Hayes Common was one of those contemplated by the Act.

After the Act was passed, the surveyor, and, later, the respondents, to whom were transferred the rights and liabilities of the surveyor, continued to dig for gravel with the consent of the conservators.

In 1896 the conservators withheld their consent, and the respondents then applied to the justices for an order under section 20.

The justices, considering that the rights conferred by the Highways Act, 1835, had not been taken away by the section, held that they had no discretion to refuse the order, and made the order prayed for accordingly.

Rawlinson, for the appellants.—The justices had a discretion to make or refuse the order, and as they exercised no discretion the order is bad.

Macmorran, Q.C. (Clarke Williams with him), for the respondents.—The right of the highway authority to take materials off a common, for road making, have been expressly reserved by other Acts dealing with the subject, and the Commons Act, 1876, did not take away that right.

WILLS, J. [after stating the facts and reading section 20.].—The conservators could give or withhold consent. If they withheld it there was power to apply to the justices for an order. The justices have jurisdiction to make or refuse the order. If it had been intended to make it imperative for the justices to grant the order the Act would have said so. But it does not. It says that they may prescribe conditions as to the mode of working, &c. That only means that if they do make an order it may be made subject to those limitations. The case must go back to the justices for them to exercise their discretion, taking into consideration the question whether under the circumstances it is reasonable to allow the district council to use the common in the way they desire.

WRIGHT, J.—I agree.

Solicitors for the appellants, Birkett & Horner.

Solicitors for the respondents, May, Sykes, & Batten.

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q. B. Div.
(Wills and Wright, JJ.) Dec. 16.

HINDLE AND ANOTHER (Appellants) v. BIRTWISTLE (Respondent). (a.)

Factory Acts — Dangerous machinery — Factory and Workshop Acts, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 16), s. 5; 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 75), s. 6.

Under section 5 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, as amended by section 6 of the Factory and Workshop Act, 1891, "all dangerous parts of the machinery" in a factory must either be securely fenced or be in such a position or of such construction as to be equally safe to every person employed in the factory as they would be if they were securely fenced.

Held, that, although a part of a machine might not be dangerous in the ordinary course of its working, yet it might be a "dangerous" part of a machine within the meaning of the Acts if, owing to external causes or to the negligence of a workman, it was liable to cause accidents.

Special case stated by the Recorder of Blackburn.

At a court of summary jurisdiction at Blackburn the appellants were convicted under the Factory and Workshop Acts, 1878 and 1891, for that they, on the 7th of August, 1895, being the occupiers of a cotton factory, did unlawfully neglect to fence a dangerous part of the machinery in the factory—namely, the shuttles, such shuttles not being in such a position or of such construction as to be equally safe to every person employed in the factory as if they were securely fenced.

The appellants appealed against such conviction to quarter sessions.

Upon the hearing of the appeal the following facts were proved:—

The appellants, on the 7th of August, 1895, were, and for several years previously had been, the occupiers of a certain receiving shed in Blackburn in which there were the ordinary looms and shuttles used in weaving cotton cloth, and they carried on there the business of cotton manufacturers. It was admitted that the said shed was a factory within the meaning of the Factory and Workshop Acts, 1878 and 1891. On the 7th of August a shuttle flew out of the shuttle-race of one of the looms in work in the factory and in its flight struck and seriously injured a weaver in the employment of the appellants. The accident was caused by the negligence of the said weaver in fastening the picking band of the loom too taut, whereby the shuttle was deflected from its proper course in the shuttle-race and so flew out. In addition to the accident on the 7th of August there were, during the years 1891 to 1895, three other serious accidents caused by shuttles flying from looms in the appellants' factory, but to what cause or causes the said accidents were to be attributed there was no evidence to show. During the said period, and down to the 7th of August, 1895, there were 1,400 looms, or thereabouts, in work during most working days in the appellants' factory, and it was agreed, so far as the looms and shuttles were concerned, that the appellants' machinery was substantially in the same condition all through the said period.

(a.) Reported by F. O. ROBINSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

It was proved to the recorder's satisfaction that while the shuttle was running backwards and forwards in the shuttle-race—that is to say, while it was performing in due course the part it was intended to perform in weaving cotton—it was not dangerous, and it was not at that time a dangerous part of any machinery within the meaning of the Factory Acts of 1878 and 1891.

It was, however, proved that shuttles did occasionally fly out from the shuttle-race during the process of weaving under circumstances which rendered such flying shuttles dangerous to any persons who might chance to be in the line of their flight. So far as the evidence before the recorder went the flying out of shuttles from the shuttle-race was due to one or other of the following causes:—(a) In consequence of the shuttle not being true; (b) in consequence of the negligence of the weaver in fastening the picking-band too taut, or some other act of negligent user of the machinery by the person in charge of it; (c) in consequence of some foreign substance accidentally getting into the shuttle-race; and (d) in consequence of some defect in the yarn or thread used in the loom.

There was no evidence before the recorder to show, nor did the respondent suggest, that the appellants' loom, or any of them, were at any time during the period before mentioned or on the 7th of August fitted with shuttles that were not true.

There was no evidence before the recorder to show that the appellants omitted any reasonable precaution to prevent foreign substances getting into the shuttle-race or to detect any defect in the yarn or thread.

There was no evidence that at any time during the said period or on the 7th of August there was in fact any foreign substance in the shuttle-race of any of the appellants' looms, or any defect in any of the yarn or thread used in their looms; but it was to be taken that, in common with all looms and shuttles used in weaving cotton, the appellants' looms and shuttles were liable to be thrown out of gear by the causes mentioned (b), (c), and (d).

It was contended on behalf of the respondent (1) that a machine or part of a machine liable to become temporarily dangerous, whether by its negligent user or by a cause external to the machinery itself, was a dangerous machine or dangerous part of a machine within the meaning of the Acts; (2) that the recorder was bound as a matter of law to infer from the fact of the occasional occurrence of accidents at the appellants' factory from flying shuttles that the shuttles were dangerous parts of the machinery.

It was contended on behalf of the appellants (1) that it was in each case a question of fact for the court whether a machine or part of a machine was a dangerous machine or dangerous part of a machine: (2) that the obligation to fence machinery imposed upon the occupier of a factory by the said Act applies only to a machine or part of a machine which was dangerous in the ordinary course of careful working; (3) that a machine or part of a machine was not dangerous within the meaning of the said Acts from the mere fact that it might occasionally become dangerous by being thrown out of gear in the process of manufacturing the article which it was designed to manufacture by any of the above-mentioned causes.

The recorder found as a fact that the shuttles in the appellants' factory were not dangerous parts of the machinery, and quashed the conviction, but stated this case for the opinion of the court.

If the court was of opinion that the fact that the appellants' looms and shuttles were on the 7th of August liable to become temporarily dangerous by reason of any of the above-mentioned causes (b), (c), and (d), the decision of the recorder was to be reversed and the conviction was to stand, with costs.

The Factory and Workshop Act, 1878, s. 5:

"With respect to the fencing of machinery in a factory the following provisions shall have effect:

"(3) Every part of the mill gearing shall either be securely fenced or be in such a position or of such construction as to be equally safe to every person employed in the factory as it would be if it were securely fenced. . . ."

The Factory and Workshop Act, 1891, s. 6, sub-section 2, enacts that in section 5, sub-section 3, of the Act of 1878, before the words "every part" shall be inserted the words "all dangerous parts of the machinery and."

Sir R. E. Webster, A.G. (H. Sutton and L. Sanderson with him), for the respondent, in support of the appeal.—The recorder has found as a fact that the shuttles were not dangerous parts of the machinery; but in coming to that conclusion he has not proceeded on the right principle. He thought that as the shuttle was not in its normal state dangerous, it could under no circumstances become dangerous. The true view of the enactment is that if by careless working or by some external cause a machine, otherwise secure, is liable to become dangerous, then it is a dangerous machine within the Act, and must be fenced.

Sir E. Clarke, Q.C. (G. Sutton with him), for the appellants.—The decision of the recorder was right. He has found as a fact that the shuttle was not a dangerous part of the machine. If the proposition of the Attorney-General is right it will lead to an enormous extension of the Act, for it is impossible to imagine any machine that may not by some unforeseen cause or other be liable to become temporarily dangerous. Therefore, according to that argument, every machine is "dangerous" within the meaning of the Act; but that cannot have been the intention of the Legislature.

Sir R. E. Webster, A.G., replied.

WILLS, J.—This is a case of considerable importance, but the enactment is plain and intelligible, and I see no difficulty in construing it. The Acts say that all dangerous parts of the machinery shall be securely fenced. The recorder seems to think that no part of the machinery can be dangerous, unless it is dangerous in the ordinary course of working, however carefully it may be worked. I disagree with that view, which, in my opinion, would be a disastrous limitation of the Act. I think that machinery is dangerous if, in the ordinary course of events, danger may be expected if it is worked without protection. Of course it would be absurd to say that merely because an accident had occurred a machine was dangerous. But it is equally absurd, to my mind, to say that a machine is not "dangerous" within the Act unless it is always dangerous. Many accidents occur where the machine is of the best possible kind, and is most carefully worked, but is the machine any the less dangerous on that account? All the circumstances of the case must be taken into consideration and if there is a substantial element of danger in the use of the machine with precaution, then, in my opinion, it is "dangerous" within the meaning of these enactments. The recorder has not applied his mind to that view of the case. He appears to have thought that if the machine was of such a kind that accidents would not occur if it was carefully worked, then it was not dangerous. It is impossible to lay down any more definite rule than I have done. The tribunal must in each case decide according to the material facts. Under these circumstances the case must be remitted to the recorder for him to reconsider his decision.

WRIGHT, J.—I am of the same opinion. Two justices of the borough came to the conclusion that the shuttle was dangerous. The recorder reversed their decision on an erroneous view of the law. The case as stated refers to various causes which might occasion the shuttle to fly out. All these causes must be taken into consideration, but none of them are conclusive. I do not agree with the argument that the shuttle is dangerous because if it flies out it is dangerous. In deciding the question, the chance of the shuttle flying out must be taken into account.

Case remitted.

Solicitor for the respondent, Solicitor to the Treasury.

Solicitor for the appellants, J. W. Carter, Blackburn

Court of Appeal.

From Chan. Div. (Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J., and Lindley and A. L. Smith, L.JJ.) — Nov. 23, 24; Dec. 18.

MARSH v. JOSEPH. (a.)

Solicitor—Unauthorized use of solicitor's name—Fraud—Liability of innocent solicitor—Negligence—Partnership.

The name of a firm consisting of two solicitors had been used, improperly and without authority, in a fraudulent petition by means of which payment out of court of a sum of £4,000 was obtained by a person not entitled thereto. One partner in the firm knew nothing of the matter; the other had been told that proceedings were about to be taken, and knew, after an order for payment had been made, that the firm name had been used in proceedings of some sort. The Treasury having made good the £4,000,

Held, that the last-mentioned partner had not, by omitting to inform the court that the firm name had been used without authority in the petition, made himself or his firm liable to refund the sum misappropriated; and that the two solicitors were respectively liable to replace only such parts of the fund as they had respectively received in payment of the firm's costs.

There is not as a matter of law any usage that it is within the scope of a solicitor partnership for one of the partners to authorize the use of the firm name by a third person and to thereby bind his co-partners. Such usage, if any, must be established by evidence in each case.

Judgment of Kekewich, J., 44 W. R. 462, varied.

Cross-appeals from the decision of Kekewich, J. (reported 44 W. R. 462).

The question raised was whether John Clear and J. R. Green, who were in partnership as solicitors under the firm name of "Clear & Green," were liable to make good, or whether either of them was liable to make good, all, or any, and what part of, a sum of £6,387 0s. 2d. which stood to the credit of the suit of Marsh v. Joseph, and which was paid out by the Paymaster-General pursuant to an order of Kekewich, J., dated the 13th of July, 1895, and which order was procured by the fraud of one J. A. Hales, a solicitor. Hales was an undischarged bankrupt and an uncertificated solicitor. That he was the former was known to Clear; the latter fact was not.

The facts of the case were these: In 1877 the action of Marsh v. Joseph was instituted for the administration of the trusts of a settlement of the 9th of September, 1858. In that suit J. A. Hales acted as solicitor for the plaintiffs therein. Under the settlement Jacob Moses (who subsequently changed his name to John Moses Marsh) was entitled to certain property for life, and he had power to appoint the same to one or more of his children, and failing appointment it devolved upon all equally. Later, the settled property was sold, and the fund in court represented the proceeds. In July, 1895, Hales called upon Clear and said he had some business, and that he should require another solicitor to represent one of the formal parties, and asked Clear, "Will you act for me?" To this Clear replied, "We shall be very happy on receiving instructions." The name of the case was not mentioned, nor the character of the business, nor the name of the supposed formal party for whom Clear & Green were to act, and those gentlemen heard nothing further about the matter until after the consummation of Hale's fraud, and after payment out by the Paymaster-General of the fund in question.

On the 13th of July, 1895, a petition was presented in the name of Joseph Moses Marsh, which, after reciting the settlement of 1858, that Joseph Moses Marsh had been certified by the Chief Clerk in the suit of Marsh v. Joseph to be the eldest son of John Moses Marsh (formerly Jacob Moses) and that certain appointments of new trustees under the settlement of 1858 had been made, proceeded to state that by deed-poll of the 31st of December, 1894, John Moses Marsh, under his power of appointment, and subject to his own life interest, had irrevocably appointed the sum then in court standing to the credit of the action of Marsh v. Joseph to his son Joseph Moses Marsh absolutely for his own benefit. Such petition further stated that John Moses Marsh died on the 8th of March, 1895. The petition then prayed that the court should, subject to certain provisions as to costs and for payment of succession duty (properly estate duty), order that the fund be paid to the petitioner, Joseph Moses Marsh. Upon the back of that petition the names "John Clear & Co." appear as solicitors for the petitioner. The petition was verified by what purported to be an affidavit of the petitioner, to which were exhibited (amongst other documents) the settlement of 1858 and the alleged deed-poll of the 31st of December, 1894. The affidavit is endorsed "John Clear & Co., Serjeant's-inn." For the purposes of the hearing of the petition Hales, again using the name of "John Clear & Co.," instructed counsel to appear in support of the petition, and in the name of "J. Hales" instructed other counsel to appear for all the other parties interested and to consent to the prayer of the petition. Accordingly the matter came before Mr. Justice Kekewich on the 13th of July, 1895, when he made the order prayed. The "payment schedule" to the order provided for payment to "John Clear, of Serjeant's-inn," as petitioner's solicitor, of "agreed costs" of petitioner, £15, to "John Hales, of 15, Clifford's-inn," of £10 as "agreed costs" of the respondents, and in respect of the estate duty £224 11s. 5d. Accordingly, on the 10th of August, 1895, the cheques were drawn in the Paymaster-General's office upon the Bank of England

(a.) Reported by R. C. MACKENZIE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

13
14

—one, payable to Joseph Moses Marsh, for £6,137 8s. 9d.; one, payable to John Clear, for £15; and one, payable to John Hales, for £10. These cheques, with provision for estate duty, exhausted the fund in court.

On the same day (the 10th of August) by, or upon the introduction of, J. A. Hales, an account was opened at Child's Bank in the name of Joseph Moses Marsh, and the cheque of £6,137 8s. 9d. was paid in to the credit of that account and was credited as cash. On the same day, also, two cheques were drawn upon the account, one for £100 to self, and the other for £1 8s. 1d. to "J. A. Hales," and were cashed.

Shortly put, the means by which the money was obtained out of court were the fraudulent contrivances of Hales, either acting alone or in complicity with some other person or persons. There was no deed of appointment by John Moses Marsh—the document produced was a forgery; and no affidavit in verification of the petition had been made by Joseph Moses Marsh. The proceedings were in fraud of that person and the other persons beneficially interested. Ultimately, in October, 1895, Hales was, upon his own confession, convicted at the Old Bailey for forging the name of Joseph Moses Marsh on the back of the cheque for £6,137 8s. 9d.

Between July, 1895, and the 12th of August, 1895, the date at which Hales's fraud was complete, when he had got the fund in question out of court and under his control, and when the two cheques against it had been paid—there had been no communication of any kind between Hales and Clear & Green. On that 12th of August, about one o'clock, Hales called at the office of Clear & Green, and saw the former. Hales reminded Clear of his having spoken to him about some business that he was going to bring to Clear & Green. He said: "It is all done. I did it for you. I did not want to bother you. The cheque is waiting for your costs at the Paymaster-General's." Clear thereupon reprimanded him and asked him what business he had to use his name or the name of the firm. To which Hales replied: "I thought it was such a simple matter that it was not worth while. I thought I could carry it out and instructed counsel, and I have done everything necessary." To this Clear replied that he liked to know what was going on; that he did not like people to use their names, and that he had never allowed it on any occasion. Ultimately Clear took and cashed the cheque for £15, repaid to Hales £10 14s. 6d. out of its proceeds, which the latter said represented payments by him to counsel, and handed the balance, £4 5s. 6d. in cash to his partner, J. E. Green, who on the same day entered it thus in the cash-book of the firm: "Received cash of J. Hales, re Joseph, £4 5s. 6d." This was the sole connection of Green with the matter. Between one and two o'clock on the 12th of August, a cheque, payable to "self" drawn on account at Child's for £4,000, was cashed; on the 13th of August a like further cheque for £50 was cashed, and on the 14th of September a like further cheque for £20 was cashed. There then remained (after payment of these cheques) £1,966 0s. 5d. to the credit of the account, and that sum so remained up to October, 1895, when the fraud was discovered, and it has been recovered for the benefit of the persons entitled.

Upon this state of facts the persons defrauded petitioned the court for relief against the Paymaster-General or the Commissioners of the Treasury, under the Chancery (Funds) Act, 1872. The claim to this relief was not denied, but on the hearing of the petition it was alleged on the part of the Treasury that Clear and Green were, as officers of the court, liable to make good the moneys lost, and the court was asked so to order.

Clear, in his evidence at the trial, stated that he did not inquire, nor did Hales tell him, what was the nature of the business in which his name or that of his firm had been used, and that he did not ascertain till a much later period that his name or that of his firm had been used for a petitioner who was seeking payment of money out of court.

Kekewich, J., in his judgment, accepted as true the foregoing account given by Clear of the facts so far as he was concerned. The learned judge explicitly found that Clear had no reason to believe that Hales had intended to use or had used his name until the 12th of August, 1895. As to Green, he also explicitly acquitted him of all personal blame. His lordship, however, held (1) that it was the duty of Clear when on the 12th of August he first knew that his firm's name had been used by Hales without authority in proceedings in court, to have at once informed the judge of that fact; (2) that Clear by accepting the cheque of £15 for costs and placing it to the account of his firm had thereby condoned on behalf of his firm the unauthorized use by Hales of the firm's name; and (3) that Green as Clear's partner was together with Clear jointly and severally liable to make good to the Treasury so much of the money as was drawn out of the bank by Hales after the 12th of August, 1895—viz., the sums of £50 and £20, making, together with the sum of £15 for costs, a sum of £85.

The Commissioners of the Treasury, and also Green, and Clear, severally appealed from this decision.

Sir R. Finlay, S.G., and Ingle Joyce, for the Crown.—Clear is liable for £4,000, both because he authorized the use of his firm's name, and because he ratified what had been done: In re Dangar's Trusts, 37 W. R. 651, 41 Ch. D. 178; British Mutual Banking Co. v. Charnwood Forest Railway Co., 35 W. R. 718, 18 Q. B. D. 714; Barwick v. English Joint-Stock Bank, 15 W. R. 877, L. R. 2 Ex. 259; Phosphate of Lime Co. v. Green, L. R. 7 C. P. 43, 20 W. R. C. L. Dig. 16; In re R. A. Ward, 31 Beav. 1, 11 W. R. Ch. Dig. 100. He is liable even if he was not negligent. But here he ought to have applied at once to the court as soon as he found out that an improper use had been made of his name. Had he done, so the loss might have been prevented. Green is liable for his partner's act.

They also referred to Storey on Agency, section 244; Freeman v. Rosher, 13 Q. B. 780; Lewis v. Read, 13 M. & W. 834; Bolton and Partners v. Lambert, 37 W. R. 434, 41 Ch. D. 295; Brook v. Hook, 19 W. R. 508, L. R. 6 Ex. 89; Chalmers on Bills of Exchange (illustration 7 to section 24 of the Act of 1882); In re Spencer, 18 W. R. 240; Brydges v. Branfill, 12 Sim. 369; and Norton v. Cooper, 3 Sm. & G. 375.

Ashton Cross, for Clear.—Clear was guilty of no negligence—or, at any rate, of none that contributed to the loss. In none of the cases cited was the solicitor himself defrauded.

Witt, Q.C., and E. de Witt, for Green.—The jurisdiction against solicitors given by 35 & 36 Vict. c. 44 is merely punitive, and cannot be invoked against Green, who has done nothing wrong. It was not within Clear's powers under the partnership articles to employ Hales, who, as an uncertificated solicitor and undischarged bankrupt, had no right to act at all.

They referred to Scholfield v. Lord Londesborough, ante, p. 124, [1896] A. C. 514.

Stewart Smith, for the petitioners in the court below.

Sir R. Finlay, S.G., in reply, referred to section 16 of the Partnership Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 39), and to Lindley on Partnership, 6th ed., pp. 137 et seq.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 18.—Lord RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN, C.J., read the judgment of the court, which, after stating the facts, proceeded: The question then was, before Kekewich, J., and now is before us, whether on the facts stated the firm of Clear & Green or any, and, if so, which, member of the firm is liable for any, and, if so, for what, part of the moneys lost. The learned judge, as I understand, acquitted Clear of responsibility in respect of all moneys drawn from the account at Child's Bank up to and including the 12th of August. He says expressly that, in his judgment, no action, however energetic, on Clear's part, would have availed to stop the payment of the £4,000 cheque on the 12th of August, but he finds that Clear on that day condoned what he (Clear) thought was an irregularity in the use of his name, and the learned judge makes him liable to repay the amount of the £15 cheque, and for any loss by any withdrawal from Child's Bank after the date of the 12th of August. This would represent a liability of Clear for £15 and £50 and £20, in all £85. As to Green, the learned judge, while, as I have said, acquitting him of all personal blame, arrives at the conclusion that Clear was acting within the scope of the partnership authority in what he did, and that, therefore, Green is subject to the same liability as his partner. From these judgments there are cross-appeals. Green gave notice of appeal on the 21st of May, 1896, the Crown on the 22nd of May, 1896, and Clear on the 10th of June, 1896. On the argument before us the discussion proceeded on the appeal of the Crown, for whom it was contended that the learned judge had rightly found that Clear had on the 12th of August, 1895, condoned or ratified the use of his name, but that the learned judge had failed to carry that conclusion to its legitimate consequences by fixing Clear with the results, which, it was contended, followed upon the use of his name, and that he was legally liable for the entire loss—namely, £4,171 8s. 1d., and for the cheques of £15 and £10 for costs. It was further contended that Green was likewise liable for the acts of his partner. On the other hand, it was contended for Clear that his liability was limited to the repayment of the amount of the £15 cheque, and for Green that his liability was limited to the £4 5s. 6d. received by him for the partnership. We have now to consider these various contentions.

No question of jurisdiction was raised before us, but I think it important to state the principle upon which the count acts. It is that where negligence or other breach of duty is committed by a solicitor, an officer of the court, in a matter in which the court has seisin, the court may, and if it can do full justice will, summarily order its officer to make good the loss occasioned by his neglect or breach of duty. But the limit of liability is the measure of the loss flowing from the negligence or breach of duty. The court cannot, merely because the officer has been guilty of misconduct, mulct him in damages. The damages must flow from the act of negligence or misconduct.

In the present case the learned judge has divided the loss into (1) the loss which he considers occurred up to and including the 12th of August, and (2) that after the 12th of August; and he has fixed Clear and Green with the latter loss only. Before considering whether this is correct, it will be convenient to deal with the broader contention of the Crown—viz., that the firm are liable for all the loss whenever it occurred. Apart from the doctrine of ratification, it cannot be pretended that there was any ground for fixing Clear or Green with liability. Neither had done any blameworthy thing. Neither had authorized the use of the firm name. Neither knew up to the 12th of August that the firm name had in fact been used for any purpose, and when, on that day, Clear learned that it had been used, the mischief had been done, the money had gone out of the control of the court and into that of the perpetrator of the fraud. The money was lost, and the question was not whether the loss could be prevented, but whether any of it could be recovered. How had it been obtained? It had been obtained by reason of the order of the court of the 13th of July, 1895, which in its turn had been obtained by the fraudulent fabrication of the deed-poll and of the affidavit purporting to verify it, followed by the petition containing untrue statements, and the employment by Hales in Clear's name of counsel for the petitioner to support the petition, and of counsel by Hales in Hale's name to consent to the prayer of the petition. Of all this Clear and Green were ignorant. Indeed it is obvious that if Hales had not chosen to mention the cheque for £15 to Clear, in order to get out of it the fees paid to counsel, the fraud would have been equally successful and complete; or, again, if he had used the firm's name without any such conversation as occurred in July. When, then, is the true effect of what takes place on the 12th of August? To appreciate this one must recur to the conversation in July, when Clear was asked by Hales whether he would act for a formal party and said he would if instructed. On the 12th of August, Hales in effect says to Clear, "I did not think it worth troubling you about the formal business I mentioned in July. It was simple; I did it myself. There's a cheque for £15 for you, but you'll have to return me all for counsel's fees, which I have paid, except £4 5s. 6d., which you keep for yourself." Clear complained of the use of his name, reprimanded Hales, but kept and paid to his partner this £4 5s. 6d. I doubt whether this is any ratification in any real sense; but assuming that it amounts to ratification, of what is it ratification? At most it was ratification of the use of his name in a formal matter for a formal party. Is that enough to fix him with liability for what had been fraudulently done by Hales for his own purposes? I think not. Clear did not know that his name had been used for the petitioner, nor that the object of the petition was to obtain payment out of a fund in court. The amount of the cheque was not such as to suggest that the work had been other than the employment of counsel for a formal purpose, as for a change of investments or appointment of new trustees, or the like. In a word, there was nothing to suggest in the remotest way that Hales had for his own fraudulent purposes used Clear's name, and been a party to forgery and perjury in effecting those purposes. We are not called upon to act in business as if every man with whom we come into relations is a thief, and therefore men's actions are not to be judged by a standard of unbelief in professional honesty. To constitute a binding adoption of acts a priori unauthorized these conditions must exist: (1) The acts must have been done for and in the name of the supposed principal, and (2) there must be full knowledge of what those acts were, or such an unqualified adoption that the inference may properly be drawn that the principal intended to take upon himself the responsibility for such acts, whatever they were. In the present case, although the name of Clear (J. Clear & Co.) was used, it is apparent that that user and the other fraudulent acts of Hales were done for his own purposes. It is admitted that Clear had no knowledge of the fraud which had been committed, and in my judgment it is impossible properly to draw the conclusion that Clear by taking the cheque for £15 and keeping the £4 5s. 6d. intended unqualifiedly to take upon himself the responsibility for what had been done, however wickedly and fraudulently it had been done. To use the language of Kekewich, J., he condoned what he believed was a mere irregularity. Where the supposed ratification relates to acts as to which there is no pretence of any a priori authority, as in this case, where it is not a question merely of excess of authority, full knowledge of the facts and unequivocal adoption after such knowledge must be proved, or, in the alternative, the circumstances of the alleged ratification must be such as to warrant the clear inference that the principal was adopting the supposed agent's acts, whatever they were, or however culpable they were. I find an absence of such knowledge and an absence of any ratification except this—putting it at the highest—a ratification of the use of the name of the firm for a formal party. Such ratification is not enough to fix Clear or Green with the fraudulent acts of forgery and perjury or with the fraudulent statements in the petition to which Hales, to further his own ends, was a party. It follows from what I have said that, even if Clear had a priori authorized the use of his name for a formal party, he would not be responsible for the acts of fraud and forgery committed in this case by his supposed agent for that agent's own fraudulent purposes. In my judgment, therefore, the contention of the Crown fails as against both Clear and Green.

It remains to consider whether Kekewich, J., was right in fixing Clear and Green with the loss (as it is called) after the 12th of August as well as with the amount of of the £15 cheque. First as to Clear. Obviously the judgment must stand against Clear for the £15. He received the cheque for £15, part of the fund in court fraudulently obtained, and he has not validly discharged himself of it. As to the rest, I have already pointed out that in my judgment the loss was complete when the cheque of the Paymaster-General was credited as cash by Child's Bank on the 10th of August, two days before Clear knew that the firm name had been used, and that the only question then was whether any of that loss could be recovered back. I understand the learned judge to have proceeded on on the ground that Clear had failed in his duty in not promptly informing the court that his name had been used without his authority. But, assuming for the moment this failure of duty, did it prevent the recovery of any part of the money? It is said it did, for that if he had informed the court, a stop would have been put upon the account at Child's Bank, and the cheques for £50 on the 13th of August and for £20 on the 14th of September would not have been honoured. Is this so? I agree that Clear ought to have resented as grossly improper, the unauthorized use of his name. Suppose he had said so in stronger terms than he did to Hales, and added, as many men acting on a high standard of professional conduct would have done, "I will straightway inform the court," is it not probable that Hales would at once have withdrawn the bank balance? Is it not further probable that the balance of £1,965 0s. 5d. which was recovered, was allowed to remain because Hales was, in the absence of any threat of this kind, lulled into a false sense of security? Indeed, if Clear had gone to the court, all that he could have said was that he thought it proper to state that his name had been used without authority, but whether used for any improper purpose he could not say, and some time must have been occupied by inquiring before any action could be taken, and meanwhile it is not probable that Hales would have been idle. I cannot see my way, therefore, to the conclusion that Clear's silence in any sense led to any part of the loss. But further, to hold Clear liable to make good the £50 and £20 drawn out from Child's Bank after the 12th of August can only, in my judgment, be right upon the assumption that Clear knew or ought to have suspected that a dishonest use had been made of his name and that prompt action would, or might, prevent or lessen any loss following upon that dishonest use. But Clear had no knowledge or even suspicion of anything of the sort. To hold him liable for these sums is to hold him responsible for a breach of duty which is not imposed by any known legal principle, and which the court is not warranted in imposing on its own officers. To do so would be too oppressive on honest men desirous of doing right.

This conclusion is quite consistent with the cases relied upon by counsel for the Crown, for in all of them the solicitor who was held liable for money improperly obtained out of court, had done far more than Clear did in this case. In Slater v. Slater, 58 L. T. N. S. 149, the solicitor had allowed his name to be used for the petitioner upon whose application the money was obtained, and that solicitor actually received the money. So in In re Dangar's Trusts the solicitor held liable was the solicitor for the petitioner who obtained the money; he took an active part in obtaining the money, and his negligence, or that of his clerk, caused the loss. In In re Ward and in Todd v. Studholme, 5 W. R. 277, 3 K. & J. 324, the solicitor had the conduct of the suit and was held liable for his negligence in it. In In re Spencer the solicitors had acted for the petitioners, and their negligence caused the loss for which they were held liable. In Brydges v. Branfill the solicitors were the solicitors for the petitioners, and they received the money. Clear's conduct does not bring him within the principles applicable to any of these decisions.

As to Green, it follows from what I have said that as to him the question is narrowed to this —is he liable jointly and severally with Clear for the £15, or only for the £4 5s. 6d. which he received from Clear and paid into the bank account of the firm as part of the partnership assets? That he is liable for the £4 5s. 6d. is obvious, and upon the grounds which apply to the £15 cheque in the case of Clear. Is he liable for anything more? I think he is not. The learned judge, as I gather, proceeded on the ground that it was within the scope of the agency authority created by the partnership for one partner to allow the use of the name of the firm by another solicitor, and thereby to bind his co-partner. Is that sound? As a proposition of law I know of no authority for it, and I confess I should be surprised to find that it was usual to do so. But any such usage must be established by evidence; the court cannot, as a matter of law, say that there is any such usage, and I do not find that in this case any evidence to that effect was given or offered. Indeed, in this case, the question is not merely whether the permission to use the firm's name was within the scope of the partnership authority, but whether it was within such authority to ratify ex post facto the unauthorized use of such name. In the absence of any evidence of usage or course of business on these points, I come to the conclusion that the £15 cheque received by Clear was not received by him in respect of any transaction in which he had a right to engage on behalf of the firm. The receipt of the cheque was not the receipt of the firm, nor was Clear's knowledge of the receipt and of the circumstances under which he received it the knowledge of the firm. Green's liability began and ended with the receipt by him from Clear of the £4 5s. 6d. cash, and is confined to that sum. The result, therefore, in my judgment, is that Clear's liability must be reduced to the sum of £15, and Green's to the sum of £4 5s. 6d., part of the £15, and the order appealed from must be varied accordingly.

Solicitors, Hare & Co., for The Solicitor for the Treasury; John Clear; J. E. Green; Mear & Fowler.

From Q. B. Div.
(Lord Esher, M.R., and Lopes and Rigby, L.JJ.) Dec. 17.

KIRKHAM v. ATTENBOROUGH.
KIRKHAM v. GILL. (a.)

Sale of goods—Goods delivered "on sale or return"—Passing of property—"Adopting the transaction"—Pledge of goods—Sale of Goods Act, 1893 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 71), s. 18, r. 4 (a).

Where a person to whom goods are delivered on sale or return pledges them he thereby does an act "adopting the transaction" within the meaning of section 18, rule 4 (a), of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, and he becomes the purchaser, and the seller cannot recover the goods from the pledgee, but can only sue the purchaser for the price.

These were two appeals from the judgment of Grantham, J., in favour of the plaintiff, at the trial of the actions without a jury.

In Kirkham v. Attenborough the action was brought to recover possession of a diamond necklace and a brooch which had been pledged by Winter with the defendant, a pawnbroker. The plaintiff, who was a manufacturing jeweller, from time to time delivered various articles of jewellery to Winter "on sale or return," and among others the two articles in question in this action. Winter, without having paid the plaintiff the price, pledged the two articles with the defendant, who in good faith advanced money upon them. Winter having died, the plaintiff discovered that they had been pledged, and brought this action to recover possession of them. The facts in Kirkham v. Gill were of a similar nature. The learned judge gave judgment in both cases for the plaintiff.

The defendants in each case appealed. Both appeals were argued together.

H. D. Bonsey (C. L. Attenborough with him), for the defendant in Kirkham v. Attenborough; and Bucknill, Q.C. (C. L. Attenborough with him), for the defendant in Kirkham v. Gill.—The property in these articles passed to Winter when he pledged them. By exercising that right of ownership in them he "adopted the transaction": section 18, rule 4 (a), of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893. He dealt with them as his own, and thereby signified his acceptance of them as purchaser, and the seller could only sue him for the price: Brown v. Marr, 7 Court Sess. Cas., 4th series, p. 427. The property passes if the person to whom the goods are delivered does some act inconsistent with their return. Goods delivered on sale or return gives the buyer alone an option to return them within a reasonable time: Moss v. Sweet, 16 Q. B. 493. [They also referred to In re Florence, Ex parte Wingfield, 27 W. R. 346, 10 Ch. D. 591, and section 35 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893.] Secondly, if the property did not pass to Winter, the plaintiff entrusted Winter with the symbol of property, and enabled him to hold himself out as the owner, and was therefore estopped from denying Winter's title to deal with the goods: Brown v. Marr; Henderson v. Williams, 43 W. R. 274, [1895] 1 Q. B. 521.

McCall, Q.C., and W. E. Hume Williams, for the plaintiff in each case.—Section 18 of the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, deals with the rules for ascertaining the intention of the parties as to the time at which the property in the goods is to pass to the buyer. Therefore, the only question here is, When did both parties intend that the property should pass? The words "adopting the transaction" in section 18, rule 4 (a), mean doing some act as between buyer and seller contemplated by the contract, and within the intention of both parties, so as to carry out the contract. They do not include any act inconsistent with a return of the goods which is detrimental to the interests of the seller. The rule should not be interpreted so as to defeat the intention of the parties. Winter here could have redeemed the goods, and returned them to the plaintiff. Brown v. Marr was decided before the Sale of Goods Act, 1893, came into operation, and is no authority upon the construction of that statute.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—The contract between the plaintiff and Winter was for the delivery of certain goods to the latter on sale or return. That was the whole contract. That is a contract well known in business, and the courts have been called upon to construe that contract, and have placed an interpretation upon it. When a contract has become common in business, and the courts have placed an interpretation upon it, then all courts ought to adopt that interpretation. The contract being simply what I have stated, the property in the goods does not pass at the time when the contract is made, but it passes upon something subsequently being done. The person who has received the goods may return them within a reasonable time, but the option of returning them is solely his, and the person who has delivered the goods to him cannot demand their return at any time, his only right being to sue the other for the price or value of the goods. The courts having placed that construction on the contract, we must now see what act of the proposed buyer will have the effect of passing the property. Upon this point we must look at the principles adopted by the courts, and now inserted in a code. We must see what it is which the person who has received the goods on sale or return must do to show that he has accepted the goods as sold to and bought by him.

By section 18, rule 4, "when goods are delivered to the buyer on approval or 'on sale or return' or other similar terms the property therein passes to the buyer: (a) When he signifies his approval or acceptance to the seller or does any other act adopting the transaction." The words are most unhappily chosen. When the person to whom the goods are delivered signifies his approval or acceptance of them as the purchaser that gives the other party a right to bring an action for the price of the goods. The seller cannot demand the return of the goods; he can only sue for the price. Then we come to the words "or does any other act adopting the transaction." We must give those words some meaning. What transaction is he to adopt? Clearly not the delivery of the goods on sale or return, because that has been already effected. The words must mean adopting the transaction in such a way as to make him the purchaser of the goods. It must be some act which signifies that he has adopted the transaction in the sense that he is to be considered as the purchaser of the goods. If he does any act which is inconsistent with his being other than the purchaser, that is sufficient. In the present case the person to whom the goods were delivered on sale or return pawned them. He cannot get them back from the pawnbroker without repaying the sum advanced upon them. That act is inconsistent with his free power to return them. He ought not to have done that unless he treated himself as the purchaser. Therefore he has done an act which is only consistent with his being the purchaser, and he thereby made himself the purchaser.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The judgment must therefore be reversed and entered for the defendant in both cases.

LOPES, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. It is important to consider the meaning of the contract for the delivery of goods on sale or return. The position of a person who receives goods on sale or return is this: He has the option of becoming the purchaser in three ways. First, he may buy them at the price named by the seller. Secondly, he may retain them so long as to make it unreasonable that he should return them. Or, thirdly, he may do something inconsistent with his being other than the purchaser. The words of the section are difficult to construe. If a person to whom goods are delivered on sale or return retains them for an unreasonable time, he does something which is inconsistent with their return, and he thereby adopts the transaction. Again, if he does any other act inconsistent with their return, such as selling or pledging them, he will no longer have free control over the goods, and he brings himself within the words of the section as "adopting the transaction." If that is the true construction of the Act, it is clear that the defendant is entitled to retain these goods, inasmuch as the pledge was an act inconsistent with the return of the goods, inconsistent, that is to say, with Winter being other than the purchaser of them.

RIGBY, L.J., concurred.

Appeals allowed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Colyer & Colyer.

Solicitors for the defendants, Stanley Attenborough & Tyer; Attenborough & Son.

From Q. B. Div.
Lord Esher, M.R., and Lopes and Rigby, L.JJ.) — Nov. 30.

ROBERTS v. SECURITY CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Insurance—Burglary—Policy signed and sealed—Payment of premium—Condition precedent—Recital that premium had been paid—Estoppel—Waiver.

On the 14th of December, 1895, the plaintiff signed a proposal form addressed to the defendant company for an insurance against loss by burglary, the form stating that no insurance would be considered in force until the premium was paid. The first premium was stated to be 9s. 11d., to the 1st of January, 1897, and 9s. 9d. annually afterwards. On the 18th of December a protection note was given to the plaintiff, reciting the proposal and declaring the plaintiff to be provisionally protected, subject to the conditions contained in the form of policy used by the company, for seven days from that date. The seven days expired on the 25th of December, and on the night of the next day the plaintiff suffered a loss by burglary. On the 27th of December, at a meeting of the directors of the company, who were ignorant of the loss, a policy was duly signed and sealed insuring the plaintiff from the 14th of December, 1895, to the 1st of January, 1897, the policy reciting that the first premium, 9s. 11d., had been paid, and one of the provisoes therein stated that no assurance by way of renewal or otherwise should be held to be effected until the premium due thereon should have been paid. No premium was ever paid, and the policy never left the company's office.

Held, that the company must be taken to have waived the prepayment of the premium, and that they were therefore liable on the policy.

Appeal by the defendants from the decision of the Divisional Court (Grantham and Wright, JJ.), affirming the judgment of the Leeds County Court judge in an action upon a policy of insurance against loss by burglary and housebreaking.

On the 14th of December, 1895, the plaintiff signed a proposal form for an insurance for £167 on furniture and other chattels against loss by burglary and housebreaking, whereby he agreed to accept a policy subject to the usual conditions prescribed by the company and indorsed on that policy, and on the back of the form it was stated that no insurance would be considered in force until the premium was paid. The first premium was 9s. 11d. to the 1st of January, 1897, and 9s. 9d. for each year afterwards, the premium being renewable on the 1st of January in each year. The extra 2d. in the first premium was for the "odd time," which was defined to mean that policies were renewable on the 1st of the month, and the premium for the odd time over twelve months must be added to the year's premium.

No premium was ever paid.

On the 18th of December, 1895, the following protection note, signed by the company's agent, was given to the plaintiff: "Mr. Roberts, having made a proposal to this company for insurance against loss arising from burglary and housebreaking for the sum of £167 on property described in his proposal, and having paid to me the sum of £ (left blank), is hereby declared to be provisionally protected against that risk (subject to the conditions contained in and indorsed on the form of policy used by the company) for seven days from this date, or until the proposal be in the meantime declined." The seven days expired on the 25th of December, and on the night of the 26th of December a burglary was committed and a loss occurred under the policy.

On the 27th of December at a meeting of the directors of the company, who were in ignorance that a burglary had been committed, a policy was signed by two directors and the secretary, and the seal of the company was affixed thereto, insuring the plaintiff as described in the proposal form from noon of the 14th of December, 1895, to noon of the 1st of January, 1897. The policy recited that the first premium (9s. 11d.) had been paid by the assured to the company, and one of the provisoes therein stated that no assurance by way of renewal or otherwise should be held to be effected until the premium due thereon should have been paid.

The policy never left the company's office.

The defendants denied liability under the policy on the ground that there was no concluded contract of insurance. The plaintiff in his evidence stated that the only reason why he had not paid the premium was that he was never asked for it, and that he was always ready to pay it.

The county court judge held that the prepayment of the premium had been waived, and gave judgment for the plaintiff, and the Divisional Court affirmed this decision.

Channell, Q.C. (G. M. Cohen and A. Neilson), for the defendants.—All the documents expressly stated that no insurance should be in force until the premium was paid. The payment of the premium was a condition of the policy coming into operation. The burglary took place after the seven days during which the protection note was in operation, and before the policy was signed. The policy expressly stated that no insurance should be held to be effected until the premium was paid. The policy never left the company's possession, and was not a contract by the company until delivered to the assured in exchange for the premium. The recital in the policy that the premium had been paid was incorrect.

(a.) Reported by W. F. BARRY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

He referred to Xenos v. Wickham, 16 W. R. 38, L. R. 2 H. L. 296; Canning v. Farquhar, 34 W. R. 423, 16 Q. B. D. 727.

Longstaffe, for the plaintiff, was not called upon.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—In this case there has been a proposal for insurance, and that proposal has been accepted. If the matter had stopped there we should have had to consider the effect of the proposal and the acceptance. But the matter has gone beyond that. There is a policy signed and sealed on the 27th of December. What, therefore, would have been the effect of the proposal and the acceptance becomes immaterial. Here there is a policy. Was this policy executed upon condition that it was not to be an effectual policy until certain things were fulfilled? The policy was duly signed and sealed by the company. The policy, it was said, was kept in the company's office, and was never delivered to the plaintiff. There is no suggestion that the policy was delivered to the secretary to be held as an escrow—that is, until some condition was fulfilled. The policy was executed, and it remained, I suppose, in the hands of the company's secretary. The company might have delivered it to their secretary as an escrow, but this was not done. The policy therefore having been executed, and no condition being attached to its delivery, it became the company's concluded contract. That being so, we must construe the policy and see how it applies. From what time did it take effect? It insured the assured from noon of the 14th of December, 1895, to noon of the 1st of January, 1897. The argument against that is that the recital that the premium had been paid was untrue, and it was proposed to show that the premium had never been paid, and that therefore the policy never came into operation. In the first place the company are not at liberty to show that as against their own act and deed. But, in my opinion, the best mode of dealing with that argument is this. The company have treated the premium as paid, and have therefore waived its prepayment. The company cannot in this case get rid of their liability, after the deed has been executed and the loss has happened, merely by showing that the premium has not been paid. The result, therefore, is that the company are liable to pay the plaintiff, but can deduct the premium from the sum payable.

LOPES, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. I think that the proposal and the protection note came to an end when the policy was executed. The question we have to determine is whether there is a concluded agreement between the parties. In my opinion, when the policy was duly executed it became a concluded contract. It is said that we can go back to the statement in the proposal that no insurance would be considered in force until the premium had been paid. But we find in the recitals in the policy a statement that the premium has been paid. The company seek to go against their own solemn statement. In my opinion they are estopped from saying that the premium has not been paid; and even if there is no estoppel the company must be taken to have waived the prepayment of the premium. The execution of the policy, under the circumstances, is conclusive proof of a concluded agreement. It seems to me that if the assured had gone to the company's office the day after the execution of the policy and tendered the premium and demanded the deed, the company would have had no answer to the demand.

RIGBY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The signing and sealing of the policy created an insurance as from noon of the 14th of December, 1895. The annual premium is to be 9s. 9d. I find, however, that the first premium covers the period from the 14th of December, 1895, to the 1st of January, 1897, and amounts to 9s. 11d. That shows an extra 2d. for the few days remaining of the current year from the 14th of December, 1895, to the 1st of January, 1896—that is to say, for the period partly before and partly after the policy had been executed. The company, at the very least, waived the prepayment of the 2d., which was the sum applicable to the period during which the loss occurred. I think that the company also waived the prepayment of the whole 9s. 11d., but that becomes immaterial because the loss occurred before the end of the year 1895. The policy most certainly is a deed. It is in the form of a deed, and I do not see how it is possible to say that there is no bargain. Even if it were shown to have been delivered as an escrow upon condition that it was not to be handed over to the assured until payment of the premium, still it would be as good and complete a deed, when the condition was fulfilled, as if it had been delivered unconditionally at the first. If, therefore, the assured had gone to the office of the company with the premium, the deed must have been handed over to him. I do not think that he ought to lose his right because he has not actually tendered the premium. He was perfectly ready to pay it. His right under the concluded agreement is to have the amount of the loss made good to him upon his paying the premium of 9s. 11d.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Harman, Ward, & Collier.

Solicitors for the defendants, Burchell & Co.

From Q. B. Div.
(Lord Esher, M.R., and Lopes and Rigby, L.JJ.) — Nov. 20.

COUNTY COUNCIL OF MIDDLESEX v. ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE OF ST. GEORGE'S UNION. (a.)

Poor law—Rating—Exemptions—County council offices—User for administrative purposes—Joint occupation with quarter sessions.

Premises were occupied as to one part by a county council exclusively for the purpose of the administrative business of the county; another part of the premises was occupied by the county council jointly with the quarter sessions.

Held, that occupation for the administrative business of the county was not occupation for a "Crown" purpose so as to exempt the county council from being rated for the relief of the poor; that as to the part of the premises occupied jointly with the quarter sessions the county council must be rated in proportion to the extent of their occupation.

Decision of the Divisional Court (Cave and Wills, JJ.), 44 W. R. 666, affirmed.

(a.) Reported by F. O. ROBINSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Appeal by the Middlesex County Council from a decision of the Divisional Court (Cave and Wills, JJ.) on a case stated under section 40 of the Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869, reported 44 W. R. 666.

The name of the Middlesex County Council was inserted in a supplemental valuation list of the united parishes of St. Margaret and St. John the Evangelist, Westminster, in the St. George's Union, as that of the occupiers of "that part of the Guildhall, Westminster, being the county hall, committee rooms, offices, office of the county surveyor, vaults, and rooms used by the caretaker, and such parts of the building as are used by the Middlesex County Council for administrative purposes as distinguished from Crown purposes."

The county council were assessed in respect of their occupation of the premises at £225 gross and £188 rateable value.

Parts of the Guildhall were used exclusively by the quarter sessions, except that the courts were occasionally used by the county council for the purpose of hearing applications for music and dancing licences. Other parts were used exclusively by the county council. Other parts, including the offices of the clerk of the peace, who was also ex officio clerk of the county council, were used jointly by the county council and the quarter sessions.

The questions for the opinion of the court were:

1. Is the Guildhall, or any and what part thereof rateable and within the description of rateable property the subject of the Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869.

2. Upon what principle is the Guildhall, or any rateable part thereof, to be valued and assessed for the purpose of the poor or other rates.

3. Is the question whether the parts of the building used by the county council exclusively are capable of being let separately from the rest of the building material.

The Divisional Court held that the parts of the building used exclusively for the administrative purposes of the county council were not exempt from rating, and that as to such parts of the premises as were used jointly, the occupations must be apportioned, and that, so far as they were occupied by the county council they were rateable: see 44 W. R. 666.

The county council appealed.

Danckwerts, for the appellants.—First, the whole building is exempt from rating, being used for "public purposes." The administrative duties performed by the county council are the same as were before 1888 performed by the justices in quarter sessions, and the premises occupied by quarter sessions for administrative county business were exempt from liability to poor rate: Hodgson v. Carlisle Local Board, 8 E. & B. 116; Commissioners of River Tone v. Ash, 10 B. & C. 349; Mersey Docks v. Cameron, 13 W. R. 1069, 11 H. L. Cas. 443; Reg. v. Justices of Worcestershire, 11 A. & E. 57; Nicholson v. Assessment Committee of Holborn Union, 35 W. R. 230, 18 Q. B. D. 161; Coomber v. Justices of Berks, 32 W. R. 525, 9 App. Cas. 61. Secondly, assuming that the purposes, for which the county council use that part of the building occupied by them exclusively, are not "public" purposes, nevertheless the county council is not rateable, for where a building is mainly used for "public" purposes as is the case here, you cannot pick out certain parts, not so used, and rate them: Martin v. Assessment Committee of West Derby, 31 W. R. 489, 11 Q. B. D. 145; Pearson v. Assessment Committee of Holborn Union, [1893] 1 Q. B. 389, 41 W. R. Dig. 165.

Bosanquet, Q.C. (W. C. Ryde with him), for the respondents.—The use of parts of the building for the administrative purposes of the county council is not such a user as will entitle the county council to exemption. A building is only exempt if used for "Crown" purposes, that is to say, it must be used for the purpose of that part of the government of the county which is theoretically administered by the Crown: Greig v. University of Edinburgh, L. R. 1 H. L. Sc. 348. (He was stopped by the court.)

Danckwerts, in reply, cited: R. v. Justices of Glamorganshire, 5 T. R. 279.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—The county council are described in the valuation list as occupiers of the premises in question. No point is raised by the case as to whether the county council were rightly put in the list as occupiers, and the question raised by the case is whether the county council is liable to be rated in respect, not of the whole, but of certain parts of the building. The whole building is in the occupation of the county council, but a part of the building is used exclusively by the justices for the purposes of the judicial side of their jurisdiction as justices in quarter sessions. Other parts are used jointly by the justices when performing their administrative functions and by the county council. Other parts are not used by the justices at all, but are used exclusively by the county council in carrying out the duties entrusted to them by Parliament. The parts of the building in respect of which the county council's name has been inserted in the valuation list are the parts used jointly by the county council with the justices and the parts used exclusively by the county council.

It has been contended that no part of the building is rateable because it is said that the whole building is used for public purposes. In my opinion that argument is contrary to several decided cases in the House of Lords and the Court of Appeal. The purposes for which the county council use their part of the building are no doubt in one sense "public purposes," but they are not "Crown" purposes within the definition given in the House of Lords in The Mersey Docks v. Cameron by Lord Westbury and Blackburn, J., both of whom draw a distinction between public purposes properly so-called, and Crown purposes which are no doubt public but are also something more. I think that that case is an authority for saying that those parts of the building which are needed exclusively by the county council must be rated.

As to the part of the building which is used jointly with the justices, I think that if the justices had used that part for judicial purposes, there might have been some question whether the county council was not exempt from rateability in respect of their occupation of that part. The justices, however, use that part solely for administrative purposes which would not come within the definition of Crown purposes, and that being the case the county council are liable to be rated in respect of their occupation of that part. I am, therefore, of opinion that the judgment of the Divisional Court was perfectly right.

It is said that the court should have specifically determined which rooms in the building were rateable. The court has, however, laid down the principle on which certain portions of the building are rateable, and then the court said that a skilled person acting on this principle would be perfectly competent to deal with the matter. In so dealing with the case the Divisional Court was in my opinion quite right, and this appeal must therefore be dismissed.

LOPES, L.J.—The county council have been treated as rateable in respect of so much of the Guildhall as is in their occupation. They claim exemption on the ground that they use the building for public purposes. There is nothing in the Statute of Elizabeth exempting any occupier from liability to the poor rate, beyond what is involved in the position that the Crown is not bound by the Act, because it is not expressly mentioned in it. Up to the time of the case of The Mersey Docks v. Cameron there was no doubt considerable laxity in dealing with these questions, but in that case it was clearly laid down by the House of Lords that public buildings are liable to be rated, provided that they are not used for Crown purposes. Down to the year 1888 I think that probably the Guildhall at Westminster was exempt, on the ground that it was used by the justices for judicial purposes and for nothing else, because at that time the administrative business of the county was done by the justices in quarter sessions assembled. In 1888 the Local Government Act was passed, which brought about a great change. The judical work of justices remained at quarter sessions, and continued to be work done by virtue of their office as justices—that is, servants of the Crown. But the administrative work of the county was transferred to the county council, a body so constituted that it might or might not consist of justices. The county council did not derive its authority from the Crown, but was elected. The result is that the exemption from rateability only applies to that portion of the building which is used for Crown purposes. So much of the building as is used for the administrative purposes of the county council is rateable.

Mr. Danckwerts argued ingeniously that the services of the justices, which had been transferred to the council, were still imperial services, and that therefore the exemption still applied to them, although they were discharged by different persons. In other words his argument comes to this, that the exemption is in respect of the services rendered, and not of the person who renders them. It is an ingenious argument, but it cannot prevail. For these reasons I am opinion that the appeal must be dismissed.

RIGBY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. The question is whether premises occupied by a county council for the purpose of performing their administrative duties are within the statute of 43 Elizabeth c. 2. It seems to be a remarkable thing to suggest that they are not. There is no doubt that for a long period prior to the decision of the House of Lords in Mersey Docks v. Cameron, erroneous opinions prevailed as to the existence of exceptions from rateability. It is also true that those earlier decisions were not expressly overruled by the House of Lords, but I am clear that not one of the cases decided prior to the House of Lords case is an authority in this case. I do not deny that there are cases in which it has been held that justices in quarter sessions assembled are representatives of the Crown, and that the premises occupied by them are exempt from rateability. But there is no case decided in which a body like the county council, using a building solely for administrative purposes connected with local government, has been held exempt. There being no previous decisions applicable, we must go back to the statute, 43 Eliz. c. 2. When the matter is so looked at, I do not see how there can be any doubt about it. In my opinion this building is clearly within the statute. There are parts of the building which are not in the exclusive occupation of either the justices or the county council. I should have thought that there would be some difficulty in saying that there was any exemption at all in respect of that part of the building, but that question is not raised in this case, and therefore I do not express any opinion as to that. But I have no doubt whatever that the county council are rateable in proportion to the extent to which they use those parts of the building. Having considered the judgments delivered in the court below, I think that they have laid down the true principle applicable to this case.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for appellants, R. Nicholson.

Solicitor for respondents, W. J. Fraser.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } Stirling, J. } Oct. 30, 31; Nov. 17, 18, 28

In re THE ROUNDWOOD COLLIERY CO.
LEE v. THE ROUNDWOOD COLLIERY CO. (a.)

Company—Voluntary winding up of company—Landlord and tenant—Distress put in before commencement of winding up—Staying proceedings—Companies Act, 1862, ss. 87, 134—Mining lease—Power of distress extending to chattels on premises other than those demised by the lease—Bills of Sale Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 31), ss. 4, 6—Bills of Sale Act (1878) Amendment Act, 1882 (45 & 46 Vict. c. 43), ss. 3, 8.

The rules laid down in the case of the compulsory winding up of a company in In re The Great Ship Co., 12 W. R. 139, 4 De G. J. & S. 63, and In re Lancashire Cotton Co., 36 W. R. 305, 35 Ch D. 656—that if an execution is issued or a distress levied before the commencement of the winding up, permission will be given to proceed to sale unless there are special reasons rendering such a course inequitable, while, in the absence of special reasons, such permission will be refused where the execution is issued or the distress levied after the commencement of the winding up—apply to the case of a voluntary winding up.

The commencement of a voluntary winding up is the time of the passing of the second or confirmatory resolution.

A power of distress in a mining lease which enables the lessor to seize chattels on premises other than those demised by the lease is a licence to take possession of personal chattels as security for a debt within section 4 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878 and, accordingly the lease must be registered as a bill of sale.

These were two motions—one on behalf of the liquidator of the company, the other on behalf of the plaintiff in a debenture-holder's action—seeking to restrain the further proceeding with two distresses levied by two landlords of land held by the company under leases from them.

Two questions were raised, the first of which applied to both distresses. The second to one only.

The first was whether the distresses ought to be restrained under the jurisdiction conferred by the Companies Act, 1862.

The second question was whether one of the distresses was invalid on the ground that it was made under a power in the lease which rendered it necessary that the lease should be registered as a bill of sale, there having in fact been no registration of the lease.

The facts were as follows:

The company was formed in 1889, and in 1890 became the assignees of a lease by Mr. Foljambe, dated the 7th of November, 1890, of a colliery and seams of coal for thirty years, at a rent of £1,600 per annum and royalties.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

By a lease dated the 20th of November, 1891, Lord Effingham demised to the company certain seams of coal adjoining those demised by the former lease at certain rents and royalties.

Under both leases rent was in arrear in September, 1896.

On the 24th of September, 1896, a general meeting of the company was held, at which a special resolution was passed that the company should be wound up voluntarily.

On the 1st of October, 1896, the writ in a debenture-holders' action was issued.

On the 12th of October two distresses were put in, one by Mr. Foljambe, the other by Lord Effingham.

On the 13th of October a general meeting of the company was held, at which the resolution passed on the 24th of September was duly confirmed, and a liquidator was appointed.

On the 15th of October the usual judgment was given in the debenture-holders' action, and the liquidator was appointed receiver and manager on behalf of the debenture-holders.

The power of distress in the lease granted by Lord Effingham, which was affected by the second question in the case, will be found fully set out in the judgment.

Buckley, Q.C., and Eustace Smith, for the liquidator.—This is not a common law power of distress, but a license to take possession: Bills of Sale Act, 1878, s. 6. An attornment clause in a mortgage is a bill of sale: In re Willis, 36 W. R. 793, 21 Q. B. D. 384. Under section 4 of the Bills of Sale Act this clause is a bill of sale. Section 6 was introduced to meet the power of distress given by attornment, and was not to affect a contractual power of distress. This power, however, is to distrain on goods which are not on the land demised, and is not a common law power of distress due to an attornment. The distress ought to be restrained on the ground that the landlords knew that the company was in liquidation. We also say that this is a proceeding which ought to be restrained by the court under the jurisdiction conferred by the Companies Act, 1862.

They also referred to Thomas v. Patent Sionite Co., 29 W. R. 349, 596, 17 Ch. D. 250; Tennent v. City of Glasgow Bank, 27 W. R. 649, 4 App. Cas. 615; Pulbrook v. Ashby, 35 W. R. 179, 56 L. J. Q. B.

Younger, for the plaintiff in the debenture-holders' motion, adopted the same arguments.

Graham Hastings, Q.C., and Upjohn, for the landlords.—We submit that there is no jurisdiction under the Companies Act, 1862, to restrain these distresses. An injunction will not be granted under section 85 of that Act on the application of the liquidator under section 138 unless the case fall within section 163. If there has been a distress before the commencement of the winding up the court cannot interfere: In re Great Ship Co., 12 W. R. 139, 4 De G. J. & S. 63; Ex parte Maclaren, In re McColla 29 W. R. 389, 16 Ch. D. 535. [STIRLING, J.—Has it ever been held that in a voluntary winding up the court may not exercise its jurisdiction under section 85?] We do not know of any case to that effect. [Buckley, Q. C., referred to Westbury v. Twigg & Co., 40 W. R. 208, [1892] 1 Q. B. 77.] Our point is that the court has no jurisdiction to stop a distress once levied. The court can put an end to an action, but where an action is finished it cannot stop a man from levying execution: In re Thurso New Gas Co., 38 W. R. 156, 42 Ch. D. 486. This is a question of a distress, and the distress is complete when the sheriff has seized the goods. Section 85 does not relate to a case where a man has got a security, but where he is not secured and is going to get a distress you may stop him. [STIRLING, J.—Is not a distress a proceeding?] We submit not. [Buckley, Q.C., referred to In re South Kensington Co-operative Stores, 29 W. R. 662, 17 Ch. D. 181.] There is no case in which a distress has been levied before the winding up has commenced and not been proceeded with. "Proceeding" in section 85 is ejusdem generis as action or suit. Our proposition is that when a man has arrived at his journey's end the court will not interfere. Sections 85 and 87 are quite different to section 163. It must be a proceeding against the company which can be enforced against its property. [STIRLING, J., referred to Re Exhall Mining Co., 4 De G. J. & S. 377, 12 W. R. Dig. 136.] Section 85 cannot alter anything which has been done before the winding-up.

As to the second point, section 6 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878, aims at securities for money lent: Pulbrook v. Ashby, and the applicants must make out that this power of distress is within this section. This is not a mere power to seize chattels, but a rent-charge: Daniel v. Stepney, 22 W. R. 662, L. R. 9, Ex. 185. The power in that case was very similar to the present one, which is at any rate good as against the lessee. We submit that this power does not come within the Bills of Sale Act at all, but at any rate it is sufficiently provided for by section 6, which is supplemental to the interpretation clause and contains an express exception of a mining lease. In any case the Bills of Sale Act does not apply to the securities of a company incorporated under the Act of 1862: In re Standard Manufacturing Co., 39 W. R. 369, [1891] 1 Ch. 627. A licence to seize goods followed by seizure constitutes a security created by the man whose goods they are, and the case is the same as if the goods had been handed over by the debtor himself if he was not a party to the seizure at the time. They also referred to Wheatley v. Silkstone Colliery Co., 33 W. R. 797, 29 Ch. D. 715; Robson v. Smith, 43 W. R. 632, [1895] 2 Ch. 118; Government Stock Investment Co. v. Manila Railway Co., 44 W. R. 166, [1895] 2 Ch. 551; Biggerstaffe v. Rowlatts Wharf, 44 W. R. 536, [1896] 2 Ch. 93; In re New City Constitutional Club, 35 W. R. 421, 34 Ch. D. 646; In re London and Devon Biscuit Co., 19 W. R. 943, L. R. 12 Eq. 190; In re Hawkins, 16 W. R. 451, 1136, L. R. 3 Ch. App. 787; In re Withernsea Brickworks Co., 29 W. R. 178, 16 Ch. D. 337; In re London Cotton Co., 14 W. R. 575, L. R. 2 Eq. 53; In re Marriage, Neave, & Co., ante, p. 42, [1896] 2 Ch. 663: Krehl v. Central Gas Co., 18 W. R. 1035, L. R. 5 Ex. 289.

Buckley, Q.C., in reply.—A distress is a proceeding within the meaning of section 85 or section 87 of the Companies Act. The point as to time is immaterial: In re Lancashire Cotton Co., 36 W. R. 305, 35 Ch. D. 656; In re Brown, Bailey, & Dixon, 30 W. R. 5, 18 Ch. D. 649. The fact that it is a voluntary winding up makes no difference. The court can always interfere in a proceeding. If a distress is a proceeding a sale under a distress is a proceeding in that distress. This has been decided in the case of an execution: In re Perkins Beach Lead Mine Co., 26 W. R. 164, 7 Ch. D. 371.

He also referred to In re General Rolling Stock Co., 20 W. R. 762, L. R. 7 Ch. App. 646; Walker v. Banagher Distillery Co., 1 Q. B. D. 129, 24 W. R. Dig. 215; Rose v. Garden Lodge Coal Co., 26 W. R. 353, 3 Q. B. D. 235; Buckley on the Companies Acts, p. 234.

Cur. adv. vult.

Nov. 28.—STIRLING, J., after stating the facts, continued: The first point, which applies to both distresses, is that the court ought to restrain both under the jurisdiction which it is said is conferred by the Companies Act, 1862. That Act contains no provisions as to distress expressly applicable where the winding up is purely voluntary, but section 138 enables the liquidator in a voluntary winding up to apply to the court to exercise in respect of any matter all or any of the powers which the court might exercise if the company were being wound up compulsorily; and it is asserted on the one hand and denied on the other that in the case of a compulsory winding up the court has power to restrain further proceedings under a distress levied or execution issued at the commencement of a winding up, but not completed by sale. Undoubtedly in one of the earliest cases on the subject, In re Great Ship Co., 12 W. R. 139, 4 De G. J. & S. 63, great doubt was expressed as to the existence of the jurisdiction by both or one of the learned judges who there constituted the Court of Appeal. It is said on behalf of the landlords that it has never yet been decided that the jurisdiction exists; while on behalf of the applicants the contention is that, although there may be no express authority on the point the course of subsequent decisions as shown by such cases as In re Exhall Mining Co.; In re Perkins Beach Co.; In re Artistic Colour Printing Co., 28 W. R. 943, 14 Ch. D. 502; In re South Kensington Stores; and In re Lancashire Cotton Co., and others, proves that the doubts expressed as to the existence of the jurisdiction in In re Great Ship Co. had been removed. These last-mentioned cases do appear to me, as at present advised, to bear out the contention of the applicants. I do not, however, express a final opinion on the matter, for I have come to the same conclusion as the learned judges who decided In re Great Ship Co., that the jurisdiction, if it exists, ought not to be exercised in the present case. [His lordship read the judgment of TURNER, L.J., in that case, and continued:] The result I understand to be that a creditor who has issued execution or a landlord who has levied distress before the commencement of the winding up will be allowed to proceed to sale unless there is established the existence of special reasons making it inequitable that he should be permitted so to do. On the other hand, the case of In re Lancashire Cotton Co., shows that a creditor who does not issue execution or a landlord who does not levy a distress until after the commencement of the winding up will not be allowed to proceed unless there are special reasons which render such a course inequitable. In applying these rules to applications made in a voluntary winding up, the first enquiry is, What is the commencement of a voluntary winding up? That was long ago settled to be the time of the passing of the second or confirmatory resolution where the winding up is resolved upon by special resolution: Weston's case, 17 W. R. 510; L. R. 4 Ch. App. 42. It follows that in the present case these distresses had been put in force at the commencement of the winding up, and consequently the discretion of the court is to be exercised according to the rules laid down in In re Great Ship Co. The distresses, therefore, ought to be allowed to proceed unless there are special reasons which render it inequitable that they should be permitted so to do.

On what special grounds then is the present application based? It is remarkable that there is not in the affidavits filed in the case any statement or even suggestion of any fact (except the passing of the first resolution on the 24th of September) which would render it inequitable to permit the landlords to proceed. At the bar, attention was called to the date of the notice of distress—viz., the 13th of October; it is said that the usual practice is to give notice of the distress immediately it is levied, and I am asked to draw the inference that the landlords were proceeding with such haste as to indicate a consciousness on their part that speed was necessary in order to prevent the distresses from being defeated. In my opinion, if such a case was to be made, it ought to have been raised on the affidavits in such a way as to give those who were actually engaged in levying the distress an opportunity of explaining the departure from the ordinary practice. Further, it seems to me that the inference sought to be drawn from the fact is scarcely warranted. Notice is given because the statute (2 Will. & M., sess. 1, c. 5, s. 2) makes it essential to the exercise of the right of sale, but it is well settled (see Trent v. Hunt, 1 W. R. 481, 9 Ex. 14) that the absence of notice does not affect the validity of the distress, but merely prevents the landlord from selling until the expiration of a specified time—viz., five days after such notice is given. If notice had been given on the 12th of October the landlords would have been able to sell after the 17th of October; as it was not given until the 13th of October they were unable to sell until after the 18th of October. I confess that I do not see that it is right under these circumstances to draw any inference seriously unfavourable to the landlords.

It was further contended that the rights of the general creditors had intervened at the date when the distresses were levied, and consequently that they ought not to be allowed to proceed, and reliance was placed on the analogy offered by the case of Tennent v. City of Glasgow Bank, where it was held that after a bank had stopped payment and its insolvency had been well known, it was too late for a shareholder to repudiate shares which he had been induced to take by misrepresentation; and Lord Cairns went so far as to say that he would "be disposed in any case to hesitate before admitting that, after a company has become insolvent and stopped payment, whether a winding-up has commenced or not, a rescission of a contract to take shares could be permitted as against creditors." I may point out that in the present case, although it may be taken that the company was insolvent on the 12th of October, yet the affidavit of the liquidator shows that it was still carrying on business. He says: "Up to Monday, the 12th inst., the collieries of the defendant company were in full working order." And subsequently he says that the agent of the landlord who levied the distress had stopped all work at the collieries. Admitting, however, the existence of the rule laid down in Tennent v. City of Glasgow Bank, still, the case there considered was one in which a shareholder was seeking to escape liability to any creditor, and it appears to me that different considerations apply to the case of a contract between two classes of creditors, as, for example, between a landlord levying a distress and the general body of creditors. I think that it would be inconsistent with the reasoning of Turner, L.J., in In re Great Ship Co., to apply the rule laid down by Lord Cairns to such a case. To defeat the distress, it should be made out that it is for some reason inequitable to allow it to proceed; here it is not even shown that the distraining landlords knew of the passing of the resolution of the 24th of September, even if such knowledge would be sufficient to raise an equity against them. There is no authority for such a proposition, and it hardly seems consistent with the ratio decidendi in Ex parte McLaren, where it was held that a non-assenting creditor of a compounding debtor under section 126 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1869, against whom no equity could be raised by reason of his personal conduct, could acquire a valid security for his debt by levying execution on the debtor's goods at any time before the registration of an extraordinary resolution accepting the composition, even although such creditor had been present (but silent) at the meeting when the resolution was passed.

It may, perhaps, be thought that, if in such a case as the present the court refuses to interfere, the passing of the first resolution to wind up will operate as an invitation to unpaid judgment creditors and landlords to use their legal remedies, and that the distribution of the assets of the company pari passu among the creditors in accordance with section 133 will thus be interfered with. It may be that one of the objects of section 84 of the Act of 1862, by which the time of the presentation of a petition is fixed as the commencement of a winding up by the court, was to prevent such a result. Still the fact remains that the Legislature did not see fit to make a voluntary winding up commence at the passing of the first resolution; and in reality, as it seems to me, I am asked to fix the commencement, so far as actions, suits, and other legal proceedings are concerned, at another date than that determined by the Act of Parliament. In my judgment I ought not to do that; and consequently I think that the motion fails so far as it is based on section 138 of the Companies Act, 1862.

The second point relates to the validity of the distress put in by Lord Effingham only. It is said that this distress was made under a power which renders it necessary that the lease granted by Lord Effingham should be registered as a bill of sale under the Bills of Sale Acts, 1878 and 1882. The lease has not been so registered, and it was not disputed before me that if it ought to be so registered the distress was invalid.

The lease in question is a demise of a bed or seam of coal under certain specified closes for thirty years from the 1st of July, 1891, at the half-yearly rent of £30 for every acre in extent being one foot in thickness, and so in proportion for any greater or less extent than an acre, and for every greater or less thickness than one foot gotten during the previous half-year, so that a minimum rent of £45 half-yearly shall be paid during the first year, and increasing minimum rents during the second and succeeding years of the term. The lease contains a covenant on the part of the lessees to pay the rents reserved; and also a power in the following terms: "Provided always, and it is hereby agreed and declared that if and whenever any of the rents hereinbefore reserved, or any part thereof shall be in arrear for twenty-one days, whether the same shall have been legally demanded or not, the lessor, his heirs or assigns, may enter and seize, distrain, sell, and dispose of in the same manner as landlords may for rent in arrear, any engines, machinery, implements, tools, chattels, or effects then belonging to the lessees or their assigns in or about any of the premises hereby demised, or any adjoining or neighbouring colleries, and out of the moneys arising from the sale of any distress or distresses so levied, may satisfy and pay or retain all arrears of rent, and the expenses incident to any such proceedings rendering the overplus (if any) unto the lessees or assigns." The chattels taken under the distress levied by Lord Effingham were not found on the premises demised by this lease, but on adjoining lands demised by Mr. Foljambe.

The question turns on the meaning of sections 4 and 6 of the Bills of Sale Act, 1878. [His lordship read the sections, and continued:] These sections have to a certain extent been the subject of judicial decision. The words "power of attorney, authorities, or licenses to take possession of personal chattels as security for any debt" occur in the Bills of Sale Act, 1854; no such clause as section 6 is found in that Act, and it was decided by the Court of Appeal in In re Stockton Iron Furnace Co., 27 W. R. 433, 10 Ch. D. 335, that an ordinary clause in a mortgage whereby the mortgagors attorned and became tenants to the mortgagees of the mortgaged property at a yearly rent was not an authority or license to take possession of personal chattels within the meaning of the Act of 1854; the ground of decision being as I understand that that Act was not intended to interfere with the creation of tenancies, or the rights of landlords, even where the tenancy was created for the purpose of securing a debt, so long as the tenancy was a real one not a mere fiction. As was pointed out in Ex parte Jackson, 29 W. R. 253, 14 Ch. D. 725, section 6 of the Act of 1878 was introduced in order to alter the law as regards tenancies created by way of security for debts; and accordingly it has been held by the Court of Appeal in Ex parte Kennedy, 36 W. R. 793, 21 Q. B. D. 384, and Green v. Marsh, 40 W. R. 449, [1892] 2 Q. B. 330, that attornments, instruments, and agreements whereby a power of distress is given or agreed to be given (whether expressly or by operation of law) by way of security for a present or future debt or advance, now fall (in general) within the scope of the Bills of Sale Acts. It is to be observed, however, that mining leases are excepted from the operation of section 6 of the Act of 1878, while (as is pointed out by Lindley, L.J.: Ex parte Kennedy, 21 Q. B. D. at page 394) there is nothing either in that section or any other section of the Bills of Sale Acts which applies to ordinary leases (that is, leases not created as securities for debts or advances) or affects the landlord's power of distraining under such leases. It has, however, been held in Pulbrook v. Ashby that a power of distress introduced into a lease for the purpose of securing to the lessor a debt other than rent is a license to take possession of personal chattels as security for a debt within the meaning of section 4 of the Act of 1878. [His lordship read the section, and continued:] The question is whether the power of distress in the present case is not such a license.

Now, in the first place, though mining leases are excepted from the operation of section 6 of the Act of 1878, there is nothing to except them from the operation of section 4. Again, the power in question is entirely different from the power of distress which is ordinarily incident to the relationship of landlord and tenant. On the one hand it is limited to goods of the lessee; on the other it extends to those goods though not found on the demised property but on adjoining or neighbouring collieries. The object of extending the power to such last-mentioned goods is obviously to provide additional security to the lessor for the rents reserved by the lease; and as those rents do not issue out of the adjoining or neighbouring collieries, I think that they constitute as regards the goods there found, a debt and nothing more.

The case seems to me to be on all fours with that of a lessor granting an ordinary lease of a house, but reserving to himself a power to distrain on goods of the lessee found in another house not comprised in the lease. I think such a power would be a license to take possession of personal chattels as security for a debt.

In my judgment, therefore, the lease is as regards the goods seized, a bill of sale; and the distress ought to be restrained.

Solicitors, J. & R. Gole; Bell, Brodrick, & Gray, for Parker, Rhodes, & Co.; Radford & Frankland, for Pashley & Hodgkinson.

Chan. Div. } Romer, J. } Dec. 18.

SIMPSON v. HUGHES. (a.)

Contract—Vendor and purchaser—Specific performance—Letters—Inquiry as to time for completion—Open term.

A party (the purchaser) to a contract for the sale of real estate, in a letter accepting the vendor's offer added the words, "I should like to know from what time Mr. Hughes (the vendor) wishes the purchase to date."

Held, on the letter as a whole, that these words were merely a courteous way of asking the vendor the time at which he wished to complete, and in no way added a fresh term, or prevented the agreement from forming a binding contract.

Trial of action.

This was an action for specific performance in which Mr. William F. Simpson was the plaintiff and Mr. Hugh R. Hughes and Professor George F. Armstrong were the defendants.

Another action, brought by Armstrong against Hughes, was heard at the same time; but the case only calls for a report on one point.

The facts were as follows:—

The defendant Hughes was the owner of certain freehold hereditaments known as the Wray estate, situate at Grasmere, in the county of Westmoreland, consisting of a house and garden in the occupation of the plaintiff, about sixteen acres of pasture land and three or four acres of wood.

In August, 1895, the plaintiff made an offer to Charlton, the agent of the defendant Hughes, for the purchase of the Wray estate for the sum of £1,500, which offer was refused on the 23rd of August, 1895.

On the 7th of November Charlton, the agent of Hughes, wrote to the plaintiff a letter containing the following sentence: "Mr. Hughes has received an offer for the Wray estate of £1,700, which he has refused. He will take £2,000. Are you disposed to purchase at that price?"

The plaintiff replied on the 8th of November, 1895: "I had not wished to give so much, but have decided to accept Mr. Hughes's offer, and will give the £2,000 he asks for the freehold of the Wray property. I should like to know from what time Mr. Hughes wishes the purchase to date."

The plaintiff submitted that this letter constituted a binding contract.

Armstrong had also been negotiating for a sale of the same property, and claimed that a contract which he alleged that he had made with Hughes was entitled to priority over the plaintiff's contract.

Armstrong's action was dismissed.

Eve, Q.C., and Fellows, for the plaintiff.—The letter of the 8th of November was a formal acceptance of the offer. After the letter the parties were at one, and there was a binding contract.

Neville, Q.C., and Leigh Clare, for the defendant Armstrong.—The alleged contract leaves the time for completion unsettled. When nothing is said about completion, the court may fix a term; but in this case the parties left the time for completion to be fixed afterwards.

They referred to May v. Thomson, 20 Ch. D. 705, 31 W. R. Dig. 187.

Oswald, Q.C., and G. P. Lawrence, for the defendant Hughes.

ROMER, J.—I conclude that the contract is binding on the defendant Hughes. The letter of the 8th of November was a complete acceptance, and after it there was a binding contract. The only question that it is necessary to discuss is whether the words in the letter of the 8th of November, "I should like to know from what time Mr. Hughes wishes the purchase to date," were intended to create a fresh term. Looking at the letter as a whole, it is not, in my opinion, intended to make the time of completion a fresh term or to leave the matter open to subsequent negotiations. The letter is only a courteous way of asking the vendor when he desired to complete. The plaintiff Simpson is entitled to specific performance. As to Professor Armstrong he might or might not have had a binding contract with Hughes; but in any case his rights are subject to those of Simpson.

Solicitors, Hyde, Tandy, & Mahon; Quayle & Ouvry; Meredith, Roberts, & Mills.

(a.) Reported by J. ARTHUR PRICE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q. B. Div. (Wright and Bruce, JJ.) } Jan. 15.

MORRISS v. HOWDEN. (a.)

Ship—Merchant shipping—Passage broker—Contract ticket—Merchant Shipping Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. 60), ss. 320, 341, 342.

Section 341 (1) of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, which defines a passage broker to be a "person who sells or lets, or agrees to sell or let, or is in anywise concerned in the sale or letting of steerage passages in any ship proceeding from the British Islands to any place out of Europe not within the Mediterranean Sea," refers to a sale or letting of a passage commencing at a definite time for a specified voyage in a named ship.

Section 320, which enacts that "if any person . . . receives money from any person for or in respect of a passage as a steerage passenger in any ship . . . proceeding from the British Islands to any port out of Europe and not within the Mediterranean Sea, he shall give to the person paying the same a contract ticket . . . ," refers to a receipt of money paid for a specified passage commencing at a fixed time in a named ship.

A person not a duly qualified passage broker within section 342 contracted for the sum of £22 to send a lad from Liverpool to Canada and to place him as pupil upon a farm in Ontario. He procured from a properly qualified passage broker a steerage passage in a steamship from Liverpool to Quebec together with a contract ticket. He received no commission upon the sale of the ticket, nor did he make any direct profit out of it.

Held, that neither the original contract nor the contract ticket was a sale or letting of a passage within the meaning of section 341 so as to make the person liable to a penalty under section 342.

Held, also, that in procuring the contract ticket the person was not "concerned in the sale or letting of a passage" within section 341.

Held, also, that the person was not guilty of an offence under section 320.

Case stated by a police magistrate.

Two informations were laid against the respondent, the one, under section 342 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894, for unlawfully acting as a passage broker without being duly licensed, and the other, under section 320 of the same Act for receiving money for or in respect of a passage without giving a contract ticket.

Section 342 enacts that a person shall not act, directly or indirectly, as a passage broker unless he complies with certain conditions, as to giving security and holding a licence, therein mentioned, and provides a penalty.

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The respondent was the Secretary of the Anglo-Canadian Farm Pupil Association, which was an association for placing farm pupils in Canada. He was not qualified to act as a passage broker. He got into communication with a lad named E. W. Craven, and on the 6th of May, 1896, forwarded to him a list of rates, which was as follows:

"1st, including saloon passage and 1st class rail fare £27
2nd, including saloon passage and 2nd class rail fare £25
3rd, including intermediate passage and 2nd class rail fare £22
4th, including steerage passage and 2nd class rail fare £18
These rates include steamship fares from Liverpool and also rail fares to your destination in Ontario, with our charges for placing and supervision of the pupil for one year."

E. W. Craven selected the 3rd on the list, and his father, James Craven, paid the £22, for which a receipt was given. In the receipt the sum was stated as being "a premium for which we undertake to place his son, E. W. Craven, who is now seventeen years of age, as a farm pupil in Western Ontario, Canada." In the same document were the words: "It is distinctly understood that the above-named sum includes 2nd class steamship passage from Liverpool to Quebec and 2nd class rail to Thamesville."

A passenger's contract ticket for a passage on board the steamship Mongolia, sailing on the 21st of May, was forwarded to E. W. Craven. It was obtained by the respondent from Messrs. Thomas Cook & Sons through their agent, Mr. H. C. Robinson.

The contract ticket was for an intermediate passage, and the sum named upon it, £8 18s. 11d., was paid by the respondent to Messrs. Cook & Sons.

Messrs. Cook & Sons were duly authorized to act as passage brokers.

The association represented by the respondent made a profit out of the £22, but no profit was made directly over the steamship fare, nor did the association receive any commission from the shipowners.

The magistrate found that the passage secured for E. W. Craven was a steerage passage within the meaning of sections 268 and 341 of the Act. But he dismissed both informations on the grounds, respectively, that the respondent had not acted as a passage broker within the meaning of section 342, and that he had given to E. W. Craven a contract ticket sufficient to satisfy section 320.

Bonsey, for the appellant.

The respondent was not represented.

Cur. adv. vult.

BRUCE, J.—The principal question in this case is whether the respondent Howden acted, directly or indirectly, as a passage broker within the meaning of section 342 of the Merchant Shipping Act, 1894. The meaning of "passage broker" is to be ascertained by reference to section 342. [His lordship read the section.] Looking at the other sections of the statute bearing upon this matter, and to the forms contained in the schedule to the Act relating to passage brokers and to steerage passengers, I think that the act referred to means a selling or letting in a named ship of a passage to commence at a definite time for a specified voyage. I am, therefore, of opinion that the agreement entered into on the 12th of May, of which the written receipt of that date signed by the respondent is evidence, was not an agreement for selling or letting a passage within the meaning of section 341. The agreement entered into by the respondent was, I think, an agreement to procure Craven a passage at some convenient time in some fitting ship from Liverpool to Quebec, but it was not a selling or letting, or an agreement to sell or let a passage at a definite time in a named ship.

And although the passage ultimately obtained was a steerage passage, I am not at all sure that there is anything in the letter of the 6th of May, or in the receipt of the 12th of May, to show that the "intermediate" passage, or the second-class steamship passage in those documents referred to, was a steerage passage within the meaning of section 341. The contract ticket forwarded to E. W. Craven was made out in due form and signed by Mr. Robinson, the authorized agent of Messrs. Cook & Son, who were duly qualified as passage brokers. That circumstance conferred upon Craven all the advantages which the Merchant Shipping Act has provided for the security of steerage passengers. But it is said that this contract ticket was a letting or selling of a steerage passage in a ship within section 341, and that the respondent was concerned in the selling or letting. No doubt he procured the ticket and paid £8 18s. 11d. for it out of the £22 mentioned on the receipt of the 12th of May, but the respondent made no profit out of the ticket, and received no commission from the shipowners or from the passage brokers. I think it must be conceded that a person who as a mere act of friendship paid for and procured a passenger ticket for another, could not be said to be concerned in the contract of sale or letting contained in the passenger ticket. So far as the act of the respondent towards Craven was concerned, it seems to me that what he did was to purchase as agent for Craven a ticket for a passage for E. W. Craven. To be concerned in a sale or letting means, I think, to have a part or share in the sale or letting, to have something to do with the sale or letting, to have some interest in the transaction, or in some way to derive some profit or advantage from it. In Todd v. Robinson, 14 Q. B. D. 739, 33 W. R. Dig. 127, the Court of Appeal seems to have thought that a person might be interested in a contract and yet not concerned in it. In the present case the respondent seems to have been a passive agent paying on behalf of Craven for the ticket, and forwarding it to him. If the father, James Craven, had purchased of Messrs. Cook & Son through their authorized agent, a ticket for his son, E. W. Craven, he would not, I think, have been guilty of any breach of the provisions of section 341, and as regards the act of the purchaser of the ticket, I cannot see upon what principle it is possible to distinguish between a purchase of a ticket by a father for a son, and the purchase made by the respondent.

It is said that the respondent, or those on whose behalf he acted, made a profit out of the £22. But we are dealing only with the £8 18s. 11d. paid for the passage-money, and out of that there was no profit.

It seems to me it would be straining the language of section 341 to hold that the respondent was concerned in the sale or letting of the passage. I therefore think that the learned magistrate was right in refusing to convict him of an offence under section 342.

I also think that the magistrate was right in refusing to convict under section 320. The respondent did give to Craven a contract ticket duly signed on behalf of the owners of the ship. But, further, I am not satisfied that he received money from Craven for or in respect of a passage in any sense within the meaning of section 320. It seems to me to be clear that this section must mean a receipt of money paid for a specified passage commencing at a fixed time in a named ship. The £22 received by the respondent was not paid to him in respect of a passage in any named ship, and it would have been impossible for the respondent at the time he received the £22 to have procured a contract ticket such as is mentioned in section 320.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the appellant, Solicitor for the Board of Trade.

Q. B. Div.
(Wills and Wright, JJ.) Dec. 17.

THE OVERSEERS OF THE PARISH OF LLANRHAIADR-YN-MOCHNANT AND THE ASSESSMENT COMMITTEE OF THE LLANFYLLIN UNION (Appellants) v. THE DEAN AND CHAPTER OF ST. ASAPH (Respondents). (a.)

Tithe — Rating — Deduction — Rectory — Liability to repair chancel.

In ascertaining the rateable value of a tithe rent-charge issuing from a rectory the tithe owner is not entitled to a deduction for money expended in repairs to the chancel of the parish church.

Case stated by magistrates sitting at quarter sessions upon an appeal from the decision of the assessment committee of the Llanfyllin union.

The respondents, under an Act of 29 & 30 Car. 2, acquired the rectory of Llanrhaiadr-yn-Mochnant.

By the terms of the Act the rents and profits of the rectory were appropriated to the special purpose of repairing the Cathedral Church of St. Asaph, and to the better maintenance of the choir.

Out of the proceeds of the rectory the respondents had from time to time expended sums on the repair of the chancel of the parish church of Llanrhaiadr.

In fixing the rateable value of the tithe rent-charge issuing from the rectory the magistrates allowed a deduction, 1 per cent. of the gross value, in respect of these repairs.

Marshall, Q.C. (Ellis J. Griffiths with him), for the appellants.—The sum allowed for the expenses of repairing the chancel is not a proper deduction. At common law the obligation to repair the chancel imposed on the rector is a personal liability, and is not a charge upon the tithe rent-charge. But here the tithe rent-charge was appropriated by Act of Parliament to a special purpose. The respondent, therefore, had no power to apply any part of it to the purpose of repairing the chancel.

Stephenson Moore, for the respondents. — The liability to repair the chancel stands on the same footing as ecclesiastical dues, which have been held to be a proper deduction: R. v. Joddrell, 1 B. & Ad. 403; R. v. Capel, 12 A. & E. 382.

WILLS, J.—This deduction cannot be allowed. In the cases cited by the respondents it was not stated what was the nature of the ecclesiastical dues; but in R. v. Joddrell the ratio decidendi was that the profits of the rectory was the only fund out of which the dues could be paid. The dues were a charge upon the rectory; but the liability in the present case to repair the chancel is a personal liability imposed upon the rector by virtue of his holding the office, and the liability would still subsist were there no funds issuing from the rectory at all.

WRIGHT, J., concurred.

Solicitors for the appellants, Robbins & Co., for Pughe & Jones, Llanfyllin.

Solicitor for the respondents, Peterson.

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Q. B. Div.
(Wills and Wright, JJ.) Dec. 7.

THORPE v. PRIESTNALL. (a.)

Sunday trading—Prosecution—Consent of chief constable —Institution of proceedings—Lord's Day Observance Act, 1676 (29 Car. 2, c. 7), s. 1—Amendment Act, 1871 (34 & 35 Vict. c. 87), s. 1.

The Lord's Day Observance Amendment Act, 1871, s. 1, provides that no prosecution shall be instituted under the Lord's Day Observance Act, 1676, except by or with the consent in writing of the chief officer of police of the district or of certain other persons.

Held, that the consent in writing must be given before the laying of the information.

Case stated by the stipendiary magistrate of Sheffield.

An information was laid against the appellant, charging him with doing work of his ordinary calling upon a Sunday contrary to the Lord's Day Observance Act, 1676, s. 1.

The section enacts that "no tradesman, artificer, workman, labourer, or other person whatsoever shall do or exercise any worldly labour, business, or work of their ordinary calling upon the Lord's Day or any part thereof (works of necessity and charity only excepted)."

Section 4 provides that no person shall be proceeded against for any offence under the Act, except within ten days after the offence was committed.

It was proved that the appellant was a barber, and that on Sunday, the 5th of July, he shaved customers between the hours of 10.30 a.m. and 12.30 p.m., and that at some time between the same hours he sold a newspaper.

The stipendiary magistrate found that the appellant was exercising his ordinary calling, and convicted him of the offence.

The Lord's Day Observance Amendment Act, 1871, s. 1, enacted that no prosecution or other proceeding shall be "instituted" against any person under the principal Act, "except by or with the consent in writing of the chief officer of police of the police district in which the offence is committed," or with the consent in writing of certain other persons. Before the information was laid the consent of the chief constable of the district was asked, and he gave his consent verbally. The information was laid on the 6th of July, and on the same day a summons was granted.

The written consent of the chief constable was not secured till the following day, but it was dated back to the 6th of July. The service of the summons upon the appellant was subsequent to the written consent.

Brook Little, for the appellant.—The prosecution was not instituted with the written consent of the chief constable as required by the Act of 1871. The consent ought to have been obtained before the information was laid. [Counsel contended also that the appellant was not "a tradesman, artificer, labourer, workman, or other person" within the meaning of the Act of 1676.]

(a.) Reported by C. G. WILBRAHAM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Danckwerts, for the respondent.—The consent was obtained in time because it was obtained before the summons was served. The Act used the word "instituted" and not "commenced." The word "instituted" referred to a stage later than that indicated by the word "commenced," and implied that the prosecution or proceeding had been established in the sense that process had been served on the person proceeded against. Proceedings were not even "commenced" until service of process: Ditcher v. Denison, 6 W. R. 342, 11 Moore P. C. 324, and Yates v. Reg., 33 W. R. 482, 14 Q. B. D. at p. 661.

WILLS, J.—The appeal must succeed. Looking at the Act of 1871 it is clear that the institution of proceedings is an act which can be done by the chief constable himself. All he can do is to lay the information. He cannot issue the summons or serve it. Therefore the subject-matter to which the Act refers when it directs that the institution of a prosecution shall be made with the written consent of the chief constable is the laying of the information.

WRIGHT, J., concurred.

Solicitors for the appellant, Campion & Simmons, for A M. Wilson, Sheffield.

Solicitors for the respondent, Aldous & Walford.

IN BANKRUPTCY.

Q. B. Div. (Vaughan Williams, J.) — Nov. 16.

WILD v. SOUTHWOOD. (a.)

Bankruptcy—Assets—Relation back of trustee's title—Protected transaction—Charging order—Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (46 & 47 Vict. c. 52), ss. 44, 45, 46, 49—Partnership Act, 1890 (53 & 54 Vict. c. 39), s. 23.

A charging order under section 23 of the Partnership Act, 1890, being a proceeding in invitum, is not a "contract, dealing, or transaction" protected under section 49 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883 (compare Courage v. O'Shea, 43 W. R. 232, [1895] 1 Ch. 325).

Where the proceeds of an execution have been ordered into court, the creditor cannot be held to have completed his execution by seizure and sale within the meaning of section 45 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883.

Summons in Queen's Bench Chambers referred by Day, J., to Vaughan Williams, J.

The facts were as follow: Upon the 20th of April, 1895, the plaintiff Wild obtained a judgment against Southwood for £125 and costs. Upon the same day day he took out a summons under section 23 of the Partnership Act, 1890, for a charging order on the interest of the defendant in the firm of Southwood Brothers Lloyd & Jones, and obtained such order and the appointment of a receiver of such interest upon the 27th of April. Upon the 23rd of May the plaintiff took out a summons to enforce the charging order by sale. Southwood's partners appeared upon the hearing of the summons and tendered the amount due to avoid a sale, but the judge being informed that a bankruptcy petition had been presented against Southwood upon the 22nd of May, ordered his partners to pay the money into court instead of to Wild. A receiving order was made against Southwood on the 15th of June, the date of the act of bankruptcy relied upon being the 17th of April. Wild then took out the present summons for payment of the money out of court, which, being opposed by the trustee in the bankruptcy, was referred by Day, J., to Vaughan Williams, J.

H. Terrell, for Wild.—The creditor in this case is entitled to retain the benefit of his execution because he has completed it either by "seizure and sale" or "by the appointment of a receiver" within the meaning of section 45 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883. The payment of the money into court was equivalent to completion of the execution by seizure and sale, and that money never was the debtor's and cannot be claimed by his trustee.

Hansell, for the trustee in Southwood's bankruptcy.—The money in court is part of the bankrupt's property divisible among his creditors; it has been obtained subsequently to the act of bankruptcy by means of a charging order which has been held not to be "a contract, dealing, or transaction" protected under section 49 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883: Courage v. O'Shea, 43 W. R. 232, [1895] 1 Ch. 325. Secondly, the charging order was not a security because it was obtained after the act of bankruptcy and does not come within the definition in section 168 "mortgage charge or lien on the property of the bankrupt," since by relation back all the property of the bankrupt vested in the trustee before the charging order was obtained. Further, payment into court is not equivalent to completion by seizure and sale: Butler v. Wearing, 17 Q. B. D. 182, 34 W. R. Dig. 17.

VAUGHAN WILLIAMS, J.—I am of opinion that I ought not to order the payment of this money out of court to the plaintiff. The dates in the case are agreed; there was an act of bankruptcy upon the 17th of April, 1895, and all these orders are subsequent to that act of bankruptcy. The question remains what are the rights of the execution creditor.

I will first deal with the rights of the execution creditor irrespective of the protective sections, but under section 45, which I consider restrictive. His right is to seize the goods or property of the debtor but he has no rights against what is not the property of the debtor. At the date of the first step in obtaining this execution, was the interest in the partnership the property of the debtor or not? To my mind it is plain that on the 20th of April, when the summons for this charging order was taken out the property in the interest in the partnership had ceased to be the property of the debtor, and had, by the event which has occurred, become the property of the trustee.

This law, which makes the trustee's title relate back to a time antecedent to events which have taken place before the making of the receiving order operates no doubt very hardly in many cases, and therefore the Acts of Parliament have contained protective sections in relief of persons affected by the stringency of this law. Apart from such sections it is clear that this execution cannot hold good against the trustee.

In the present Act of Parliament the protective section is section 49, and upon that the plaintiff cannot rely. The case of Courage v. O'Shea is a distinct decision that the obtaining of a charging order under section 14 of the Judgments Act, 1838, is "a transaction" within section 49 of the Bankruptcy Act, 1883. I do not consider that the fact that the order is under section 23 of the Partnership Act, 1890, makes any difference, for it is a proceeding "invitum," and cannot be called "a transaction."

(a.) Reported by P. M. FRANCKE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

There remains the argument that this money is not, and never was, part of the property of the bankrupt. I don't agree to that at all; it seems to me that this money is just as much the proceeds of the sale of part of the debtor's property as if it were the proceeds of the actual sale of tangible goods forming part of the property of the debtor.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Wild & Wild.

Solicitors for the trustee in the bankruptcy, Field, Roscoe, & Co.

Privy Council.

(On Appeal from the Supreme Court of Trinidad and Tobago.)

July 28, 1896.

TRINIDAD ASPHALTE CO. v. CORYAT. (a.)

Vendor and purchaser—Purchaser with notice—Recitals—Estoppel.

The plaintiff obtained a conveyance to himself of the legal estate in certain land, with express notice that the defendants were transferees of D.'s interest therein. The grant of D.'s interest to the defendants' predecessor in title contained an erroneous recital of D.'s earlier title.

Held, that the defendants were not precluded from showing what interest really passed under D.'s grant, even if it was contrary to the recitals.

This was an appeal by the defendants in the action, the Trinidad Asphalte Co., against a decision of the Supreme Court of Trinidad and Tobago.

The facts are given in their lordships' judgment.

Haldane, Q.C., G. Lawrence, and H. F. Previté, for the appellants.

Crackanthorpe, Q.C., and Abraham, for the respondent.

The judgment of their lordships (Lord WATSON, Lord HOBHOUSE, Sir RICHARD COUCH) was delivered by Lord HOBHOUSE. — The facts material for the decision of this case may be stated in a short compass. Nicola Dernier was grantee under the Crown of the land in dispute. One Alexis built a house on it, having acquired from Nicola a sufficient interest for that purpose. In the year 1881 Dulcinore Victor contracted with Alexis and Nicola for the purchase of the land, and she paid for it, and entered into possession, but without any conveyance. Nicola died in 1885. In 1888 Dulcinore agreed to sell the land to McCarthy for thirty dollars, and for that purpose executed a conveyance which was registered. Marie Dernier, a sister of Nicola, who had lived with him, joined in the conveyance, presumably with the object of passing the legal estate. She, however, was not Nicola's heir. McCarthy took possession, and his title has passed to the defendants, the Asphalte Co. During these transactions the land was of very small value: but the development of the Pitch Lake which it adjoins has increased its value an hundredfold or so.

In the year 1892 the plaintiff Coryat obtained a conveyance from the heir of Nicola. The plaintiff now sues for possession. The defendants claim to be equitable owners in fee, and demand that the plaintiff shall convey the legal estate to them, on the ground that he had notice of their title when he bought the legal estate. Nathan, J., at the trial, and afterwards the Court of Appeal, have decided in favour of the plaintiff. The defendants are now appealing against the decree of the Supreme Court.

The plaintiff's counsel at this bar have disputed the acquisition of an equitable estate in the property by Dulcinore. It seems to have been hardly, if at all, discussed in the court below. At the trial Nathan, J., spoke of it as apparently true, and did not hint that the reality differed from the appearance. On appeal, the learned judges, without intimating any doubt, simply state the fact, and conduct elaborate legal discussions on that basis. Mr. Crackanthorpe has argued that there was no evidence on which the court could found such a conclusion, but it appears to their lordships that the evidence is quite sufficient for the purpose.

The case really made by the plaintiff below was that he is a purchaser for value without notice, and that his legal title overrides the equitable interest acquired by the defendants. The argument of his counsel at the trial, so far as reported in the judge's notes, and the judgments in his favour, all turn on the absence of notice to him.

The registered deed of conveyance to McCarthy is in the following terms:—

"Conveyance.

"This deed made this 25th day of January in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty-eight between Marie Accent Damien (sic.) of the ward of La Brea in the Island of Trinidad spinster of the first part, Dulcimore Victor also of the ward of La Brea aforesaid laundress of the second part, and John William McCarthy manager of the Pitch Works at La Brea aforesaid of the third part. Whereas the said Dulcimore (sic.) Victor some time in the year one thousand eight hundred and eighty-one purchased from the said Marie Accent Damien the hereditaments hereinafter granted and was thereupon let into possession of the same but no deed of convey ance was ever executed by the said Marie Accent Damien. And whereas the said John William McCarthy has lately contracted and agreed with the said Dulcimore Victor for the purchase of the said hereditament at the price of thirty dollars. And whereas the said Marie Accent Damien has consented to be made a party to these presents for the purposes hereinafter expressed. Now this deed witnesseth that in pursuance of the said agreement and in consideration of the sum of thirty dollars as purchase-money to the said Dulcimore Victor paid by the said John William McCarthy on or before the execution of these presents the receipt whereof the said Dulcimore Victor hereby acknowledges the said Marie Accent Damien as beneficial owner at the request and by the direction of the said Dulcimore Victor hereby conveys and the said Dulcimore Victor hereby conveys and confirms unto the said John William McCarthy all and singular that certain piece or parcel of land situate in the ward of La Brea aforesaid measuring seventy-five feet on the northern side thereof seventy-five feet on the southern side thereof and forty feet in width and bounded on the north by lands now or formerly of one Henry Angeas on the south and west by lands of the said Marie Accent Damien and on the east by the Pitch Lake-road. To hold the same unto and to the use of the said John William McCarthy in fee simple.

"In witness whereof the said parties hereto have hereunto set their hands the day and year first herein above written.

"MARIE A. DEMIER (sic.).
"DULCIMORE × VICTOR
"Her mark."

(a.) Reported by C. H. GRAFTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

This is on the face of it a very careless composition. The names are misstated. Marie is made to convey as "beneficial owner," though it is stated that she had sold to Dulcinore in the year 1881, and though it is Dulcinore and not Marie who is the contracting vendor and the recipient of the purchase-money. Another mistake is made which is not apparent from the deed itself—viz., that Dulcinore is represented as having purchased, not from Nicola as the fact was, but from Marie, who never had any interest.

On the ground of this mistake the learned judges below came to the very startling conclusion that the deed was a nullity; that because Dulcinore did not derive title from Marie, therefore she conveyed nothing at all; and that McCarthy, though he contracted for the purchase, not of any particular interest in the land but of the very land, and not with Marie but with Dulcinore, received nothing at all. At best, they say, the deed took effect as between Dulcinore and McCarthy by way of estoppel. Then they proceed to discuss whether the plaintiff, finding the defendants in possession, was bound to inquire into the nature of their interest, and come to the conclusion that because a system of registration exists in Trinidad he was not so bound.

The plaintiff's counsel here have declined to attempt the hopeless task of supporting this construction of the deed. It is beyond dispute that it transferred to McCarthy whatever interest Dulcinore had. But then they argue, if their lordships rightly understand them, that this transfer, though absolute in its terms, only operated between grantor and grantee, and that as between the grantee and all other persons, only so much interest passed as Dulcinore derived from Marie, which was nothing at all. This is extremely like a reversion to the repudiated theory of estoppel. Why the deed should be construed differently according to the person who comes to construe it, has not been explained, nor can their lordships comprehend.

The Registration Ordinance has been referred to; but its only bearing on the case is, first, that it gives legal priority to deeds according to the date of their registration instead of the date of their execution; and secondly, that it provides a public office in which they may be seen. Here the defendants' deed was prior in every respect. Nothing turns on the system of registration. There is no question in the case beyond the familiar one, whether the plaintiff had notice, express or other, of the defendants' equity before he bought the legal estate.

Their lordships have not been able to understand how there can be room for doubt in answering that question. There was the deed, plain for everybody to see. Whatever was in that deed the plaintiff saw and knew. And the deed told him that in the year 1881 Dulcinore purchased the land, and took possession, and that she contracted to sell it to McCarthy, and actually conveyed it to him, and received the purchase-money. Knowing all this, the plaintiff yet asserts that he had no notice of the grantee's equity because the deed contains an erroneous recital of the mode in which that equity became vested in the grantor.

The plaintiff seems to have imagined that he, a stranger to the deed, was entitled to treat the recitals as indisputable, and to insist that the grantee should not show the truth of the case if it was contrary to the recitals. He has treated the matter as though some representation had been made to him on the faith of which he had acted. He did not abstain from inquiry. He inquired carefully enough to ascertain that Nicola and not Marie was the owner of the land, and that Marie was not Nicola's heir, and to trace out the heir. And then having got the legal estate, he thought he might safely proceed to eject the possessors. But he never inquired in the right and obvious quarter. He must have disregarded the fact disclosed by the deed that Dulcinore purchased and took possession in 1881, when Nicola was living, as the plaintiff, who had searched out the heir, must have known. If he had made inquiry with reference to that fact and to the inference which it suggests, he would probably have avoided the error which led him to bring this suit.

Their lordships make this remark with reference to the tone of complaint which is taken on the ground that the plaintiff has been deceived by the recitals in the deed; not as intimating that the case turns on the question whether the plaintiff ought or ought not to have made further inquiry. On that question they only think it right to say that they are not prepared to agree that the existence of a register relieves one who is dealing with a vendor out of possession, from ascertaining the interest of one in possession, when that possession is in accordance with a registered deed. But they do not rest their judgment on that ground. They rest it on the plain and obvious ground that the plaintiff had express notice that the defendants were transferees of Dulcinore's interest whatever it might be, and that an erroneous recital of her earlier title does not preclude her grantee from showing what interest really passed by her grant.

The consequence is that the plaintiff's suit entirely fails; and as he has got the legal estate with notice of the defendants' title, he is bound to convey it to them. The proper course will be to discharge the decrees below; to dismiss the plaintiff's claim; to give the defendants judgment on their counter-claim, and to order the plaintiff to pay the whole costs of the suit in both courts.

Their lordships will humbly advise her Majesty in accordance with this opinion.

The plaintiff must also pay the costs of this appeal.

Solicitors for the appellants, Sutton, Ommanney, & Rendall.

Solicitor for the respondent, J. N. Mason & Co.

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div. (Lord Esher, M.R., and Lopes and Rigby, L.JJ.) — Dec. 9.

DIXON v. GREAT WESTERN RAILWAY CO. (a.)

Railway—Negligence—Duty to fence line—Duty to maintain fence erected more than five years after opening of line—Railways Clauses Act, 1845 (8 & 9 Vict. c. 20), ss. 68, 73.

In an action against a railway company for negligence in failing to fence their line it appeared that no fence had ever been erected till more than five years after the opening of the line. The jury found that a fence which had been subsequently erected by the company had been allowed to become rotten.

Held, that notwithstanding section 73 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, the defendants were liable for not satisfying the obligation imposed on them by section 68.

Appeal from the judgment of Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J., on further consideration after trial of the action with a jury.

The plaintiff was occupier, as tenant of the lord of the manor, of certain meadow land, through which the defendants' branch line from Twyford to Henley passed, and he brought this action to recover the value of a colt, which, as he alleged, he had lost through the negligence of the defendants in failing to fence their railway.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The piece of railway which passed through the plaintiff's land was constructed on a viaduct about five feet high carried on wooden piers.

From the year 1857, when the line was first opened for public use, to 1884 this piece of railway was never fenced at all.

In 1884 Colonel Baskerville, who was then lord of the manor, erected a fence, but in doing so he encroached upon the defendants' land. The defendants thereupon removed this fence, and erected a new fence along the boundary of their land.

In September, 1895, two colts belonging to the plaintiff, which had been let out to graze on the plaintiff's land, broke through the fence, and one of them strayed under the viaduct, and was found to have sustained such injuries by striking its head against the piers, probably in consequence of being frightened by a passing train, that it had to be destroyed.

The jury found that the fence was rotten, that the colt was injured in consequence of the fence being rotten, and that the viaduct was dangerous without a proper fence so as to be a nuisance and source of danger to cattle using the adjoining meadows.

On further consideration, the Lord Chief Justice gave judgment for the plaintiff for £50, the agreed amount of damages.

The defendants appealed.

Bucknill, Q.C., and A. Lyttelton, for the defendants.—At common law a landowner is not bound to fence his land against his neighbour's cattle: Hilton v. Ankesson, 27 L. T. N. S. 519, 21 W. R. Dig. 104; Hounsell v. Smith, 8 W. R. 277; Ponting v. Noakes, 42 W. R. 506, [1894] 2 Q. B. 281. The obligation of the defendants to fence their line depends on sections 68 and 73 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845. By section 68: "The company shall make, and at all times thereafter maintain, the following works for the accommodation of the owners and occupiers of lands adjoining the railway—that is to say, . . . sufficient posts, rails, . . . or other fences for separating the land taken for the use of the railway from the adjoining lands not taken, and protecting such lands from trespass, or the cattle of the owners or occupiers thereof from straying thereout, by reason of the railway, . . . and such posts, rails, and other fences shall be made forthwith after the taking of any such lands, if the owners thereof shall so require." By section 73: "The company shall not be compelled to make any further or additional accommodation works for the use of owners and occupiers of land adjoining the railway . . . after five years from the completion of the works and the opening of the railway for public use." The effect of these sections is that whatever fences are put up within five years must be maintained, but, if no fence is put up within five years, the company cannot after that time be called upon to put one up: Colley v. London and North-Western Railway Co., 29 W. R. 16, 5 Ex. D. 277; Ryan v. Great Southern and Western Railway Co., 32 L. R. (Ir.) 15, 41 W. R. Dig. 203. Here no fence was ever put up till nearly thirty years after the opening of the railway.

Montague Lush and W. Seton, for the plaintiff.—Section 68 imposes an imperative obligation on the company to put up fences and to keep them in repair for all time. Section 73 does not affect this obligation: Corry v. Great Western Railway Co., 29 W. R. 623, 7 Q. B. D. 322.

LORD ESHER, M.R.—Section 68 of the Railways Clauses Act, 1845, says that the company shall make and at all times thereafter maintain certain works for the accommodation of the owners of adjoining land, including fences for separating the land taken for the use of the railway from the lands not so taken. That is a statutory obligation without any limit of time or any limitation whatever. In this case the company, though not till nearly thirty years after the opening of the railway, did put up a fence. The plaintiff complains that the company having put up this fence did not maintain it but let it get rotten. To this the company answer: You did not require us within five years to put up a fence or to go before the magistrates under section 69, and therefore we are not now bound either to make or keep up a fence. Their argument is that section 73 puts a limitation on section 68. But section 73 says that the company shall not be compelled to make any further or additional accommodation works after five years from the opening of the railway. Unless we strike out the words "further or additional" this case does not come within that section, for here the company never made any accommodation works at this part of their line within the five years. In my opinion we cannot strike out those words, and therefore section 73 does not apply. But if it does apply, I think that that section only relates to the tribunal which, by the statute, has the power of compelling the company to make accommodation works. It puts a limit on the time within which the company can be summoned before magistrates under section 69, but it does not do away with the statutory duty imposed by section 68. Lush, L.J., in Corry v. Great Western Railway Co. seems to me to have held that the obligation imposed by section 68 was unlimited. I think that the judgment of the Lord Chief Justice was right and that this appeal must be dismissed.

LOPES and RIGBY, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, Graham Gordon.

Solicitor for the defendants, Nelson.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. North, J. — Nov. 17, 18, 20, 21; Dec. 21.

In re CONSORT DEEP LEVEL GOLD MINES (LIMITED).
Ex parte STARK.
Ex parte ELLISTON. (a.)

Company—Shares—Contract—Acceptance—Notice of acceptance—Underwriting—Irrevocable authority—Misrepresentation.

A. signed a letter addressed to the secretary of the M. Co. undertaking to underwrite shares in the C. Co., and authorizing the secretary to apply for such shares in his behalf. The secretary applied for some shares, but notice was not given to A.

Held, that A. could not set up non-acceptance of his offer as against the C. Co.

In re Henry Bentley & Co. v. The Yorkshire Breweries, Limited, Ex parte Harrison, 69 L. T. N. S. 204, followed.

Motion.

(a. Reported by G. B. HAMILTON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The applicant Stark had signed the following underwriting contract.

"11th September, 1895. To Mr. J. Akerman, secretary of the Mines Acquisition Company.

"Consort Deep Level Company.—

"With reference to the prospectus . . . offering 80 000 shares for public subscription, and in consideration of your agreeing to pay me a commission of 15 per cent., I hereby undertake to subscribe or find responsible subscribers to your satisfaction for 10,000 shares of £1 each or such less number as may be accepted by you. . . . It is further agreed that this letter shall be irrevocable if 40,000 shares are underwritten or applied for prior to the public issue of the prospectus and allotment is made on or before the 30th of September, 1895. . . . My liability under this agreement shall continue notwithstanding any variation between the prospectus shown to me and the prospectus issued to the general public, so long as the nominal capital of the company and the amount fixed for the purchase consideration shall remain the same.

"The above contract is accepted by me to the extent of 10,000 shares.—J. AKERMAN, 12th September, 1895."

The Mines Acquisition Co. was registered on the 15th of May, 1895. The business was to acquire and deal in mining options, and it promoted the Consort Deep Level Gold Co., and it was desired to get the shares of the latter company underwritten. Mr. Mellor, one of the firm of solicitors who acted for the Consort Deep Level Gold Co., communicated with Ernest Oswald Lambert, who was desirous of underwriting part of the capital. Mr. Mellor was told that 20,000 or 25,000 shares would be taken up in Germany and Holland and he communicated this fact to Lambert. Lambert himself underwrote certain shares, but he was not otherwise the agent of the company.

The prospectus seen by Stark contained this passage: "Three reefs appear to traverse the property,—viz., the Consort Main Reef, which in some places is as much as 10 feet wide and has already produced £35,000 of gold."

A second prospectus was issued in which the words, "on adjoining properties" were added.

The evidence given by Stark was as follows: "On the 9th or 10th of September, 1895, Ernest Oswald Lambert told me that he had 20,000 shares to underwrite. He said 25,000 shares had been underwritten in Germany and Holland, and that he had himself underwritten 10,000 shares. I did not read all the underwriting letter. Lambert asked me to ask Elliston to underwrite 3,000 shares. He said all the shares would be taken up, and that there was no chance of our being called upon. I told Elliston what Lambert told me, and he underwrote 3,000 shares."

The resolution to allot was passed by the Consort Deep Level Gold Mines Co. on the 27th of September, 1895.

On Lambert telling Stark that he must pay a deposit of 2s. 6d. per share, he refused to pay.

On the 15th of September Stark called at the company's office and inquired how shares were being applied for. He repudiated the shares by letter of the 12th of October, 1895. Stark's name, and that of Elliston were not, however, removed from the register, so on the 7th of January, 1896, notice of motion for their removal from the register was given.

Swinfen Eady, Q.C., and W. F. Hamilton.—The offer to underwrite was never accepted by the Mines Acquisition Co., and it could be withdrawn until its acceptance was communicated to the applicants (In Re National Savings Bank Association, Hebb's case, 15 W. R. 754, L. R. 4 Eq. 9). Then, as to the statements made by Lambert; if an agent, who has authority to contract makes a misstatement, the principal cannot take the benefit of the contract, and say that he is not responsible for the misstatement: Mullens v. Miller, 31 W. R. 559, 22 Ch. D. 194; In re Metropolitan Coal Consumers' Association, Karbery's case, [1892] 3 Ch. 1, 40 W. R. Dig. 41. There the prospectus was issued before the company was registered; and Kekewich, J., said that the misrepresentation must be brought home to the company; and Lindley, L.J., distinguished Wainwright's case, 63 L. T. N. S. 429, 39 W. R. Dig. 44, and said: "Speaking generally there is no doubt that a misrepresentation in order to vitiate a contract must be made by a party to it or by his agent. But this rule is not without exception."

Bigham, Q.C., and Upjohn, for the respondents.—No acceptance of the offer was necessary; the applicant authorized Akerman to act on his behalf. But as a matter of fact the acceptance was communicated, for the demand of 2s. 6d. a share could only be made if the applicants were in fact underwriters: In re Hannan's Empress Gold Mining and Development Co., Carmichael's case, [1896] 2 Ch. 643, shows that the authority given to Akerman was irrevocable. At all events the applicants are estopped from setting up non-acceptance of their offer as against the Consort Co.: In re Henry Bentley & Co. v. The Yorkshire Breweries (Limited), 69 L. T. N. S. 204. As to the representations in the prospectus, it cannot fairly be interpreted to mean that £35,000 of gold had been already produced upon this property. There is no evidence that Stark or Elliston were induced to underwrite by any misrepresentation. It is necessary for a man to show (1) That a misrepresentation came to his knowledge; and (2) that he relied upon it.

They cited Newlands v. National Employers' Association, 54 L. J. Q. B. 428, 33 W. R. Dig. 168; Gibson's case, 6 W. R. 384, 2 De G. & J. 275; and Ogilvie v. Currie, 16 W. R. 769, 37 L. J. Ch. 541.

Eady, in reply.—The true construction of the letter is that it was a contract between Stark and the Mines Acquisition Co. The Consort Deep Level Gold Mines Co. is not entitled to sue upon it: Fairlie v. Fenton, 18 W. R. 700, L. R. 5 Ex. 169, per Kelly, C.B., p. 171; Green v. Kophe, 4 W. R. 592, 18 C. B. 549; Hahn v. North German Pikwood Co., 8 Times L. R. 557. Karbery's case shows that the company cannot dissociate itself from its agent. The prospectus represents that £35,000 worth of gold had been extracted from the company's property. Lambert represented that 25,000 shares had been taken up in Germany. The company is bound by this.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 21.—NORTH J., after stating the facts, said: I come to the conclusion that the underwriting letter was an offer to the Mines Acquisition Co., and not to Akerman as an individual. It is perfectly impossible that Akerman could pay the 5 per cent. in cash and 10 per cent. in shares, while the Mines Aquisition Co. was in a position to do so. It is incredible that it was intended that Akerman should enter into a gambling transaction as to shares which he did not hold. It is said Akerman as an individual was the person contracted with, but the correspondence makes it clear that he was only the agent for the Mines Acquisition Co. I conclude, then, that the underwriting letter was an offer made by Stark to the Mines Acquisition Co., and accepted by Akerman on its behalf. It was said that the provision as to 40,000 shares being applied for or underwritten was not complied with, but it is proved that 40,000 shares were underwritten and 3,960 applied for by the public. It is said that the shares must be bonâ fide underwritten for the contract to be binding, and I agree, for a sham application would not be an application at all, but I see no reason to doubt that the contracts were bonâ fide.

On the 27th of September the company proceeded to allotment, and notice of allotment was sent to the public subscribers. It is said that notice was not then sent to the underwriters, and that until such notice was given, the allotment to them was not complete. I do not, however, construe the letter in this way; the provision as to allotment before the 30th of September, in my view, enables the company to proceed to allotment, even on the 30th, although notice could only be given on the following day. In my opinion notice of allotment was not given upon the 30th, because notice of application for shares is not notice of allotment, but it seems to me that the allotment was complete when the resolution to allot was passed on the 27th of September. The fact that some persons did not receive notice of allotment does not prevent the allotment from taking place before the 30th of September.

The next question is, Was the offer made by the underwriting letter accepted? Acceptance was signed by Akerman on the 11th of September. It is said that no notice of such acceptance was given to Stark and Elliston. Was notice of acceptance necessary? I think that it was as between the Mines Acquisition Co. and the underwriters, who wanted to know the limit of their liability. It was specially necessary in this case, as a cheque for 2s. 6d. per share deposit was to accompany the letter. Here no cheque accompanied, so the applicants had not made an offer in the terms of the letter. If 40,000 shares had been subscribed for by the public, the underwriters were entitled to be paid their commission, but the company might have said no cheque was sent, so the offer was not taken into account. Was notice of acceptance given? I think it is clear that it was not, though an attempt was made to show notice was given because Stark called at the company's office. It is enough to say the evidence of notice being given is altogether insufficient. The question then arises whether non-communication of the acceptance makes the offer invalid. In my opinion it does not. The Consort Co. did not know that there was no communication of acceptance. Looking at the form of acceptance written at the bottom of the letter, and to the fact that the applicants authorized Akerman to apply for shares in their name, whatever the respective rights of the Mines Acquisition Co. and the applicants may be, the applicants are estopped from setting up non-acceptance of this offer as against the Consort Co. Ex parte Harrison is conclusive on this point. It is said that the application to the Consort Co. was not accompanied by a cheque, but the Consort Co. could waive this. It is said again that the Mines Acquisition Co. should have made the application, but it was made by Akerman, their agent. It is said that there is no resolution of the Mines Acquisition Co. authorizing Akerman to act, but I think that there is ample evidence that he was authorized to act as agent for the Mines Acquisition Co., which is treated as the principal throughout the whole transaction. There was no delegation, he only acted as secretary of the Mines Acquisition Co. It is said again that Stark's application was revoked on the 12th of October, before it was accepted. There was a lapse of fourteen days, and in the absence of authority I should have been inclined to think that the application might have been withdrawn as against the Consort Co., whatever his contract not to withdraw with the Mines Acquisition Co. might have been, although Stark might be liable in damages to the Mines Acquisition Co. if he did withdraw. Carmichael's case, however, is exactly in point. But on the facts I hold that the authority was not revoked. The letter of the 30th of September by the applicant's solicitor is said to be a revocation. The letter points out that notice of acceptance was not given, but that is not a revocation of the authority.

Having disposed of these legal grounds, I come to the question of misrepresentation. First, as to the capital being subscribed in Germany. This was a verbal statement by Lambert of what he said Mr. Mellor told him. The applicants knew that the company had not yet been brought out, and that shares could not have been actually taken. All that the statement could have meant was that it was expected that the shares would be taken, and I cannot believe that the statement was understood as meaning that the shares had been actually taken up. If the statement was that persons in Germany had promised to take shares, there is no evidence that this was not the case. Mr. Clements, the person referred to as concerned in this transaction, was called and not cross-examined upon this point. The statement was material, as the more shares were taken, the less would be the liability of the underwriters. Was the statement untrue? If it was, it is said that the company cannot take advantage of a contract induced by the misrepresentation of its agent. Mullins v. Miller and Karbery's case are relied upon. Of the four heads laid down by Romer, J., in Lynde v. Anglo-Italian Hemp Spinning Co., 44 W. R. 359, [1896] 1 Ch. 178, the second and third heads are said to apply to the present case. It is said that Mr. Mellor and Lambert were agents for the Consort Co. They were certainly not agents at the time of the alleged misrepresentation. Mr. Mellor was to be solicitor to the company when formed, and Lambert had no interest in the company. The second head does not apply. The fourth is what comes nearest to the present case. But how could the Consort Co. know of the misrepresentation? The only possible means would be Mr. Payne's letter of the 30th of September. I do not think it necessary to go into the question of misrepresentation, as non-acceptance of the offer of the underwriters is the ground put forward in that letter, and it is said not to be necessary to go into the question of misrepresentation.

It is said that the Consort Co. were put upon inquiry, but I do not think that the company was bound to inquire about something which it was told was not relied upon. How could it possibly have found out about the alleged misrepresentations? At the time of allotment the directors had no notice that the applications were induced by misrepresentation.

The next point is the alleged misrepresentation in the prospectus. In the first prospectus there are said to be three misrepresentations. Stark gives different dates at which he discovered these misrepresentations. The first alleged misrepresentation as to the water rights was not even opened to me. The second, as to Mr. Clements, the acting gold commissioner, does not seem to me to be a misrepresentation. The third, as to the £35,000 worth of gold. Some time after the 10th of December Stark got hold of the second prospectus, in which the words "on adjoining property" are added. Stark says that he believed that £35,000 worth of gold had been extracted from this property. It is said that the alteration shows that this is the meaning, but I do not think this is so. A person, on reading the prospectus, might fairly make the alteration to avoid any possible misunderstanding. Then, is this a misrepresentation? My first impression was that this does amount to a misrepresentation. And a first impression is more valuable as to a point like this than a conclusion arrived at after consideration. But I am not satisfied that Stark relied on the misrepresentation, if misrepresentation there was. It is not suggested that Stark complained to Lambert upon the point, and there is no trace of complaint upon this ground in the correspondence. The same criticism applies to Elliston.

The motion fails, and must be dismissed with costs.

Solicitors, W. J. Payne; Mellor, Smith, & May.

Chan. Div. } Feb. 28; March 6, 1896.
Stirling, J. }

In re KONIG & EBHARDT'S TRADE-MARK. (a.)

Trade-mark—Royal crown—Practice of the Trade-marks Office — Instructions to applicants — Trade-marks Rules, 1890, r. 30—Validity.

By No. 30 of the instructions issued in 1890 to persons applying for the registration of trade-marks it is provided that the royal arms, and arms so nearly resembling them as to be calculated to deceive, and representations of the royal crown will not be registered.

The comptroller having refused to register a trade-mark on the ground that the device was similar to the royal crown,

Held, that the device did not in fact so closely resemble the Royal crown as to be calculated to deceive.

The practice of the Trade-marks Office considered.

This was a motion brought by way of appeal against the refusal of the comptroller to register a trade-mark in respect of goods in class 39.

The applicants were Germans who have for some time past used in Germany the mark in question. The mark proposed to be registered consisted of a shield and floral device, and the words urbi et orbi surmounted by a coronet. The comptroller refused to proceed with the registration of the mark, and by a letter to the applicants, dated the 6th of May, 1895, stated that the reasons why he refused to proceed with their application, so long as the device above the shield remained part of the proposed mark, were (1) because of the similarity of the device in question to the royal crown, and (2) under section 72 of the Patents, Designs, and Trade-marks Act, 1883, in view of certain trade-marks on the register, and of which he there gave a list.

The applicants appealed to the Board of Trade against that refusal, and the Board of Trade referred the matter to the court and directed that the persons interested in the trade-marks mentioned in the comptroller's letter should be served.

The applicants now moved that the comptroller might be directed to proceed with the registration. The applicants had not formally served the persons interested in the registered marks, but had applied to them all by letters, and of such persons some consented unreservedly to the applicants' mark being registered, others desired certain limitations as to the mode of user of the applicants' mark if registered, and two of such persons left the matter to the court.

(a.) Reported by W. SCOTT THOMPSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The first reason stated by the comptroller was based upon the practice of the trade-marks office under the instructions to persons wishing to register trade-marks issued in the year 1890.

By No. 30 of such instructions it is provided that "the following will not be registered as trade-marks or as prominent parts of trade-marks unless the marks have been registered before the 13th of August, 1875: The royal arms and arms so nearly resembling them as to be calculated to deceive . . . representations of the royal crown."

Upon the hearing of the motion counsel on behalf of the applicants stated that they were willing to confine the registration of the mark in question to account-books, ruled paper, and other paper for use in books, and to disclaim any right to the exclusive use of the crown device.

Moulton, Q.C., and Whinney, for the applicants.—The fact that none of the persons already on the register object to our mark is strong evidence that it will not deceive. Further, we say that the device does not in fact resemble the royal crown.

Sir R. E. Webster, A.G., and Ingle Joyce, for the comptroller.—The refusal to register is based upon the practice which has long prevailed in the office under which similar applications have been refused. This is a public question affecting the practice of the office and we ask your lordship not to be influenced by the fact that private individuals such as the owners of registered trade-marks do not oppose.

Moulton, Q.C., replied.

STIRLING, J., stated the facts and said: With the above modifications, it appears to me that the application for registration will be right, and free from objection in respect of the trade-marks already on the register, and the application if so limited will not fall within section 72 of the Act of 1883. With reference to the first of the reasons given by the comptroller—namely, the similarity of the device in question to the royal crown—this objection relates to the crown or coronet which appears surmounting the device of a shield proposed to be registered. It has been correctly pointed out on behalf of the applicants that there is no binding rule in reference to this matter. Nevertheless, in all the series of instructions from time to time since 1877 issued by the comptroller to persons intending to apply for the registration of trade-marks, there have been contained provisions similar to the provisions contained in No. 30 of the instructions issued in 1890. These instructions have been perfectly well known to all applicants for trade-marks ever since the year 1877. They have been largely acted on and further, it appears from the evidence in the present case that applications for registration have been refused on this ground, and whether or no these instructions are binding on me, I should be very slow to depart from the practice which has been followed for twenty years. I do not, however, propose to decide this case on the ground that there ought to be no departure from these instructions; indeed I have not been asked to depart from them, for it has been urged in argument that the coronet in question was not in fact a royal crown. What is a royal crown? It is that which appears on the royal arms and is sufficiently well known. It is a circlet surrounded by two arches. But the crown in question has no arches and resembles the coronet of a marquis. If the rule in question had applied to all coronets I should have been disposed to hold that it ought not to be departed from; but it does not apply to all coronets and in my opinion the coronet in question does not so closely resemble the royal crown as to be calculated to deceive. Subject to the dis-claimers above mentioned the trade-mark ought to be registered.

Solicitors, Gresham, Davies, & Dallas; The Solicitor to the Board of Trade.

Chan. Div. } Jan. 13, 14.
Kekewich, J. }

HORNSEY DISTRICT COUNCIL v. SMITH. (a.)

Local government—Paving expenses—National school—"Charge upon the premises"—"Owners"—Enforcement of charge by sale or mortgage—Public Health Act, 1875 (38 & 39 Vict. c. 55), ss. 150, 257—School Sites Act, 1841 (4 & 5 Vict. c. 38), s. 6.

Where expenses arising under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, have been declared to be a charge upon the premises in respect of which they were incurred, under section 257 of the Act, the court will enforce such charge by sale or mortgage even though the land so charged has been dedicated exclusively to the purposes of a National school under the School Sites Act, 1841.

This was a summons by the Hornsey District Council for the enforcement by sale or mortgage of a charge upon a National school within the plaintiffs' district in respect of certain paving and other expenses which had been incurred and apportioned against the trustees of the school under section 150 of the Public Health Act, 1875, and which had recently been declared by the court to be a charge upon the school premises under section 257 of the same Act (reported 44 W. R. 559, and [1896] 2 Ch. 254).

The site of the school had originally formed part of the glebe of the parish, and had been conveyed to trustees under section 6 of the School Sites Act, 1841 (4 & 5 Vict. c. 38), for the purposes of a school and for no other purposes whatever.

The plaintiffs had not taken summary proceedings against the trustees for the recovery of the expenses within the time specified by the Public Health Act, 1875.

Macmorran, Q.C., and Beaumont, for the applicants.—A statutory charge is enforceable by sale or mortgage (Scottish Widows Fund v. Craig, 30 W. R. 463, 20 Ch. D. 208), and it makes no difference whether the trust is a private or public trust. Section 257 of the Public Health Act, 1875, charges "the premises," and all successive ownerships on the premises (Corporation of Birmingham v. Baker, 17 Ch. D. 782, 30 W. R. Dig. 121), and there is no outside person interested in this land so as to prevent the sale, as was the case in The Guardians of Tendring Union v. Dowton, 40 W. R. 145, [1891] 3 Ch. 265. We could have sued the trustees under the Act, and they would have been personally liable for these expenses (Bowditch v. Wakefield Local Board of Health, L. R. 6 Q. B. 567, 19 W. R. C. L. Dig. 66).

Dibdin, for the respondents.—The School Sites Act intended that school property such as this should be incapable of being sold. There is no reverter clause to section 6 of that Act, and as this school is a charity, if the purposes of the trust fail, a scheme cy près would have to be settled. The land is properly left saddled with this trust and cannot be sold. It is stamped with a charity. The poor of the parish of Hornsey can enforce this trust, and it cannot be argued that they come within the definition of "owners," they are therefore outside persons who have an interest in this land, and the case of The Guardians of Tendring Union v. Dowton applies. The statutory nature of this trust renders the land exempt from such expenses as these: Wright v. Ingle, 34 W. R. 220, 16 Q. B. D. 379.

KEKEWICH, J.—The present case is one of considerable difficulty and importance, but in my opinion the applicants are entitled to have the sum due to them and charged upon the land, raised by sale or mortgage. That the ordinary rights of persons entitled to a charge extend to cases where charges are given by statute is established by the decision in The Scottish Widows Fund v. Craig, which decision does not seem to me to have otherwise any bearing upon the present case. The statute under which this land is held is the School Sites Act, 1841 (4 & 5 Vict. c. 38), and the conveyance was made under section 6 of that Act in the form prescribed by section 10. The property was to be held by the trustees for the purpose of a site for a school and "for no other purpose whatever"; if the land ceases to be used for that purpose then one of two things must happen, either the trustees must lose the land by its devolution on other persons, or they must hold the land subject to an action for breach of duty; in the latter event they continue to hold the land as owners, but in the former event, if the land can be recovered from them by other persons, then it belongs to those other persons as owners. It is peculiar that section 6 of the School Sites Act does not provide for the case of reverter, but I do not think it necessary to discuss how the land could be dealt with if it ceased to be held by the trustees for the purpose of a school. Mr. Dibdin suggests that as this is a charitable trust there would have to be an application of the property cy près at the instance of the Attorney-General, who would not represent the Crown otherwise than as parens patriae, and that the property would then pass to those persons who were held to be entitled to it under the scheme settled cy près. Consequently, if the contingency occurred, either the trustees would continue to hold the land as owners, or else the land would belong to the persons entitled to it under the scheme. So long as the school is a school, the trustees hold the land as owners, when it ceases to be a school the trustees still continue to be the owners until the land is recovered from them by some unascertained persons who then become the owners. The 257th section of the Public Health Act, 1875, contains provisions for the recovery of expenses incurred by the local authority and for making them a charge upon the premises. The effect of that section was considered by Sir George Jessel in The Corporation of Birmingham v. Baker, and he held that the charge on the premises was a charge on all successive ownerships. According to that decision this money must be raised by sale or mortgage like any other charge. But then it is said that the Court of Appeal differed from that view in The Guardians of Tendring Union v. Dowton. In that case the difficulty arose like this. There there was an adjoining owner who was entitled to the benefit of a restrictive covenant against the use for certain purposes of the land, subject to the charge, and the question was whether the charge on the premises, and therefore on all the owners in succession, could be enforced by sale as against an outside person, a stranger, who was entitled to the benefit of a restrictive covenant. The Court of Appeal held that the charge could not be enforced against him. The Lord Chancellor admits the full meaning of a "charge upon the premises" in his judgment. His lordship, after referring to section 150, says: "Therefore, it is clear that the person against whom the judgment is to stand is the owner. Indeed, the whole machinery of the Act shows that the owners and occupiers are the persons against whom the proceedings are to be taken. There can be no doubt as to the meaning of the statute with respect to the word 'owner.' It includes all persons who have an interest in the property." Then passing on to the judgment of Fry, L.J., to whose judgment I more particularly refer, he says: "All the Act does is to create a charge on the premises—that is, on the land—that is, on all the interests of the owners of the land. But here we have to deal with the rights of a person against the owners of the land." Now, in the present case there is no outside owner; there are the trustees, and there are the persons who would become entitled to the land after them upon the failure of the trust, if such persons took steps to recover the land, such persons and the trustees are the only people who can be said to be owners of this land. On this ground, therefore, it seems to me that I am following all the cases as well as the general law in saying that this money must be raised by a sale or mortgage of the land free from the present trusts.

(a.) Reported by R. J. A. MORRISON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Solicitors, L. J. Tatham; Lee, Bolton, & Lee.

Chan. Div. } Dec. 10.
Kekewich, J. }

In re FEARON.
HOTCHKIN v. MAYOR. (a.)

Will—Married woman—Legacy and share of residue "to be paid" to married woman with restraint upon anticipation—Absolute unfettered gift.

A bequest of a fund in trust for a married woman "to be paid to her for her separate use without power of anticipation," there being no further indication that the income only is to be paid to her during coverture, will be construed as a direction that the corpus is to be forthwith paid to her, and the words "in restraint of anticipation" will be disregarded.

In re Bown, 33 W. R. 58, 27 Ch. D. 411, followed.

This was an originating summons by the trustee of the will of Isabel Fearon, deceased, for the determination of the following question, which arose upon the construction of the said will—namely, Whether the defendant (Mrs. Mayor), who was a married woman, was entitled to have a legacy and a share of residue paid to her forthwith, or whether the same should be retained by the trustee and the income thereof paid to her during coverture?

By her will the testatrix bequeathed a legacy of nineteen guineas to the defendant, and directed her trustees "to stand possessed of" one equal fourth part of her residuary estate upon trust, in the events which have happened, for her four nieces (including the defendant) and her nephew, therein named, in equal shares. The will contained this subsequent provision: "And I declare that the aforesaid legacies and shares of my said nieces or grand-nieces shall be paid to their separate use free from the control of any present or future husband, without power of anticipation."

No settlement had been made upon the defendant's marriage.

Harman, for the trustee.

Hatfield Green, for the defendant.—On the will itself it is clear that the testatrix meant the share of residue as well as the legacy to be paid at once; there is nothing to show that the fund is to be retained and the income paid to the defendant: In re Bown, 33 W. R. 58, 27 Ch. D. 411; In re Grey's Settlement, 35 W. R. 560, 34 Ch. D. 712; In re Tippett & Newbold's Contract, 36 W. R. 597, 37 Ch. D. 444.

KEKEWICH, J.—It is my earnest deside, as it is my clear duty, to follow the judgment of the Court of Appeal, and if I apparently make any criticism on the decision of the Court of Appeal, I must crave indulgence, and not be understood to have lost sight of or be disregarding such desire and duty. The cases cited have puzzled me. I do not see how words restraining anticipation can be upheld if the court, notwithstanding them, allows the corpus of the fund to be paid to the legatee. The rule giving effect to words restraining anticipation is an annex to the doctrine of separate estate. In the case of In re Bown, 27 Ch. D., on p. 422, Cotton, L.J., says: "It is not enough that it should be an income-bearing fund, but the intention of the testator must be shown that the married woman is to have the enjoyment of it in the way of income. In that case the words restraining anticipation must have their effect given to them." In other words, if it is not shown that she is to have it as income—I am now paraphrasing the lord justice's words—but if the words show that she is to have it as corpus, then the words restraining anticipation need not have that effect. If left to myself I should say that effect ought to be given to the words in restraint of anticipation in the present case, but I am precluded from such a decision, as the Court of Appeal has decided otherwise. In the subsequent cases the Court of Appeal has explained In re Bown in the same way as I have done. The test seems to be, Is there a direction that the legatee should have the corpus? If so, then the words "in restraint of anticipation" must be disregarded; if not, then effect must be given to them. In the present case the testatrix, by the ultimate declaratory clause, seems to indicate her intention that not only shall Mrs. Mayor have independent control over the fund, but that she shall not anticipate it; effect cannot be given to this intention except by the trustee retaining the fund, but the testatrix expressly says that the fund shall "be paid to" the legatee, and construing these words in the light of the decisions referred to, I come to the conclusion that Mrs. Mayor is entitled to have the money paid to her forthwith.

Solicitors, C. E. Beal, for T. Ponting, Warminster; W. H. Matthews.

(a.) Reported by R. J. A. MORRISON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Chan. Div. } July 31, 1896
Romer, J. }

FILBY v. HOUNSELL. (a.)

Contract—Specific performance—Undisclosed vendor—Acceptance by agent—Reference in contract to an unsigned document — Terms of contract — Statute of Frauds (29 Car. 2, c. 3), s. 4.

Acceptance of an offer by the agent of a vendor whose name is not at the time known to the purchaser, is a sufficient acceptance on the part of such vendor to satisfy the Statute of Frauds.

If a signed memorandum of agreement refers definitely to an unsigned contract in which all the terms of the contract are definitely stated, such memorandum constitutes a binding contract, and is not conditional on the drawing up of a formal agreement.

(a.) Reported by J. ARTHUR PRICE, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Trial of action.

This was an action on the part of Mrs. M. A. Filby for the specific performance of a contract to sell a leasehold house, No. 1, Kenmure-road, Hackney, London. The defendant, in his defence, pleaded—first, that he entered into the contract through the misrepresentation of the agents of the plaintiff; and secondly, that the Statute of Frauds had not been complied with. The case only calls for a report on the second point. The facts were as follows: On the 24th of September, 1895, Messrs. Frank Jolly & Co., auctioneers, put up the property for auction with printed conditions of sale. On the memorandum indorsed outside the conditions of sale the purchaser declared that he had purchased the premises for the sum of £——— and had paid to the auctioneers the sum of £——— as a deposit and in part payment of the purchase money, and further agreed to pay the balance of the purchase money and to complete the purchase according to the within conditions of sale. The name of the vendor, Mrs. Mary Ann Filby, did not appear in this document. The premises were not sold at the auction, but on the same day the defendant wrote to the auctioneers: "I hereby offer the sum of £350 for No. 1, Kenmure-road, Hackney; lease about 81 years, ground-rent £8; and if my offer is accepted I will pay the deposit and sign the contract on the auction particulars." On the 25th of September the auctioneers replied accepting the offer subject to contract as agreed, "on behalf of our client, Mrs. M. A. Filby." "We enclose draft contract herewith and shall be glad to receive the same signed, together with cheque for deposit, at your early convenience." A draft contract was enclosed similar to that in the conditions but it was never signed by the defendant.

Bucknaster, for the plaintiff.—There is a sufficient contract.

Beddall, for the defendant.—The contract does not satisfy the Statute of Frauds, as it does not disclose the vendor's name, which does not appear on any document signed by the defendant. The word vendor is not sufficient: Potter v. Duffield, 22 W. R. 585, L. R. 148 Eq. 4; Williams v. Jordan, 26 W. R. 230, 6 Ch. D. 517; Thomas v. Brown, 24 W. R. 821, 1 Q. B. D. 714; Coombs v. Wilkes, 40 W. R. 77, [1891] 3 Ch. 77; Jarrett v. Hunter, 35 W. R. 132, 34 Ch. D. 152; Sale v. Lambert, 22 W. R. 478, L. R. 18 Eq. 1. The memorandum contemplates the drawing up of a formal contract, and is not, therefore, of itself a contract: Lloyd v. Nowell, 44 W. R. 43, [1895] 2 Ch. 744.

Bucknaster, in reply.—The cases cited differ from the present case in that in none of them was there any contract on which an action could be brought. The auctioneers in this case, however, could have sued on the contract. It is a sufficient acceptance for the agent of an undisclosed principal to accept.

He referred to Morris v. Wilson, 5 Jur. (N.S.) 168, 7 W. R. Ch. Dig. 91; Commins v. Scott, 23 W. R. 498, L. R. 20 Eq. 11, at p. 16. The contract was not conditional. All the terms could be ascertained from the document to which it referred. It does not matter that that document was not signed: Rossiter v. Miller, 26 W. R. 865, 3 App. Cas. 1124.

ROMER, J.—The only defence on the merits raised by the defendant is that he was induced to contract with the plaintiffs, if there be a contract, by certain misrepresentations of the plaintiff's agents. All I need say as to this is that the defendant has failed to prove it.

The next defence raised before me is that of the Statute of Frauds, and this certainly gives rise to some nice questions. But I have come to the conclusion that the plea of the statute does not avail the defendant. The point arising on the statute is that which concerns the name of the vendor. The defendant says that he has signed nothing which directly or by sufficient inference sets forth in writing who the plaintiff is. And it is true that the plaintiff's name as vendor does not appear in the offer of purchase of the 25th of September, 1895, signed by the defendant, and that you cannot gather who the vendor is from the auction form of contract or particulars which are sufficiently referred to for identification in the offer. But the offer does contain the names of the contracting parties. The offer is to Frank Jolly & Co., and I think it makes no difference that the offer is made to them as agents for an undisclosed principal.

For the purpose of satisfying the Statute of Frauds it appears to me sufficient, so far as parties are concerned, that the written contract should show who the contracting parties are, although they or one of them may be agents or agent for others, and it makes no difference whether you can gather the fact of agency from the written document or not. Who the principals are may be proved by parol. That is well settled. This was pointed out by Wood, V.C., in Morris v. Wilson, and by Sir George Jessel in Commins v. Scott, where he says: "There can be no doubt that if a written contract is made in this form, A. B. agrees to sell Blackacre to C. D. for £1,000, then E. F., the principal of A. B., can sue G. H., the principal of C. D., on that contract." The offer, then, in the case before me signed by the defendant, does in my opinion, sufficiently give the names of the contracting parties. If that be so, then the statute is satisfied in that respect, for it is settled law that a signed offer in writing, which sufficiently sets forth particulars, may be accepted by parol, and that the signed offer simply accepted by parol sufficiently complies with the statute: see Warner v. Willington, 4 W. R. 531, 3 Drew 523, and Reuss v. Picksley, 14 W. R. 924, L. R. 1 Ex. 342. Now, for the purposes of the point I am now considering, the defendant's offer was accepted, and it is not necessary that he should have recognized that acceptance in writing. Nor does it appear to me material that the acceptance disclosed the name, and was on behalf of the vendor, the previously undisclosed principal. A simple acceptance by Frank Jolly & Co. would be clearly sufficient, and later on they might have disclosed the fact that they accepted on behalf of their principal. And I cannot see that it makes any difference that they disclose at the time of acceptance the name of the principal, or accept directly on behalf of the principal, instead of first simply accepting it and then stating who the principal is. I therefore hold that this objection fails. And, indeed, I do not think the point is novel. Substantially the same point was decided by Wood, V.C., in Morris v. Wilson mentioned above, in accordance with the view I have expressed. And the cases relied upon by the defendant are distinguishable. In Potter v. Duffield, you could not gather by anything signed by the defendant's agent who the contracting parties were. The defendant's agent was not mentioned as a contracting party. There was no offer of any kind in writing to him as agent for the vendor or otherwise. And the same observations apply to Commins v. Scott, so far as relates to the first point taken by counsel on behalf of the plaintiffs in that case and decided against them by Sir George Jessel. In Williams v. Jordan the offer to take a lease was only addressed "Sir," and you could not gather from it to whom the offer was addressed. It certainly was not addressed to the person who subsequently purported to accept it on behalf of the lessor. Lastly, in the case of Jarrett v. Hunter, though that gives rise to more difficulty, the contract did not show who the vendor was or who were the contracting parties. I gather that the solicitor for the vendor, who signed, did not purport to sign as a contracting party or on behalf of his undisclosed principal. And the point that the writing signed could or might be taken as a contract between the purchaser and the solicitor, as agent for the undisclosed principal vendor, was apparently not taken on behalf of the counsel for the plaintiffs or considered by the judge who decided that case.

The only other point taken on behalf of the defendant in the case before me is that the acceptance of his offer was not a simple one, but was conditional, because of the words "subject to contract as agreed." Now, at first sight, those words may appear to make the acceptance conditional. But when the offer is carefully looked at it appears to me that the acceptance was absolute and not conditional. The offer stated in effect that if accepted the defendant would pay a deposit of £35 and sign the form of contract on the auction particulars. Now, that form of contract was in writing, and was definitive in all its terms and clearly identified by the offer. It left nothing to be agreed upon thereafter. The signing it was a form. The contract between the parties was complete on acceptance of the offer, whether the form on the auction particulars was signed or not. I might make in this case somewhat similar observations to those which Cairns, L.C., made in Rossiter v. Miller with regard to the provision as to a further agreement to be signed by the purchaser in that case. The acceptance, therefore, in the case now before me, when it spoke of "subject to contract as agreed," was clearly only referring to the form of contract mentioned in the offer, and which the defendant had offered to sign. The acceptance of the offer was not made subject to any new terms, but was one in accordance with the terms of the offer; this being sufficiently shown by the important words "as agreed." It follows that the defendant fails in all his defences, and that the plaintiff is entitled to specific performance of the contract, with costs up to and including judgment.

Solicitors, Lewin & Co.; J. R. Pakeman.

Q. B. Div.
(Wright and Wills, JJ.) Dec. 16.

REG. v. SODEN AND OVEREND. (a.)

Election law—Registration—Parliament—Franchise—Objection to name—Closing the list—Parliamentary and Municipal Registration Act, 1878 (41 & 42 Vict. c. 26), s. 40, sub-sections 8, 9, 10, 11.

A revising barrister gave notice that his court would be held on certain days, and that after the last sitting the lists would be closed. This was done, and on the day after the lists were closed the revising barrister sat for the purpose (inter alia) of expunging from the list the names of those persons whose names had been objected to and who had not appeared and announced their intention of contesting the objection at the previous sittings. On the name of S. being called evidence was given of the service of the notice of objection, and S. thereupon claimed to be heard in answer to the objection. The revising barrister refused to hear him and expunged his name.

Held, that a mandamus would not be granted to compel the revising barrister to state a case on the question whether or not he was right in expunging the name of S. from the list.

Rule nisi for a mandamus to the revising barrister for the borough of Leeds to state a case in the matter of an objection by one Overend to the name of Sykes being retained on the list of parliamentary voters for the Central Division of Leeds.

The revising barrister had filed an affidavit, from which the following facts appeared:

It was the custom of the revising barrister to hold a revision court for each of the five parliamentary divisions of Leeds, and also to separate contentious from non-contentious business.

In September, 1896, four sittings were fixed for the Central Division of Leeds—i.e., one on the 12th, one on the 14th, and two on the 15th, and notice was given that the lists would be closed on the evening of the 15th. On that day at the conclusion of the sitting the revising barrister satisfied himself that there were no more persons present desirous of being heard in support of claims or in answer to notices of objection.

On the 16th the revising barrister sat to go through the list of persons objected to for the purpose of striking out the names of those persons who, having been duly objected to, had not appeared at either of the previous sittings.

The name of Sykes appeared on this list, and when the overseer called out that name, Linforth, a registration agent appearing on Sykes' behalf, said "No objection."

The revising barrister took this to mean that the notice of objection had not been served. Evidence of the service of the notice of objection was then given, and the revising barrister removed the name of Sykes from the list of parliamentary voters.

Linforth then stated that Sykes was present, and asked the revising barrister to hear his evidence, upon the ground that primâ facie evidence having been given in support of the objection, the person objected to was entitled to be heard in answer.

The revising barrister declined to hear Sykes' evidence on the ground that the lists had been closed on the previous evening, when Sykes had had an opportunity of being heard if he had desired it.

An affidavit had been filed by Linforth and Sykes, in which it was stated that Linforth had told the revising barrister on the evening of the 15th that he was prepared to prove that the objection to Sykes was bad.

The revising barrister, in his affidavit, denied having heard this, and said that the first time he heard the name of Sykes mentioned was on the 16th.

H. Sutton, for the revising barrister, appeared to show cause against the rule.

W. Graham, for Overend, the objector, also showed cause, and contended that if the rule was made absolute it would be futile, for there was no means by which it could be complied with.

Lewis Thomas, in support of the rule.—The Parliamentary and Municipal Registration Act, 1878, s. 28, sub-section 9, provides that, unless the objector appears in support of the objection, the name objected to shall remain on the list. Sub-section 10 provides for the giving of primâ facie evidence in support of the objection. Then, by sub-section 11, if such proof is forthcoming, unless the person objected to appears, his name is to be struck off. It is said that in this case Sykes ought to have given his answer to the objection on the 15th of September, but at that time there was nothing for him to answer. The objector did not give his evidence till the 16th, and until that had been given Sykes could not have been heard even if he had come forward. If the list was re-opened on the 16th, then Sykes ought to have been heard. If it was not re-opened, there was no power to expunge his name from the list. Reg. v. Soden, 44 W. R. 449, [1896] 1 Q. B. 634, was a case of a person claiming a vote, and is not in point here.

(a.) Reported by F. O. ROBINSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

WILLS, J.—I am of opinion that this rule ought to be discharged. I think that it is a great pity that people should spend all their energy in making things difficult for the revising barrister, instead of loyally assisting him in the discharge of his onerous duties. In this case it appears that the revising barrister has made convenient rules for carrying on the necessary business of his court, and he says that the practice is perfectly well known. The practice of separating the opposed from the unopposed business certainly appears to be most reasonable and convenient. As to what occurred on this particular occasion, I entirely accept the revising barrister's version. No effectual steps were taken to bring to the revising barrister's notice on the 15th that the parties wanted to contest the objection to Sykes' name. The case, therefore, went over to the next day as a case which was not going to be contested, the only question left to be settled being the formal proof of the service of the notice of objection. Unless some such reasonable arrangement was made it would be absolutely impossible for the revising barrister ever to get through his work in a place like Leeds.

There is no point of law which could be raised by a case, and the application for a mandamus must be refused.

WRIGHT, J.—I entirely agree. I do not think that the court has power to order a case to be stated in the circumstances of this case. The application should have been for a mandamus to the revising barrister to hear and determine the objection.

Rule discharged.

Solicitor for the revising barrister, Solicitor to Treasury.

Solicitors for the objector, Hickin, Smith, & Capel Cure.

Solicitors for the applicant, A. Scott Lawson, for Walker & E. H. Foster, Leeds.

Q. B. Div. (Wills and Wright, JJ.) Dec. 12.

KILLIN (Appellant) v. SWATTON (Respondent). (a.)

Licensing law—Licence—Intoxicating liquors—Exemption claimed under 56 Geo. 3, c. 67—Licensing Act, 1872 (35 & 36 Vict. c. 94), s. 3.

The benefit granted by 56 Geo. 3, c. 67, to the children of the officers and men who served his Majesty in the Peninsular War to set up and exercise a trade "in any city, town, or place within this country without let, suit, or molestation, notwithstanding any statute, law, ordinance, custom, or provision to the contrary," does not exempt this class of persons from the provisions of the general public statutes, but has reference only to customs, charters, bye-laws, and the like existing in particular localities.

Held, therefore, that K., the son of a soldier who had served in the Peninsular War, was properly convicted for having sold intoxicating liquors without obtaining a licence as required by section 3 of the Licensing Act, 1872.

Special case stated by an alderman of the City of London.

The appellant was summoned by the chief acting inspector of the City police for selling by retail at his premises, 45, Fish-street-hill, intoxicating liquors without having a licence. It was proved before the magistrate that the appellant had openly sold intoxicating liquors at these premises for the last thirty-eight years, and that he had not taken out a licence at any time to do so, as he was now required to do by section 3 of the Licensing Act, 1872. It was also proved that the appellant was a lawful son of Thomas Killin, formerly a soldier in the 43rd Regiment of Foot, who had served in the Peninsular War, and was in 1824, after fifteen and three-quarter years' service, admitted as an out-pensioner at Chelsea Hospital. The appellant was born in November, 1833. It was, on behalf of the appellant contended that it was unnecessary for him to take out a licence to carry on his business as a retailer of wines, spirits, and beer, because he came within the benefit of the statute of 56 Geo. 3. c. 67, and was therefore entitled to trade in any business without having to conform to any regulations imposed on the ordinary trader by statute or otherwise. That Act was passed in 1816 for the "benefit of the officers, mariners, soldiers, and marines who had served his Majesty in the Peninsular War by sea and land," and after setting forth that the war being ended, many of those who had served their country would willingly employ themselves in trades, but were hindered from so doing in certain cities and corporations and other places within the Kingdom, because of certain bye-laws and customs of those places, it enacted that "all such officers and men as had been employed since the 22nd of June, 1802, and also their wives and children," might set up and exercise such trades as they were apt and able for in any city, town, or place within the Kingdom, without any let, suit, or molestation of any person or persons whatsoever for or by reason of the using of such trade, and if they were "sued, impleaded, or indicted" for so doing, they should, upon the general issue pleaded, be found not guilty by all judges who were to conform to that statute—"any statute, law, ordinance, custom, or provision to the contrary anywise notwithstanding," and "they in that case were to be enabled to recover double costs of the suit, to be recovered as any other costs at common law might be recovered."

In support of the charge it was contended before the magistrate that the Act of Geo. 3 did not apply so as to exempt the appellant from the provisions of section 3 of the Licensing Act, 1872, and alternatively, if the Act did apply in such a case, it was repealed by implication by the Licensing Acts of 1828, 1869, and 1872, and further that it was expressly repealed by the Statute Law Revision Act, 1873.

The magistrate held that having regard to section 3 of the Licensing Act, 1872, the appellant should have obtained a licence, and he convicted him of the offence.

Avory, against the conviction.—The appellant does not require a licence. The special right to carry on any trade given by 56 Geo. 3 c. 67, to this class of persons is not to be restricted by any general public statute or by any local bye-law. It is expressly provided that the benefit of the Act shall not extend to give "liberty to any person to set up the trade of a vintner or to sell wines or other liquors within the University of Oxford or Cambridge." It is therefore clear that except in the Universities the Act was intended to give these persons the right now claimed by the appellant. [WILLS, J.—Could the son of a Peninsular soldier keep a slaughter-house without a licence?] The Act says that such a person shall be permitted to carry on any trade in spite of any statute, law, ordinance, custom, or provision to the contrary. Before the magistrate it was contended that the statute did not apply to the case of a man carrying on the business of a licensed victualler who, in spite of the Act, could still be required by the Excise authorities to take out a licence. It was also said that the Act was repealed. [WILLS, J.—We think the statute does give a man the right to carry on the business of a licensed victualler.] Then it is unnecessary to argue that the Act has not been repealed.

(a.) Reported by ERSKINE REID, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

R. D. Muir, in support of the conviction was not called upon.

WILLS, J.—The appeal must be dismissed with costs. It is perfectly clear that the Act of 1816, passed in favour of a certain class, was intended merely to get rid, so far as they were concerned, of the difficulties imposed on persons desiring to trade in particular towns by the special "charters, bye-laws, and privileges" which existed in those particular localities. To hold that this particular class of persons are to be exempted from the necessity of taking out a licence or otherwise conforming with the provisions of the general laws of the Kingdom, would be to my mind the ne plus ultra of absurdity. In my opinion, the magistrate was right in the decision he came to, and the conviction must be upheld.

WRIGHT, J.—I am of the same opinion.

[During the argument it was stated that the appellant had from time to time received notice from the Excise authorities to take out a licence, but that on his pleading the statute they had previously held the exemption claimed to be good. His brother carried on the business of a silversmith, and for the same reason the Inland Revenue authorities had not insisted upon certain payments.]

Solicitors for the appellant, Tiddeman & Enthoven.

Solicitor for the Excise authorities, The City Solicitor.

Prob. Div. & Adm. Div. Probate. } Aug. 10, 1896.

In the Goods of HUNT. (a.)

Probate—Company executors—Administration with the will annexed to nominee—Company sole surety.

A testator appointed a limited company trustees and executors of his will. The court on motion, upon evidence of the sufficiency of the company and its power to act, granted letters of administration with the will annexed to a nominee of the company with the company as sole surety.

Motion for a grant of letters of administration with the will annexed of William Henry Hunt, deceased, to James Archibald Stirling, the nominee of The Trustees, Executors, and Securities Insurance Co. (Limited), executors of the will, and that the said company might be permitted to be surety for the said administrator, and that further surety might be dispensed with.

William Henry Hunt, late of Douglas, in the Isle of Man, died on the 14th of June, 1896, having duly executed his last will on the 2nd of February, 1891, whereby he appointed the said company to be executors and trustees thereof.

On the 22nd of July, 1896, the company, by deed-poll under their seal, appointed J. A. Stirling, their general manager, to be their syndic for the purpose of obtaining letters of administration of the estate with the will annexed for their use and benefit.

By the memorandum of association the objects for which the company was established were stated to be inter alia (section 3, sub-section 1) "the undertaking and executing of the office of trustee, executor, receiver, and liquidator; and the undertaking and executing of all kinds of trusts, both public and private; and the performing and carrying out of the various kinds of business incident and connected therewith, either gratuitously or otherwise," and (sub-section 21) "doing all such things as are incidental or conducive to the attainment of the above objects."

A copy of the last report, balance-sheet, and profit and loss account of the company was produced, showing that the liabilities of the company, apart from their share capital stood on the 31st of May last at £476,108, and the assets were taken at £975,470, and the company had, in addition to these assets, an uncalled capital of £600,000.

The amount of the deceased's estate was sworn under £5,000.

Bargrave Deane, for the company.—In similar cases it has been hitherto usual for two directors of the company to become sureties, but there is no reason why the company should not be accepted as sole surety, for, although they have not express power to become surety, section 3, sub-section 1 and section 31, by implication, confer such power. But for a technicality the company would be the executors. The administrator will, of course, give the usual bond.

BARNES, J., granted the motion.

Solicitors, Fishers.

(a.) Reported by J. GERARD LAING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Court of Appeal.

From Q. B. Div. (Lord Esher, M.R., and Lopes and Rigby, L.JJ.) [and Q. B. Div. (Pollock, B., and Bruce, J.)] } July 2; Dec. 3.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL v. BARON WOLVERTON. (a.)

Inland Revenue—Succession duty—"New succession"—Annuity—"Valuable consideration in money or money's worth"—Succession Duty Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict. c. 51), ss, 2, 15, 17, 18.

A testator, a peer, by his will bequeathed his residuary estate to his widow for life, with remainder to his nephew, if living, but, if not, to the person who should then be the testator's right heir at common law absolutely. The nephew died without issue in the lifetime of the testator's widow, and the testator's nieces having survived the widow were then the testator's co-heiresses and right heir at common law. The defendant succeeded to the title, and a deed of settlement was then executed by which the widow assigned her life interest in certain shares and the nieces and the defendant assigned all their interest under the will, subject to the life interest of the widow, to trustees upon trust, by clause 1, to pay out of the income (inter alia) an annuity of £15,000 during the widow's life to the defendant for life; and by clause 2, after the death of the widow out of the income "to continue to pay the said annuity of £15,000" to the person for the time being holding the title, with trusts over. Upon the death of the testator's widow legacy duty was paid on his estate, and the Crown claimed succession duty in respect of the annuity which the defendant then became entitled to receive under clause 2 of the deed.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL and W. F. BARRY, Esqs., Barristers at-Law.

Held, that the annuity under clause 2 was not the same as the annuity under clause 1, as the former was payable out of the estate of the nieces and the latter out of the life estate of the widow, the annuities being also limited in favour of different persons, and that therefore there was a "succession" within section 2 of the Succession Duty Act, 1853, in respect of the annuity under clause 2 of the deed; that the deed did not create an "alienation not conferring a new succession" within the meaning of section 15; that the deed was not a "contract made for valuable consideration in money or money's worth" so as to come within the exemption in section 17; and that the payment of legacy duty upon the testator's estate on the death of his widow did not bring the case within the exemption in section 18, as the legacy duty was not paid "in respect of the same acquisition of the same property."

Held, therefore, that the defendant was liable to pay succession duty.

This was an information by the Attorney-General, claiming on behalf of her Majesty succession and estate duty upon a certain annuity of £15,000.

The facts in the information, in so far as they are material were as follows: It set out a deed of arrangement, dated the 31st of December, 1888, between Lady Wolverton (since deceased), widow of George Grenfell, second Baron Wolverton, of the first part; Constance Gertrude Glyn, Florence Elizabeth Mary Portal, Edith Theodosia Glyn, Mabel Glyn, and Beatrice Ellerie Fetherstonhaugh (nieces of the aforesaid Baron Wolverton, who were daughters of St. Leger Glyn, a younger brother of the second Baron Wolverton, and who may conveniently be called the co-heiresses, of the second part; Albert Henry Wilmot Williams, William Wyndham Portal (husband of the said Florence E. M. Portal) and Horatio Noble Pyne, trustees of the marriage settlement of the said Beatrice Ellerie Fetherstonhaugh, of the third part; the said Lady Wolverton, Sir Richard George Glyn, and the Hon. Pascoe Charles Glyn, of the fourth part; the defendant Frederic Baron Wolverton, of the fifth part; the said Lady Wolverton (the defendant), the said Pascoe Charles Glyn, and Cecil Alfred Grenfell, of the sixth part; and the said Albert Henry Wilmot Williams and William Wyndham Portal, Pascoe St. Leger Grenfell and the said Horatio Noble Pyne, of the seventh part. This deed recited the will of the said George Grenfell, second Baron Wolverton, dated the 16th of January, 1885, whereby he bequeathed all his share and interest in the banking company of Glyn, Mills, Currie, & Co., to his nephew, Henry Richard Glyn, who, on the testator's death, became third Baron Wolverton, upon trust to receive the annual produce thereof until the 31st of January, 1892, if he should so long live, and to invest so much of that produce as in any year exceeded £15,000 per annum in Government securities in the names of himself and another trustee, and to accumulate the produce thereof in like manner for his own use and benefit until the 31st of January, 1892. The will then disposes of the residuary estate of the testator by bequeathing it to the testator's wife for life, with remainder to the said Henry Richard Glyn, if living; but, if not, to the person who should then be the testator's right heir at common law for his absolute use and benefit. The deed then recited that the testator died on the 6th of November, 1887, and that on the 2nd of July, 1888, Henry Richard Glyn died without issue, having succeeded to the title; also that the parties of the second part were co-heiresses-at-law and "right heir at common law of the testator." That under these circumstances it was apprehended that according to the true construction of the said will, except in the event of all the parties of the second part dying in the lifetime of Lady Wolverton without leaving issue at her death, no part of the residuary estate of the testator, including the bank shares, would devolve or come to the person for the time being holding the title of Baron Wolverton under the trusts of the will, contrary to the supposed intention of the testator. That in pursuance of an arrangement entered into between Lady Wolverton, the co-heiresses, and Frederic Baron Wolverton for the purpose of determining all questions relating to the residuary estate of the testator, and with the object of carrying into effect his supposed intention, Lady Wolverton as to her life interest in the said bank shares, and the co-heiresses as to their respective shares and interests of and in the residuary estate of the testator, inclusive of the bank shares, and Frederic Baron Wolverton as to his contingent interest in the residuary estate inclusive as aforesaid, had agreed to make such assignments as were thereinafter contained to the parties thereto of the sixth part as trustees to the intent that the premises intended to be assigned might be held upon the trusts and with and subject to the powers and provisions therein contained. The deed then further recited the marriage settlement of Beatrice Ellerie Fetherstonhaugh, by which all her interest in the residuary estate of the testator was assigned to the parties to the said deed of arrangement of the third part, and then the operative part is as follows: Lady Wolverton assigned to the parties of the sixth part the income to accrue during her life on the bank shares and investments representing the same as from the 31st of August, 1888, to be held upon trusts after declared; the parties of the second and third parts assigned all their respective interests under the will in the residuary estate of the testator and in the bank shares subject to the prior life interests of Lady Wolverton to the parties of the sixth part, to be held upon trusts after declared; and the said Frederic Baron Wolverton assigned all his interest under the trusts of the will to the same parties of the sixth part, to be held upon the trusts after declared.

The trusts of the property so assigned, and thereinafter called "the settled property," were (so far as is material to be here stated) declared as follows: By clause 1, subject to the life interests of Lady Wolverton, the settled property was to be held upon trust to pay out of the income during the life of Lady Wolverton an annuity of £15,000 to Frederic, Baron Wolverton, for life, determinable in certain events, and upon further trusts during her life to pay an annuity of £15,000 to Mrs. Portal for her separate use, a like annuity to the trustees of Mrs. Fetherstonhaugh, and an annuity of £1,000, to be increased on marriage to £1,500 to each of the other co-heiresses, and upon further trust during the life of Lady Wolverton to pay out of the annual income the clear yearly sum of £35,000 to the parties thereto of the seventh part (thereinafter called "the trustees of the accumulated fund"), to be held and applied by them in accordance with the trusts after declared. And certain further trusts were declared with regard to the ultimate balance (if any) of the income of the settled property during the life of Lady Wolverton.

By clause 2, after the death of Lady Wolverton, until the sums of £100,000 thereinafter mentioned, and all duty thereon, and all costs and claims thereinafter mentioned, should have been satisfied, and until the trust for accumulation thereinafter directed should have ceased, the trusts of the settled property were as follows: After payment of duty out of the annual income, to continue to pay the said annuity of £15,000 (which "continuing annuity" was thereinafter called "the said annity of £15,000") in like manner as thereinbefore provided with regard to Frederic Baron Wolverton, to the person for the time being holding the title of Baron Wolverton during his life. Then follow trusts for investment of the accumulated fund, and the accumulation of the income, and upon the death of Lady Wolverton for the payment to the co-heiresses—i.e., the parties of the second part (but in the case of Beatrice Ellerie Fetherstonhaugh, to her trustees) of £100,000 each, with further trusts, in case the accumulated fund should not at such death be sufficient to satisfy the said sums of £100,000 and all duty thereon, to further accumulate and satisfy all claims in respect thereof, and all duty, and subject thereto to pay over the surplus of the accumulated fund to the trustees of the settled property—i.e., the parties of the sixth part; and the ultimate trust was to invest in freehold hereditaments in England and Wales to be held to the use of Frederic Baron Wolverton, during his life, with remainders in tail male and remainder over. The information then alleged that the arrangement made by the deed of the 31st of December, 1888, took effect, and the defendant enjoyed the annuity of £15,000 per annum stipulated by clause 1 of the indenture, until it determined by the death of Lady Wolverton on the 10th of January, 1894, at which time the "accumulated fund" consisted of £118,007 6s. 8d. Consols, and £70,374 14s. 6d. Metropolitan Three per Cent. Stock, and of certain cash. That upon the death of Lady Wolverton (the trust for accumulation still continuing) the trusts declared by the second clause of the deed of the 31st of December, 1888, came into operation, and the defendant, as the person for the time being holding the title of Baron Wolverton, became entitled in possession to another annuity of £15,000 out of the annual income of the trust funds called the "settled property"; that under these circumstances succession and estate duties had become payable in respect of the annual sum of £15,000, which the defendant, the present Baron Wolverton, became entitled to receive under clause 2 of the deed from the date of Lady Wolverton's death, until the trust for accumulation should have ceased, which annual sum was derived by him from the parties of the second part to the said indenture (being the co-heiresses of George Grenfell, Baron Wolverton) as predecessors, or, if not, then from Lady Wolverton, or from the said co-heiresses and Lady Wolverton jointly.

The defendant in his answer denied that the deed in question created any succession under section 2 of the Succession Duty Act of 1853, and said that, if it did, it was created for a valuable consideration and was therefore not chargeable with duty under that Act.

It appeared that legacy duty on the testators' estate was paid on the death of Lady Wolverton.

Sir R. E. Webster, A.G., Sir R. B. Finlay, S.G., and Vaughan Hawkins, for the Crown.—The defendant is liable to pay succession duty in respect of the annuity of £15,000 as it is a new annuity derived out of the estate of the co-heiresses, who were his predecessors, and of whom the defendant is the successor. The annuity granted by Lady Wolverton under clause 1 only came out of her estate for life and ceased with her death; this, therefore, is not a continuation of such annuity. The present annuity comes out of the estate of the co-heiresses to the defendant under a disposition made by them to take effect on the death of Lady Wolverton. It comes out of a different property and its destiny is different: Attorney-General v. Floyer, 10 W. R. 762, 9 H. L. Cas. 477; Attorney-General v. Cecil, 18 W. R. 949, L. R. 5 Ex. 263. This was not a contract for money or money's worth, and therefore does not come within the exemption contained in section 17 of the Succession Duty Act, 1853: Stockley v. Parsons, 38 W. R. 712, 45 Ch. D. 51; Floyer v. Bankes, 12 W. R. 28, 3 De G. J. & S. 306; Davis v. Angel, 10 W. R. 722, 4 De G. F. & J. 524. Lord Wolverton's interest was not one in point of law, but was a mere remote contingency: Tetley v. Tetley, 4 Bing. 214. It is no answer to the claim that legacy duty was paid on the death of Lady Wolverton. The co-heiresses became legatees when she died, but they settled the property on the defendant, thus creating the relation of predecessors and successor: Attorney-General v. Mitchell, 29 W. R. 683, 6 Q. B. D. 548. Moreover, the legacy duty was not paid "in respect of the same acquisition of the same property" within section 18 of the Succession Duty Act, 1853.

Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., C. A. Cripps, Q.C., and Danckwerts, for the defendant.—Succession duty is not payable by the defendant. Only one annuity was created by the deed—namely, that of £15,000; there is no new annuity, and therefore the case does not come within the Succession Duty Act. Attorney-General v. Cecil is distinguishable, for there it was admitted that there was a new succession. Legacy duty has been paid upon the residuary estate by the co-heiresses, and therefore they could not be liable for succession duty as well. The defendant is in the same position as they would be, being a purchaser for money or money's worth: Solicitor-General v. Law Reversionary Interest Society, 21 W. R. 854, L. R. 8 Ex. 233; Attorney-General v. Littledale, 20 W. R. 473, L. R. 5 H. L. 290; Fryer v. Morland, 25 W. R. 21, 3 Ch. D. 675.

Sir R. B. Finlay, S.G., replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

July 2.—POLLOCK, B., delivered the judgment of the court. [Having stated the facts as above set out the learned judge proceeded:—] The defendant denied his liability upon two grounds—first, that the annuity of £15,000, to which he became entitled upon the death of Lady Wolverton, was one and the same annuity as was created and granted by the first clause of the deed, and, therefore, on the death of Lady Wolverton there was no succession; secondly, that the arrangement which was carried out by the deed of the 31st of December, 1888, was between Lady Wolverton, the co-heiresses, and the defendant, for valuable consideration, and that the defendant and the co-heiresses were purchasers for value; and, therefore upon the true construction of the Succession Duty Acts and also under section 17 of the Act of 1853, no duty was payable.

For the determination of the first of these questions we must turn to section 2 of the Succession Duty Act, 1853, which provides as follows: "Every past or future disposition of property, by reason whereof any person has or shall become beneficially entitled to any property or the income thereof upon the death of any person dying after the time appointed for the commencement of this Act, either immediately or after any interval, either certainly or contingently, and either originally or by way of substitutive limitation, and every devolution by law of any beneficial interest in property or the income thereof upon the death of any person dying after the time appointed for the commencement of this Act to any other person in possession or expectancy, shall be deemed to have conferred or to confer on the person entitled by reason of any such disposition or devolution, a succession; and the term successor shall denote the person so entitled, and the term predecessor shall denote the settlor, disposer, testator, obligor, ancestor, or other person from whom the interest of the successor is or shall be derived." Before effect can be given to this section the first thing to inquire is, Who is the successor and who is the predecessor of the annuity in question? If there be a succession at all there is no doubt that the defendant is the successor. If, however, the annuity to which he is said to succeed is one and the same annuity as was granted by the first clause of the deed, the predecessor was George, second Baron Wolverton. The real question would seem to be, What was the interest which the defendant took under the deed upon the death of Lady Wolverton? It is true that the defendant or his children might, under the extremely improbable event of the issue of all the co-heiresses failing, have succeeded to the residuary estate of George, second Baron Wolverton, but the annuity created by the second clause of the deed was, in the event which happened, an annuity derived out of the estate of the co-heiresses, and after the death of Lady Wolverton came direct to the defendant. It differs also from the annuity created by the first clause of the deed in this, that it is limited, not to the defendant, but to the person for the time being holding the barony of Wolverton, so that, in the event of the defendant dying during the lifetime of Lady Wolverton it would have gone, after her death, to his successor in the title. A further distinction was pointed out to us during the argument between the annuity created by the first clause and that which is given by the second clause of the deed. The former is charged only upon the testator's share and interest in the bank, whereas the latter is charged upon the same share and interest in the bank and also upon the whole of the residuary estate of the testator and any future investments representing it. In this particular case this variation may be of no great moment, but on principle the defendant, should the interest in the bank decrease in value, derives a new and further security from the provision made by the co-heiresses.

These facts lead us to the conclusion that the annuity to which the defendant succeeded was not the same as was granted by the first clause of the deed, but was a new annuity created by the deed, and that when the defendant became entitled to it, it was as successor, and that either the co-heiresses or they and Lady Wolverton together, were the predecessors. In the case of Attorney-General v. Floyer, Lord Cranworth in his judgment as Lord Chancellor, after referring to Lord Braybrooke v. Attorney-General, 9 W. R. 601, 9 H. L. Cas. 150, says: "The decision of this house shows that in order to ascertain who is the settlor, within the second section—i.e., the settlor 'from whom the interest of the successor is derived,' we must inquire not who are the parties by whose conveyance the estate has been created, but who is the conveying party out of whose estate the interest in question has been derived." Applying this to the present case, the interest which the defendant took after Lady Wolverton's death was derived, not from Lord Wolverton, the testator, but from the co-heiresses, out of whose interests it came. It is not to be expected that any case can be cited in which the facts are identical with those now before the court, but on principle it seems to us that the present case is governed by the decision in the case of Attorney-General v. Cecil.

With regard to the second point urged by the defendant, although it was based upon the true construction of the Succession Duty Acts as well as upon the provision contained in section 17 of the Act of 1853, it will be convenient to refer to the language of that section, the material part of which is as follows: "No bond or contract made by any person bonâ fide for valuable consideration in money or money's worth, for the payment of money or money's worth after the death of any other person, shall create the relation of predecessor and successor between the person making such bond or contract and the person to or with whom the same shall be made; but any disposition or devolution of the moneys payable under such . . . bond or contract, if otherwise such as in itself to create a succession within the provisions of this Act, shall be deemed to confer a succession." Apart from section 17 it would seem to need no authority to show that when property passes from one person to another by sale or mortgage for a money consideration, no succession takes place. The question, however, has been fully dealt with by Jessel, M.R., in Fryer v. Morland.

In the present case it is sufficient to say that the effect of the deed cannot be said to amount to a sale, and that Lady Wolverton and the co-heiresses were in no sense vendors, nor was the defendant a vendee. When, however, we turn to section 17 the words used are that no contract made by any person bonâ fide "for valuable consideration in money or money's worth, for the payment of money or money's worth after the death of any other person shall create the relation of predecessor and successor"; and it was argued on behalf of the defendant that there was a consideration in "money or money's worth" for the re-settlement by the deed, and that in effect the defendant and the co-heiresses were purchasers for value; that each party had a spes successionis and as such, had interests which were "money's worth"; that the five co-heiresses acquired an interest in £100,000, which, under the will, had they died first, would not have come to them, and also got the annuities out of income to which, under the will, Lady Wolverton was entitled. In support of this view the dictum of Lord Westbury in Floyer v. Bankes, 3 De. G. J. & S. 306, was cited, where, at p. 312, speaking of money or money's worth, he says: "These words appear to have been selected for the purpose of excluding the consideration of marriage"; but the case itself is a decision in favour of the Crown. The remarks of Lord Westbury in that case upon section 17 are so valuable as bearing upon the present case that it is worth while to give them more fully. He says: "To explain the intention and the effect of the 17th section, it is desirable to make a few remarks on the general object and design of the Succession Duty Act. In framing the Act, the word "succession" was adopted for the purpose of denoting any property passing upon death from one person to another by virtue of any gift or descent, or of any contract not being a bonâ fide contract of purpose. Money or property, the right to receive or possess which might arise upon death under a contract made bonâ fide in return for other money or property, was not as between the contracting parties to be treated as a succession; but it was not intended to except property arising upon death under contracts for valuable considerations generally. Marriage is by the law of England a valuable consideration for a contract, and that of the highest kind; but property arising under a contract in consideration of marriage is not excepted, even in favour of persons coming directly within that consideration. A contract to be excepted must be bonâ fide made in consideration of money or money's worth, words which appear to have been selected for the purpose of excluding the consideration of marriage. Where, under a contract, money or money's worth is to be received by one person from another on the expiration of some life or lives, and such contract is made bonâ fide for the consideration of money or money's worth, the 17th section declares that the relation of predecessor and successor shall not arise between the person contracting to pay or transfer and the person entitled to receive, otherwise post obit bonds and contracts for the purchase of deferred annuities would create succession. So, if the owner of a freehold estate in fee simple contracts to sell it for a sum of money subject to and reserving a life interest in himself, the relation of predecessor and successor will not arise between the vendor and the purchaser. So, if two persons contract with a third for a purchase of a freehold estate and pay for it jointly, directing the conveyance to be made to one for life, remainder to the other in fee, there will not be the relation of predecessor and successor between the vendor and the remainderman, although it is clear that the remainder in fee will be a succession. These are examples of the purposes which the 17th section was intended to answer. It is true that if the words of the 17th section do, according to their ordinary meaning, apply to and exclude other cases than those to which it was intended to be limited, the words being found in an Act taxing the subject, must not be restrained by construction, even although the giving them their full latitude of meaning may defeat the object of the Act. On the other hand, the word 'contract' in the 17th section must not, for the purposes of exemption, be extended beyond those limits which the context plainly shows to be the true meaning and intent of the words."

The view which has been taken in these cases is supported by older decisions under the Annuity Act, (53 Geo. 3 c. 141). Section 10 excepted annuities "granted without regard to pecuniary consideration or money's worth" from the operation of the statute, and it was held in several instances that annuities granted in consideration of the conveyance of an estate, or as part of a family arrangement, or in consideration of marriage, were granted without regard to money's worth within the meaning of the Act, and consequently did not require enrolment: see James v. James, 2 Brod. & B. 702; Blake v. Attersoll, 2 B. & C. 875; Tetley v. Tetley; Mestayer v. Biggs, 1 C. M. & R. 110; Massey v. Nanney, 4 Scott, 258. It seems to us that, according both to reason and authority, the Crown is entitled to judgment for the amount claimed.

Judgment for the Crown.

Lord Wolverton appealed.

Dec. 2, 3.—Cozens-Hardy, Q.C., and C. A. Cripps, Q.C. (Danckwerts with them) for the appellant.

Sir R. B. Finlay, S.G., Sir R. E. Webster, A.G., and Vaughan Hawkins for the Crown.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—Taking the sections in their inverse order, it is admitted that section 18 does not apply to this case unless the case can be brought within section 15. It may be that even if it is within section 15, section 18 does not apply, but we have not got to deal with that here. If we decide that the case is not within section 15, we have no need further to consider section 18.

Now, we have already intimated that section 17 cannot apply to such a case as this, because that section cannot apply to such a family settlement as this, which is not a contract between any parties such as is described in that section. Therefore the question before us depends upon sections 2 and 15 alone. It was argued that this case was not within section 2 because there is but one succession or a continuing succession. If therefore we determine that there are two successions and that the one does not continue at all, then that argument falls to the ground and the case is primâ facie within section 2. If the case is primâ facie within section 2, does it come within section 15? It is said on the part of the Crown that it does not. First of all it is said that we should construe section 15 according to the view of Martin, B., in Attorney-General v. Cecil, 18 W. R. 949, at p. 951, L. R. 5 Ex. 263, at p. 272, which was that section 15 does not apply where there is an alienation upon a family settlement, but that it refers to an alienation in the ordinary sense, as a sale of the whole interest to a third person before it comes into possession. But the Crown goes further and says that the case is not within section 15 because, if there has been an alienation, it is an alienation which confers a new succession.

Now we come to the deed. There was the first annuity. Then that was done away with and the second annuity created. Is the succession in the second case the same as the first? Supposing that we do not decide this case upon the larger proposition of Martin, B., then it is said that there is a new succession because the two annuities are in favour of different persons. That is true. One is in favour of a particular Lord Wolverton, but not in favour of any succeeding Lord Wolverton; the second is in favour of the person for the time being holding the title of Lord Wolverton. Then it is said that the two annuities are payable out of different sources. The first was not payable out of the estate of the coheiresses; the second is. The second was payable out of a much larger fund than the first. There is, therefore, a new succession. Section 15 only applies to a case where there is not a new succession. It follows, therefore, that either under the larger proposition of Martin, B., or under the second objection stated above, this case is not within section 15. If so, then it is within section 2, and the Crown is right in this case.

Now, I shrink from deciding the construction of this Act in all succeeding cases; but the principles which we lay down must determine all cases which can be brought within them. As regards those principles we have to choose between the proposition of Martin, B., in Attorney-General v. Cecil, and that of Lord Wensleydale in Braybrooke v. Attorney-General, 9 H. L. C. 150, at p. 178, two very formidable authorities. When I find that Martin, B., laid down a proposition which is perfectly clear in its terms, and that not one of the other judges who were sitting with him dissented from it, when I find that the proposition laid down by Lord Wensleydale was dissented from by the other lords who were sitting with him, and by succeeding Lord Chancellors and law lords, I cannot adopt Lord Wensleydale's view and I must adopt that of Martin, B. I should therefore be prepared to decide this case upon the proposition laid down by Martin, B., and in any future case raising that same point I should be prepared to act upon that proposition. But even if that proposition were not adopted, it is clear that in this case, as we have already pointed out, there is a new succession, and therefore the case is not within section 15. The appeal must, therefore, be dismissed.

LOPES, L.J.—A great many questions of considerable difficulty have been discussed in this case, as a great many of them are absolutely unnecessary for the determination of this case, and about them I propose to say nothing. There was a family settlement in the Wolverton family in 1888, and there are two clauses in that settlement which are material. They relate to an annuity of £15,000. It is said against the Crown that there is only one annuity. It is said on the other side that there are two annuities. In my opinion clause 2 of the settlement deals with an annuity granted out of the estate of the co-heiresses, and clause 1 deals with another annuity granted out of the life estate of the widow. Those are two distinct annuities arising out of different funds, arising at different times, and limited in favour of different persons. If that is so, there must be a succession within section 2. It is said, however, section 15 applies. Section 15 only applies if the alienation is one not conferring a new succession. Now, I agree with the Master of the Rolls that a new succession has been created here within section 2, and it seems clear that section 15 can have no application to this case. That section appears to me to have for its object the protection of the Crown for the purpose of putting it in the same position where alienation has taken place as it would have occupied if there had been no alienation.

Now the only other sections which have been discussed are sections 17 and 18. It is admitted that section 18 can have no application unless this case can be brought within section 15. I have already said that, in my opinion, it cannot be brought within section 15, and therefore there is an end to section 18. Then as to section 17, it seems to me impossible to contend that a family arrangement such as this can be brought within that section. The most material word is "contract," and I do not think that this case can be brought within the words of that section.

RIGBY, L.J.—I am of the same opinion. With regard to the question of there being a continuing annuity I do not think it is necessary to add anything. There never was anything more unlike one continuing annuity than this. As to section 17, I consider that there is nothing like a contract for payment of money or money's worth on the death of the Dowager Lady Wolverton. The real question is whether the case comes within section 15 or not. Now, in the first place, I adopt the decision of Sir George Jessel in In re Cooper and Allen's Contract, 25 W. R. 301, 4 Ch. D. 802, at p. 824, with reference to the connection of the word "alienation" with the words "not conferring a new succession." I find that I am supported in that view by Lord Wensleydale, who has been cited as an authority upon a different point, in Braybrooke v. Attorney-General, and I think I am right in saying that it is a view which has been adopted over and over again, and I adopt it as part of the reasoning upon which I found my judgment here. Section 15 deals with a case in which the alienation does not confer a new succession within section 2, as it was foreseen that, if that were not provided for, the Crown might lose duty to which it is entitled. That seems to me to be the reasoning of Martin, B., in Attorney-General v. Cecil, and I do not see how it can be controverted. Section 15 is only to apply when section 2 of its own force would not apply. Putting aside section 15 for the moment, Does section 2 apply? Putting the question in that form I do not suppose anyone would argue that it does not. Here are certain co-heiresses who, in the events which have happened, may be treated as the owners subject to the life interest of the Dowager Lady Wolverton. That being so, they create for the first time an annuity which is vested in the present Lord Wolverton. He takes it from them by virtue of a settlement, and he comes plainly within the language of section 2; and that, it seems to me, is sufficient to enable us to say that the case cannot come within section 15.

Now it seems to me that "alienation" in section 15 cannot be treated in its most general sense. If one can find one instance of alienation which would not create a new succession then section 15 would be satisfied. One case was pointed out—namely, where the whole property is sold out and out; then, although there is a transfer of a reversion which will only come into possession on the death of a living person, the purchase does not fall within the Act. That is a case which will satisfy the word "alienation." There may be other dispositions.

I have given the grounds which appear to me to be satisfactory for the determination of this case. But I go further, and say that I am inclined to think that Martin, B., was right in the next step which he took—namely, in distinguishing "alienation" from family settlement. I do not think the word alienation was ever intended to include such a family arrangement as this. Every family settlement must contain some elements of alienation, but I am not satisfied, though I do not rely entirely upon it, that Martin, B., was at all wrong when he said that the section was looking to an alienation out and out. I am aware of the dictum of Lord Wensleydale in a different direction, still I am not satisfied, if ever the case comes up for decision, that Martin, B., was not right in that. I principally rely upon this being a succession within section 2, a succession—that is, from the co-heiresses to Lord Wolverton—which had no existence antecedently to the family settlement. It is therefore a new succession, and that is enough to decide this case.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the Crown, Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

Solicitors for the defendant, Waterhouse, Winterbotham, Harrison, & Harper.

From Chambers.
(Lord Esher, M.R., and Lopes, L.J.) — Jan. 15.

In re AN ARBITRATION BETWEEN SPILLERS & BAKER (LIMITED) AND H. LEETHAM & SONS. (a.)

Arbitration—Practice—Special case—Power of court to order—Question of law—No decision by arbitrator—Arbitration Act, 1889 (52 & 53 Vict. c. 49), s. 19.

The court or a judge has power under section 19 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, to order an arbitrator to state a case for the opinion of the court on questions of law submitted to the arbitrator by one of the parties to the arbitration, although the arbitrator has not given any decision on the question of law, and has not indicated what his decision will be.

Appeal of H. Leetham & Sons from an order made by Collins, J., in chambers.

It appeared from the affidavits which had been filed that the parties had entered into a contract for the purchase and sale of a cargo of bran. The contract provided that in the event of any dispute arising under it it should be settled according to the rules of the Hull Corn Trade Association. These rules provided that disputes should be referred to two arbitrators, one to be appointed by each party, and in the event of difference between the arbitrators they were to appoint an umpire. The rules further provided that either party had a right to appeal to the executive committee of the association. The committee were bound to affirm the award unless two-thirds of the members of the committee were of opinion that the award should be reversed.

(a.) Reported by F. O. ROBINSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Disputes arose under the contract which were referred to two arbitrators, who appointed an umpire. The umpire made his award and there was an appeal to the executive committee. The facts of the case were gone into by the committee, and on the facts certain submissions of law were made to the committee by the respondents. The committee had not given any decision upon the points of law nor had any intimation been given as to what the decision would be. The respondents then applied at chambers for an order directing the committee to state a case for the opinion of the court on the questions of law which had been submitted. The master made the order asked for and the judge affirmed the order.

The Arbitration Act, 1889, s. 19, enacts that: "Any referee, arbitrator, or umpire may at any stage of the proceedings under a reference, and shall if so directed by the court or a judge, state in the form of a special case for the opinion of the court any question of law arising in the course of the reference."

Montague Lush, for the appellants.—This application for a special case is premature, for until the decision of the arbitrators is given on the questions of law it is impossible to say whether the decision may not be in favour of the applicants.

He referred to In re An Arbitration between Gray, Laurier, & Co. and Boustead & Co., 8 Times L. R. 703.

R. M. Bray, for the respondents.—Questions of law have arisen in this case, and therefore, although the arbitrator has not yet given his decision, the case comes within section 19 of the Act and a special case may be ordered. Otherwise an arbitrator need only refuse to give a decision on the legal points raised in order to defeat the operation of the Act.

A. Neilson, for the executive committee.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—The affidavits in this case are somewhat conflicting, but it appears that all the facts in dispute were before the executive committee, and that the points of law were taken before the committee. The committee did not say which way they would decide those points, nor did they give any indication as to what their ultimate decision would be.

It is said that under these circumstances the judge in chambers had no jurisdiction to order the committee to state a case in which the points of law could be raised for decision by the court. If that is so, arbitrators can always prevent any case being stated on any point of law which may palpably arise on the facts of a case. The remarks of Lord Halsbury in Tabernacle Permanent Building Society v. Knight, 41 W. R. 207, [1892] A. C. 298, have a bearing upon this question, although in that case it was not necessary to decide the question now before us. We therefore have now to decide the question. In my opinion it is not a condition precedent to an application for an order directing an arbitrator to state a case that the arbitrator shall have given his decision upon the point raised, or shall have given an indication of what his decision will be.

Therefore, upon the facts in this case the judge had jurisdiction to make the order appealed from, and I cannot see anything wrong in the way in which he exercised his discretion.

It has been stated that this executive committee intend to make rules with the object of preventing anyone who appears before them from applying to a judge to order a case to be stated. As to that I have only to say that the courts will pay no attention to any such rules, and will treat them as absolutely futile.

LOPES, L.J.—The question in this case is as to the power of a judge to order an arbitrator to state a special case on a point of law when no opinion has been expressed by the arbitrator adverse to the party applying for the special case. All the facts appear to have been brought before the executive committee on which the question of law arose, and then the question of law also was raised. If an arbitrator, by declining to give any opinion on points of law which are taken before him, can prevent any application for an order to him to state a case, it would render section 19 of the Arbitration Act, 1889, useless. A party would be absolutely precluded from raising a question of law which the Legislature intended that the party should have an opportunity of raising.

I am of opinion that there was power to make the order appealed from, and the judge in chambers rightly exercised his discretion in making the order.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Pritchard & Sons, for Jackson & Cottrell, Hull.

Solicitors for the executive committee, J. & A. A. Tilleard.

Solicitors for the respondents, Chester & Co., for Holden, Son, & Hodgson, Hull.

From Q. B. Div. (Lord Esher, M.R., and Lopes and Rigby, L.JJ.) — Dec. 15.

CHICAGO RAILWAY TERMINAL ELEVATOR CO. v. COMMISSIONERS OF INLAND REVENUE. (a.)

Inland revenue—Stamp duty—Marketable security—Bond of foreign company — Security "issued," "offered for subscription," or "assigned or transferred" in United Kingdom—Stamp Act, 1891 (54 & 55 Vict. c. 39), s. 82, sub-section 1 (b).

An arrangement for reconstructing an English company and transferring its business, property, and liabilities to a new company formed in America provided that the debenture-holders of the old company should receive in lieu of their debentures bonds issued by the new company. The holders in London of a debenture of the old company lodged it with the London agent of the new company, who sent it to the officials of the new company in Chicago, and such officials presented it there to a trustee for the debenture-holders and received in exchange from him a bond which they sent to their agent in London, by whom it was given in London to the owners in exchange for their debenture.

Held, that this bond did not come within section 82, sub-section 1 (b), of the Stamp Act, 1891, as having been either "issued," "offered for subscription," or "assigned or transferred" in the United Kingdom.

Judgment of the Queen's Bench Division (Pollock, B., and Bruce, J.), ante, p. 138, affirmed.

Appeal from the judgment of a divisional court (Pollock, B., and Bruce, J.) on a special case stated by the Commissioners of Inland Revenue under section 13 of the Stamp Act, 1891, ante, p. 138.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The instrument upon which the Commissioners were required to express their opinion was a bond for 500dols. under the seal of the Chicago Railway Terminal Elevator Co.

The question was whether the bond was either "issued in the United Kingdom" or "offered for subscription and given or delivered to a subscriber in the United Kingdom," or "assigned, transferred, or in any manner negotiated in the United Kingdom," so as to be chargeable with stamp duty as a marketable security under section 82 of the Stamp Act, 1891.

The circumstances under which the bond was issued are fully set out ante, p. 139.

The Commissioners were of opinion that the bond was issued in the United Kingdom, and that it was, therefore, chargeable with duty under section 82, and they assessed the duty at 11s.; but they stated a case to enable the company, who were dissatisfied with the assessment, to appeal.

The Queen's Bench Division were of opinion that the bond was neither issued nor offered for subscription nor assigned in the United Kingdom, and they accordingly held that it was not chargeable with stamp duty.

The Commissioners appealed.

Sir R. B. Finlay, S.G., and Danckwerts, for the appellants.

Cohen, Q.C., and T. T. Paine, for the respondents.

Lord ESHER, M.R.—This seems to me to be a perfectly clear case, and I have no doubt that the judgment of the Divisional Court is right. The question resolves itself into one of fact, and in my opinion the facts stated in the case show that this bond was not issued in the United Kingdom, but that it was issued in America. Neither was it offered for subscription or assigned in the United Kingdom. The provisions of the Stamp Act therefore do not apply. The appeal must be dismissed.

LOPES and RIGBY, L.JJ., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitor for the appellants, The Solicitor of Inland Revenue.

Solicitors for the respondents, Paines, Blyth, & Huxtable.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. } Chitty, J. } Dec. 16, 17; Jan. 13.

LIST v. THARP. (a.)

Metropolis—Building—Party structure notice—Adjoining owner—Possession of premises under building agreement—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.), s. 90, s. 5, sub-sections 29, 32.

The defendant, who was owner of premises in London, desiring to do certain work upon a wall dividing his premises from the adjoining premises, duly served C. O. with the notice required by section 90 of the London Building Act, 1894, to be served by a "building owner" upon the "adjoining owner," but omitted to give any such notice to the plaintiff, who at the time the notice was served on C. O. was in possession of the adjoining premises under a building agreement with C. O. for a lease to the plaintiff for a long term of years. By such agreement the grant of the lease was made conditional upon the production of a surveyor's certificate, and it was stipulated that nothing in the agreement should be construed into a demise at law of the premises. At the time the defendant commenced work the plaintiff had erected the buildings, and was in possession thereof under a lease granted pursuant to the agreement. On motion to continue, until trial of the action, an injunction obtained by the plaintiff ex parte to restrain the defendant from proceeding with the work to the wall,

Held, that, inasmuch as the plaintiff was in possession of the adjoining premises under the agreement "otherwise than as a tenant from year to year or for any less term, or as a tenant at will," and was therefore owner within the meaning of sub-section 29 of section 5 of the Act, the defendant was not entitled to exercise any rights under the Act, assuming him to have any, in respect of the wall in question without having served on the plaintiff a notice under section 90 of the Act; that the plaintiff's rights in this respect had not become merged in the lease on the granting of the lease pursuant to the agreement; and, consequently, that the injunction must be continued.

Motion.

By an agreement made the 12th of December, 1894, Sir Charles Oppenheimer agreed to demise certain property in St. James's-place, held by him under the Commissioners for Woods and Forests, to the plaintiff for a long term of years, at a rent of £550, after Michaelmas, 1895, and the plaintiff agreed within a specified time to erect buildings on the land at the expense of not less than £100,000. The agreement made the production of a certificate signed by the Commissioners' architect and surveyor, a condition precedent to the granting of the lease. It provided also (clause 6) that the plaintiff should forthwith upon the signing of the agreement be entitled to possession of the land, and reserved (clause 7) to the surveyor, and all the officers and workmen of the surveyor and of Sir C. Oppenheimer acting under the authority of the surveyor, a right to enter upon the land at all times during the erection of the buildings for the purposes of examining the buildings and otherwise as therein mentioned. It also stipulated (clause 18) that nothing in the agreement should be construed "into a demise at law" of the premises, so as to vest any estate in the plaintiff, but that he should only have a right to enter upon the premises for the purpose of performing the agreement.

Pursuant to the agreement the plaintiff entered upon the land and proceeded to erect the buildings.

The defendant, who was the adjoining owner, being desirous of executing certain works upon a certain wall (about which there was a controversy whether it was a party wall or a party fence wall), gave in February, 1896, the necessary notices under the London Building Act, 1894, to Sir C. Oppenheimer, but omitted to give any way to the plaintiff.

At that time the plaintiff had nearly completed the buildings, but had not obtained the lease, which was granted to the plaintiff in August, 1896.

Shortly afterwards, the defendant having commenced work, the above action was brought for an injunction, and an ex parte injunction obtained by the plaintiff restraining the defendant, as building owner under the Act, from interfering with the wall. The present motion was to continue the injunction until the trial.

By the London Building Act, 1894, s. 90, a building owner is (except with the consent of the adjoining owner) in effect prohibited from exercising any of his rights under the Act in respect of a party structure without first serving on the adjoining owner the prescribed notice.

(a.) Reported by J. F. WALEY, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

By section 5, sub-section 31, building owner means such one of the owners of adjoining land as is desirous of building, and by sub-section 32 adjoining owner means the owner or one of the owners of land or buildings adjoining those of the building owner.

The meaning of the term owner in the Act is explained in the judgment.

The nature of the party structure in this case was fully argued, but the decision turned on the single point whether the plaintiff was entitled to notice, and that point only is dealt with in this report.

Byrne, Q.C., and R. Cunningham Glen, for the plaintiff.—Notice ought to have been served on the plaintiff under the London Building Act, 1894, ss. 90, 5, sub-sections 29, 32. The defendant was building owner, section 5, sub-section 31, and was bound before exercising rights in relation to a party structure under section 88, to serve the prescribed notice on the adjoining owner. When the notice was served on Oppenheimer the plaintiff was in possession under the building agreement, and he was therefore the person who ought to have been served as adjoining owner: section 5, sub-section 29. This view is supported by Caudwell v. Hanson, 20 W. R. 202, L. R. 7 Q. B. 55, decided on the Metropolitan Building Act, 1855. [CHITTY, J., referred to Walsh v. Lonsdale, 31 W. R. 109, 21 Ch. D. 9.]

Levett, Q.C., and Christopher James, for the defendant.—The plaintiff was in possession merely for the purpose of erecting the buildings, and that was not sufficient to make him owner within the meaning of section 5, sub-section 29. Moreover, the plaintiff's lease was granted before the defendant actually began to work, and the plaintiff could not stand in a better position than his lessor, to whom the prescribed notice had been duly given. [CHITTY, J., referred to Beddington v. Atlee, 35 W. R. 799, 35 Ch. D. 317.]

Byrne, Q.C., in reply, cited Fillingham v. Wood, 39 W. R. 282, [1891] 1 Ch. 51.

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 13.—CHITTY, L.J., delivered a reserved judgment. After stating the facts as above, his lordship said: The question is whether the defendant was bound before commencing the work on the wall in controversy to give notice to the plaintiff under the London Building Act, 1894.

This question turns on section 5 (29) of that Act, which enacts that, unless the context otherwise requires, the expression "owner" shall apply to every person in possession or receipt either of the whole or of any part of the rents or profits of any land or tenement, or in the occupation of any land or tenement otherwise than as a tenant from year or year or for any less term, or as a tenant at will.

Now, regard being had to the statutory definition of the expression owner, the first inquiry is whether the plaintiff was in February, 1896, in possession of the land. It appears to me that the only answer must be that he was. The 6th clause of the agreement was precise; he was entitled to the possession, and having entered upon the land he was lawfully in possession accordingly. The reservation in clause 7 of a right of entry for the surveyor and others during the erection of the buildings shows that the term "possession" is used in clause 6 in its ordinary sense; the power is reserved as against the plaintiff's possession. It was argued that he was in possession only for the purpose of erecting the buildings, and consequently that, as his right to possession was thus limited, he was not in possession within the meaning of the definition in the Act. But I cannot accept this argument. A man is not the less in possession because as between himself and the person from whom he receives it he is under a contractual obligation to use the property for some particular purpose, as, for instance, where he is under a covenant to use a house for the purpose of a private dwelling-house only.

The next inquiries are whether he was in the occupation of the property as tenant from year to year, or for any less term, or as tenant at will. Here, again, the agreement itself supplies the answer. Nothing in the agreement was to be construed into a demise at law or to vest any estate in the plaintiff. Consequently he was not tenant from year to year, or for any less term. The provision in the 18th clause, that he was only to have the right of entry for the purpose of performing the agreement, I have already dealt with incidentally. It cannot, in my opinion, be made use of for the purpose of cutting down the right to the possession which was previously conferred by express terms. After his entry on the land he was in possession as between himself and Sir C. Oppenheimer, although he was bound by the contract as to the user of the land. As against strangers he had all the ordinary rights and remedies incidental to possession.

It was further argued for the defendant that, inasmuch as the plaintiff had taken his lease before the work on the wall was actually begun, and as the prescribed notices had been given by the defendant to Sir C. Oppenheimer, the plaintiff was in no better position than the latter, and accordingly was not in a position to insist upon the notices being given to himself. The substance of this argument was that the plaintiff's rights had become merged in the lease. In my opinion this argument is not sound. As between himself and the defendant I think that, notwithstanding the lease, the plaintiff is entitled to refer his title back to the agreement under which he had possession at the time, and that the question between him and the defendant is not affected by any doctrine of merger. I see no reason for questioning the conclusion I arrived at in Beddington v. Atlee. The plaintiff, in February, 1896, had, by virtue of the building agreement, an equitable interest of great value in the land and the buildings which he had then erected. Such being my opinion, it becomes unnecessary to decide at the present stage of the proceedings any question as to the character of the wall, whether it was a party wall or a fence wall in the whole or in part.

Injunction continued, but without prejudice to the defendant's rights, if any, under the Metropolitan Building Acts, the hearing of the motion to be treated as the trial if the parties should so agree.

Solicitor for the plaintiff, W. H. Southern.

Solicitors for the defendant, Stibbard, Gibson, & Co.

Chan. Div. North, J. } Dec. 9.

In re MCMURDO.

PENFIELD v. MCMURDO. (a.)

Solicitor—Costs—Taxation—Interest—Administration.

(a.) Reported by R. SILLEM, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

action—General Order under Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, r. 7.

The "person liable" and on whom demand for payment of a bill of costs due from a deceased client is to be made is the legal personal representative. Where, therefore, a bill of costs due from the deceased had been delivered by direction of the chief clerk to a creditor having the conduct of an action in which the estate of the deceased was being administered,

Held, that there had been no demand on the person liable within the meaning of rule 7 of the General Order under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, so as to entitle the solicitors to interest under that rule.

Motion.

This was a motion that solicitors might be allowed interest on their bill of costs. The solicitors had done work for the testator and were solicitors to the executrix, the defendant in the action. The administration order was made on the 25th of July, 1889. The estate was insolvent, and in the course of the proceedings, the question having arisen to whom the solicitors should deliver their bill of costs in respect of which they claimed a lien on a fund in court, the chief clerk, with the consent of all parties, directed them to deliver it to the solicitor of a creditor who had the conduct of the proceedings. The bill was so delivered, the chief clerk allowed the lien claimed by the solicitors and the bill was taxed. The solicitors claimed interest at 4 per cent. from a month after the delivery of the bill and their contention was based on rule 7 of the General Order made under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act, 1881, which says (inter alia) "a solicitor may charge interest . . . on his disbursements and costs . . . from the expiration of one month from demand by the client. And in cases where the same are payable by an infant or out of a fund not presently available, such demand may be made on the parent or guardian or the trustee or other person liable."

The judge in chambers had refused the claim for interest and the present motion was to rescind the order made in chambers and to have an order made allowing the interest claimed.

Swinfen Eady, Q.C., and Eustace Smith for the motion.—Delivery of a bill of costs is a demand for payment: Blair v. Cordner, 36 W. R. 64, 19 Q. B. D. 516. The person liable to pay here is the person having the conduct of the proceedings.

Eastwick, for the creditor having the conduct of the proceedings.—The present case is not within the terms of the rule.

Eady, Q.C., in reply.

NORTH, J.—In respect of interest the solicitors are no better off than other creditors; the only way in which they can get it is under rule 7 of the General Order made under the Solicitors' Remuneration Act. They are not persons entitled to special favours or to be preferred over ordinary creditors, but they are entitled to what the law gives them. The question is, do the solicitors come within the meaning of that rule?—if they do they get a benefit above their fellow creditors. [Reads the rule.] In the present case the testator was liable; but the person liable for the debts of the testator is the executor if there are assets. That is the meaning, in my opinion, of words in the rule "or other person liable"; and where the assets are deficient the "person liable" within the rule is also the executor even though there be an administration suit. In my view, therefore, the executrix was the person liable here. If their demand had been made on the executrix their demand would have been made on the "person liable," but the bill of costs was not delivered to her. The direction by the chief clerk was a mere direction and nothing more, assented to by all. In my opinion the solicitors are not entitled to interest because their bill was not delivered to the person liable and the delivery was not made in such a way as to amount to demand on the person liable.

Solicitors, Hurford & Taylor; E. F. B. Harston.

Chan. Div. }
Stirling, J. } Dec. 17; Jan. 13, 19.

In re POMEROY AND TANNER (Solicitors). (a.)

Solicitor—Costs—Taxation after bill delivered more than twelve months—Agency charges—Disbursements—Complete bill.

The charges of the London agent of a country solicitor, as between the country solicitor and his client, are taxable items, and should not be treated as disbursements in the country solicitor's bill of costs.

A bill of costs which fails to set forth the details of such agency charges is not a complete bill so as to preclude taxation more than twelve months after delivery.

This was a summons by a client for taxation of his solicitor's bill of costs.

The facts were as follows:—

The applicant, as the legal personal representative of a Mr. Sampson, who died in 1887, employed Mr. Pomeroy, one of the two solicitors whose names appear in the title of the proceedings, in winding up his testator's estate.

In 1891 Mr. Pomeroy took Mr. Tanner into partnership, and the judge was of opinion that from that date the applicant must be taken to have retained and employed both of them.

In 1894, the executorship affairs having been wound up, the applicant asked for a bill of costs; and in January, 1895, Messrs. Pomeroy & Tanner delivered a bill for £283 11s. 8d., commencing on the 31st of May, 1892. The last item in this bill was as follows: "Paid agent's charges (including disbursements, counsel's fees, court charges, &c.) in the dispute and subsequent action against Mrs. Mann and Miss F. A. Sampson and the compromise thereof, £54 5s. 8d."

On the same date a cash account was also delivered in respect of other business between the applicant and the respondents.

A prior bill for work done before the 31st of May, 1892, by Mr. Pomeroy alone was not included.

Subsequently, on Messrs. Pomeroy & Tanner threatening to sue for the balance on the bill and the cash account delivered at the same time, the applicant demanded delivery of a bill and cash account for the work done by Mr. Pomeroy alone from the beginning of the transaction.

On the 1st of April, 1896, Mr. Pomeroy delivered certain other bills, including a bill of charge of his London agent, which gave particulars of the lump item contained in the bill delivered in January, 1895. He also delivered two cash accounts—one in respect of transactions between himself alone and the applicant, and the other between the respondents and the applicant.

An application was made for taxation of the bills delivered in April, 1896, with the exception of that which included the agency charges.

A special application, however, was made with reference to the bill delivered in January, 1895, and the London agent's bill.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law

G. Hastings, Q.C., and E. Ford, for the applicant.—This application is resisted on the ground that the bill sought to be taxed was delivered more than twelve months ago. The rule is that if a bill has been delivered more than twelve months special circumstances must be made out to justify taxation. A judge has a discretion to order a bill to be taxed if it contains items unusually large or charges requiring explanation or gross blunders, and it is not necessary to make out overcharge amounting to fraud: In re Norman, 34 W. R. 313, 16 Q. B. D. 673. Here this lump item of £54 5s. 8d. is a charge requiring explanation which would justify the court in ordering taxation.

Buckley, Q.C., and H. Terrell, for the respondents.—The bill of January, 1895, is a complete bill, and more than one year has elapsed since its delivery. The item for the agent's charges is a disbursement, and the bill is complete even though the particulars are not set out. To justify taxation at this time it is necessary to show items amounting to fraud. There is nothing of the kind here. The court is being asked to take on itself the duties of a taxing-master.

b*Graham Hastings, Q.C.*—T he bills are continuous, deing one matter. A solicitor cannot sue when he has 3one only half the work: In re Nelson, Son, & Hastings, 3 W. R. 645, 30 Ch. D. 1. A solicitor cannot put himself in a better position as against his client by taking in a partner. [STIRLING, J., referred to Hall & Barker, 26 W. R. 501, 9 Ch. D. 538.] If the agent's bill is a disbursement, the only right the client would have against the agent would be under the general jurisdiction: Ex parte Edwards, 7 Q. B. D. 155, 29 W. R. Dig. 288. I submit that a clear case has been made out that this bill should be taxed.

Jan. 19.—STIRLING, J., stated the facts as above, and continued: The case has been argued on the footing that the bill had been delivered more than twelve months, and that accordingly it would be necessary to make out special circumstances to justify taxation. But the question has been raised, whether the bill of January, 1895, was a complete bill, so as to exclude the right to tax in the absence of special circumstances. That depends on the view to be taken of the last item in that bill. [His lordship read the item for the London agent's charges, and continued:] That, of course, is what I may call a lump item, and it is a substantial item amounting to between one-fifth or one-sixth of the whole. It is contended that these agent's charges are merely disbursements, and that it was a mistake to include them in the bill of costs at all, but that there was no necessity for delivering a detailed statement of them. On the other hand, it was said that the agent's charges ought to be included in the bill of costs in detail.

The question is which of these two contentions is right. Let us first look at it as a matter of principle. It is well settled that as between the client and the London agent of a country solicitor there is no privity at all. The relationship of solicitor and client does not exist between the client and the London agent. What is done by the London agent is part of the work done for the client by the country solicitor. What the country solicitor does, he does or may do personally or by clerks employed by him in the country; or, if necessary—and the necessity occurred in this case—by his London agent; but as between the client and the country solicitor the whole work is done by the country solicitor. It follows, therefore, that these items are not disbursements, but are items taxable in the strictest sense between the client and the country solicitor, just as much as items for work done by the country solicitor personally or by his clerks in the country. That, I take it, is the view according to strict law. But it has been suggested in the course of the argument that the practice was the other way, and that these items were usually treated as disbursements in the bills of costs. I have thought it right to make inquiry of the taxing-masters what the practice as a matter of fact was. The taxing-masters considered the question at a meeting at which all were present but one, and they have informed me that they were unanimously of opinion that, as a matter of practice, this item of £54 5s. 8d. was wrongly charged as a disbursement, and that the items should appear in detail, and that it was proper and regular to include them in the bill of costs, and that the country solicitor should incorporate them in one and the same bill. It appears therefore that both upon strict law and as regards practice this item cannot be treated as a disbursement, but the details of such item ought to be included in the bill of costs delivered. I am of opinion therefore, this being a substantial item, that the whole bill on which the solicitors rely was not delivered more than twelve months before the application to tax was made, and that accordingly an order for taxation must go.

As regards the costs it seems to me the proper course would be that the costs of this adjournment into court must be the applicants in any event, and that the other costs must abide the result of the taxation.

Solicitors, J. J. Harlow, for H. King, Bristol; Carthew & Wheeler.

Chan. Div. } Dec. 16.
Kekewich, J. }

BLUMBERG v. THE LIFE INTERESTS AND REVERSIONARY SECURITIES CORPORATION (LIMITED). (a.)

Mortgage—Tender—Cheque—Authority of mortgagee's solicitor—Payment under protest.

A mortgagee's solicitor is not authorized to accept a cheque in payment of the debt due in respect of the mortgage unless he is expressly empowered to do so. The tender, therefore, of a cheque to a mortgagee's solicitor not having such express authority is not a good tender even though he consent to accept the cheque.

Motion by the plaintiffs, Edgar James Blumberg, Cecil Percy Blumberg, and Vivian Horace Blumberg, to restrain the defendants and their agent, W. B. Mulling, from selling or dealing with the mortgaged property mentioned in an indenture of mortgage dated the 10th of July, 1896, and made between the plaintiffs of the one part and the defendant corporation of the other part, and from transferring or otherwise dealing with the said mortgage securities until after the trial of the action.

The mortgaged property consisted of the plaintiffs' reversionary interests expectant upon the death of their mother in certain legacies and policies.

The mortgage deed provided that the mortgagees' power of sale should become exercisable immediately upon default in payment of any principal, interest, or other moneys at the time thereby appointed for payment of the same.

The mortgagors made default in payment, and on the 12th of October the corporation served them with notice that unless the money was repaid the securities would be sold on the 5th of November. On the morning of that day the plaintiffs' solicitor attended by appointment at the office of the mortgagees' solicitor for the purpose of paying in cash the amount of principal, interest, and costs due on the mortgage, and he tendered such amount in cash. A further sum, however, in respect of auctioneer's costs, &c., was demanded on behalf of the corporation by their solicitor's managing clerk, who was conducting the business.

(a.) Reported by R. J. A. MORRISON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law

The plaintiffs' solicitor offered to get cash for the payment of the further sum, but the clerk said he would be satisfied with the solicitor's cheque and would accept it on the understanding that payment should not be made under protest, as he was anxious to have the matter finally settled.

The plaintiffs' solicitor drew the cheque and tendered it and the cash under protest in payment of the total amount claimed by the mortgagees. The clerk thereupon refused to accept the tender because it was made under protest, and his refusal was ratified and adopted by the mortgagees' solicitor himself.

On the afternoon of the same day the mortgagees sold their security, and the purchaser was subsequently added as a defendant in this action.

Warrington, Q.C., and Frank Evans, for the plaintiffs.—Tender ought no doubt to be made in cash, but it is open to the person who receives the tender to waive the nature of the tender. In this case the objection was not to the nature of the tender, but to the manner in which it was made—viz., under protest. The objection to the nature of the tender therefore must be taken to have been waived, and consequently the cheque was a good tender: Jones v. Arthur, 8 Dowl., p. 442; Polglass v. Oliver, 2 Cr. & J., p. 15; and Chitty on Contracts, 10th ed., p. 737. Payment under protest is a good payment: Greenwood v. Sutcliffe, 40 W. R. 214, [1892], 1 Ch. 1; this tender, therefore, was a good tender.

Renshaw, Q.C., and Ribton, for the corporation.—The solicitor had power only to receive cash, and not to take a cheque instead of cash. The defendant corporation is not disentitled to rely on the fact that the tender was not good because its agent exceeded his authority in waiving the objection to the cheque.

Edward Ford, for the purchaser.

Warrington, Q.C., in reply.—An attorney has power to accept a tender (Kirton v. Braithwaite, 1 M. & W. 310), and in the ordinary course of business he has power to accept a cheque.

KEKEWICH, J.—In this case a tender of a certain kind was made to the solicitor of the mortgagees; it was a tender consisting partly of cash and partly of a cheque. The question to be decided is, Was this tender good? If the tender had been made to the principals themselves—the mortgagees—I do not doubt that it would have been a good tender. I think, on the evidence, that the solicitor was willing to accept the cheque, but in an unhappy moment he refused to accept payment under protest. Assuming, therefore, that he was authorized to receive the money and cheque, then I do not doubt that there was a good tender. But there is this novel question: Assuming the solicitor to be authorized to receive cash in payment, is he also authorized to receive a cheque which is not a legal tender? Counsel for the plaintiffs urged that he could do so, if such acceptance would be in the ordinary conduct of business; he could not accept a pledge or security, but as money was ordinarily paid by cheque he could have accepted a cheque in the present case. Now, I think that this would be an extension of the solicitor's authority which might prove very mischievous. The mere fact of accepting a cheque passes judgment on the solvency of the person giving the cheque. In this case the mortgagees' solicitor thought that this cheque was good, but it might have turned out that the cheque was worthless, and then would there have been a good tender as against the reversionary society? Certainly not. Had he accepted the cheque he would have done so at his own risk. The mortgagee's solicitor had no authority to take the cheque, and therefore I hold that there was not a sufficient tender, and on this ground I am of opinion that the injunction should not be granted.

Solicitor for the plaintiffs, Braham Barnett.

Solicitor for the corporation, H. Stanley-Jones.

Solicitors for the purchaser, Surman & Quekett.

Q. B. Div.
(Wright and Bruce, JJ.) Jan. 18.

REG. v. JUSTICES OF LONDON. (a.)

Poor law—Rating—Valuation list—Notice of objection—Assessment committee—Appeal—Union Assessment Committees Act, 1862 (25 & 26 Vict. c. 103), ss. 18, 19—Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869 (32 & 33 Vict. c. 67), ss. 11, 32.

The Union Assessment Committees Act, 1862, s. 18, provides that any person who may feel himself aggrieved by the valuation list of any parish may give to the Assessment Committee a notice in writing of his objection, and by section 19 the Assessment Committee shall not hear any objection unless notice of the objection has been given aforesaid. The Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869, s. 32, gives a right of appeal to quarter sessions from any decision of the Assessment Committee on an objection made before them.

Held, that the Assessment Committee had no power to entertain any objection unless notice thereof in writing was given; and that an appeal to quarter sessions only lay from a decision of the Assessment Committee on an objection, notice of which had been given in the prescribed manner to the committee.

Rule nisi for a mandamus to the justices of London in quarter sessions to hear and determine an appeal against a decision of the Assessment Committee.

The East London Waterworks Co. gave notice in writing to the Assessment Committee of an objection against the rateable value at which their premises had been assessed in the valuation list. The Assessment Committee disallowed the objection. The water company appealed to quarter sessions, and their notice of appeal contained objections, not only to the rateable value, but also to the gross value, at which the premises had been assessed.

The justices in quarter sessions declined to permit the question of the gross value to be gone into, on the ground that in the notice of objection to the Assessment Committee the gross value had not been objected to. The company did not proceed with the appeal so far as it related to the rateable value, but obtained this rule nisi.

Affidavits had been filed in support of the rule, alleging that, as a matter of fact, although there had been no formal objection to the gross value in the notice to the Assessment Committee, the question of gross value had been considered by the Assessment Committee. This was not admitted to be so by the Assessment Committee.

(a.) Reported by F. O. ROBINSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

The Union Assessment Committees Act, 1862, s. 18: "Any . . . person who may feel himself aggrieved by the valuation list of any parish within such union, or any person who may feel himself aggrieved by any valuation list on the ground of unfairness or incorrectness in the valuation of any hereditament included therein . . . may . . . give to the committee and to the overseers a notice in writing of his objection specifying the grounds thereof . . ."

Section 19 provides that ". . . where a meeting is holden for hearing objections to the valuation list of any parish, the committee shall not hear any objection to such valuation list unless such notice as aforesaid of such objections have been given to the committee and the overseers . . ."

The Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869 (with which the Union Assessment Committees Act, 1862, is incorporated), s. 11, enacts that "objections may be made before the Assessment Committee by any person authorized by this Act and the Acts incorporated herewith to object who feels himself aggrieved by reason of the unfairness or incorrectness of the valuation of any hereditament, or by reason of the insertion or incorrectness of any matter in the valuation list, or by reason of the omission of any matter therefrom . . . The notice of objection shall specify the correction which the objector desires to be made."

Section 32: "Any ratepayer . . . who may feel aggrieved by any decision of the Assessment Committee on an objection made before them to which he was a party . . . may appeal against such decision to the assessment sessions."

The Local Government Act, 1888, s. 42 (10), enacts that the quarter sessions for the county of London shall be substituted for the general assessment sessions under the Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869.

W. C. Ryde (Balfour Browne, Q.C., with him) for the Assessment Committee, showed cause against the rule,—First, mandamus is not the proper remedy in this case. The waterworks company should have proceeded with their appeal so far as it related to the rateable value, and should then have asked for a case to be stated. But, secondly, the quarter sessions were right in refusing to hear the appeal as to the gross value. Section 18 of the Act of 1862 provides for the giving of the notice of objection, and by section 19 the Assessment Committee shall not hear any objection unless notice of it has been given. Then, section 11 of the Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869, provides what objections may be taken, and requires the notice to specify what correction is desired. By section 32 the appeal to the quarter sessions only lies from a decision of the committee on an objection made before them. The words "shall not hear" in section 19 of the Act of 1862 are imperative, and the Assessment Committee had no jurisdiction to hear any objections to the gross value which was not referred to in the notice of objection. As a matter of fact the proceedings before the committee did only relate to the rateable value.

Cripps, Q.C., and Barnes (Littler, Q.C., with them), for the Waterworks Co. in support of the rule.—The provisions of section 19 of the Act of 1862 merely relate to matters of practice and procedure. The Assessment Committee have power to waive any question of insufficiency of notice, and there was such a waiver, and the committee dealt with both the gross and the rateable value: Coates v. Park Gate Iron Co., 18 W. R. 928, L. R. 5 C. P. 634.

WRIGHT, J.—The question in this case arises primarily under section 32 of the Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869, which says that a ratepayer who is aggrieved by a decision of the Assessment Committee on an objection made before them may appeal to the assessment sessions. Since the Local Government Act, 1888, the appeal lies to the quarter sessions. In the present case there was an appeal to quarter sessions, purporting to be an appeal against a decision of the Assessment Committee on both the gross and the rateable valuation of the company's premises. We have, therefore, to decide whether there was a decision by the Assessment Committee on the gross value. The notice of objection specified only an objection to the rateable value. The effect of the notice depends partly on the Union Assessment Committees Act, 1862, and partly on the Valuation (Metropolis) Act, 1869, with which the former Act is to be read as one. Section 18 of the Act of 1862 provides for the notice of objection to be given; and section 19 says that the committee "shall not hear any objection unless notice has been given as provided." These provisions are amended by the Act of 1869, section 11 of which says what objections may be taken, and further, that the notice shall specify what corrections it is desired should be made. Primâ facie that is enough to dispose of the case, because the notice of objection did not refer to the gross value, and therefore the committee were, by reason of section 19 of the Act of 1862, confined to hearing objections to the rateable value, and the appeal to quarter sessions by section 32 of the Act of 1869 only lies from a decision of the committee on an objection taken before them.

But then it is said that the Assessment Committee had power to waive any irregularity or insufficiency in the notice of objection, and that there was such a waiver in this case, and that the Assessment Committee entertained and decided an objection to the gross value. I am not satisfied that they did entertain any objection to the gross value; but even if the Assessment committee had purported to do so, I think it would have been beyond their powers. I do not think the Assessment Committee have power to give a decision on any point unless notice of objection has been given in the manner provided in the sections referred to. The case of Coates v. Park Gate Iron Co. does not cover this case, for there there was merely a direction to the parties that something should be done before an appeal from a county court could be heard; but in this case the statute expressly provides that the court itself—that is, the Assessment Committee—shall not hear an objection unless the conditions precedent have been complied with.

For these reasons this rule nisi must, in my opinion, be discharged.

BRUCE, J.—I am of the same opinion. I am not satisfied that the Assessment Committee decided the question of gross value. I think that the "objection" referred to in section 32 of the Act of 1869 refers to an objection taken before the committee in the formal manner provided by the statutes, and, in my opinion, there cannot be an appeal on a question which was not formally before the Assessment Committee.

Rule discharged.

Solicitors for the Assessment Committee, Stone, Morris, & Stone.

Solicitors for the Waterworks Co., Bircham & Co.

C. C. R.
(Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J., Pollock, B., and Hawkins, Grantham, and Lawrance, JJ.)

Aug. 1, 1896; Nov. 7.

REG. v. SMALLMAN. (a.)

Criminal law — Embezzlement — Assistant overseer — Rural parish—Form of indictment—Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73), s. 5 (1), (2) (c); s. 6 (1); s. 81 (3).

Notwithstanding that under the Local Government Act, 1894, an assistant overseer in a rural parish is appointed by the parish council, he is the servant of the inhabitants of the parish, and not of the parish council; and in an indictment for embezzling the moneys collected by him from the ratepayers he is well described as the servant of the inhabitants, and the moneys embezzled are rightly alleged to have been received by him on account of such inhabitants, his employers.

Case stated by Hawkins, J.

The prisoner was tried at the Herefordshire Assizes in July, 1896, upon an indictment containing three counts, each of which alleged that on a certain date (in December, 1895, or January, 1896) the prisoner, "then being in the employment as servant of the inhabitants of the parish of Upton Bishop did then, whilst he was so employed as aforesaid, receive and take into his possession certain money," therein mentioned, "for and in the name and on the account of the said inhabitants of the said parish of Upton Bishop, his employers, and the said money then fraudulently and feloniously did embezzle," &c.

The jury found the prisoner guilty on each count.

In the course of the trial the question of law arose whether the prisoner was rightly described in the indictment as "being in the employment as servant of the inhabitants of the parish of Upton Bishop," and as having "whilst he was so employed" received in their name and on their account the moneys alleged to have been embezzled.

The prisoner was duly nominated, elected, and appointed assistant overseer for the parish of Upton Bishop under 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, s. 7, in December, 1893.

On the 16th of April, 1895, he was also appointed to that office and to the office of clerk to the parish council by the parish council for the parish of Upton Bishop under section 5 of the Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73).

Neither of the appointments above mentioned was in form revoked, and he continued to hold his offices until the 30th of January, 1896, when he was dismissed from them. The embezzlements were each committed after the month of April, 1895, and before his dismissal.

He was never appointed by the guardians of the Ross Union, within which the parish of Upton Bishop was comprised, either as collector of poor rates or as assistant overseer of the parish, nor could he have been so appointed after 56 & 57 Vict. c. 73, ss. 3, 81 (6).

For the prisoner it was contended that he was wrongly described in the indictment as the servant of the inhabitants for the reason that, by virtue of the Local Government Act, 1894, he was the servant of the parish council.

The enactments bearing on the case are referred to in the arguments and judgments.

For the prosecution Reg. v. Carpenter, 14 W. R. 733, L. R. 1 C. C. R. 29, was relied on.

Hawkins, J., reserved the question for the consideration of the court.

If the objection taken by the prisoner's counsel was a valid one the conviction was to be quashed, otherwise not.

Cranstoun, for the prisoner.—Before the Local Government Act, 1894, came into operation an assistant overseer was appointed either by the guardians under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 61, or by the justices on the nomination of the vestry of the parish under 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, s. 7. By the Local Government Act, 1894, a new corporate body, the parish council, was created to represent the inhabitants of a rural parish, and to that body was transferred, by section 5 (1), the power of appointing and revoking the appointment of an assistant overseer, and by sections 5 (2) (c) and 6 (1) the powers and duties of the vestry and the legal interest in parish property. The result is that the prisoner is the servant of the parish council, and not of the inhabitants of the parish. It is expressly provided by section 81 (3) that an assistant overseer existing when the Act came into operation should, unless appointed by the guardians, become an officer of the parish council. This provision applied to the prisoner, who was an existing assistant overseer, and he has also since been re-appointed by the parish council. He was their officer and servant, and the indictment was wrong.

Macmorran, Q.C. (Gwynne James with him), for the prosecution.—Before the Local Government Act, 1894, it is clear that an assistant overseer appointed on the nomination of the vestry was correctly described in an indictment for embezzlement as the servant of the inhabitants of the parish: Reg. v. Sampson, 1 Cox C. C. 355; Reg. v. Watts, 7 A. & E. 461, 469; Points v. Attwood, 6 C. B. 38, 49; Reg. v. Carpenter. The Local Government Act, 1894, has made no difference in this respect. The duties of the assistant overseer are the same as before; he is bound to obey the overseers as before; he has to account to them for the money he receives, and not to the parish council. The only difference is that in rural parishes he is now appointed by the parish council, and in small parishes where there is no parish council, by the parish meeting; but that council or meeting represent the inhabitants, and the assistant overseer remains the servant of the inhabitants. The moneys collected by the assistant overseer belong to the overseers as trustees for the inhabitants; they have not become vested in the parish council by virtue of section 5 (2) (c) or section 6 (1) (c) (iii.) of the Act of 1894. The word "property" in those clauses cannot include moneys arising from the rates, for the parish council has nothing to do with the levying of the poor rate. The overseers do not account to the parish council, and the parish council obtain money for their expenses by means of a precept to the overseers (under section 11 of the Act of 1894), which would be unnecessary and absurd if the moneys in the hands of the overseers were already vested in the parish council. The prisoner was therefore correctly described as the servant of the inhabitants, and the money as the money of the inhabitants. If this is not so it would be impossible to indict an assistant overseer for embezzlement at all.

Cranstoun.—It may be difficult to frame an indictment of an assistant overseer on account of his being the servant of the parish council and the moneys embezzled not being their moneys; but that does not alter the fact that under the Act of 1894 he has become the servant of the parish council.

Cur. adv. vult.

Nov. 7.—HAWKINS, J., read the following judgment of

(a.) Reported by T. R. COLQUHOUN DILL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

POLLOCK, B. — The prisoner was tried before Hawkins, J., at the last Summer Assizes at Hereford, and found guilty of embezzling money which he had collected as assistant overseer of the parish of Upton Bishop.

In the indictment the prisoner was described as "being in the employment as servant of the inhabitants of the parish of Upton Bishop," and it was alleged that whilst he was so employed he received certain money "on the account of the said inhabitants, his employers." The prisoner's counsel contended that the indictment was bad, inasmuch as the prisoner's employment was wrongly described.

The material facts, as stated in the case, are as follows:

The prisoner was duly nominated and appointed assistant overseer for the parish of Upton Bishop under 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, s. 7, in December, 1893.

On the 16th of April, 1895, he was also appointed to that office and to the office of clerk to the parish council by the parish council for the parish of Upton Bishop, under section 5 of the Local Government Act, 1894 (56 & 57 Vict. c. 73).

Neither of the appointments above mentioned was in form revoked, and he continued to hold these offices until the 30th of January, 1896, when he was dismissed from them. The embezzlements were each committed after April, 1895, and before his dismissal. He was never appointed by the guardians of the Ross Union, within which the parish of Upton Bishop was comprised, either as collector of poor rates or as assistant overseer of the parish, under 7 & 8 Vict. c. 101, s. 61, nor could he have been so appointed after the 56 & 57 Vict. c. 73, s. 81.

The 59 Geo. 3, c. 12, s. 7, provided for the election of assistant overseers by "the inhabitants of any parish in vestry assembled." The same section enacted that two justices are to appoint such persons so elected. It is clear, however, that they were, when so elected and appointed, the servants of the inhabitants of the parish, although this formal appointment was by the justices, and accordingly, when it became necessary to prosecute an assistant overseer for embezzlement, he was usually described as in the present indictment; and in Reg. v. Sampson it was decided by Rolfe, B., that an indictment describing an assistant overseer as "a clerk or servant to the overseers" was bad; and in Reg. v. Carpenter it was held that an assistant overseer was properly described as "a servant of the inhabitants of the parish." Thus far there seems no difficulty. But in 1894 the Local Government Act, 56 & 57 Vict. c. 73 was passed, and this Act materially alters the mode of appointing assistant overseers, and uses language which creates a doubt and has given rise to the question raised by the present case. This Act constitutes, for the first time in rural parishes, a "parish council," and to this council are transferred certain powers and duties which had before been discharged by the vestry.

Section 5 (1) is as follows: "The power and duty of appointing overseers of the poor and the power of appointing and revoking the appointment of an assistant overseer for every rural parish having a parish council shall be transferred to and vested in the parish council, and the council shall in each year at their annual meeting appoint the overseers of the parish, and shall as soon as may be fill any casual vacancy occurring in the office of overseer of the parish, and shall in either case forthwith give written notice thereof in the prescribed form to the board of guardians."

By section 6 (1): "Upon the parish council of a rural parish coming into office there shall be transferred to that council: (a) The powers, duties, and liabilities of the vestry of the parish except (i.) so far as relates to the affairs of the church or to ecclesiastical charities, and (ii.) any power, duty, or liability transferred by this Act from the vestry to any other authority."

By section 81: "Where the powers and duties of any authority other than justices are transferred by this Act to any parish or district council, the officers of that authority shall become the officers of that council. "(3) Any existing assistant overseer in a parish for which a parish council is elected shall, unless appointed by a board of guardians, become an officer of the parish council. "(4) Every such officer, vestry clerk, and assistant overseer as above in this section mentioned shall hold his office by the same tenure and upon the same terms and conditions as heretofore, and while performing the same duties shall receive not less salary or remuneration than heretofore."

The statute under which the prisoner was indicted is the 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, which, by section 68, provides that, "Whosoever, being a clerk or servant, or being employed for the purpose or in the capacity of a clerk or servant, shall fraudulently embezzle any chattel, money, or valuable security which shall be delivered to or received or taken into possession by him for or in the name or on the account of his master or employer, or any part thereof, shall be deemed to have feloniously stolen the same from his master or employer."

This Act, it will be observed, says nothing about the appointment of the clerk or servant. The two material facts are that the prisoner should be a "clerk or servant," and that he should embezzle the money received by him "on the account of his master or employer." Now, it may well be that one person or body of persons may have the appointment of a clerk or servant, and yet, when he is appointed, he becomes, not the servant of those who appointed him, but the servant of those whose affairs he has to manage and whose money he has to receive and pay over according to their instructions. It was upon this ground that, in the cases of Reg. v. Watts and Reg. v. Carpenter, an assistant overseer was held to be the servant, not of the magistrates who appointed him, nor of the overseers, but the servant of the inhabitants of the parish whose affairs he had to manage and whose money he had to receive.

Now, it seems that notwithstanding the parish council, under the Local Government Act, 1894, s. 5 (1), have the power and duty of appointing and revoking the appointment of assistant overseers, their duties, when appointed, are the same as they were when they were elected and nominated by the vestry and appointed by justices. The rates collected, the persons from whom and the purposes for which they are collected, remain as before, and the money can in no sense be said to be the money of the parish council, nor can that council direct how it shall be dealt with. It would seem, therefore, that the prisoner was "employed" to collect the rates for the inhabitants of the parish, and that he received the money on their account and was accountable to them for it, and not to the parish council, and therefore in the indictment under consideration he was properly described as "being in the employment as servant of the inhabitants of the parish," and as having received whilst so employed "money on the account of the said inhabitants, his employers."

It may be said that this conclusion is inconsistent with the language of section 81 (3), which declares that an existing assistant overseer, unless appointed by a board of guardians, shall "become an officer of the parish council." In one sense, as the parish council appoint and revoke the appointment of assistant overseers, they are officers of the council, but they may, not the less, in so far as the receiving and holding of money collected as rates is concerned, be the servants of, and employed by, the inhabitants, especially when it is clear that with respect to the discharge of these duties the council could not give any orders or directions, having no interest in their proper discharge. The object and effect of the Parish Councils Act, quoad the assistant overseer, is to place the council in the position formerly occupied by the inhabitants of the parish in vestry assembled, whilst it leaves the duties and employment of the assistant overseer the same as they were before that Act was passed. The description in the indictment, therefore, is correct, and the conviction must be affirmed.

Lord RUSSELL OF KILLOWEN, C.J., concurred in the judgment of Pollock, B.

HAWKINS, J.—I entirely concur in the judgment of my brother Pollock, which I have just delivered. There can be no doubt that the money received by an assistant overseer in respect of the poor rates is not the money of the parish council, and no action could be maintained by or against the parish council in respect of it. It is money which it is the duty of the assistant overseer to pay over to the overseers for distribution by them on behalf of the inhabitants of the parish for which they are appointed. For the purposes of such an indictment as this the money is properly described as the money of such inhabitants.

If the contention of the prisoner's counsel were correct, it would seem to follow that no prosecution under the statute 24 & 25 Vict. c. 96, s. 68, for embezzlement of rates by an assistant overseer appointed by a parish council could be sustained. For that section only makes it embezzlement for a clerk or servant to embezzle money received in the name or on account of his master or employer; and if the parish council is to be considered as the master or employer of the assistant overseer, and the money said to be embezzled is not received in the name or on account of the council, but on the account of the inhabitants of the parish, the requirements of the statute to constitute the crime of embezzlement would not be fulfilled, for the clerk or servant of the one body would have received money belonging to, and on account of, the other.

It may be that for some purposes the assistant overseer is the servant of the parish council, but for the purpose of collecting the poor rates he is the servant of the inhabitants whose money he collects.

GRANTHAM, J.—In my judgment this conviction must be confirmed. The only doubt that has arisen in this case has been caused by the appointments of assistant overseers being now transferred by the Local Government Act, 1894, from the vestry of the parish and the local justices of the peace to the parish council. It is alleged that in consequence of that transfer of the power of appointment the assistant overseer ceases to be the servant of the inhabitants of the parish, and becomes the servant of the parish council.

To make that contention logical it must be also contended that the money in the hands of the assistant overseer is the money of the parish council, and not the money of the inhabitants of the parish, but an examination of the Local Government Act, 1894, will show, I think, conclusively that neither contention is valid.

To determine the question properly it is necessary to see what were and are the duties of the assistant overseer, by whom he was appointed, and what is now the position of the parish council in reference to him and to the parish it represents. The office of assistant overseer is comparatively a modern appointment, for though overseers were appointed by a statute of Elizabeth, which is the foundation of all our poor law system, yet assistant overseers were not appointed till the 59 Geo. 3, c. 12.

His duties were practically the same that those of overseers had been—viz., to assess the poor rate on the inhabitants of the parish, to collect the money from them and then to pay it over to the person authorized to receive it (now the guardians of the union in which the parish is situated). The chief difference between the position of the overseers and the assistant overseers being this, that the first were not paid for their services, whereas the assistant overseer was paid a salary, which salary was included in the amount required to be raised, and he became therefore a servant of those who were his employers, and the money in his hands was the money also of his employers—i.e., those on whose behalf he had collected it. On whose behalf was it, then, collected? Not of the overseers to whom he was assistant, but of the persons to whom it still belonged after collection, and whose liability to pay that particular amount so collected did not cease until it was paid over by him on their behalf—viz., on behalf of the inhabitants of the parish. That being his position and these being his duties, let us now see how he was appointed. He was appointed, or rather elected, by the vestry of the parish, the vestry being the only corporate representative of a parish at that time, and he was then on that nomination appointed by the justices of the peace for the division in which the parish was situated.

But that system of appointment did not make him the servant of the overseers any more than the servant of the justices, and the cases of Reg. v. Sampson and Reg. v. Carpenter are distinct authorities for saying the assistant overseer was not the servant of the that overseer, but was the servant of the inhabitants, on whose behalf he received the money of the ratepayers or inhabitants of the parish. That being, I think, a correct description of his duties, and the way in which he was appointed, let us next turn to the position of the parish council, and see whether the Local Government Act, 1894, has in any way altered the position of the assistant overseer to the inhabitants of the parish, though it may have altered the machinery by which he is elected to or confirmed in his post. By that Act the power of the vestry to nominate or select him, and the power of the justices to appoint him is taken away, and in lieu of that method of dual appointment, the appointment is to be at once made by the parish council. But that seems to me to be the beginning and end of the change in his position to the inhabitants of the parish. If he ceased to be their servant in collecting their money, it would be because he was collecting their money for someone else—viz., the parish council, but the parish council have no interest in or control over the money he collects. He makes no return to them, and he gives no account to them, and they cannot control one single penny that he collects, although he often, nay, generally is, the clerk to the parish council, because it is convenient and economical that he should be; yet he need not be so appointed, but if he is appointed, his duties and position as clerk are quite independent of his position as assistant overseer, and the salary for such duties is independent of and in excess of what he gets as assistant overseer.

It may be that as section 81 (3) of the Local Government Act, 1894, says he shall (except as therein mentioned) become an officer of the parish council, he might be correctly so described in the indictment, but on that I give no opinion, as it is not before us, and it does not in any way affect the question we have to determine—viz., whether he is still the servant of the inhabitants of the parish.

For these reasons I think the conviction good.

LAWRANCE, J., concurred.

Conviction affirmed.

Solicitors for the prisoner, M. L. B. Braund, for Hebb, Ross.

Solicitors for the prosecution, Prior, Church, & Adams, for Burt, Ross.

Court of Appeal.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, Kay, & A. L. Smith, L.JJ.) — March 13, 16, 17, 19, 20, 31, 1896.

HINDSON v. ASHBY. (a.)

Water—River—Bed of river—Recession of water—Change of bed—Riparian owner—Owner of several fishery.

Whether a particular spot is or is not part of the bed of a river is a question of fact.

The plaintiffs, by virtue of an inclosure award made in 1803, were entitled to certain lands described in the award as being of a certain area and bounded on one side by a river which was at that point non-tidal, but navigable. Between the top surface of the plaintiffs' land and the water there was a bank of about 6 feet high. The defendant was the owner of a several fishery in the river, and as such owner was admitted to be owner of the bed of the river opposite the plaintiffs' land. In 1840 the defendant's predecessor in title planted trees in the bed of the river near the foot of the 6*ft. bank, and in* 1860 the defendant's father cut a small ditch at the foot of the bank. Gradually and by slow degrees, chiefly in consequence of the removal in 1878 of a weir lower down the river, the water receded from the foot of the plaintiffs' bank, and the evidence showed that a strip of land had been formed between the foot of the bank and the water, which in summer was dry but in winter was under water. Upon this strip the defendant in 1894 laid down a concrete path for convenience of access to eyots belonging to him in the river. The plaintiffs claimed, as an accretion to their land, the strip of land on which the path was made; the defendant claimed it as part of the bed of the river, and also under the Statute of Limitations by virtue of his possession for twelve years before action brought.

Held, that during the period of transition from bed of the river to land which no longer answered that description the Statute of Limitations could not be invoked by the defendant against the plaintiffs for the purpose of changing the ownership; but Held (reversing the decision of Romer, J., 44 W. R. 184, [1896] 1 Ch. 78), that upon a true view of the facts of the case, the strip of land in dispute was still bed of the river, and as such belonged to the defendant.

Whether the doctrine of accretion applies where, as in the present case, there is a fixed boundary, quære. The cases dealing with that question and with the rights of owners of several fisheries considered.

This was an appeal by the defendant from the decision of Romer, J., reported 44 W. R. 184, [1896] 1 Ch. 78.

The facts are set out in the report below and in the judgments of the Court of Appeal.

(a.) Reported by ARNOLD GLOVER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Crackanthorpe, Q.C., Bucknill, Q.C., and Stuart Moore, for the appellant.—The land in question has never lost its physical condition of bed of the river, and no law of accretion is applicable to the case. The plaintiffs' award could not have passed any of part of the river bed as against the defendant. The evidence shows that the defendant's predecessor, thirty-four years before the action was brought, cut a ditch in the land in dispute, and the cement path has been made upon the site of that ditch. The defendant is therefore entitled under the Statute of Limitations. The locus in quo is still for the greater part of the year under water. There is no authority for the statement "once a riparian owner always a riparian owner." If a sudden diminution of water takes place a riparian owner ceases to be a riparian owner. This land is not dry land, and there can be no accretion.

The following authorities were referred to: Jones v. Williams, 2 M. & W. 326; Bristow v. Cormican, 3 App. Cas. 641, 26 W. R. Dig. 90; Pryor v. Petre, 42 W. R. 435, [1894] 2 Ch. 11; Duke of Devonshire v. Pattinson, 20 Q. B. D. 263, 36 W. R. Dig. 217; Marshall v. Ulleswater Steam Navigation Co., 11 W. R. 489, 3 B. & S. 732; Curzon v. Lomax, 5 Esp. 60; Lyon v. Fishmongers' Company, 25 W. R. 165, 1 App. Cas. 662; Howard v. Ingersoll, 13 Howard's Reports Sup. Court, U.S., 381; State of Alabama v. State of Georgia, 23 ib. 505; Bracton's De Legibus Angliae, lib. ii., cap. 2; Britton, lib. ii., cap. 2; Fleta, lib. iii., cap. 2; Year-book, Ass. 22, Ed. 3, p. 106, placitum 93; Moore's Foreshore, pp. 370 et. seq., citing Hale's De Jure Maris; Ford v. Lacey, 7 H. & N. 151, 9 W. R. C. L. Dig. 79; Attorney-General v. Chambers, 2 W. R. 636, 4 De G. & J. 55, at p. 71; Callis on Sewers, [51]; Foster v. Wright, 4 C. P. D. 438, 28 W. R. Dig. 94; Rex v. Lord Yarborough, 3 B. & C. 91; In re The Hull and Selby Railway Co., 5 M. & W. 327; Marshall v. Ulleswater Steam Navigation Co., 20 W.R. 144, L. R. 7 Q. B. 166; and Malcolmson v. O'Dea, 12 W. R. 178, 10 H. L. Cas. 593.

Moulton, Q.C., A. àB. Terrell, and Baden Fuller, for the respondents.—The defendant sets up two cases which are contradictory, not alternative. If attacked he calls the locus in quo bed of the river. While not attacked he relies on acts of possession. If the defendant is right there will be, or may be, strips of land all over England between the lands of riparian owners and the rivers. Bed of the river is a definition by function, not by metes and bounds. It is no doubt a question of fact. In the present case the bed has become dry land. If once it is admitted that land may be bounded by fluctuating water, then there must be such a thing as a moveable freehold, and that theory is much more convenient than the metes and bounds theory. The same principles apply to the case of rivers as to the case of seas. The right of accretion is implied in the rights of riparian owners, and it is immaterial whether the accretion is caused by alluvion or by recession of water, whether by the act of nature or by the act of some person. We rely on Attorney-General v. Chambers and In re The Hull and Selby Railway Co.

They also referred to Leigh v. Jack, 28 W. R. 452, 5 Ex. D. 264, and Scratton v. Brown, 4 B. & C. 485.

Crackanthorpe, Q.C., in reply.—There is no analogy between the case of the sea and the case of a river. In In re The Hull and Selby Railway Co. it was impossible to distinguish the boundary, and Attorney-General v. Chambers was a foreshore case. The jus accretionis has no place where the boundary is ascertainable. If the plaintiffs' contention is right, a riparian owner can, directly the river recedes, build a wall and shut out the river.

Cur. adv. vult.

LINDLEY, L.J.—This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment of Romer, J., declaring a strip of land claimed by the plaintiffs and by the defendant to be the property of the plaintiffs. The dispute has arisen in this way. By an inclosure award made in 1803 a piece of land, situate in the parish of Wraysbury, in the county of Bucks and adjoining the Thames, was allotted to trustees, who are now represented by the plaintiffs. This piece of land is marked on the plan annexed on the award "No. 233, Church Land," and is described in the award as containing 3a. 2r. 8p. and as bounded on the south-west by the river Thames. The plan shows the same boundary. The other boundaries are also described and shown, and exist and are well known now. The terms of the award and the plan annexed show that on the south-west the allotment was bounded by the river; by which I understand the water of the river. There was no other boundary on that side. The allotment, however, did not slope gradually down to the water's edge; but, except when the river was much swollen, there was a drop of about 6ft. from the surface to the plaintiffs' allotment to the water. In other words, there was a bank of about 6ft. high between the top of the allotment and the water. This bank was part of the allotment, but was not its true boundary; the true boundary was the water of the river in its normal state. When much swollen the water came over the bank and flooded the allotment. On the other hand, when the water was low it may not even have reached the bank. The river at Wraysbury was and is a public non-tidal but navigable river.

The defendant claims to be, and is admitted to be, the owner of a several fishery in that part of the river which bounds the plaintiffs' land, and his fishing extends both above and below it. The defendant also claims to be, and he is admitted to be in respect of his fishery, the owner of the bed of the river and to be entitled to all such rights as his several fishery confers upon him. I do not understand that the admission goes further than this. We do not know the origin of his right to the fishery nor how he or his predecessors acquired the right to the bed of the river. Before considering the rights of the parties, I will state what has happened since 1803. In 1840 the defendant or his father planted a row of willows in the bed of the river at a short distance from the plaintiffs' bank. These willows are still growing. They are now large trees, and the defendant has lopped them from time to time, and has always claimed them as his. For many years silt and mud have been gradually accumulating in the river and on what was in 1803 unquestionably its bed; and those accumulations have been forming both at the foot of the plaintiffs' bank and also in the river above and below. In 1860, this mud having become tolerably firm, the defendant or his father cut a small ditch or grip in it at the foot of the plaintiffs' bank, and this ditch or grip has constantly been cleared out by the defendant. Shortly before the commencement of this action he filled up this ditch or grip with concrete in order to form a path for his own convenience to a bungalow on an eyot which he claims as his, and the ownership of which is not in dispute. The mud from this ditch has always been thrown on the river side of it, and has helped to raise the mud which kept gradually accumulating on the bed of the river. The defendant's evidence shows that this ditch or grip was cut and kept open to mark the boundary between the bed of the river and the land belonging to the plaintiffs. There is a mass of evidence and much contradiction about this ditch, some witnesses even denying its existence. But it is impossible to believe this, and I take the truth to be what I have stated. In 1877 or 1878 a weir known as Penton Hook Weir, and situate at Laleham some distance down the river, was removed by the Thames Conservancy. This caused the water in the river above to fall; and by the plaintiffs' land the fall amounted to about 2ft., more or less. This fall in the river increased the distance between the plaintiffs' bank and the water of the river, at least in the summer months. The fall also facilitated the gradual accumulation of mud on what had unquestionably once been the bed of the river. Gradually and by slow degrees the water has receded from the foot of the plaintiff's bank, and mud has accumulated between the foot of the bank and the water of the river in the summer and autumn months. The strip of land thus formed is dry in summer, but is under water in winter; it is of considerable length, and extends along the banks of the river both above and below the plaintiffs' land. The plaintiffs claim so much of this strip as lies between their land and the water, and they claim it as an accretion to their land. The plaintiffs, however, have never taken possession of this strip or used it as their property. On the other hand, the defendant claims it as part of the bed of the river. He also claims it under the Statute of Limitations by virtue of his possession for twelve years before action brought.

Romer, J., has decided that the land in dispute has ceased to be the bed of the river and belongs to the plaintiffs, and from this decision the defendant has appealed.

In order to determine the rights of the parties to this strip of land it is necessary to consider—first, the rights of the plaintiffs; and, secondl, they rights of the defendant. The owners of the allotment made in 1803 were clearly riparian proprietors, and the river being a public navigable river they had a right as members of the public to use the river as a public highway. They had also as riparian proprietors the right to pass to and fro between the water and their own land, and to pull their boats up from the water on to their own land, and to push them down again from their own land into the water. They had also as riparian proprietors the right to take water from the river provided they did not injure others by so doing. Those rights, at least, the allottees acquired, and those rights, at least, the plaintiffs are now entitled to: see Lyon v. Fishmongers' Co. The right of navigating a non-tidal river does not, however, entitle the public to fish in it: see Smith v. Andrews, [1891] 2 Ch. 678, 40 W. R. Dig. 90, and the authorities there cited. Consequently, as the defendant's predecessors had an exclusive right to fish in the river where it bounded the allotment, the plaintiffs' predecessors never had as riparian proprietors or otherwise any right to fish in the river either from their own land or in boats. Nor have the plaintiffs ever claimed such right. As regards the bed of the river, the presumption of ownership in the defendant's predecessors as owners of the several fishery displaces the presumption that would otherwise arise in favour of the riparian proprietors being the owners of the bed of the river usque ad medium filum, as to which see Hale, De Jure Maris, cap. 1. There is no question here of any right on the part of the Crown to the bed of the river; for at Wraysbury the river, though navigable, is not and never was tidal. The bed of the river clearly did not pass to the plaintiffs' predecessors by the allotment made in 1803; nor do I see upon what principle they can claim by accretion of mud or lowering of water any soil which, although dry at times, is still, as a matter of fact, bed of the river. Nor do I understand Romer, J., to be of a different opinion. His judgmant proceeds upon the footing that the strip of land in dispute has ceased to be bed of the river. I will consider this presently; but I will first state what I conceive to be the rights of the defendant as owner of a several fishery to the bed of the river within its limits.

Both upon principle and according to the authorities a several fishery may exist in a public navigable river either apart from or as incident to the ownership of the soil over which the river flows. Moreover (according to the law which governed pleadings and forms of action before the Judicature Acts passed), the owner of a several fishery, whether he owned the soil or whether he did not, could maintain trespass for a disturbance of his right of fishery; for, even if he did not own the soil, his several fishery was an incorporeal hereditament and a profit a prendre for the disturbance of which trespass was the appropriate remedy. The authorities on this point are Smith v. Kemp, 2 Salk. 637; Seymour v. Lord Courtenay, 5 Burr. 2814; Holford v. Bailey, 13 Q. B. 426, in the Exchequer Chamber. See also Marshall v. Ulleswater Steam Navigation Co. If the origin of a several fishery is known, if a grant creating it is produced or its terms can be inferred from those of more recent documents, the terms of that grant will show whether the grantee is the owner of an incorporeal hereditament only, or whether he is also the owner of the soil of the river in which his right of fishery exists. In Duke of Somerset v. Fogwell, 5 B. & C. 875, the terms of a grant of a several fishery in a public navigable and tidal river were inferred to have been such as to have conferred on the grantee an incorporeal hereditament only. If the existence of a several right of fishery is proved, and the owner of the several fishery can also prove that he has so used the soil over which his fishery extends as to give rise to the inference that he is the owner of the soil as well as of the fishery, he will establish his ownership of both. This was the case in Attorney-General v. Emerson, [1891] A. C. 649, 40 W. R. Dig. 90, when a several fishery was established over the foreshore of the Maplin Sands in the estuary of the Thames. But, further, it must be taken as now settled that, if the right to a several fishery in a public navigable river is proved to exist, the owner of the fishery is to be presumed to be also the owner of the soil over which his fishery extends, unless there is evidence to the contrary. The reasoning on which this presumption is based is not satisfactory, and the difficulties involved in it were very forcibly pointed out by Cockburn, C.J., in Marshall v. Ulleswater Steam Navigation Co., but the presumption is supported by Mr. Butler in his note to Coke upon Littelton (122*a*); it has the great authority of Bayley, J., and the other judges who decided Duke of Somerset v. Fogwell; it was deliberately sanctioned by the Court of Queen's Bench and by the Exchequer Chamber in Holford v. Bailey; it was recognized as law and was acted upon as such by Cockburn, C.J., himself and by his colleagues in Marshall v. Ulleswater Steam Navigation Co.; and, lastly, it was treated by the House of Lords in Attorney-General v. Emerson as no longer open to question. But, treating this presumption as established, what does it involve? Is the owner of a several fishery to be treated as if he were the grantee of a defined strip of land, with all subjacent mines and minerals? Or is his presumed ownership of the soil to be limited to the right to make such a use of it as is necessary for the purposes of his fishery? Are the limits of his soil fixed by metes and bounds, or do they change as the bed of the river changes? Again, what are his rights as regards riparian owners? What as regards accretions to the banks or to the bed of the river? And what are his rights as regards soil from which the bed of the river has permanently receded? The answer to all these questions must depend primarily on the real meaning of the doctrine under consideration, and on the extent to which the owner of a several fishery is to be treated as the owner of the bed of the river within the limits of his fishery; and on this subject there is as yet very little authority in our books. Scratton v. Brown is a very important authority to show that water boundaries of land may fluctuate in law as well as in fact. In Foster v. Wright it was decided that the owner of a several fishery had the exclusive right to fish in a river which had gradually encroached upon and into the land of a riparian proprietor, the limits of whose land were known. This decision was, in my opinion, quite right, although in one part of my judgment I may perhaps have gone too far. I am not, however, satisfied that I did, for in that case the river was the boundary. In The Mayor of Carlisle v. Graham, 18 W. R. 318, L. R. 4 Ex. 361, it was held that the owner of a several fishery, in a part of a river which had been permanently left dry, had no right to fish in an entirely new channel which the river had made for itself in quite a different place. No such questions arise here, but those cases are useful as throwing some light on the rights of owners of several fisheries. Treating the defendant as the owner of a several fishery, and as presumptively, as well as by the admission of the plaintiffs, the owner of the bed of the river within the limits of his fishery, it is very difficult to see how either his rights or those of the riparian proprietors can be affected either by accretions to the bed or by the lowering of the level of the water, so long as the accretions or the soil from which the water has receded are still in fact part of the bed of the river. So long as this is the case so long will the riparian proprietors continue to be such, and to be entitled to free access to and from their lands to the water across the accretions and soil left dry, and otherwise to use those accretions and soil to the same extent as they were entitled to use the bed of the river before any change in it became observable. On the other hand, in the case supposed, the owner of the several fishery will have the same rights to those accretions and soil, as parts of the bed of the river, as he had to the old bed of the river before any change took place. Moreover, the defendant's acts of ownership go far to show that he has not yet, at all events, lost his right to the accretions. Ford v. Lacey strongly supports his case on this point. Further, during the period of transition from bed of the river to land which no longer answers that description, the Statute of Limitations cannot be invoked by the owner of the several fishery against the riparian proprietors for the purpose of changing the ownership. The statute cannot begin to run against them in respect of ownership until the right to the soil accrues to them and this cannot be the case until the land has ceased to be bed of the river, and ceased, therefore, to belong to the owner of the fishery. On this point I agree with Romer, J. No doubt if the defendant had excluded the plaintiffs long enough from the use of the land in question the plaintiffs would have lost their rights over it, but there has not been any exclusion proved, and the Statute of Limitations, therefore, is out of the question: see Leigh v. Jack. Whether, apart from the Statute of Limitations, the accretions or the land left by the water can become the property of the plaintiffs or cease to be the property of the defendant is a question of considerable difficulty, and one which, in my view of the facts, it is not now necessary to decide. Passages were cited from Bracton, Britton, Fleta, and Hale's De Jure Maris, 1 and 6, and the Year-book, 22 Ed., 3 fo. 106, pl. 93, to show that the doctrine of accretion does not apply where boundaries are well defined and known. This may be if the boundary on the waterside is a wall, or something so clear and visible that it is ea to see whether the accretions, as they become perceptible, are on one side of the boundary or on the other. But I am not satisfied that the authorities referred to are applicable to cases of land having no boundary next flowing water, except the water itself. The cases of Reg. v. Lord Yarborough, affirmed by the House of Lords in Gifford v. Lord Yarborough, 5 Bing., 163, and In re The Hull and Selby Railway Company, seem opposed to those authorities if applied to fluctuating water boundaries. The judgments in Scratton v. Brown (pp. 498, 499, 502, 505) point in the same direction. On the other hand Attorney-General v. Chambers seems the other way. But it is unnecessary to dwell more on this question, and I leave it for reconsideration or decision when it shall arise. The conclusion at which I have arrived from a careful study of the evidence is that the strip of land in dispute has not yet ceased to be part of the bed of the river, and has not yet become, even if it ever will become, the property of the plaintiffs. In 1803 the water reached the bank of the river on the plaintiff's side; so it does now, although not so constantly as then. In summer the water is lower than it used to be, and since 1803 the river shore near the bank has risen from the constant accumulation of silt and mud, sided by willows, osiers, and vegetation. Still this strip of land is under water, except when the river is low. It is not under water only when the water is swollen by an unusual flood; its normal state in winter is under water, and it is under water when the river is well within its old banks. As stated by one of the plaintiffs' own witnesses, the least push of water brings the river over most, if not all, of the land in question. Notwithstanding, therefore, the photographs taken in the autumn of last year, and which show this strip of land to be dry land and covered with vegetation, I cannot come to the conclusion as a matter of fact that the strip in dispute has yet ceased to be bed of the river, and, if it has not, the plaintiffs' claim to it as their land cannot be supported. The defendant still has exclusive fishing rights over it, and the presumption that the soil is his is not rebutted by the fact that there is in summer and autumn less water there than there formerly was. If the doctrine of accretion is to be invoked, the accretion seems to me to be rather on and to the defendant's soil than on or to the soil of the plaintiffs. I do not see how the doctrine of accretion can assist the plaintiffs, so long as the accretion is in fact on what is still bed of the river. I do not propose to examine the evidence which has led me to the above conclusion as to the true state of the strip of land in dispute. My brother Smith has done this very fully in his judgment, and it is unnecessary for me to go over the same ground. I do not differ from the American authority (Howard v. Ingersoll) to which Romer, J., has referred, as affording criteria for determining what is and what is not bed of a river, but I am unable to concur with Romer, J., in his inference from the proved facts. I attach more importance than he did to the history of the case, and to the extent to which the place is still under water. The defendant's acts of ownership, although important from one point of view, do not throw much, if any, light on the question of fact on which this case really turns.

I am of opinion that the appeal must be allowed, and judgment be entered for the defendant, with costs here and below. But I think that our judgment should be prefaced by a declaration that the strip of land claimed by the plaintiffs was, at the time of the commencement of the action, part of the bed of the river, and as such is the property of the defendant, and that the plaintiffs have all the rights of riparian proprietors, so far as their land extends. This declaration will preserve the plaintiffs' rights over the strip of land as part of the bed of the river, and at the same time preserve to the defendant his right to the soil of the bed, including the strip in question.

KAY, L.J.—The plaintiffs are owners in trust of a piece of agricultural land which was allotted, under an inclosure award in 1803, to their predecessors in title, and was described in the award as bounded on the south-west side by the River Thames. This land is on the northern side of the river at Wraysbury, in the county of Bucks, where the river is navigable, but not tidal. The land is about 7 ft. above the river bed, and the bank is an irregular slope, upon which grow trees and bushes. The river opposite to the plaintiffs' land is divided into two streams by eyots now forming an island. These eyots belong to the defendant. He has also land on the northern bank, adjoining to the plaintiffs' land on the western side, and separated from it by a ditch. The defendant, in 1880, built a bungalow on the eastern end of the eyot opposite the plaintiffs' land, and for a convenient access to this bungalow, which is called "The Nest," the defendant has recently made a concrete path at the foot of the bank of the plaintiffs' land and a bridge of wood from the end of it to "The Nest."

The plaintiffs say that the land on which this path is made is part of the land belonging to them, and they have brought this action against the defendant for this alleged trespass. The learned judge has made a declaration that the land on which the path has been made was and is the plaintiffs' land and not part of the bed of the river. Against this the defendant appeals.

It seems to be admitted that the defendant is owner of a several fishery in this part of the river, and as such owner the bed of the river opposite the plaintiffs' land belongs to and is vested in the defendant. The question mainly argued in this case is whether the site of the path is bed of the river. The defendant says that it is. If not, he says it has not become property of the plaintiffs, and he relies on certain acts of ownership, which, he claims, have confirmed his title.

I will consider this last point first. The site of the path was no doubt originally part of the river bed. No act of the defendant while it was vested in him as alveus of the river can affect the question. If it has ceased to be river bed, there is no evidence when this took place. It cannot be affirmed that it happened more than twelve years before the acts complained of, and therefore no other title to it, except as bed of the river, is established by the defendant in this action. This, as I understand, was the view of the learned judge, and I cannot come, on this point, to any other conclusion. The question whether this site is bed of the river is of much more difficulty.

The plaintiffs are bound, in order to maintain an action of trespass like the present, either to prove that they are in actual possession of the land in question, or to establish a title which will sustain the action. There is no evidence of any act of ownership by the plaintiffs on any of the land below the bank. They or their tenants have always cultivated the land above the bank, and they claim that their possession of that land is possession of all the land down to the river. But no actual use or occupation of the land below the bank by the plaintiffs' predecessors in title is proved by the evidence. However, the plaintiffs contend that the water is their boundary, and that if that boundary gradually shifts by silting up of soil or by the stream receding, whether from a natural or an artificial cause, their boundary is still the water. Alternatively, the plaintiffs say, this river has receded by slow and imperceptible degrees, and this has caused an accretion to their land. They contend that the land in question is no longer bed of the river, but dry land, which, by the law of accretion, belongs to them.

There does not seem to be much dispute upon the main facts of the facts. Primâ facie the defendant, as owner of the fishery, is entitled to the bed of the river. This was a narrow branch of the river. In 1860 or thereabouts the defendant's father dug a shallow ditch, a foot deep, at the foot of the bank of the plaintiffs' land. At that time this land was river bed. I suppose it was apprehended that it might some day cease to be so, and this was a precaution taken to preserve the defendant's title to it if that should happen. In my opinion, as I have said, this was useless. Nothing of this kind done in the bed of the river could better the defendant's title or affect that of the plaintiffs. This ditch has been cleaned out from time to time by the defendant since its formation. It had no use except as a boundary. The cement path has been made in this ditch. The small quantity of soil thrown out in cleaning it was put on the side next the stream. A bank seems to have been slowly forming, which this soil somewhat increased. On this bank the defendant, in 1866 or about that time, planted oziers and willows, some of which have now become large trees, and from time to time he has lopped and trimmed these trees. About 1878 the Thames Conservators removed Penton Hook Weir, which caused the water to sink in this part of the river about 2 ft. From these causes, but chiefly by the last, the river has receded opposite the plaintiffs' land, so that during a great part of the year the bed where this cement path is made is dry land.

The learned judge has found that the site of the cement path is not now part of the river bed. It certainly is a somewhat strange way to use the bed of a river, to lay down along it a permanent pathway. This proves, at anyrate, that the defendant knows it will be dry for a great part of the year. The evidence proves that this is the case. How long it is dry is not distinctly shown, perhaps it would be difficult to estimate this. It must vary with the seasons. This year, we are told, it has been dry until the rains of this month, which have flooded the river so much that the water is over, not only the path, but also the mound of silt between it and the stream beyond. The defendant says that when he first recollects the land between the site of the path and the river, which is about forty years ago, "it was much lower than it is now; it accumulates year by year, it increases. It was more often under water than now, because some eighteen years ago the Thames Conservancy did away with Penton Hook Weir. They lowered the level of the Thames some 18in. or 20in." Mott, who was tenant of the plaintiffs' land from 1887 for some years, says that the ditch, on the site of which the path now is, was about a foot deep and 18in. wide. "Oftentimes, when the water was high in the winter time, it was full of water." Being questioned by the judge, he says that in heavy floods the water goes over the plaintiffs' field, and in the ordinary winter "it would be up over where the concrete was." Low, a surveyor, says that between the 8th of May and the 16th of July last year the water fell 20in., and that on the 16th of May the lowest point of the path was 2ft. 3in. above the water. He cannot say how often it is over the path. Gardam, a timber merchant, has known the locality since 1860. He says that the stream opposite the plaintiffs' land was, even in those days, in winter perhaps a strong stream, and in the summer practically almost a dry ditch. Now it is much lower. These are witnesses for the defendant.

Taking the plaintiffs' evidence, H. D. Buckland says that since 1866 he can state that the land below the bank of the plaintiffs' land has in some places silted up, in others the bank has fallen or been trodden in. Haldane knew the place in 1863 and 1869, and the water then, in flood, used to come over the bank. Simmons, a builder, living a mile and a-half away, has been accustomed to go to this part of the river all his life to bathe, fish, punt, or shoot. He says that years ago the water laved the bank all along the plaintiffs' land, and it is only within the last two or three years it has showed as much land as now. In cross-examination, he says that the stream will lave the bank now "at the least push of water." Rowles, aged sixty-six, has known the place all his life. He says that this was formerly the main stream of the river; but he does not believe you could row a skiff up it now. There were 14ft. of water there, and now there are not above 3ft. Hore fished in the stream last winter; the water was then 3ft. deep at the foot of the plaintiffs' bank. In winter it is generally from 2ft. 9in. to 3ft. 6in. in depth.

The plaintiffs have put in a useful plan, giving sections from the bank of their land to the water, when it was low in the summer. The first of these sections at A. is near the defendants' land on the north bank. The bank is here 14ft. 5in. above the water and the path, 6ft. 5in. below the bank, and 8ft. above the water. At B., which is about half way along the path, the bank is 12ft. 5in. above the water, the path 7ft. 5in. below the bank, and 5ft. above the water. At this point the mound between the path and the stream is about 3ft. higher than the path. At C., which is near the bridge to "The Nest," the bank is 13ft. 5in. above the water, the path 8ft. 5in. below the bank, and 5ft. above the water. The mound here is 4ft. above the path. C. is at the foot of the bridge. The path is 7ft. 5in. below the bank, and 5ft 2in. above the water. There is no mound between the path and the water at this point. The bridge is about 5ft. above the path and is reached by steps.

This gives the height of the bank above the path an average of about 7ft.

Photographs were taken last autumn, by the direction of the court, in the presence of the agents of both parties. The water was then very low, the path is strewn with leaves, and the place does not look much like the bed of a river.

This is not so much a question of disputed facts as of the inference to be drawn from facts not in dispute. But the words of Lopes, L.J., in Savage v. Adam, W. N. 1895, 109, recently adopted by the Court of Appeal in Colonial Securities Trust Co. v. Massey, 44 W. R. 212 [1896] 1 Q. B. 38, apply: "The presumption is that the decision of the court below on the facts was right and that presumption must be displaced by the appellant. If he satisfactorily makes out that the judge below was wrong, then inasmuch as the appeal is in the nature of a rehearing, the decision should be reversed; if the case is left in doubt, it is clearly the duty of the Court of Appeal not to disturb the decision of the court below."

Is, then, the case left in doubt? There is a well defined bank at the river end of the plaintiffs' land. Undoubtedly it was formerly the margin of the river bed, which ended, at any rate, not sooner than the foot of this bank. The river still overflows it and reaches to this bank, so as to be, according to the plaintiffs' evidence, from 2ft. 9in. to 3ft. deep in ordinary winter seasons. Sometimes, even now, the water in flood comes over this bank, which is about 7ft. above the land at the foot of it. It comes to the foot of this bank according to the plaintiffs' witne

Simmons, "at the least push of water." No doubt the river is lower since the removal of Penton Hook Weir in 1878. Also the bed has been rising, by an accumulation of silt, which the defendant has somewhat encouraged. But I cannot come the conclusion that the site of the defendant's path has ceased to be part of the river bed. I differ from the learned judge with reluctance; but I cannot help thinking he relied too much upon the appearance of the locality as shown in the photographs, and upon the inference to be drawn from the defendant's act in putting down the cement to form the pathway.

Assuming then, as I think, that the land up to the foot of the plaintiff's bank is still part of the bed of the river, the next question is, What are the relative rights of the parties? The plaintiffs have claimed it as their freehold. That claim fails. The defendant, however, has no other right to the bed of the river than that which he has as owner of the fishery. I do not find any definition of the extent of such a right. It must, in my opinion, be a limited ownership, in support and for the purposes of the fishery. Unquestionably any act done by the defendant in the bed of the river, which would interfere with the navigation, would be illegal. So also would any act, which interfered with the access from the plaintiffs' land to the water of the steam adjoining, whether it was low or high. The plaintiffs' right of access over the bed of the river to the water, in any state of its flow, I think is indisputable. The plaintiffs are riparian proprietors, and while the land up to the foot of the bank is bed of the river any act done by the defendant which would interfere with the rights of the plaintiffs as riparian proprietors would be illegal.

This action is not framed or intended to raise the question whether what the defendant has done in laying down the cement path is an act of this kind. The plaintiffs claim the site of path as their freehold, and the learned judge state that this was the question which both parties agreed to submit to him at the trial.

I am obliged to differ with respect from the conclusion of the learned judge. I think that the land in question has not ceased to be part of the river bed; but that the bank extends to the plaintiffs' land.

I think there should be a declaration to this effect, and also that the plaintiffs have all the rights of riparian proprietors on the northern side of the river so far as their land extends.

A. L. SMITH, L.J.—This is a common law action of trespass in which the plaintiffs complain that the defendant has broken and entered their close and laid down thereon a concrete footpath. The defendant denies that the land upon which he has laid down this footpath is the land of the plaintiffs, and he also sets up the defence of liberum tenementum. The substantial question is whether the land is the land of the plaintiffs.

It was proved that the plaintiffs are riparian proprietors upon the left bank of the River Thames near Staines, which at this part is a non-tidal, public, navigable river. Their predecessors in title having in the year 1803 had awarded to them, as trustees of the Wraysbury Church lands, a piece of arable and meadow land containing 5a. 2r. 8p. bounded on the south-west by the River Thames. It is not denied that the defendant is owner of a several fishery in the River Thames opposite to the plaintiffs' land, and it is not disputed that upon authority which cannot be questioned, Holford v. Bailey, Marshall v. Ulleswater Steam Navigation Co., and The Attorney-General v. Emerson, this ownership of the several fishery is evidence of the defendant's ownership of the soil underlying it. As to what acts an owner of a several fishery may or may not perform upon the soil underlying his fishery that question does not arise in this case, the question being, whether the land whereon the defendant has laid down the concrete path is or is not the plaintiffs'.

The plaintiffs being riparian proprietors and the defendant being owner of the soil of the bed of the river the question is to where, in the year 1894, when this action was brought, did the plaintiffs' land extend; in other words, where did their ripa end?

This seems to me so far, primâ facie, easy to answer, for where the bed of the river began (the soil of which was the defendant's) there the plaintiffs' ripa ended, but where as a matter of fact this boundary was in 1894 is the great question in this case. If the plaintiffs' land ended upon the river side of the concrete path, then, apart from some further questions which would arise under the Statute of Limitations, the plaintiffs are in the right; on the other hand, if it ended upon the land side of this path the plaintiffs are in the wrong. The burthen of proof is upon the plaintiffs to show that in 1894 their land extended to the land in dispute.

My brother Romer came to the conclusion that in 1894 the bed of the river ended outside—i.e., on the river side of the concrete path, and that the land of the plaintiffs therefore embraced the locus in dispute, and he gave judgment for the plaintiffs accordingly. The learned judge held, and I think quite rightly, that whether a particular spot is or is not part of the bed of a river is one of fact. To help him to decide this question he ordered that photographs should be taken of the locality and they were taken by the joint surveyors of the plaintiffs and the defendant. After having seen these photographs and heard the case out, the learned judge in his judgment says: "And but for the fact that this land did formerly form part of the bed of the river I doubt whether anyone would have the boldness to contend that in its present state and under its present conditions it formed part." This is a strong statement, and when I first saw the photographs which the learned judge had had taken they appeared to me to show that the learned judge's conclusion was justified, and if they had shown what I may call the average state of things as shown by the evidence, which I have since found out they do not, they would have been of much more value than they are. Whilst we were hearing this appeal three other photographs were taken—viz., upon the 19th of March, 1896, and were produced before us. If photographs were anything more than pictures representing a particular place at a particular time I should have thought that these last photographs should not have been looked at, but as photographs, unless verified upon oath, are not of themselves evidence; we looked at them as mere pictures. The two sets of photographs show two entirely different states of things—the one a dry autumn time and no water, the other a wet spring time with water. The latter show the water of the river a considerable way up what we know to be the left bank of the Thames, and which bank in my opinion plays a very important part in this case. These last photographs, unlike the previous, would lead to the conclusion that the locus in quo was bed of the river on the 19th of March, 1896. In these circumstances I part with the photographs which show such totally different scenes and turn to the evidence upon which the case must be decided to see where, in the year 1894, the bed of the river extended, and consequently where the plaintiffs' land ended.

The history of this part of the Thames for the last hundred years is by no means left in obscurity. The evidence shows that in the year 1803 the plaintiffs' field was situated some 6ft. or so above the river, and at its river end there was a steep sloping bank down to the river, in some places 6ft. and more, and in other places somewhat less, from its top to its foot. This bank I shall hereafter call the 6ft. bank. This bank has been described by the different witnesses as a shelving bank, almost perpendicular—not quite, as a steep bank, a sloping bank, rather steep with bramble growing along it, a sloping bank, the ordinary bank with the wash of the water coming against it. From the award in 1803 and the plan annexed, it would seem that at this date the bed of the river extended up to this 6ft. bank, and it is part of the plaintiff's case that this was so, and no one denies it. The plaintiffs say, and with truth, that they were then—i.e., in 1803—riparian proprietors, which they could not have been unless their land had extended down to the water's edge, for, as Lord Selborne said in Lyon v. Fishmongers' Co., "it is of course necessary for the existence of a riparian right that the land should be in contact with the flow of the stream." It is obvious, in a river like the Thames, rising, as we know it does, and as the evidence shows, in freshets and floods, and falling again in dry times and in droughts, that its waters, when freshets are on, would extend up the face of the 6ft. bank, and that in time of floods, as is the evidence, over the top of this bank, and that in dry times and drought the exact opposite would take place, and the waters would dwindle and recede from this bank. That this 6ft. bank in 1803 was the limit of the plaintiffs' land, and that it was also then the limit of the defendant's soil, I do not doubt. It is proved that where this bank stood in 1803 there it stands to-day, and it can be seen by anyone in exactly the same place, and in substantially the same condition as of old. It appears upon the evidence that within living memory the land lying on the river side of this 6ft. bank, and upon which the concrete path has been made, was much lower than it is now, and that accumulations have been taking place thereon year by year, that this land used to be more often under water than it is now, and more especially so since some eighteen years ago (1877 and 1878), when the Thames Conservancy did away with the Penton Hook Weir, which had the effect of lowering the level of the Thames at this point of the river some 18in. to 20in., one witness putting it at 30in., but no accurate measurements were made as to this.

It was shown that as long ago as 1832 Willing Eyot, Chitling Eyot, Billy's Eyot, and Pancake Eyot were in existence, and evidence was given, which I do not doubt is correct, that the planting of these eyots with willows and osiers, which has for some years been going on, resulted in the flow of the river at these parts being retarded, the consequence being the silting up of mud and soil brought down by the river, and thus these eyots became enlarged and altered and of different dimensions to what they theretofore had been, and the bed of the river near to its left bank at the spot in dispute thereby became raised. That the bottom of the river—i.e., the fundus or bed of the river as distinguished from its area and limits—became altered I do not doubt; the question to my mind is, Has its area or have its limits been curtailed? It was show that in 1840 the defendant's father planted willow trees in the bed of the river, which are to be seen there at the present day outside of the foot of the 6ft. bank, and it was proved by uncontradicted evidence that these trees had been continuously trimmed by the Ashby's from when they grew up to the present time. It was proved by an overwhelming body of evidence, although there was some contradiction as to this, that in 1860 Mr. Ashby's father had a grip, some call it a ditch, cut when the river was small along the toe of the 6ft. bank to mark his boundary, and at some places along this bank where the water stood up to this bank, he placed stumps for the like purpose.

It was also proved that continuously from 1860 to the present time Mr. Ashby had cleaned out this grip and had thrown what was dug out of it upon the place where the willow trees which had been planted by his father in 1840 grew. This, together with the continued silting up of the bed of the river around these trees, has created the outside bank at the foot of these willows which now exists.

It was proved that the concrete path was recently made by Mr. Ashby for the convenience of those inhabiting the bungalow which he had built upon his Billy's Eyot, so that when the river was low they might get thereto and therefrom dry shod, and it was also proved that this concrete path was made upon part of the site of the old grip or ditch.

That these willow trees, when planted in 1840, were planted in the bed of the river as distinguished from dry land is not denied by the plantiffs; it is part of their case that they were, and that this grip, when cut in 1860, was also cut in the then dry bed of the river is clear, and had either the trees been planted or the grip been cut upon dry land which had then ceased to be part of the bed of the river, and had then become dry land, the plaintiffs would, in my judgment, have been met by the Statute of Limitations, which they could not have got over, for it is not suggested by them that they have ever exercised a single act of ownership over the locus in quo, whilst the defendant, from 1840 downwards, has been exercising the acts above-mentioned. It was said that by tilling their field the plaintiffs had exercised acts of ownership over the land in dispute. This, in my opinion, is too far fetched to be adopted. Unless the defendant had been willing to waive the point, the plaintiffs would have been defeated in this action by reason of their not being able to establish any possessory title whatever upon which to maintain trespass.

Now, it must be pointed out, for it is very important, that no evidence has been produced to show that at any time the waters of the Thames, except as occasioned by the temporary and ordinary vicissitudes of the weather, have receded from their ancient bed which in 1803, as before stated, extended up to the 6ft. bank.

It is true that the general level of the waters of the river has been lowered, especially since Penton Hook Weir was abolished, and that for years silting up has taken place around the eyots as they have been planted with willows and oziers and also adjoining the left bank of the river, but as to the waters of the river having receded so as to constitute an abandonment of the ancient bed, and to leave land derelict, that has not only not been shown, but the contrary has been established. What has taken place, to use Lord Selborne's words in Lyon v. Fishmongers' Co., has been "in the ordinary and regular course of nature," and not otherwise, that is, when the weather is dry the river recedes, and when the weather is wet the river again reverts up to its old metes and bounds —i.e., to the 6ft. bank.

The evidence as to this is as follows: Mr. Ashby stated that the land—i.e., "between the 6ft. bank and the river, was always covered with water in the course of the year up to the 6ft. bank." Generally speaking, during the winter months, it was covered for a long period, and he did not ever recollect a year when it was not covered at some part of the time. Mr. Mott, who had farmed the plaintiffs' land, stated that in "ordinary winter time the water would be up over where the concrete was (i.e., to the 6ft. bank) not merely in heavy flood time, but in ordinary winter time it would be above the concrete path." Low stated that he had frequently seen the water over where the concrete path is. Gardam, who knew the place for the last forty-five years, having described the differences in the flow of the waters in different weathers and seasons, says, "In winter time it would be above that—i.e., the concrete path." "At certain portions of the year the water would be all behind these trees (i.e., up to the 6ft. bank); at other times there was a sort of a ditch and probably it might be mud, and in a week or two you could walk along there." "When the water was up I have fished close up to the bank—i.e., the 6ft. bank, behind the trees. It—i.e., the water between Billy's Eyot and the church lands—changes with the Thames; of course it rises and falls, probably a foot in a night. I might go there to-day and say that there is a ditch, and to-morrow I might say a running stream. A heavy rain like last night (he gave his evidence upon the 9th of August, 1895) would probably raise the Thames one foot," and Mr. Symonds, called by the plaintiffs, stated that "at the least push of water" it will be laving the bank—i.e., the 6ft. bank.

This being the evidence, now comes the question, What constituted the bed of the river in 1894?

Was it the same old bed, I mean by that did it consist of the same old limits, or has the old bed been curtailed, and if so, when, and by how much?

I take the bed of a river to be where the running water of the river makes its mark. It may be there one moment and back another, and as the rains from heaven descend it will ever and again fill its old accustomed bed. I will here use the words which I find in an American case to which I have been referred, The State of Alabama v. The State of Georgia, for they in apt language convey what I mean to express as to what constitutes a bed of a river: "The bed of the river is that portion of its soil which is alternately covered and left bare, as there may be an increase or diminution in the supply of water, and which is adequate to contain it at its average and mean stage during the entire year, without reference to the extraordinary freshets of the winter or spring, or the extreme droughts of the summer or autumn."

If the old bed has been curtailed as the plaintiffs assert, this must have been brought about either by reason of the receding of the river from part of its ancient bed and leaving the land derelict, or by reason of the deposit of alluvion against the plaintiffs' bank, either of which in this case must have occurred since the year 1882—i.e., within twelve years of action, in order to avail the plaintiffs, for otherwise they would be defeated by the Statute of Limitations.

The incidents attending, and the distinction between, land derelict and land formed by alluvion, is dealt with by Best, C.J., in delivering the opinion of the judges in the House of Lords in Gifford v. Lord Yarborough.

As regards the possibility of an owner of a several fishery having a shifting boundary to his land under his several fishery, Baron Bramwell, in the case of Mayor of Carlisle v. Graham, dealing with a several fishery, says: "The plaintiffs had a several fishery which, no doubt, must have been granted or acquired by metes and bounds; the locus in quo is not within those metes and bounds." If this be the law, then, even if the plaintiffs could have established that the Thames had receded from part of its ancient bed, not merely by shrinking and again growing in the ordinary and regular course of nature, but had permanently done so and left land derelict, it would be adverse to the plaintiff's contention that as the river receded so the soil underneath the several fishery of the defendant also became contracted.

It was pointed out by the plaintiffs' counsel that Bailey, J., in Scratton v. Brown, when dealing with the question as to whether there may be a shifting boundary to land, says: "That must be the case of land fronting the sea or a river where from time to time the sea or river encroaches or retires. If the sea leaves a parcel of land, the piece left belongs to the person to whom the shore there belongs. The Crown by a grant of the sea-shore would convey not that which at the time of the grant is between high and low-water mark, but that which from time to time shall be between those two termini."

I incline to the opinion that where the water is the boundary this may be so, but whether this is so where such a line of demarcation as the 6ft. bank exists I do not decide, for there has been no such receding by the waters of the Thames in the present case so as to leave land derelict as to raise the point.

For reasons above given, in my judgment, the plaintiffs have not proved, as they were bound to do to establish this part of their case, that the Thames has receded from part of its ancient bed, but on the contrary the evidence shows that it has not.

It was said that the photographs ordered by Romer, J., showed that land vegetation had sprung up and had taken the place of water vegetation upon the locus in dispute, and that this showed that it had become dry land in 1895, and was consequently not in 1894 the bed of the river.

There is not a particle of evidence that this is so, and, speaking for myself, I cannot tell by looking at the photographs whether this be so or not, and even if I could, as I have before said, photographs per se and unverified are no evidence at all.

Being of opinion that the evidence shows that the area of the bed of the Thames extends to where it always has been during the present century—i.e., up to the foot of the 6ft. bank, this in my judgment is sufficient to conclude this case in favour of the defendant, and upon this I decide it. But if I am wrong I must add that I very much doubt if the plaintiffs can invoke the doctrine of accretion as applying to a case where, as here, the old line of demarcation between the plaintiffs' land and the river has always been in existence and still remains patent for all to see. I allude to the old 6ft. bank.

It cannot be denied that authority is to be found in the books, for instance, in Hale's De Jure Maris, Britton, Fleta, Bracton, the Institutes of Justinian, and the Year-books, all of which will be found referred to by Lindley, J., in his judgment in Foster v. Wright, at p. 447, and also in the judgment of Chelmsford, L.C., in Attorney-General v. Chambers, at p. 71, and in other cases, which would lead to the conclusion that in a case with such metes and bounds ever existing, as in the present, the doctrine of accretion would not apply. The case upon which counsel for the plaintiffs relied to show that although there might be metes and bounds, yet the doctrine of accretion did apply, was that of Foster v. Wright. In that case, in which the question was as to whether the owner of a fishery in a river could follow his fishery when the river gradually and imperceptibly changed its course and ate into the soil of another, although after many years the encroachment upon that other's soil could be identified, Lindley, L.J., held that it could be followed, and if I may be permitted to say so, I agree with him; but that learned judge said: "The change of the bed of the river has been gradual, and although the bed is not now where it was, the shifting of the bed has not been perceptible from hour to hour, from day to day, from week to week, nor in fact at all, except by comparing its position of late years with its position many years before."

This, I would point out, is not so in the present case, for, as before stated, the old 6ft. bank has been ever standing where it is. There stands the old line of demarcation of the plaintiffs' land, and there it has stood clearly defined whenever the deposit of alluvion by reason of the silting up of sand became such as to be in itself apparent, and then, at that very moment when the first, and indeed every subsequent accretion, became apparent, so also at the same identical time it became perceptible to the ordinary observer that the accretion so formed was no part of the plaintiffs' land.

This certainly differentiates this case from Foster v. Wright in an essential particular, and as at present advised I doubt extremely whether the doctrine of accretion applies at all to the present case.

The whole doctrine of accretion is based upon the theory that from day to day, week to week, and month to month, a man cannot see where his old line of boundary was, by reason of the gradual and imperceptible accretion of alluvion to his land.

How can this apply to a case like the present, when the whole thing is at once patent? The late Willes, J., in the case of Lloyd v. Ingram (the Shoreham foreshore case, which will be found reported in a report of its own, 1868) then laid down the law of accretion to the jury: "If by gradual and imperceptible accretions in the ordinary course of the operations of nature land is added on by slow degrees to the shore" (Lloyd v. Ingram had relation to the seashore, but as to this point a river stands, in my judgment, upon the same footing), "notwithstanding that after a certain period you may see that a body of land, however considerable, has accrued to the shore, yet if the steps by which that land is formed are steps gradual and in the ordinary course of nature, and happening from time to time, but you cannot perceive the change from step to step (if one may use the figure), then that land so gradually and imperceptibly accrued does belong to the owner of the shore and is given to him by the law as his property. I say 'gradual and imperceptible.' . . . The question is whether the land in question was formed by sudden, practical, perceptible addition such as ordinary observation would recognize from time to time, or whether it was formed by gradual additions such as ordinary observation would not recognize as one from step to step, but as to which from stage to stage you would say there has been an addition that I can now perceive to the place in question."

Apply this ruling to the present case. As soon as any deposit of alluvion became visible at all, a practical, perceptible addition to the plaintiffs' land would at once be by the ordinary observer recognized, and this would be seen not by stage to stage, but by step to step. As, however, I have not to decide this point I will say no more about it, excepting that there appears to me to be great obstacles in the plaintiffs' way in maintaining that the doctrine of accretion applies to this case at all. In my judgment my brother Romer has been led astray by the photographs he ordered to be taken, and has lost sight of the proved fact of the ancient and still existing boundary, the old 6ft. bank, and he does not so much as allude to the fact, which the evidence clearly shows, that what the Thames has for the last hundred years been doing and still is doing as regards its rise and fall to and from the 6ft. bank, has ever been in the ordinary and regular course of nature, both facts, in my opinion, of vital importance for the right determination of this case. I must take leave to say that, having considered the whole evidence in this case, I have the boldness to assert that in 1894 the site of the concrete path formed part of the ancient bed of the Thames.

The learned judge held that the putting down of the concrete path by the defendant was evidence that the land no longer formed part of the bed of the river, and he said that he suspected that the defendant had done so in order to acquire title to the land. With all respect I cannot agree with my brother Romer in either of these suggestions. What the defendant did was to put down this path in the dry bed of the river, so that that bed might be better utilized by passers on foot (when the waters of the river were off it) to and from the bungalow by having a dry path instead of a slimy, slippery, and at times muddy one to walk upon.

The plaintiffs are still entitled, as they have ever been since 1803, as riparian owners to access to the river, to contact with its waters as they shrink and grow in the ordinary and regular course of nature: Lyon v. Fishmongers' Co.

This right they have still, and this right the defendant cannot interfere with. If he does, then I apprehend the plaintiffs may lawfully complain, but I cannot bring myself to hold, as my brother Romer held, that the soil whereon the concrete path has been placed is the soil of the plaintiffs, for in my opinion it is not, and therefore this action must be dismissed with costs here and below.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Soames, Edward, & Sons, for Rowell & Lomas, Rickmansworth; S. Vigers & Richardson.

From Q. B. Div. (Lord Esher, M.R., and Lopes and Chitty, L.JJ.) — Jan. 29.

MARTIN v. MARTIN & CO. (a.)

Practice — Consolidation of actions — Application by plaintiff — Ord. 49, r. 8.

The court has power to make an order for the consolidation of actions at the instance of a plaintiff as well as at the instance of a defendant.

Appeal from an order made by Cave, J., at chambers.

The plaintiff brought an action against the defendants for breach of a contract to deliver certain shares.

The defendants alleged that the contract was subject to certain conditions, and pleaded that they had given the plaintiff a bill of exchange, which had not then matured.

On this bill being dishonoured at maturity the plaintiff brought a second action in which he claimed both for the breach of contract and also on the bill of exchange.

On the application of the plaintiff Cave, J., made an order for the consolidation of the two actions, under ord. 49, r. 8.

The defendants appealed.

Kisch, for the defendants.—There is no jurisdiction to order actions to be consolidated at the instance of a plaintiff. Ord. 49, r. 8, is as follows: "Causes or matters pending in the same division may be consolidated by order of the court or a judge in the manner in use before the commencement of the principal Act in the Superior Courts of Common Law." By the practice at common law actions could only be consolidated at the instance of the defendants, and the rule adopts that practice: Amos v. Chadwick, 4 Ch. D. 869, 25 W. R. Dig. 186.

(a.) Reported by F. G. RUCKER, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Ashton Cross, for the plaintiff, cited Bennett v. Lord Bury, 5 C. P. D. 339, 28 W. R. Dig. 174; and Amos v. Chadwick, 26 W. R. 840, 9 Ch. D. 459.

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 29.—Lord ESHER, M.R.—It is argued that there was no jurisdiction to make an order for the consolidation of these actions, because the application for it was made by the plaintiff. The case depends on ord. 49, r. 8. That rule says that causes pending in the same division may be consolidated in the manner in use in the common law courts before the Judicature Act. It is said that before the Act such an order could only be made on the application of a defendant. That practice was known to the framers of the rule, and if they had intended to continue that practice they could have said so. But what they have said is that, where causes are pending in the same division—that is a condition precedent to the making of an order—they may be consolidated in the manner formerly in use in the common law courts. That means that if an order is made, it is to be dealt with in the old manner. I desire to give the rule a wide interpretation which will leave the judge at chambers a large discretion, subject, of course, to an appeal to this court. I think that the only condition precedent to the making of an order is that the causes should be in the same division.

LOPES, L.J.—The old practice was that actions could not be consolidated except on the application of defendants. But we have to consider the present rule. There is nothing in that rule to show that an application for an order for consolidation can only be made by a defendant. The actions to be consolidated must be in the same division, that is the only condition precedent. I agree that it is wise that in a matter of this sort as much as possible should be left to the discretion of the judge.

CHITTY, L.J., concurred.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, Goldberg, Langdon, Barrett, & Newall.

Solicitors for the defendants, Gibson, Weldon, & Bilbrough.

From Q. B. Div. (Lord Esher, M.R., and Lopes and Rigby, L.JJ.) Dec. 11, 19.

LANE v. COX. (a.)

Landlord and tenant—Negligence—House let in dangerous condition — Defective staircase — Injury to tenant's workman—Liability.

There is no implied obligation upon the landlord of an unfurnished house towards his tenant not to let the house in a defective or dangerous condition. Consequently, the landlord is not liable in an action for negligence brought against him by the tenant for injuries sustained by reason of such defective condition; a fortiori the landlord is not liable in such an action brought against him by a workman employed by the tenant.

This was an appeal from the judgment of Lord Russell of Killowen, C.J., who non-suited the plaintiff at the trial of the action with a special jury.

The action was brought to recover damages for personal injuries from the defendant, the owner of a house which he had let to a weekly tenant; and the plaintiff was a workman employed by such tenant.

It appeared at the trial that the plaintiff in company with another man was employed by the tenant to remove some furniture. While the two men were carrying a bedstead downstairs the staircase gave way and the plaintiff was badly injured. It was also proved at the trial that the staircase, not having sufficient support, was defective and unsafe, and that this defect existed at the time the tenant went into occupation. It was further proved that the tenant had complained to the landlord of the defective condition of the staircase.

The Lord Chief Justice ordered a non-suit on the ground that the plaintiff had failed to show that there was any duty towards him on the part of the defendant.

From this judgment the plaintiff now appealed.

Sinclair Cox (F. Lampard with him), for the appellant.—The non-suit was wrong. The defect existed at the time the premises were let, and the defendant was liable for the repair of the premises as between himself and the tenant. The tenant had complained to the defendant of the state of the stairs. There was sufficient evidence of an agreement by the defendant to do repairs to go to a jury: Payne v. Rogers, 2 H. Bl. 350; Sandford v. Clarke, 37 W. R. 28, 21 Q. B. D. 398. An action for negligence will lie against a landlord who has demised his premises knowing them to have been in a dangerous condition: Todd v. Flight, 9 W. R. 145, 9 C. B. N. S. 377. Even if he had not such knowledge he would be liable: Gwinnell v. Eamer and Wife, L. R. 10 C. P. 658, 23 W. R. Dig. 143. In the present case the staircase was a private way, whereas in the case of Robbins v. Jones, 12 W. R. 248, 15 C. B. N. S. 221, the structure in question was part of a highway. Again in Gandy v. Jubber, 12 W. R. 526, 5 B. & S. 78, the landlord was held liable for damages to a passer-by in respect of a dangerous grating over a cellar.

B. F. Williams, Q.C. (F. R. G. Radcliffe with him), for the respondent.—The non-suit was quite right. The action was for negligence, but there was no evidence of negligence on the part of the defendant. Moreover, there was no duty on the part of the defendant towards the plaintiff. You cannot recover against a landlord unless he has neglected some duty the omission of which constitutes a nuisance and a danger to the public: Francis v. Cockrell 18 W. R. 1205, L. R. 5 Q. B. 501; Le Lievre v. Gould, 41 W. R. 468, [1893] 1 Q. B. 491; Heaven v. Pender, 11 Q. B. D. 503.

Sinclair Cox replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 19.—Lord ESHER, M.R.—In this case the plaintiff brought an action against the defendant, as owner of a house, to recover damages in respect of an injury he had received owing to the defective condition of such house. The evidence showed that the house was owned by the defendant, that it was let to a weekly tenant who was in occupation at the time the plaintiff sustained the injury, and that at the time of the letting to the tenant the house was in an unsafe condition owing to the defective condition of the staircase, which defect caused the injury to the plaintiff. The question for this court is whether the defendant was liable to the plaintiff. There was no contractual relation between the plaintiff and the defendant. The defendant did not invite the plaintiff into the house. Nor is this like the case of a shopkeeper who keeps his shop open for the public to enter therein.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Then it was said that there was negligence on the part of the defendant; that he was negligent in having let the house to a tenant in a dangerous condition, and that such negligence caused the accident to the plaintiff. It has been pointed out in several cases before this that you cannot accuse a person of negligence towards another unless you prove that he has some relation to or duty towards such other person, and that he had neglected to perform such duty. This was decided by Heaven v. Pender, which was followed by Elliott v. Hall, 34 W. R. 16, 15 Q. B. D. 315.

Looking at those cases we have to see if there was any duty existing between the parties here. It has been pointed out in previous cases what relation between the parties will create a duty. If, for instance, a person is on a highway, he has a duty towards any other person who may also be on that highway and near to him; on each of them is imposed a duty to take reasonable care so as not to interfere with the other. So, again, if a person has a house close along a highway or public road, the proximity of his house to such highway or road imposes a duty on him to all persons passing thereby; and if the owner, by the negligent management of such house, causes injury to passers by, he is liable in an action for damages. So also again with regard to your next-door neighbour; you must not let your house be in such a condition as to cause any injury to him.

In the present case before us, however, it is said that there was negligence on the part of the defendant in letting his house to a tenant when it was in a defective condition. It has, however, been held that, in the absence of any contract to the contrary, there is no duty on the part of a landlord towards a tenant to let his house in a condition that is not defective. There is no duty imposed on a landlord not to let an unfurnished house in a rotten condition. Any such duty must depend upon express contract. If there is no such duty then on the part of the landlord towards his tenant, much less is there any duty on his part towards a stranger. Therefore there was no duty on the part of the defendant here to the plaintiff, and if there was no duty on his part there could be no negligence. The Lord Chief Justice was therefore quite right in directing a non-suit, and this appeal must therefore, in our opinion, be dismissed.

LOPES, L.J.—The defect complained of here is the defective staircase in the house let by the defendant to a tenant. There is no liability on the part either of the landlord or the tenant, except in the case of a statutory or contractual duty to keep the house in repair, and no evidence has been produced of any such duty in this case; and where there is no duty existing there clearly cannot be any negligence. The non-suit, therefore, was right.

RIGBY, L.J.—I only desire to add the remark that, as to the contention that a landlord is liable if he lets his house in a defective condition, the duty of the landlord only relates to public buildings and does not relate to his tenant or his tenant's guests.

Appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellant, A. Savage Cooper.

Solicitors for the respondent, Powell & Skues.

From Chan. Div. (Lindley, A. L. Smith, and Rigby, L.JJ.) — Jan. 20, 22.

In re ISAAC.
CRONBACH v. ISAAC. (a.)

Practice — Administration action — Costs — Defendant trustees — Severance of defence — Apportionment of costs—Discretion of court—Appeal—R. S. C., 1883, ord. 65, r. 1.

In an action to administer the estate of a deceased testator, in which the two trustees and executors S. and I. were defendants, the defendants were represented by one firm of solicitors until a certain date, when they severed, and the defendant I. appeared in person. Some time afterwards I. instructed another solicitor to act for him. The action coming on for hearing on further consideration, Kekewich, J., gave the trustees one set of costs only out of the estate, and directed that it should be paid to S. exclusively.

Held, on appeal, that, there being no evidence that I. had acted unreasonably in severing, the costs were not in the discretion of the judge, and therefore the appeal was competent.

Further, that the proper order to be made was that one set of costs should be given, to be apportioned by the taxing-master, but so as to give to I. only costs for work actually done by him.

Appeal of the defendant, Saul Isaac, one of the executors and trustees of the will of the testator, Samuel Isaac, from a decision of Kekewich, J., whereby his lordship had directed that in an administration action one set of costs only should be paid to the trustees out of the estate, and that those should be paid to the other trustee, Lewis Solomon, to the exclusion of Isaac.

The testator's will and codicil, dated the 3rd of July, 1886, and the 10th of November, 1886, respectively, were proved by two of the executors named therein, Isaac and Solomon, power being reserved to the others to come in and prove. He died on the 22nd of November, 1886.

The deceased was a contractor to the Mersey Railway Co., and it was stated that shortly after his death his brother, Saul Isaac, endeavoured to get those contracts transferred to him for his own benefit.

An action was commenced by writ issued the 14th of December, 1886, for the administration of the trusts of the testator's will, the two executors and trustees Isaac and Solomon being the defendants.

Judgment in the action was delivered on the 30th of April, 1887.

The chief clerk's certificate was filed the 12th of August, 1895, and the further consideration came on for hearing on the 25th of March, 1896, when Kekewich, J., made the order now appealed from.

Until the 22nd of November, 1892, both the executors were represented by Messrs. Grover, Humphreys, & Son. Isaac, however, then withdrew his retainer and put his own name on the record.

On the 24th of January, 1894, he appointed Mr. Ernest Bevir as his solicitor, who had continued to act for him since.

No evidence was before the court to explain why the trustees had severed in the course of the proceedings.

Farwell, Q.C., and Rowden, for the appellant.—Unless severance per se is misconduct, the trustees are entitled to their costs, and to share them: Course v.

(a.) Reported by W. SHALLCROSS GODDARD, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

Humphrey, 26 Beav. 402, 7 W. R. Ch. Dig. 3; Attorney-General v. Wyville, 28 Beav. 464, 9 W. R. Ch. Dig. 63. They are entitled to one set of costs only, but the taxing-master, and not the judge, decides the proportion in which it is to be divided between them. The decision of Kekewich, J., if allowed to stand, would create a new practice.

Warrington, Q.C., and Borthwick, for the respondent, Solomon.—This is really an appeal for costs, and is not a question of depriving a trustee of costs out of the estate. No question of principle is involved; it is merely a question for the judge to decide how the costs are to be divided; that is in the judge's discretion, and the Court of Appeal will not interfere with that discretion. It really becomes an appeal from the judge to the taxing-master.

A. H. Jessel, for the beneficiaries.

Farwell, Q.C., in reply.—If the order stands, this curious anomaly will result: the estate is not fully wound up, and Isaac is ordered to get in some of the outstanding assets; is he to do this and to give his services gratuitously?

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 22.—The judgment of the court was delivered by

LINDLEY, L.J.—This is an unfortunate appeal about costs, and the first question which arises is whether the appeal is competent. The case is this: [His lordship shortly stated the facts, and continued:] In the order on further consideration the costs were dealt with by the learned judge in this way. One set of costs only was given to the trustees, and they were to be paid to Mr. Solomon to the exclusion of Mr. Isaac. Mr. Isaac appeals from that order, and the appeal is based on that part of ord. 65, r. 1, relating to costs, which says: "Subject to the provisions of the Acts and these rules, the costs of and incident to all proceedings in the Supreme Court, including the administration of estates and trusts, shall be in the discretion of the court or judge, provided that nothing herein contained shall deprive an executor, administrator, trustee, or mortgagee who has not unreasonably instituted or carried on or resisted any proceedings of any right to costs out of a particular estate or fund to which he would be entitled according to the rules hitherto acted upon in the Chancery Division."

The effect of the order of Kekewich, J., as it stands, is to deprive Mr. Isaac of all his costs, because only one set of costs was allowed, and the whole of them are to go to one trustee. The question is whether, on the evidence before the learned judge, Mr. Isaac had unreasonably carried on these proceedings. Messrs. Isaac and Solomon severed in their defence, possibly for a good and sufficient reason; for some time they worked together, and then Isaac, for some reason which is unexplained, employed a separate solicitor. Primâ facie that is conduct which requires explanation; but the question is whether the court ought to act on that without giving him an opportunity of explaining his conduct. There is no evidence on the subject, and it would be going too far to deprive a trustee of his costs on that ground, and therefore the appeal is competent, the costs not being in the discretion of the court.

We have come to the conclusion that there is upon the evidence no ground for judicially depriving Mr. Isaac of his costs: he asks that the costs may be apportioned between him and his co-trustee, but we are met with the difficulty that the effect of that might be to deprive Mr. Solomon of costs to which he is entitled for what he has done. Mr. Farwell pointed out in the course of the argument that he had no desire to do that, but he only wished to secure to his client such costs as were attributable to his services, and he said that Mr. Isaac had been directed to take proceedings to get in some of the assets, and had got them in, and the costs of so doing could not properly be paid to Mr. Solomon. On turning the matter over in our minds, and consulting with the taxing-master, we are not satisfied with the order asked for. We vary the order, therefore, and direct that one set of costs only shall be given, and shall be apportioned by the taxing-master between Messrs. Isaac and Solomon, with the addition of these words, "but so as only to give to Mr. Isaac costs for work actually done by him."

Then with regard to the costs of the appeal. There will be no order as to the costs, except that the respondents, other than Solomon—that is to say, Mr. Jessel's clients, shall have their costs of the appeal out of the estate.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors, Ernest Bevir; Grover, Humphreys, & Son; McDiarmid & Teather.

High Court of Justice.

Chan. Div. (Stirling, J.) — Jan. 12, 27.

In re WESTERN COUNTIES STEAM BAKERIES AND MILLING CO. (LIMITED). (a.)

Company—Winding up—De facto auditors—Officers of the company—Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, s. 10.

Persons who act as auditors of a company are officers of that company within the meaning of section 10 of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, even though they have never been formally elected auditors.

In re Coventry and Dixon's case, 28 W. R. 775, 14 Ch. D. 660, applied.

In re London and General Bank, 44 W. R. 80, [1895] 2 Ch. 673, and In re Kingston Cotton Mill Co., 44 W. R. 210, [1896] 1 Ch. 6, followed.

This was a summons by Charles Edward Parsons and Frederick Pring Robjent, asking that proceedings under a summons taken out by the liquidator of the company against them and other persons under section 10 of the Companies (Winding-up) Act, 1890, might be stayed on the ground that they were not "officers of the company" within the meaning of that section. The question involved was whether persons who were not formally elected auditors of the company, yet de facto discharged the duties of auditors, were liable to be proceeded against under this section.

The facts were as follow: The company was formed in January, 1888, with articles of association which contained provisions as to the appointment and duties of auditors substantially the same as those given in Schedule I., Table A, to the Companies Act, 1862, and also an indemnity clause beginning: "The directors, auditors, and other officers for the time being of the company."

The applicants carried on business in partnership as accountants in Newport, Mon.

In November, 1888, they were brought into connection with the company through some negotiations for an advance to the company on a mortgage, which fell through.

(a.) Reported by J. I. STIRLING, Esq., Barrister-at-Law

On the 23rd of January, 1889, the chairman of the company (carrying on business at Bath) wrote the following letter to Mr. Parsons: "We are now preparing our balance-sheet, and there are some items in it which will require, I think, the services of a valuer such as yourself. You have already looked over our business establishments pretty carefully, I think, and a day or two in Bath further would, I think, enable you to make a report upon the matter. I presume this business would be in your line, and as Newport is now such a short distance from Bath, I daresay you will think it worth your while to run over and see me on the matter, when, I make no doubt, we could readily adjust the question of terms, &c., and when I could more fully explain what it is the board wants." In consequence of this letter Mr. Parsons went to Bath and saw the chairman, and subsequently sent a clerk to the offices of the company, who prepared a balance-sheet for the year 1888. This was sent by the firm to the chairman, with the following certificate annexed:

"We have carefully examined the accounts of the Western Counties Steam Bakeries and Milling Co. (Limited), and find the same to be in accordance with the above balance-sheet, which shows the correct financial position of the company.

"PARSONS & ROBJENT.

"Newport, Mon., Feb. 13, 1889."

This balance-sheet, with the certificate annexed, was subsequently circulated among the shareholders of the company, and a dividend on the basis of it was declared at a general meeting held in February, 1889.

There was no evidence that Messrs. Parsons & Robjent were formally appointed auditors of the company by the directors previously to the last-mentioned meeting. It was clear, however, from a correspondence which passed between Mr. Parsons and the chairman that Messrs. Parsons & Robjent were aware that their balance-sheet and certificate would be submitted to the general meeting. The minutes of the general meeting were not forthcoming, but Messrs. Parsons & Robjent denied that they were elected auditors at that meeting in accordance with Article 126. There was no evidence to the contrary, and the judge came to the conclusion that they were not so elected. Messrs. Parsons & Robjent had considerable difficulty in obtaining payment of their fees; ultimately in September, 1889, these were paid by the chairman's cheque. Towards the end of 1889 the chairman again applied to Messrs. Parsons & Robjent, not to prepare a balance-sheet, but to audit the accounts. The same clerk who had prepared the former balance-sheet again visited Bath and examined the accounts, and on behalf of the firm signed a certificate appended to the balance-sheet for the year ending the 31st of December, 1889, in exactly the same terms as their previous certificate. This balance-sheet and certificate were again circulated, and a dividend on the basis thereof was declared at a general meeting.

It was in respect of this dividend that the misfeasance summons was taken out.

Graham Hastings, Q.C., and Frank Evans, for the applicants. Here the applicants were called in to make a particular audit, and that does not make them auditors within the meaning of the statute. This case, therefore, is distinct from that of the London and General Bank, 44 W. R. 80, [1895], 2 Ch. 673. The observations of the court in In re Kingston Cotton Mill Co., 44 W. R. 210, [1896] 1 Ch. 6, show that the principles of the decision in In re London and General Bank, which was a case where the auditors had been formally elected, will not be extended to a case like the present, where there is no evidence that the applicants were ever elected auditors. The burden is on the other side to show that the applicants are within the section. The Act of 1862 contains no provision requiring a joint-stock company to have auditors at all. The proper course in this case was to proceed by action, as was done in the case of the Leeds Estate Building Co. v. Shepherd, 36 W. R. 322, 36 Ch. D. 787. This is the first attempt to bring a casual auditor within the meaning of the section.

Ward, for the liquidator of the company.—It does not matter whether the applicants were appointed auditors or not. They took on themselves the duties of auditors, and where a person takes on himself an office he must be held to take its liabilities.

He referred to Coventry v. Dixon, 28 W. R. 775; 14 Ch. D. 660; Gibson v. Barton, 23 W. R. 858; L. R. 10 Q. B. 329.

Graham Hastings, Q.C., replied.

Jan. 27.—STIRLING, J., after stating the facts, continued: The question is one of procedure. It is not disputed that an action might be brought against the auditors for misfeasance, but the question whether auditors are officers of a company is one of importance, and may be especially so to the present applicants; for, if the remedy is by action, they may have a defence to it, based on the Statute of Limitations, which would not be available in the present proceedings. If the question were free from previous decisions, there would be much to be said for the view that auditors are not officers of a company, but the matter has been dealt with in the Court of Appeal in In re London and General Bank, and In re Kingston Cotton Mill Co., and I am bound, not merely by the decisions, but by the principles on which those cases were decided. The former case was decided with reference to a banking company, one of a class of companies as to which special provisions on the subject of audit are contained in the Companies Act, 1879. I do not go into the details of that case because in the second case that case was considered and the ratio decidendi explained by Lord Herschell, who presided in the Court of Appeal. [His lordship read Lord Herschell's judgment in In re Kingston Cotton Mill Co., at p. 17 of [1896] 1 Ch., from the words "Let us see what In re London and General Bank did decide," and continued:] In In re Kingston Cotton Mill Co., auditors of a company to which the special clauses of the Act of 1879 had no application were held to be officers of the company within the meaning of section 10 of the Act of 1890.

If, then, Messrs. Parsons & Robjent had been duly elected auditors of the company at the general meeting held in 1888, the present case could not have been distinguished from those to which I have referred. They were not, however, so elected, and the question is whether that circumstance entitles them to say that they are not officers of the company. Now, in Coventry and Dixon's case it was held by Jessel, M.R., that de facto directors were subject to the provisions of section 165 of the Companies Act, 1862, of which section 10 of the Act of 1890 is an extension. The decision of the Master of the Rolls was reversed on appeal, but the judgments of James, L.J., and Bramwell, L.J., show that they agreed with this portion of his judgment, and Baggallay, L.J., stated that he entirely agreed with what was said by James, L.J.

I think also that persons who have de facto acted as directors and officers of a company ought not to be allowed to escape from the jurisdiction created by such enactments as section 165 of the Act of 1862 and section 10 of the Act of 1890 by setting up defects in their own title to hold such positions. If a person duly elected to fill the office of auditor be subject to this jurisdiction, in my judgment a person who de facto fills the office is also subject to it.

Then, did the applicants de facto fill the office of auditor? They were employed, in the language of article 125, "to examine the accounts of the company" and "to ascertain the correctness of the balance-sheet" for the year ending the 31st of December, 1889. They knew that the balance-sheet and their certificate of its correctness would be laid before a general meeting. They were paid by the company. Finally, the shareholders made no objection to receive their report, and acted on the footing that they were the auditors of the company. I think that, upon the assumption which I am bound to make that the cases of In re London and General Bank and In re Kingston Cotton Mill Co. were well decided, the applicants were properly made respondents by the misfeasance summons, and that the present application ought to be refused.

Solicitors, Woodcock, Ryland, & Parker, for Vaughan & Hornby, Newport, Mon.; Talbot & Tasker, for Dixon & Dixon, Bristol.

Chan. Div. }
Romer, J. } Jan. 20.

In re WEEKES' SETTLEMENT AND THE LONDON, BRIGHTON, AND SOUTH COAST RAILWAY ACT, 1860. (a.)

Will—Power—Gift for life—Power to dispose—Default of appointment—Gift by implication.

Under her marriage settlement a wife had a general power of appointment by will over certain real estate. By her will she gave the property to her husband for life and gave him "power to dispose of all such property by will amongst our children in accordance with the power granted to him as regards other property which I have under my marriage settlement." There were several children of the marriage, but the husband died without having exercised the power of disposition given to him by the will.

Held, that the power was a mere power and not a power coupled with a trust, and that there was no gift by implication to the children in default of appointment.

Healy v. Donnery, [1853] 3 Ir. C. L. Rep. 213, followed.

Adjourned summons.

This was a summons to obtain payment out of court of a sum of £347 9s. 3d. Consols standing in court to the credit of Ex parte The London, Brighton, and South Coast Railway Act of 1860, In re Weekes' Settlement.

The said sum of Consols represented the residue of a sum of £750 paid into court by the railway company on taking compulsorily certain lands, part of a farm called Brookside Farm, in the parish of Rudgeld, Sussex.

In 1856 Emily Mary Weekes was entitled in fee, under the will of her, father Richard Weekes, to Brookside Farm, subject to the life interest therein of her mother. In April, 1857, Emily Mary Weekes married the Rev. James Slade, and by an indenture dated the 27th of April, 1857 (being one of the settlements made on the occasion of such marriage), the reversion or remainder of the said Emily Mary Weekes in Brookside Farm, expectant on the death of her mother was conveyed to trustees on trust for the said Emily Mary Weekes for life, and after her death to such uses and for such estates and in such manner as she should, whether covert or sole, by will appoint, and in default to the person who would have, at the death of the said Emily Mary Weekes, been entitled by descent in case she had died intestate and a widow.

Emily Mary Slade made her will dated the 15th of April, 1885, which, so far as material, was in the words following: "I bequeath to my husband, James Slade, a life interest in all property, real or personal, which may come to me in accordance with the will of my late father, Richard Weekes, and I give to him power to dispose of all such property by will amongst our children in accordance with the power granted to him as regards the other property which I have under my marriage settlement." She appointed her husband, James Slade, and the respondent, Arthur John Slade, her eldest son, her executors. She died on the 14th of May, 1885, and her executors duly proved her will on the 7th of December, 1885.

There was another indenture of settlement made on the marriage of the said Emily Mary Slade also dated the 27th of April, 1857, whereby certain personal property was settled on trust for the husband and wife during their lives and the life of the survivor and after the decease of the survivor to the children of the marriage as the husband and wife should jointly appoint, or in default as the survivor should appoint, and in default of any such appointment, for the children of the then intended marriage who, being sons, attained twenty-one, or daughters, attained that age or married, in equal shares. This was the power of appointment to which Mrs. Emily Slade referred in her will. There were fourteen children of the said marriage, of whom eight survived the husband and wife. The husband, James Slade, died on the 23rd of February, 1893, intestate without having exercised the power of disposition by will given to him by the will of Emily Mary Slade.

The applicants, who were the surviving children of the said marriage (other than the eldest son, Arthur John Slade), asked that after certain prior payments thereout the residue of the Consols might be divided into eighths between the eight children of the said Emily Mary Slade who survived her and her husband, on the ground that the will of the said Emily Mary Slade gave to the said James Slade a life interest in the Brookside Farm, followed by a power to appoint the same among such children, and that this power not having been exercised, the said children were entitled to the said farm in equal shares. The respondent, Arthur John Slade, however, claimed that as heir-at-law of the said Emily Mary Slade, he was in the events which happened, entitled to the said Brookside Farm, and consequently to the said residue of Consols which represented the same.

Pattison, for the applicants.—If there is a power to appoint among certain objects, but no gift to those objects, and no gift over in default of appointment, the court will imply a trust for or gift to those objects equally, if the power be not exercised.

He distinguished Healy v. Donnery, [1853] 3 Ir. C. L. Rep. 213, and referred to Brown v. Higgs, [1799] 4 Ves. 708, 5 Ves. 495, 8 Ves. 561; Burrough v. Philcox, [1840] 5 My. & Cr. 73; Witts v. Boddington, [1790] 3 Br. Ch. Cas. 94; Forbes v. Ball, [1817] 3 Mer. 437; Birch v. Wade, [1814] 3 V. & B. 198; In re Caplin's Will, 13 W. R. 646, [1865] 2 Dr. & Sm. 527; In re White's Trusts, [1860] Johns. 656,

(a.) Reported by RALEGH B. PHILLPOTTS, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

8 W. R. Ch. Dig. 102; Butler v. Gray, 18 W. R. 193, [1889] L. R. 5 Ch. App. 26.

Micklem, for the respondent A. J. Slade.

J. T. Prior, for the railway company.

ROMER, J.—The question raised in this case arises under the will of Mrs. Emily Mary Slade. At the date of the will the property in question was settled by the settlement of the 27th of April, 1857. Under that the property was settled on Emily Slade for life with remainder as she should appoint by will, with a gift over in default of such appointment. In these circumstances the lady made her will, on which the question now arises.

In effect, she gave the settled property to her husband for his life, and she also gave him power to appoint in the following words: "power to dispose of all such property by will amongst our children in accordance with the power granted to him as regards other property which I have under my marriage settlement."

The husband did not exercise the power, and the question is, Do the children take by implication in default? In my opinion they do not. Apart from authority, and dealing with this will alone, I should gather that what was conferred on the husband was a mere power, and not a power coupled with a trust that he was bound to exercise. I can see no words that would justify me in holding that the testatrix intended her children to take if the husband did not execute the power. This is not a case of a gift to children with power for the husband to select, or to such of the children as the husband should select, by exercising the power. If in the case before me, the testatrix really intended only to give a life interest to her husband, and a mere power to appoint if he chose, and intended, if he did not think fit to appoint, that the property should go in default of appointment according to the settlement only, why should she be bound to say more than she has in this will? I come to the conclusion on the words of the will, that the testatrix only intended to give a life interest and a power; certainly she has not said more than that.

Am I, then, bound by the authorities to hold otherwise? I think not. The authorities do not show in my opinion that there is a hard and fast rule that a gift by will to A. for life with a power to him to appoint among a class, and nothing more, must if there is no gift over in the will, be held a gift by implication to the class in default of the power being exercised. In my opinion the cases show (though there may be found here and there remarks of a few of the learned judges which, if not interpreted by the facts of the particular case before them, might seem to have a more extended operation) you must find in the will an indication that the testator did intend the class or some of the class to take—intended, in fact, that the power should be regarded in the nature of a trust—only a power of selection being given. As for example, in cases where you find a gift to A. for life with a gift over to such of a class as A. shall appoint. I will examine the authorities cited and show that this is so, though I may remark that the case before me is peculiar in this, that there is a gift over in default of the appointment by the husband under one of the settlements, so that this will would not in any case come within the general proposition above stated. The first case is an Irish case, Healy v. Donnery, which is distinctly against the general proposition which has been urged upon me. [His lordship read the headnote of the case.] There was no gift over there in default of the power being exercised; there was a residuary gift, but that is not in such cases a gift over (In re Brierley, 43 W. R. 36). In Healy v. Donnery it was held that there was no gift by implication to the children in default of appointment. As to the general proposition there raised by the defendant's counsel and which has been raised before me in the present case, Pennefather, B., at p. 216, says: "It is argued that the power to appoint among children is tantamount to a trust created for them. I have always considered that there was a distinction between a mere power and one coupled with a trust, and though I called on counsel for an authority to the contrary no such case has been cited. But particular cases have been cited in which courts have thought that they collected from the peculiar words of the power an intention of the testator to give to children in default of appointment. The general proposition contended for by the defendant's counsel has never been laid down, and I cannot say that the case falls within the authority of any of the cases cited."

Now, I also propose to shortly refer to the other cases which have been cited to me.

In Brown v. Higgs [1799], which is first reported at 4 Ves. 708, the testator gave his leasehold estate at Brize Norton to his nephew John Brown on trust to make certain payments and then as follows, after the above trust is performed: "I authorize and empower my said nephew John Brown to receive the remainder that arises from my estate at Brize Norton over and above the £100 I have directed to be paid to my loving wife Rupertia Brown and to dispose of it in the following manner—that is to say, to take £100 of it every year to his sole and separate use and to employ the remainder of the said rent after paying the annual rent to the college and the fines for the renewal of the leases and other necessary expenses about the farms to such of the children of my nephew Samuel Brown as my said nephew John Brown shall think most deserving and that will make the best use of it or to the children of my nephew William Augustus Brown if any such there are or shall be."

In other words it was a gift to the children, to such of them as a certain person should appoint; this power was of selection only. That was the ground of the decision of the Master of the Rolls—he says, p. 719: "Upon the true construction of this will I am of opinion it is equivalent to saying, he gives it to the children of Samuel Brown or of William Augustus Brown with a power to John Brown to select any he thinks fit and to exclude the others; and it is too much to contend that nothing is intended for them exclusive of the appointment of John Brown."

Where you can find that the power is only a power to select among a class and no selection is made, there is a gift to that class.

The case of Brown v. Higgs came before the court again and is reported in 5 Ves. 495, this particular point being dealt with at p. 500, and the Master of the Rolls, in again considering the case, says: "Upon this disposition and the facts that have taken place the question is whether this sentence in the will upon which this question arises is to be considered as merely giving John Brown a power, if he thinks fit to give the profits of the farm of which he was the trustee to the children of Samuel Brown or William Augustus Brown, or whether upon the true construction it is anything more or less than a mere trust in him with a power to single out any he might think more deserving, but a gift to him in trust for those children at all events; and I am of the same opinion upon very full consideration and after the very able arguments I have heard to shake that opinion, that it is a trust, and not a power in John Brown, and that his non-exercise of that power or the circumstance of his being incapable of exercising it, will not prevent the objects of the testator's bounty from taking in some manner, though the power of distribution on account of the death of the trustee cannot now be exercised."

That case again came on appeal before Lord Eldon, 8 Ves. 561, and he deals with the point at p. 570 as follows: "It is perfectly clear that where there is a mere power of disposing and that power is not executed, this court cannot execute it. It is equally clear that wherever a trust is created and the execution of that trust fails by the death of the trustee or by accident this court will execute the the trust. The question, therefore, is whether John Brown had a trust to execute or a power and a mere power."

On the words of the will in that case he held that there was a trust. That case, therefore, is no authority for the general proposition.

Then there is the case of Burrough v. Philcox. That was a peculiar will. [His lordship read the headnote.] It was held that a trust was created in favour of the testator's nephews and nieces and their children subject to a power of selection and distribution in his surviving child. Why was this? Because by the words of the will it is clearly shown that the testator meant to dispose of the property absolutely. The ground of the decision is set forth in substance at p. 92, and the general principle is thus stated: "These and other cases show that when there appears a general intention in favour of a class and a particular intention in favour of individuals of a class to be selected by another person, and the particular intention fails from that selection not being made, the court will carry into effect the general intention in favour of the class."

The next case is that of Witts v. Boddington. The decision there turned upon the peculiar wording of the will, and it is sufficient for me to say that the court came to the conclusion that the testator had sufficiently expressed the intention that the grand children should take; the power was in the nature of a trust. It was a special decision on special facts.

Forbes v. Ball is another case. The decision there was that the power had been exercised. Certainly at p. 440 there is a short statement that the court was of opinion that the words in the testator's will raised a trust for the wife's relations, and if it was so decided it is clear to my mind that it was a decision on the particular words of the will. The court must have held that the words "my will and desire" were incompatible with the idea of a mere power being given to A. C., the testator's wife. That case is no authority for the general proposition.

Then the next case is that of Birch v. Wade. I may deal with that shortly; substantially that was the same case as Forbes v. Ball. It is clear that there the power was held to be coupled with a trust by force of the words "will and desire."

The next case is In re Caplin's Will. In that case it will be seen that the testator, after bequeathing a fund to his wife for her life, after her death directed that it should be paid to such and so many of the relations or friends of the wife as she should by will appoint; in other words, it was a case where there was a gift to a class, the selection to be made by the donee of the power. In this case there was a general statement which went beyond the judgment which should be considered only with regard to the special case.

The next case is that of In re White's Trusts. That was a case of a will similar to that in In re Caplin's Will, there being a bequest to trustees in trust for A. for life, and if he should die childless: "I confide in the said trustees for applying the said last-mentioned sum of £2,500 capital stock to the benefit of such other of my children or their issue as they may think fit for the interest and good of my family." There again there was a general statement made by Wood, V.C., which in my opinion unless checked by the case before him, was too wide. The Vice-Chancellor said, at p. 659: "It is settled by Brown v. Higgs and Burrough v. Philcox, that, where there is a power to appoint among certain objects, and no gift in default of appointment, the court will imply a gift to the objects of the power equally."

Now, I have pointed out that in Brown v. Higgs and Burrough v. Philcox there was an intention to dispose of the property to the class, and I have no doubt that Wood, V.C., meant to confine his statement to cases similar to the above.

The last case is that of Butler v. Gray, which again was a special case where there was a sufficient indication that the class was to take in any event.

I have now gone through all the cases which have been cited to me, and have shown that it appears to me that none of them establish the general proposition that the plaintiff's counsel has urged upon me—though they do establish the more limited proposition I have indicated. For these reasons I hold that in the present case there was no gift by implication to the children in default of appointment by the husband.

Solicitors, Nicol, Son, & Jones; Sharpe, Parker, & Co.; Rose & Co.

Q. B. Div.
(Wills and Wright, JJ.) Dec. 15; Jan. 15.

VENNER v. McDONELL. (a.)

Metropolis—"Building structure or work"—Notice to district surveyor—Temporary seating—London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.), ss. 78, 145, 200 (11b).

A large public building was used for the purpose of holding exhibitions and shows therein. At some of the exhibitions and shows it was necessary to provide seating accommodation for the spectators, but at others no such accommodation was required. The owners of the hall had caused to be constructed certain wooden seating which could be temporarily fixed up in the hall when it was required. When not in use it was taken down and stored away.

Held, that the wooden seating was not a "building structure or work" within section 145 of the London Building Act, 1894, and that it was not necessary to give notice under that section to the district surveyor before it was placed in position in the hall.

Special case stated by a metropolitan magistrate.

A complaint was preferred against the appellant by the respondent, a district surveyor under the London Building Act, 1894, charging that on or before the 26th of May, 1896, at the Royal Agricultural Hall, Islington, the appellant did, without notice to the respondent, begin to execute a work, respecting which he ought to serve a building notice before commencing such work, contrary to the provisions of the London Building Act, 1894.

The following facts were proved or admitted. The Agricultural Hall was a public hall licensed for music and dancing, and occupied a large area of ground, in the centre of which was a hall, the superficial area of which was 82,728 sq. ft. On or before the 26th of May, 1896, certain seating was placed in the hall by the direction of the appellant. No notice of intention to place such seating in the hall was given to the respondent. There was a gallery constructed along each side of the hall supported by iron columns, which were carried through the floor of the galleries up to, and which afforded support to, the roof of the hall. Access to the galleries was obtained by means of staircases, and except when a show or entertainment was being exhibited or performed, the hall contained nothing but the galleries and staircases. The hall and galleries were erected before the passing of the London Building Act, 1894. The hall belonged to a limited company, by which it was let for the purpose of holding exhibitions and shows, about twenty of which took place each year. For some of the shows seating was required for the convenience of the spectators, and, some years since, the company, for the purpose of its business, caused seating to be constructed in such a manner that it could be placed in position when required, and when not required could be taken to pieces and stored away. The placing in position of the seating upon the occasion of the Royal Military Tournament, which took place in the hall in May and June, 1896, was the work of which it was contended by the respondent that notice should have been given. The seating, which was calculated to seat over 3,000 persons, occupied a superficial area of 17,240 sq. ft. The seating beneath the galleries consisted of tiers of wooden platforms resting upon and screwed to brackets, which were fixed to inclined wooden beams. These beams were supported by transverse beams resting at the back in sockets attached to the iron columns, and supported in front on a small iron and wood girder resting in upright wooden posts, which stood in sockets let into the floor. The sockets were part of the permanent structure of the hall. There was similar seating constructed for the gallery, except that the front of the inclined wooden beams rested on the floor of the gallery and the beams were supported at the back by transverse beams resting on the ironwork which carried the roof, and by upright wooden posts resting on the gallery floor and kept in place by foot-plates and braces temporarily placed there. The seating both beneath and above the galleries could be placed in position in separate blocks, each of which blocks beneath the galleries was situated when put up in this space between each pair of iron columns. Each block of seating could be placed in position independently of the other blocks, and on some occasions part only of the seating was required to be used. Every platform, beam, and post of which the seating was constructed was numbered so that it could be and was replaced in the same position after being taken down. No support was afforded to the hall by any portion of the seating, and no part of the seating was in any way built up, erected, or constructed other than by the placing together of the several permanent parts of the seating in the positions in which they had theretofore been placed.

(a.) Reported by F. O. ROBINSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

In support of the complaint it was contended that whenever the seating was erected and replaced, work was thereby done in connection with or for the purposes of the hall within the meaning of section 78 of the London Building Act, 1894, and that the appellant should have served in respect of such work the notice required by section 145 of the Act, and no such notice having been served, the appellant had rendered himself liable to the penalty prescribed by section 200 (11*b*) of the Act.

On behalf of the appellant it was contended that the work contemplated by section 78 of the Act was work done to a public building during its construction and, where the work was done after the building had been constructed, was work affecting the building; and that as the erecting or replacing of the seating did not and was not likely to affect the hall, and was not done in connection with or for the purposes of the building, but for the purpose of the tenants' occupation, no notice was required to be given; and further, that if the work was held to be of a character which came within the wording of section 78, it nevertheless did not actually come within the provisions of the section on the ground that it was a structure or work originally erected or constructed before the commencement of the Act, and as such exempted by section 210 from the operation of section 78 and the other sections of the Act.

The magistrate held that the hall being a public building used for shows, the erection of the blocks of seating on the 26th of May, 1896, was work done in connection with a public building for the purpose of seating the public to see the show and required the approval of the district surveyor, and the magistrate ordered the appellant to pay a penalty of twenty shillings and costs.

The question for the opinion of the court was whether, under the circumstances, notice was required to be given to the district surveyor by section 145 of the London Building Act, 1894.

The London Building Act, 1894, s. 78, provides that notwithstanding anything in this Act every public building, including the walls, roofs, floors, galleries, and staircases, and every structure and work constructed or done in connection with or for the purposes of the same, shall be constructed in such a manner as may be approved by the district surveyor. . . .

Section 145 (a)—Where a building or structure or work is about to be begun then two clear days before it is begun the builder or other person causing or directing the work to be executed shall serve on the district surveyor a building notice respecting the building or structure or work. . . .

Section 200 (11*b*) provides that any person who ought to serve a building notice and who fails to do so shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding forty shillings and to a daily penalty not exceeding the like amount.

Macmorran, Q.C., and A. C. Glen, for the appellant.

Avory, for the respondent.

The following cases were referred to: Hall v. Smallpiece, 59 L. J. M. C. 97; London County Council v. Humphreys, 43 W. R. 13, [1894] 2 Q. B. 755; Lavy v. London County Council, 43 W. R. 677, [1895] 2 Q. B. 577.

Cur. adv. vult.

Jan. 15.—The judgment of the COURT (WILLS and WRIGHT, JJ.) was read by WILLS, J.—The information in this case charges that the appellant at the Royal Agricultural Hall did without notice to the district surveyor begin to execute a work respecting which the appellant ought to serve a building notice before commencing such work, contrary to the provisions of the London Building Act, 1894. By section 200, sub-section 1 (b), any person who being a person who ought to serve a building notice begins to execute a work respecting which he ought to serve a building notice before serving such notice shall be liable to a penalty. By section 145, where a building or structure or work is about to be begun, then two clear days before it is begun the builder or person causing the work to be done shall serve a building notice on the district surveyor. If a building notice was necessary in t present case, the appellant was the person who ought to have given it, and he did not give it before the work was begun. The only question therefore is whether the erection or construction with which this case is concerned was or was not a "building structure or work" within the meaning of section 145 of the London Building Act, 1894.

The Agricultural Hall is a large building constructed for the purpose of shows and exhibitions of various kinds. It is surrounded on the inside by galleries or staircases which are permanent. Some of the exhibitions require that the galleries should be occupied by sittings for the spectators; others require that there should be no seats or seats only in portions of the gallery. The iron columns which permanently support the roof and galleries have sockets attached to them and the temporary and movable timbers to which the seats are for the time being screwed or bolted are dropped or let into these. It is obvious that if the expression "structure or work" is to receive what, apart from the subject matter to which it is applied, would be its natural meaning, no person within the jurisdiction of the London County Council could repair his roof or mend his windows, or put up a fixed cupboard in his bedroom or a fitted bookcase in his library, or a new kitchen range or introduce gas, water, or electric light into his house without giving notice to the district surveyor, and without being subject (section 138) to his supervision, nor without in the case of the most trivial matters paying him half of the fee to which he would be entitled on the original construction of the house or building to or on which any addition, alteration, or other work was made or done (Schedule III., Part I.). It seems impossible to suppose that interference so constant, vexatious, useless, and costly with the daily life of a great community can have been intended, and we are therefore driven to the conclusion that some limitation must be put upon the natural meaning of "structure or work." It is, therefore, necessary to construe "structure or work" as meaning in section 145 something of the same general nature and character as a building. No other limitation appears possible. This view receives confirmation from section 146, which shows the object of supervision by the district surveyor and his duties in respect thereof. "He is from time to time to survey any building or work hereby placed under his supervision, and cause all the provisions of this Act and of the bye-laws made thereunder to be duly observed." There are no bye-laws applicable to such erections as this temporary seating, and no power to make them (see section 164).

It has been argued that section 78 and Part VII. (sections 82 and 86) contain "provisions" applicable to such an erection. The Agricultural Hall was built and in use when the Act of 1855 (18 & 19 Vict. c. 122) was in force. Section 30 of that Act corresponds to section 78 of the Act of 1894, but it omits the words "and every structure or work constructed or done in connection with or for the purposes of the same." We think it plain, however, that the Act of 1894 is not retrospective; that the approval of the surveyor there made a condition precedent to the use of the building as a public building refers to an approval to be given at the outset once and for all; and that afterwards the only part of the section which could apply is the last clause, which says that no work shall be done to or on the building without approval. We do not think this work done to or on the building, and if it were it is not likely to affect it. As to Part VII. of the Act, the two material sections are sections 82 and 83. The reasons we have given for saying that in section 145 by "structure or work" is meant something in the nature of a building apply with greater force to section 82. In addition it is to be observed that, where the builder is desirous of erecting a "building or structure" which comes within that section, the plan he has to deliver with his application is described merely as a "plan of the proposed building," and it is the "building" that is then to be erected if the council are satisfied.

As to section 83, there may be reason for giving in some cases a more extended meaning to the term "structure," because in Schedule III., Part I., where the fees payable to the surveyor are defined, it is clear that it is assumed that he may be entitled to a fee, not only in respect of "any wooden structure," but of "any structure or erection put up on any public occasions." This extension of the fee to "erections put up on public occasions" must refer to section 83, which is the only one dealing specially with "structures of a temporary character," and it therefore gives a reason for saying that "erections put up upon public occasions" may (not must) come under the description of "structure" in section 83. Such extension of the word "structure" in section 83, however, has no application to the present case, where the construction in question has no reference to any public occasion. As, therefore, neither section 70 nor sections 82 and 83 apply to such an operation as that of replacing the seating in the Agricultural Hall, there is no provision of the Act and no bye-law the observance of which the district surveyor has, under section 146, to secure. The necessity in this Act of applying to the word "structure" the principle noscitur a sociis is well illustrated by section 164, which gives power to the London County Council to make bye-laws, for (amongst other things) the regulation of lamps, signs, or other "structures." In a building Act one certainly would not, but for the context, have supposed that a lamp would fall under the designation of a "structure." It is impossible to give any general definition of "structure" to be applied everywhere throughout the Act. If it had been possible the definition clause would have been the appropriate place, and Parliament the appropriate authority to give it. We must in each case consider the enactment which has to be applied, and see as we best can whether the nature of the provisions bearing upon the question justify the application sought to be made. In Part III., for instance, there seem to be very good reasons for giving a wide meaning to the word "structure." It is difficult to imagine anything affixed to the ground in any way which ought to be erected (without the permission of the Council) so as to project beyond the general line of building. The whole object of the legislation in this respect is to preserve uniformity, and that object can only be secured by putting everything which could interfere with it under the control of the Council. Some "structures and erections put up on any public occasion" are clearly intended to be subject to the jurisdiction of the council or the district surveyor (see 3rd Sched., Part I.). From the very nature of the occasions on which they come into existence many of them—probably most of them—must be in or in the neighbourhood of streets, and more or less in the nature of public nuisances. The 3rd schedule, as has been pointed out, enlarges the expression "structure" in the Act by tacking on, in the schedule, the words "erection put up on any public occasions." Whether any particular erection put up on such occasion requires notice and inspection must be determined when the occasion arises. The illustration given shows that the expression "structure" must be dealt with in each case according to the facts and the particular enactments sought to be applied. It is clear from Schedule

III., Part I., that "erections put up on any public occasions" must come somewhere under the word "structure" in the Act, else there would be nothing for them to operate upon. This is a very good reason for saying that in section 83 such erections may be legitimately considered to fall within the word "structure." It is no reason for a similar extension of the word in section 145, inasmuch as section 83 contains within itself every provision necessary for the full control of the works by the council and for the protection of the public. Again, in section 201, "building" and "building or structure" appear to be used as synonymous. It is impossible to conceive any reason for giving a different measure of exemption to railway companies and dock companies on the one hand and to canal companies and Conservators of the Thames on the other hand. The enactments to which we have thus called attention illustrate the impossibility of defining "structure" once for all in the Act, and we are not going to attempt more than to deal with the particular case now before us. As to that, we are satisfied that the replacing of the seats in question is not "the beginning of a structure" within section 145, and that this appeal ought to be allowed.

Appeal allowed.

Solicitors for the appellants, Kingsford, Dorman, & Co.

Solicitor for the respondent, W. A. Blaxland.

Q. B. Div.
(Wills and Wright, JJ.) Dec. 10.

LONDON COUNTY COUNCIL (Appellants) v. HOBBIS (Respondent). (a.)

Metropolis — County council — Dangerous structure — Notice to remove or repair — Recovery of expenses — Ministerial duty of county council — London Building Act, 1894 (57 & 58 Vict. c. ccxiii.), ss. 103, 106.

The powers and duties conferred upon the London County Council by sections 103 and 106 of the London Building Act, 1894, are ministerial, and may be delegated to, and are exercisable by, the duly authorized servants and representatives of the Council.

This was a case stated by one of the metropolitan police magistrates.

The respondent, the owner of a structure known as 331, Ferry-road, Poplar, in the county of London, was summoned before the magistrate by the appellants for the recovery of certain expenses incurred by them in the matter of a dangerous structure—to wit, the said No. 331, Ferry-road, and in carrying into force the provisions of the London Building Act, 1894, with respect to the said structure.

Information was given by the district surveyor to the London County Council, the appellants, that the structure was in a dangerous state, whereupon he, the surveyor, was instructed by the Architect's Department of the appellants to certify as to its condition. The surveyor certified that the structure was in a dangerous state, and that it was necessary that the respondent should execute certain repairs; whereupon the superintending architect to the appellants served notice upon the respondent requiring him to take down or otherwise secure the said structure. Upon receipt of such notice the respondent executed the necessary works, but declined to pay the expenses incurred by the appellants in taking the steps aforesaid. The expenses were in accordance with sections 113 and 117, and Parts II. and IV. of the 3rd Schedule of the London Building Act, 1894. These steps were taken by the appellants' Architect's Department as a matter of ordinary routine. Except as aforesaid the dangerous state of the structure was not made known to the appellants as a body, and the matter of the said structure was not, except as aforesaid, dealt with by them or brought before them in any way whatever.

The appellants contended that the powers and duties conferred on them under sections 103 and 106 of the said Act were ministerial only, and had been duly delegated to, and were properly exercisable by, and under the supervision of, their superintending architect.

The magistrate held that the expenses, if recoverable at all, could only be recovered where sections 103, 105, and 106 of the said Act had been complied with; that those sections had not been complied with, inasmuch as it had not been made known to the appellants that the structure was in a dangerous state, and the appellants had not required a survey of the structure to be made under section 103, nor had they caused the notices to be served on the respondent under section 106; he further held that the appellants had no authority to delegate their powers to the superintending architect, and that therefore the routine followed in that official's department was not a compliance with the section in question.

The question for the opinion of the court was whether such decision was right in law.

Certain standing orders, which it is unnecessary to set out, made by the London County Council on the 23rd of November, 1894, relating to dangerous structures, were referred to as part of the stated case.

Avory appeared on behalf of the appellants.

The respondent in person.

WILLS, J.—I am of opinion that this case must be remitted to the learned magistrate to be dealt with upon the merits. The respondent is clearly entitled to that; but I think the view taken by the learned magistrate was erroneous, and that what has been done by the London County Council is strictly within the Act of Parliament.

Now, section 103 of the Act says: "Where it is made known to the Council that any structure is in a dangerous state." Now, it is made known to the Council if one of its officers who act in such a matter, and who is the proper person to receive a notice, receives one; and I think any such proceeding as that would be amply sufficient to fix the Council with any liability which falls upon them in consequence of removing such a nuisance. Then the section goes on to say that "the Council shall require a survey of such structure to be made by the district surveyor or by some other competent surveyor." They have no option whatever in the matter. They have no discretion to exercise. They have got a certain duty to perform, and a duty which cannot be done by a corporate body, but which requires to be done by an individual. I think that it is within every principle which is applied to matters of that kind that that may be done in pursuance of the general authority. The authority has been given to the superintending architect by the motion of the Metropolitan Board of Works. It is true that it is described as a temporary power, and it is also said "until further order"; but no further order has been made, and all rights and all liabilities which existed under the Acts relating to the Metropolitan Board of Works have been transferred to the London County Council by the operation of the statute. Therefore that is still operative. It seems to me that, under the very nature of things, powers or actions of this kind, which are compulsorily placed upon them, must be undertaken by the properly authorized servants and representatives without waiting for the general council. It may be that in this case, as the respondent alleges, that the power of the Act has been tyrannically put into force. Upon that I express no opinion at all, and it must not be supposed that I imagine for a moment that it is accurate; still it may be that it is so. But that is no reason for holding that the action of the London County Council was wrong in the exercise of the power by a properly constituted officer to whom the powers were given.

(a.) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

I think the learned magistrate came to a wrong conclusion, and that he must rehear the case.

Appeal allowed and case remitted.

Solicitor, Blaxland.

Q. B. Div. (Mathew, J.) } Dec. 3, 4, 7.

CROCKER AND OTHERS v. STURGE AND ANOTHER. (a.)

Insurance, Marine—Reinsurance—Description of voyage in policy—"To any port or ports, place or places, in any order"—"For thirty days after arrival at final port"—Meaning of.

The plaintiffs effected a policy of reinsurance on a vessel with the defendants. The risk clause was "at and from Newcastle, N.S.W., to any port or ports, place or places, in any order, on the west coast of South America, and for thirty days after arrival in final port, however employed." The vessel sailed with a cargo from Newcastle, N.S.W., to Valparaiso, and there discharged the whole of it. She remained at Valparaiso for thirty days, and whilst there loaded partly with ballast and partly with sugar, the latter being part of her cargo for the United Kingdom. She then sailed for a port on the west coast of South America in order to take on board the remainder of her cargo, but while proceeding there she was stranded and became a total loss.

Held, that the words "final port" in the risk clause were not confined to the port of discharge, but included the final port of loading for the homeward voyage, and that the plaintiffs were therefore entitled to recover.

Commercial action.

In this case both the plaintiffs and the defendants were underwriters at Lloyd's.

The action was brought to recover a total loss under a policy of reinsurance which had been effected by the plaintiffs with the defendants.

The reinsurance, dated the 30th of December, 1895, was for "£100 on hull. Warranted free of all average. To pay no salvage charges."

It was on the ship Talavera, "at and from Newcastle, N.S.W., to any port or ports, place or places, in any order on the west coast of South America, and for thirty days after arrival in final port however employed."

This policy was a reinsurance of a policy dated the 3rd of December, 1895, which was underwritten by the plaintiffs and which covered the said ship Talavera at and from Sydney to Newcastle, N.S.W., while there and thence to any port or ports, place or places, on the west coast of South America, and (or) the islands adjacent in any order once or oftener while there and thence to any port or ports of call, and (or) discharge in the United Kingdom, and (or) continent of Europe between Bordeaux and Hamburg, both included, and for thirty days in port after final arrival however employed."

On the 5th of January, 1896, The Talavera left Newcastle, N.S.W., with a cargo of coals, for Valparaiso, at which port she arrived on the 12th of February, 1896, and having discharged the whole of her cargo she remained there for more than thirty days. While at this port she loaded partly with ballast and partly with sugar, the latter being part of her cargo for the United Kingdom. She then sailed for Talcohuano, also on the west coast of South America, in order to take on board the remainder of her cargo. During her passage to this port she stranded and became a total loss.

It was admitted by the parties that vessels from Newcastle, N.S.W., to the west coast of South America sometimes discharged their cargo from Newcastle at more than one port on the said coast, and that vessels which loaded cargo on the west coast sometimes loaded at more than one port on such coast.

The plaintiffs, under the policy underwritten by them, paid the owner of The Talavera a total loss, and now sued the defendants under the policy of reinsurance on the ground that such policy covered The Talavera at the time when she became a total loss.

Joseph Walton, Q.C., and Percy Morris, for the plaintiffs.—The words ports or places in the policy mean ports or places of discharge or loading, and the words "final port" mean the final port before sailing for home. It was not the intention of the parties to limit the risk to the port of discharge. If it had been so, words to that effect would have been introduced. The Talavera was covered until she arrived at Talcohuano and for thirty days after. That port was her final port on the west coast of South America. There is no custom to the contrary.

Counsel cited Bermon v. Woodbridge, 2 Doug. 781; The Aikshaw, 9 Times L. R. 605.

Boyd, Q.C., for the defendants.—The voyage of The Talavera was divided into the cross voyage and the homeward voyage. It was the cross voyage only that was insured here. The ship was only covered by the insurance from Newcastle, N.S.W., to the last port at which she discharged cargo and for thirty days after. Therefore she was only covered until her arrival at Valparaiso, which was her "final port," and thirty days after. The risk expired before she left Valparaiso, because she remained there more than thirty days after arrival. At the time The Talavera was lost she was on her homeward voyage, and was not covered by the policy.

Walton, Q.C., replied.

Cur. adv. vult.

Dec. 7.—MATHEW, J.—In this case the rights of the parties depend upon the construction of a form of insurance usually adopted. The action is to recover a total loss on a policy of marine insurance on a ship called The Talavera. The defendants say they are not liable, on the ground that the ship was not covered by the policy at the date of the loss. [The learned judge here stated the facts of the case, and read the risk in the policy underwritten by the plaintiffs as stated above.] On behalf of the plaintiffs it has been argued that the words "ports or places" in the policy of reinsurance mean ports or places of discharge or loading. On the part of the defendants it was argued that those words only mean ports or places of discharge. The Talavera discharged the whole of her cargo at Valparaiso, and remained there for thirty days. Whilst there she loaded 600 tons of ballast and some 200 tons of sugar for Talcohuano, where she was to load the remainder of her cargo for the United Kingdom. While on her way to that port she stranded and became a total loss. The plaintiffs contend that this loss was clearly covered by the policy now sued upon, that the loss was within the terms of the policy, and that the clause describing the risk must be construed as if the ports or places referred to had been expressly named.

(a) Reported by E. G. STILLWELL, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

On the part of the defendants it was contended that the clause only covered the ship to the port of discharge and thirty days after, and that the policy was only intended to apply to one voyage to a port of discharge, and that the voyage came to an end at Valparaiso, and that the risk ceased thirty days after arrival at that port; and it was argued that the words "arrival in final port" were more applicable to the discharge than the loading of the vessel. This construction, however, would be practically against a great part of the clause in question. If it was only meant to cover the voyage to Valparaiso it seems idle to insert the words "any port or ports, place or places, in any order" and the words "however employed." This latter phrase seems clearly to provide for the employment of The Talavera in some other way than in the discharge of her cargo—as, for instance, while employed in sailing from port or ports of discharge to the port of loading. Witnesses were called to show that the clause had a customary meaning and was understood only to apply to ports of discharge; but they failed to prove such a custom, and they had to admit that, to their knowledge, the question had never been raised before. It was sought to show, but unsuccessfully, in the case of The Aikshaw that the words "ports or places" in the risk clause in question meant ports or places of loading; but it seems to me that the words must be construed according to their ordinary meaning, and, so understood, they are sufficient to cover the risk in question. There is no reason why a policy of insurance or reinsurance should not cover the risks of one whole voyage and the risks of part of another voyage. There may be very good reasons for adopting such a course where one part of the adventure is more perilous than another. Here the line between the risks covered and those remaining uninsured would seem to have been drawn upon the expiration of the thirty days at the final port of loading.

I therefore give judgment for the plaintiffs.

Judgment for the plaintiffs.

Solicitors for the plaintiffs, Thomas Cooper & Co.

Solicitors for the defendants, W. A. Crump & Son.

Court of Appeal.

From Chan. Div. (Lord Halsbury, C., and Lindley and A. L. Smith, L.JJ.) — Oct. 27, 29, 30; Nov. 2; Dec 12.

DE LA ROCHEFOUCAULD v. BOUSTEAD. (a.)

*Frauds, Statute of, s. 7—Absolute conveyance—Trust—Proof by parol evidence—Fraud—Laches—Delay.*

Certain estates in Ceylon to which the plaintiff was entitled subject to a mortgage were in 1873 sold by the mortgagees to the defendant, and were conveyed to him by a conveyance absolute in form.

Held (reversing the decision of Kekewich, J.), that upon the facts the defendant took the property as a trustee for the plaintiff.

Held, also, that, notwithstanding section 7 of the Statute of Frauds, it is competent for a person claiming land conveyed to another and alleging fraudulent breach of trust, to prove by parol evidence that it was conveyed upon trust for the claimant.

Bartlett v. Pickersgill, 1 Eden 515, overruled.

Held, further, that, there being an express trust, mere delay by the plaintiff in seeking to enforce her rights was no bar to her claim.

Erlanger v. New Sombrero Phosphate Co., 27 W. R. 65, 3 App. Cas. 1218, and Lindsay Petroleum Co. v. Hurd, 22 W. R. 492, L. R. 5 P. C. 221, discussed.

This was an appeal against the judgment of Kekewich, J., whereby his lordship dismissed the action with costs.

The action was commenced in 1894, and the plaintiffs thereby claimed a declaration that the defendant, who in 1873 had purchased certain estates in Ceylon, formerly belonging to the plaintiff, the Comtesse De la Rochefoucauld, at a sale of them by the mortgagees, had purchased them as a trustee for the plaintiffs (the Comtesse and her daughter), or one of them, and they also claimed an account and payment by the defendant of the balance due from him.

At the trial before Kekewich, J., his lordship held that the plaintiffs had failed to prove the alleged trusteeship on the part of the defendant, and that there was no evidence that he had acted in any confidential relation towards the plaintiff, the Comtesse.

The plaintiffs appealed.

The material facts are all set out in the judgment of the court.

Haldane, Q.C., and T. L. Gilmour, for the appellant.—The defendant is liable to account to the plaintiff as trustee for her. On the correspondence it is, we submit, clear that he took the property as an express trustee, and not as mortgagee, and there is a sufficient writing within the meaning of the 7th and 8th sections of the Statute of Frauds: Fry on Specific Performance, 3rd ed., p. 254. [LINDLEY, L.J., referred to Bartlett v. Pickersgill, 1 Eden, 515.] That case is not conclusive, and having regard to Heard v. Pilley, 17 W. R. 750, L. R. 4 Ch. App. 548, it must now be taken to be overruled. The Statute of Frauds will not now be allowed to protect what would be a fraud: Lincoln v. Wright, 7 W. R. 350, 4 De G. & J. 16. Further, in this case there has been part performance: Haigh v. Kaye, 20 W. R. 597, L. R. 7 Ch. App. 469; Davis v. Whitehead, 42 W. R. 456, [1894] 2 Ch. 133. Leman v. Whitley, 4 Russ. 423, which was a similar case to Bartlett v. Pickersgill, was treated as overruled by Stirling, J., in Davis v. Whitehead. [LINDLEY, L.J.—It is not consistent with Booth v. Turle, 21 W. R. 721, L. R. 16 Eq. 182.] Further, here was an express trust: Maddison v. Alderson, 31 W. R. 820, 8 App. Cas. 467. The Statute of Frauds does not apply to Ceylon, notwithstanding Leroux v. Brown, 1 W. R. 22, 12 C. B. 801. Ceylon was no part of the British dominions when that statute was passed. [LINDLEY, L.J., referred to Gardiner v. Fell, 1 Jac. and W. 22.]

Renshaw, Q.C., and G. Lawrence, for the respondent.—The facts do not show any trust. The defendant was really a mortgagee in possession; and the plaintiff's rights are barred by section 7 of the Real Property Limitation Act, 1874 (37 & 38 Vict. c. 57). Locking v. Parker, 21 W. R. 113, L. R. 8 Ch. App. 30. [LINDLEY, L.J., referred to Ward v. Carttar, L. R. Eq. 25, 14 W. R. Ch. Dig. 115.] Even apart from the Statute of Limitations the delay, laches, and acquiescence which there has been here is enough to defeat the claim. Bartlett v. Pickersgill has never been overruled, and is applied by Lord St. Leonards' Vendors and Purchasers, 14th ed., p. 703 (chap. 21, s. 1, 15); in James v. Smith, 39 W. R. 396, [1891] 1 Ch. 384, it was treated as not overruled. Cranstown v. Johnston, 3 Ves. 170; Denton v. Donner, 23 Beav. 285, 6 W. R. Ch. Dig. 80; Banner v. Berridge, 29 W. R. 844, 18 Ch. D. 254.

---

(a.) Reported by W. SCOTT THOMPSON, Esq., Barrister-at-Law.

At the request of their lordships,

Haldane, Q.C., in reply, dealt with the defence on the ground of delay, referring to In re Cross, 30 W. R. 376, 20 Ch. D. 109.

In addition to the cases cited in the argument the following are referred to in the judgment: Forster v. Hale, 3 Ves. 696; Smith v. Matthews, 9 W. R. 644, 3 De G. F. & J. 139; Davies v. Otty, 13 W. R. 484, 35 Beav. 288; Soar v. Ashwell, 42 W. R. 165, [1893] 2 Q. B. 390; In re Alison, 27 W. R. 389, 11 Ch. D. 284; Erlanger v. New Sombrero Phosphate Co., 27 W. R. 65, 3 App. Cas. 1218; Lindsay Petroleum Co. v. Hurd, 22 W. R. 492, L. R. 5 P. C. 221; Bright v. Legerton, 9 W. R. 239, 2 De G. F. & J. 606.

Dec. 12.—The judgment of the court was delivered by

LINDLEY, L.J.—The question raised by this appeal is whether the plaintiff is entitled to an account from the defendant of the proceeds of sale of certain coffee estates in Ceylon. The estates in question are known as the Delmar estates. They formerly belonged to the plaintiff; they were mortgaged first to Barings and then to a Dutch company, and on the 27th of May, 1873, they were sold and conveyed to the defendant. In form the conveyance was to him absolutely, but the plaintiff insists that the estates were conveyed to the defendant as a trustee for the plaintiff, subject, however, to the repayment to the defendant of the amount which he paid for them, and of the expenses which he has incurred in managing the estates. The estates were sold by the defendant or his mortgagees many years ago without the knowledge of the plaintiff, and she says that the proceeds of sale were more than sufficient to repay to the defendant all his advances, and that a considerable surplus remained, which the defendant ought to have paid over to her. The defendant, in answer to this claim, says (1) the estates were conveyed to him, not as a trustee for the plaintiff, but as beneficial owner; (2) the trusts alleged by the plaintiff cannot be proved by any writing signed by the defendant, and the Statute of Frauds affords a defence to the action; (3) the plaintiff's claim, even if proved, is barred (a) by the defendant's bankruptcy, (b) by the Statute of Limitations, (c) by the plaintiff's laches and the equitable doctrines applicable to delay independently of the statute. Kekewich, J., decided against the plaintiff on the first ground—viz., that there was no trust in favour of the plaintiff. This view of the case rendered it unnecessary for him to consider the other defences. The plaintiff has appealed from this decision, and as we have been unable to take the same view as the learned judge of the effect of the evidence, it will be necessary for us to deal with all the other defences relied upon by the defendant.

The circumstances under which the Delmar estates were conveyed to the defendant are to be gathered from the verbal testimony of the plaintiff, the defendant, a Mr. Duff, and a mass of correspondence, both before and after the conveyance. The correspondence after the conveyance is relied upon by the plaintiff as being inconsistent with the defendant's contention that he acquired the estates for himself beneficially, free from any trust in favour of the plaintiff. In order to appreciate the above evidence it is necessary to state that in 1868 the plaintiff, who was then the wife of a Mr. Cavendish, was divorced from him, and that, under the decree of the Divorce Court, that gentleman acquired an interest in these Delmar estates, and that his claims on these estates, under that decree, were not released until a compromise with him was effected in 1874. In the meantime it was a great object of the plaintiff and her friends to prevent Mr. Cavendish from deriving any benefit from these estates. The plaintiff and her friends were afraid that he might, under the decree of the Divorce Court, get himself registered in Ceylon as entitled to a charge on those estates and perhaps even acquire them by paying off the mortgagees and foreclosing the plaintiff. In 1868 the estates were mortgaged to a Dutch company, which was in liquidation, and the liquidator desired to get in the amount due on the mortgage. The plaintiff was extremely anxious that her late husband should not get this mortgage transferred to himself or any friend of his. At the period to which we are now referring the disease which afterwards destroyed the coffee plantations in Ceylon had not broken out, and the Delmar estates were worth far more than the amount due to the Dutch company upon their mortgage. The colonial rate of interest was 6 per cent. A transferee of the Dutch mortgage would therefore acquire a good investment for his money. Moreover, it would be an object to anyone acquainted with the working of Ceylon coffee estates to have the management of them and to be the agent for the sale of their produce. Then considerations of friendship for the plaintiff induced a gentleman of the name of Duff to assist the plaintiff; and after some negotiations it was agreed that the Dutch mortgage should be transferred to Duff and to the defendant, who was brought into the matter by Duff or by Mr. Sabonadiere, the plaintiff's agent in Ceylon. The defendant has had experience in the management of coffee estates and in receiving and disposing of consignments of coffee from them, and had business transactions with Mr. Sabonadiere. The above arrangement was not, however, carried out, owing to some objection taken by Mr. Duff to the form of the draft transfer which had been prepared. It was then proposed that the Dutch mortgagees should sell the estates to Duff and the defendant for the amount due on their security, and on the 1st of July, 1871, an agreement to this effect was signed. Before the sale was completed Mr. Duff refused to carry it out. The defendant, however, hoped to become the plaintiff's representative in England and the consignee of the produce of her estates, and he did not wish to break faith with the Dutch company. The defendant was willing to carry out the above arrangement himself. Accordingly, after some further negotiation, the estates were sold and conveyed to him in May, 1873, by the Dutch company for the amount due to them on their security as had been agreed in July, 1871. The sum paid by the defendant to the Dutch company was £57,942. But he immediately remortgaged the estates to the Dutch company for £53,000, so that his actual payment out of pocket was under £5,000.

Pausing here, it is, in our opinion, clear beyond all doubt that the proposed sale to Duff and the defendant was not intended to be a sale to them for their own benefit. It was intended to be a sale to them for the benefit of the plaintiff, but subject, of course, to the repayment of Duff's advances. This is quite plain from Duff's evidence and from the correspondence. It is also clear that the plaintiff's name was kept off all formal documents in order to prevent her first husband from discovering that she had any interest in the estates, and to lead him to suppose that they had passed into the hands of strangers. It is further quite clear that the conveyance to the defendant grew out of the arrangement which he and Duff were to have carried out, and was made for precisely the same purpose. There is not in the whole correspondence a line to show that the price which the defendant paid had any reference to the value of the estates nor to show or suggest that the conveyance to the defendant was intended to be to him for his own benefit. The history of the transaction is wholly inconsistent with any such intention. [His lordship then referred to the correspondence, and came to the conclusion that the plaintiff had proved that the estates in question were conveyed to the defendant on the 27th of May, 1873, upon trust for her, but subject to a charge in his favour in respect of all sums advanced by him in order to obtain the estates from the Dutch company in the first instance and of all sums advanced by him in order to work them as coffee lant ations after he had acquired them.]

